W. G. McCARTHY, Prop.

The Lindsay

Gainesville, Texas
12/6/1923

Dear Dr. Alexander,

The load I sent you yesterday from Dallas, I think is being distributed rather widely in Texas and Oklahoma.

The Women's auxiliary of the K's met at the Oriental Hotel in Dallas yesterday in a room near mine. One Mr. Butcher purported to be from Atlanta was present at this meeting, and was evidently attempting to settle some differences. He and one of the lady(?) members stood in the hallway near my room, and the differences became so intense that the lie was passed several times. They are having real trouble here.

W. G. McCARTHY, Prop.

The Lindsay

Gainesville, Texas

The lord I sent you was found in one of the Hotel elevators yesterday by an elevator boy who gave it to me. They plead guilty to practically every charge made against them, and attempt to avoid responsibility by the flimsy excuse that some one else is doing the same.

Austin College at Sherman will also line up with us in offering this course in race relations.

Sincerely yours,
E. M. Castleberry

M. Price

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY

VOLUME 179 NUMBER 6

JUNE, 1947

90th YEAR OF CONTINUOUS PUBLICATION

WHAT PRICE PREPAREDNESS?

by CORD MEYER, JR.

Zealots have been telling us that if we are to win the struggle for the world, we must prepare the country at once for atomic warfare. This Marine veteran, who was wounded in the fighting in the Pacific, and who returned to serve as an Aide to Commander Harold Stassen at the San Francisco Conference, adds up realistically what it will cost us to disperse our industries, to move cities underground, and to build up our stockpiles for atomic bombardment. — THE EDITOR

PEACE through preparedness for war is the promise that is now being held out to the American people by our elected officials and military leaders. We are continually exhorted to remember that aggression is still a possibility and that our only guarantee of safety lies in armed strength. In this second year of "peace," President Truman has called for a military appropriation of more than eleven billion dollars. After grave warnings from the Secretaries of the War, Navy, and State Departments, this appears to be one item in the President's budget that the Republicans will not attempt to cut, although it is almost one third of the total.

Similarly, Marshal Stalin has warned the Russian people that "it is necessary to be constantly vigilant, to protect as the apple of one's eye the armed force and defensive power of our country." In the Soviet Union, the expected reconversion to the production of consumer goods has been delayed in favor of further expansion of the heavy industries which provide the sinews of war, with particular emphasis on the development of atomic energy. The American and Russian governments are locked in competition for the arms, allies, and strategic bases that each insists are essential to national security.

How are these claims that peace and safety can be assured through competitive arming to be reconciled with the known facts concerning the new weapons? The scientists have been attempting to reach an apathetic public with the knowledge that there is no effective defense against atomic bombs. Two or three bombs are sufficient to destroy even the largest city, crippling or killing most of its inhabitants. They can be delivered by long-range bombers, so mere distance is not the protection that it was.

There is no safety in the fact that we enjoy a temporary monopoly on atomic weapons. Many of the most able scientists insist that within two or three years Russia and a number of other nations may be manufacturing atomic explosives, whether or not we divulge our technical secrets. In the immediate future, Americans will live in justifiable terror of an atomic attack that can devastate our cities and industries at a single blow, just as the people of some other nations already fear such an assault by the United States.

The spectacular quality of the atomic bomb explosion has obscured the equally significant information that there are other new and inhumanly destructive means of warfare available today. Their existence is worth mentioning not because Copyright 1947, by The Atlantic Monthly Company, Boston 16, Mass. All rights reserved.

IRO

PREPARATORY COMMISSION
FOR THE

INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

TEAM 1062 APO 178

August 15, 1947.

Dear ~~Rev. Lester~~

As a fellow member of the Workers Defense League, I want to call your attention to the plight of the 660,013 Displaced Persons still in Germany. You have heard about them. I have worked and lived with them for the past 18 months, first with UNRRA, now with IRO.

I recently wrote the governors of each state in regard to Displaced Persons, with the idea in mind that state political leaders should become aware of the problem. Some governors answered very encouragingly. Others preferred to „pass the buck", saying immigration was a federal problem.

By nationality, Displaced Persons in the U.S. zone number:

		U.S. yearly Quota
Latvian	41 782	236
Estonian	13 453	116
Lithuanian	27 056	386
Polish	58 359
Jugoslavian	5 408	845
Polish-Ukrainian	57 976
Stateless	18 607	?
Jewish	124 193
Others	8 718	Germany 25.957
Total 30 th April, 1947	355 552	England 65.721
		Austria 1.413

Total for US, British un French zones 30 th April, 1947
660,013

In my camp of 1020 Latvians, 694 desire to emigrate to an Anglo-Saxon country, i. e. U.S., Canada, Australia, or South Africa.

I think the best solution will be to permit as many Jewish persons as desire, to enter Palestine. (I know this is a big problem and too detailed to delve into here. But, as I also have worked in a Jewish camp of 3000 for the past 10 months, I'm sure that these people will only rescue themselves from their inferiority complex in an environment which they themselves choose.)

And most of the remainder of these refugees from bolshevism should be taken in the western hemisphere. Just as political refugees of the Revolution of 1848 lead by Karl Schurz, and presently lead by Willkie, Eisenhower, etc., have made a great contribution to our democratic institutions, so I visualize a like contribution by these victims of bolshevism if they can once get to US, Canada, etc. To hear their stories of suffering and torture by the bolshevics will quicken the appreciation of all of us for our hard-preserved liberties.

I hope you will do what you can to talk it up for the Stratton bill pending in Congress. Under existing regulations, there are thousands of vacancies on the German, English, and Russian quotas to the US, and in addition many thousands of unused numbers during the war. But the Baltic, and Slavic groups under IRO care have infinitesimal quotas. For exemple: 40,000 Latvians for a yearly quota of 236, or 100,000 Jews, 55,000 Polish-Ukrainians and 50,000 Poles for a yearly quota of 6,000 for Poland.

So this is to inform you of the situation. I could write a book about the constructive things many are doing while waiting here in exile; and I could write at length about the psychological deterioraton of people who have broken off all roots with the past and have no security to grip on to for the future.

Yours truly,

Samuel Snipes

Samuel Snipes
Camp Administrator
IRO Team 1062
Leipheim, Bavaria
APO 178, PM, NY.

Home address
Lincoln Highway
Morrisville, Pa.
USA

PREPARATORY COMMISSION
FOR THE
INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION
TEAM 1062 APO 178

August 15, 1947.

Dear ~~Mr. Knox~~

As a fellow member of the Workers Defense League, I want to call your attention to the plight of the 660,013 Displaced Persons still in Germany. You have heard about them. I have worked and lived with them for the past 18 months, first with UNRRA, now with IRO.

I recently wrote the governors of each state in regard to Displaced Persons, with the idea in mind that state political leaders should become aware of the problem. Some governors answered very encouragingly. Others preferred to „pass the buck", saying immigration was a federal problem.

By nationality, Displaced Persons in the U.S. zone number:

		U. S. yearly Quota
Latvian	41 782	236
Estonian	13 453	116
Lithuanian	27 056	386
Polish	58 359
Jugoslavian	5 408	845 } 6.524
Polish-Ukrainian	57 976
Stateless	18 607	?
Jewish	124 193
Others	8 718	Germany 25.957
Total 30 th April, 1947	355 552	England 65.721
		Austria 1.413

Total for US, British un French zones 30 th April, 1947
660,013

In my camp of 1020 Latvians, 694 desire to emigrate to an Anglo-Saxon country, i. e. U.S., Canada, Australia, or South Africa.

I think the best solution will be to permit as many Jewish persons as desire, to enter Palestine. (I know this is a big problem and too detailed to delve into here. But, as I also have worked in a Jewish camp of 3000 for the past 10 months, I'm sure that these people will only rescue themselves from their inferiority complex in an environment which they themselves choose.)

And most of the remainder of these refugees from bolshevism should be taken in the western hemisphere. Just as political refugees of the Revolution of 1848 lead by Karl Schurz, and presently lead by Willkie, Eisenhower, etc., have made a great contribution to our democratic institutions, so I visualize a like contribution by these victims of bolshevism if they can once get to US, Canada, etc. To hear their stories of suffering and torture by the bolshevics will quicken the appreciation of all of us for our hard-preserved liberties.

I hope you will do what you can to talk it up for the Stratton bill pending in Congress. Under existing regulations, there are thousands of vacancies on the German, English, and Russian quotas to the US, and in addition many thousands of unused numbers during the war. But the Baltic, and Slavic groups under IRO care have infinitesimal quotas. For exemple: 40,000 Latvians for a yearly quota of 236, or 100,000 Jews, 55,000 Polish-Ukrainians and 50,000 Poles for a yearly quota of 6,000 for Poland.

So this is to inform you of the situation. I could write a book about the constructive things many are doing while waiting here in exile; and I could write at length about the psychological deterioraton of people who have broken off all roots with the past and have no security to grip on to for the future.

Yours truly,

Samuel Snipes

Samuel Snipes
Camp Administrator
IRO Team 1062
Leipheim, Bavaria
APO 178, PM, NY.

Home address
Lincoln Highway
Morrisville, Pa.
USA

PREPARATORY COMMISSION
FOR THE
INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION
TEAM 1062 APO 178

August 15, 1947.

Dear ~~Mr. Silverman~~

As a fellow member of the Workers Defense League, I want to call your attention to the plight of the 660,013 Displaced Persons still in Germany. You have heard about them. I have worked and lived with them for the past 18 months, first with UNRRA, now with IRO.

I recently wrote the governors of each state in regard to Displaced Persons, with the idea in mind that state political leaders should become aware of the problem. Some governors answered very encouragingly. Others preferred to „pass the buck", saying immigration was a federal problem.

By nationality, Displaced Persons in the U.S. zone number:

		U.S. yearly Quota
Latvian	41 782	236
Estonian	13 453	116
Lithuanian	27 056	386
Polish	58 359
Jugoslavian	5 408	845
Polish-Ukrainian	57 976	6.524
Stateless	18 607	?
Jewish	124 193
Others	8 718
Total 30 th April, 1947	355 552

Germany	25.957
England	65.721
Austria	1.413

Total for US, British un French zones 30 th April, 1947
660,013

In my camp of 1020 Latvians, 694 desire to emigrate to an Anglo-Saxon country, i. e. U.S., Canada, Australia, or South Africa.

I think the best solution will be to permit as many Jewish persons as desire, to enter Palestine. (I know this is a big problem and too detailed to delve into here. But, as I also have worked in a Jewish camp of 3000 for the past 10 months, I'm sure that these people will only rescue themselves from their inferiority complex in an environment which they themselves choose.)

And most of the remainder of these refugees from bolshevism should be taken in the western hemisphere. Just as political refugees of the Revolution of 1848 lead by Karl Schurz, and presently lead by Willkie, Eisenhower, etc., have made a great contribution to our democratic institutions, so I visualize a like contribution by these victims of bolshevism if they can once get to US, Canada, etc. To hear their stories of suffering and torture by the bolshevics will quicken the appreciation of all of us for our hard-preserved liberties.

I hope you will do what you can to talk it up for the Stratton bill pending in Congress. Under existing regulations, there are thousands of vacancies on the German, English, and Russian quotas to the US, and in addition many thousands of unused numbers during the war. But the Baltic, and Slavic groups under IRO care have infinitesimal quotas. For exemple: 40,000 Latvians for a yearly quota of 236, or 100,000 Jews, 55,000 Polish-Ukrainians and 50,000 Poles for a yearly quota of 6,000 for Poland.

So this is to inform you of the situation. I could write a book about the constructive things many are doing while waiting here in exile; and I could write at length about the psychological deterioraton of people who have broken off all roots with the past and have no security to grip on to for the future.

Yours truly,

Samuel Snipes

Samuel Snipes
Camp Administrator
IRO Team 1062
Leipheim, Bavaria
APO 178, PM, NY.

Home address
Lincoln Highway
Morrisville, Pa.
USA

THE PLANET

VOLUME 1, NUMBER 6 • PUBLISHED BY WORLD REPUBLIC PRESS • OCTOBER 1, 1947

Southern Regional

U. S. TO PLAY IMPORTANT ROLE IN EUROPEAN ECONOMICS

Rest of World Dependent on Our Production

The gravity of the European economic situation is currently manifested in expressions of opinion that a complete break-down is overdue. The logical deduction from this is that the reasons offered for Europe's financial and economic difficulties have been more or less superficial—not incorrect, but simply not realistic. The United States has found itself increasingly involved in the situation, and now must continue as the most important factor in resolving it. This will necessitate the solution of immediate problems, which in turn will mean temporarily abandoning the work toward the goal of a freer world trade.

The position of Great Britain in the economic life of Europe is admittedly of strategic importance; her current instability is reflected not only there but over the entire world. The strong complaint is that there exists a world-wide shortage of dollars which hampers world trade, which undoubtedly is true; and that obstruction is felt directly through Britain to Western Europe. The United States, accepting the idea that nations did not have enough dollars, negotiated a loan of three and three-quarter billion dollars so Britain could have a backlog of security for her post-war reconstruction. One provision in that loan agreement has given rise to an incident which revealed the true cause for European economic chaos. That clause, insisted upon by the U. S. over British protest, stipulated that on July 15, Britain would allow other nations to convert their sterling credits into dollars. The reason for this was to increase the stability of the pound sterling so it again could become an international currency. Instead, other nations made a run on the Bank of England, converting their credits in order to have dollars to spend themselves, since Britain was producing nothing they could import. In a little over a month, half a billion of the U. S. loan had gone for conversion; that practice has now been temporarily suspended. As a result of this, the dollar shortage was, at first, blamed even more soundly than before as the root of the evil. Gradually, however, it is becoming recognized that this shortage is not a cause in itself, but the result of a more fundamental malady. The fact is that Britain, and many other countries, simply cannot produce enough to restore the balance of trade. The purpose of the British loan was to stimulate production; less than half a billion remains of that sum now, and production is lagging. What is left must go for keeping the British people alive. The Dominions can be of little assistance: Canada must have dollars for her wheat, Australia is committed to sending food shipments to India, and the colonies cannot supply what is needed. Therefore, it falls to the United States to come to the rescue again. Only this time, things will be conducted somewhat differently. The next loan to Britain will be controlled much more closely than the previous one.

The development of Greek aid has put the U. S. firmly in the Hellenic saddle, not only economically, but in every other important way. Fortunately, as a result of the collapse of the Tsaldaris regime and the formation of the Sophoulos government, that position may now become more tenable. In Germany, preparations are underway to open the Ruhr to production by the Germans themselves. Also, a plan is in the outline stages by which the German people will be made responsible to a much greater degree than at present for producing foodstuffs for themselves. This line of action is the sum and substance of Secretary Marshall's plan for European reconstruction—the United States cannot continue as the sole support of failing countries; they must be taken off relief by helping themselves.

This still leaves two important questions unanswered. Great Britain cannot look to the Dominions or the colonies for assistance, and it is obvious that the British Isles cannot support its population. Food rations have been cut to below war-time levels; imports of raw materials and machinery must be continued if there is to be any hope of increasing production; and a recent drive to recruit more labor was a flat failure. What, then, is Great Britain to do? A great deal of blame is being placed on her lag in coal production, resulting from political difficulties. But it is doubtful if increased coal output alone would provide the answer.

The other important question is the effect the whole situation will have on the United States. Lack of production in Britain and the resultant decrease in dollar reserves are forcing other nations out of British and American trade. Suspension of sterling conversion has hit Argentina and Brazil as well as Western Europe and the Middle East, and has left them without a source of dollars. Consequently, their imports from the United States will be cut, vitally affecting this nation's economy. The immediate problem is what to do with increasing production in the U. S. in the face of decreasing foreign markets. The long range problem remains the development of free trade, now indefinitely pushed into the future.

The political factor is very important in both Britain and Germany. Any definitely controlled financial assistance in the future is bound to bring the U. S. into the political activities of both countries, as it did in Greece. That is the price, and the challenge to be more successful than in Greece, that this country faces in carrying out its current obligations.

The Key to His Problem?

Cartoon used by permission of the Christian Science Monitor, 1 Norway Street, Boston 15, Mass. Artist—Carmack.

PEACE FRONTS OF THE WORLD

We demand an investigation. J. Edgar Hoover ought to to take his feet off his desk and catch the first train to New York City. It is only a short ride from Manhatten to the scene of a dangerous conspiracy.

Mirrored in the waters of a lagoon Mr. Hoover will discover the one powerful organization of possible subversive character he has not publicly investigated. He should do so immediately. Standing beside a lake called Success is the largest Communist Front outfit anyone could find anywhere—the United Nations, so called. Why no one has yet pointed this out is beyond understanding.

In the halls of the UN the United States must actually co-operate with the Soviet Union by contractural agreement. The two katzenjammers follow like rules of procedure and abide by the same regulations. In a continuous round of talk and veto, veto and talk the U. S. must aid and abet doctrinaire Kremlin tongue-lashing at "scheming" capitalist society. Our nation makes this possible, if not inevitable, by just being present in the corpus de nations. Only upon rare occasion do Washington and Moscow agree about anything. The Indonesian cease fire order was such a notable moment, although it singularly lacked eminence as a basic cause of Soviet-American friction.

It is amazing that certain of our daily pulp chains have not caught on to the situation in the Meadows. Of course, the independent Chicago Tribune has always and ever maintained that the UN is nothing but fiasco and poppycock, stating in no uncertain terms (aprapos of Secretary Marshall's UN proposals) that we must not "relinquish" an iota of sovereignty to foreigners.

It is difficult to decide how to get out of taking part. I know one fellow (an erstwhile anti-globalonist, Niknar by name) who spends between nine and five every day trying to devise ways in which we can separate ourselves from the Russians, much as the earth broke off from the sun.

J. Edgar might investigate that one, too.

—PHILLIPS ROUPP.

Editorial:

MISTAKEN FOR BROTHERS

Secretary of State Marshall's speech of September 17th to the opening session of the General Assembly tersely stated new U. S. policy. Washington has decided to utilize the UN for coming maneuvers in the "cold war."

This is a drastic departure from the "Truman Doctrine," which ignored the UN and delt a serious, if expected, blow to its prestige. Now our challenge to the U.S.S.R. has been delivered in the arena of Flushing Meadows. Although Secretary Marshall called upon the UN as a whole to take action through the General Assembly, it appears obvious that, over and above altruism, there is a cynical modus vivendi for this sudden all-out rush into the arms of the blind-folded Lady of Success.

On the surface of the movement for strengthening and amending the Charter of the United Nations appears to be composed entirely of idealistis realists, men like Cord Meyer, Norman Cousins and company. A deeper probe would reveal professional hypocrites and sycophants who regard this as a convenient vehicle for consolidation of U. S. power, a capturing of the UN by the State Department and the forcing of the Russians to the door of departure. These opposites have been mistaken for brothers.

While Russia attacks the United States in Italy, we, in turn, attack Russia in the United Nations. Attack is followed by counter-attack as Vishinsky opens fire.

But it is because of this, not in spite of it, that the Soviets must remain in the UN if we are not to destroy the only means of effective contact with them on a common level, even if it is only the level of talk. As Clarence Streit says, "War begins only when nations cease to talk to each other."

The course of the next few months will ascertain the definite outcome of this U. S. surge toward powerful leadership in the international organization. At this time it is difficult to evaluate Mr. Marshall's basic motives for this new move.

We can understand better, however, the thinking of some of the career men on the Secretary's staff and that of rightist politicians who have come out for a "strengthening of the United Nations." Their reasons for advocating a strengthened UN are separated by a wide breech from those of world federalists who also demand a shot of adrenaline for the gasping body. It is a safe bet that the former group does not have in mind a swift evolution of the UN into the ultimate of world government. Tricky vision makes both parties look as though they are on the same bandwagon.

They are not.

Federalists know that the hour for ultimates has long since arrived.

PLANET LIFE

—Cord Meyer Jr.

Among the signs of strength shown by the growing World Government movement is the emergence of public leaders whose fame rests almost entirely upon their activities on behalf of the World Government idea.

Foremost among such leaders in this country is Cord Meyer, Jr., recently elected President of United World Federalists. Meyer, graduated from Yale in 1943, first came into prominence when he was selected as one of two youthful advisors to Commander Harold E. Stassen at the San Francisco Conference in 1945. By that time Meyer had already made a notable record in the 22nd Marine Regiment in the South Pacific.

The San Francisco Conference provided Meyer with first-hand evidence of the futility of diplomatic maneuvering as a means of securing and stabalizing world peace. A short time later the Atlantic published his article, "A Serviceman Looks at the Peace," one of the most powerful brief statements of the World Government case. This piece was the first of many by Meyer to gain wide circulation among world-staters as effective literature for use in the cause.

Meyer's activity, however, has not been confined to writing. He developed into a powerful and original speaker. He has also taken an active part in the American Veterans Committee since its early days, and deserves a large part of the credit for the increasing swing toward a definite World Government commitment on the part of that organization. On the strength of his World Government work, he was elected to the top governing body of AVC at their convention in Milwaukee.

After the San Francisco Conference, Meyer began work in the Graduate School of Philosophy at Harvard. His thesis, which promises to be one of the best works in the World Government literature, is to be published this fall.

The accomplishments of Cord Meyer should give the swelling number of indefatigable workers in the name of world law the assurance they all need from time to time that their labors, far from being in vain, are producing a positive effect on the thinking of the American public.

—Stephen Benedict.

World Republic Endorses Montreux

Dual Program Seen as Basis for Co-operation of U. S. Peace Groups

Saturday, September 20—World Republic held its annual assembly in an all-day session at Ricardo's Restaurant in Chicago. Some sixty delegates and alternates from regional offices and local chapters were present. A report was made on the convention of World Federalist groups which met recently at Montreux, Switzerland. The declaration drawn up at Montreux, calling for action on a two-fold program to achieve world government, was endorsed by the vote of the delegates, representing the membership of World Republic.

On the basis of a report by Paul Andrews, Public Relations Director of World Republic, and subsequent committee work, a six month's program was adopted. The plan calls for a series of "Congresses on World Security" to take place in this country under the sponsorship of organizations interested in promoting peace. Several views of world affairs and various solutions to world problems are to be presented in seminars. Emphasis is to be placed on special local interest on certain days of each "Congress," but the general public will be encouraged to attend every session. Progress of friendly relations with World Citizenship Movement, since the joint meeting in Oberlin, Ohio, was reported.

It is to be hoped that World Republic can effectively present the need for joint all-out effort on the part of World Federalist groups in the United States, for the sake of productive action and wide-spread publicity.

Local Charters Granted

The meeting of the National Assembly of World Republic ended with a banquet attended by all present at the earlier sessions. Speakers were Sidney Harris, Daily News columnist, and Dr. Henry E. Stanton, atomic physicist at the University of Chicago.

Local charters were presented to the following chapters: Lake View, Ill., Hyde Park, Chicago; Manchester College, Manchester, Indiana; Northwest Chicago; Rogers Park, Chicago; Willmette, Ill. Charters for the Berwyn, Ill., and Woodstock, Ill., chapters had not been made out.

Marginal Notes:

Sec. of State Marshall's proposal for an additional commission to handle the bunglings of the Security Council seems to be a step in the right direction. We certainly hope it is not an attempt to force Russia from the United Nations.

It is an improvement in that something is being done for compensation to the death blows of the veto. The people are still being by-passed as nations continue their mud-throwing.

* * *

Next year the political parties of the United States will announce their candidates and platforms. I wonder if one of these groups will have the courage to announce candidates for the positions as different delegates to the United Nations. True, these positions are filled by appointment and not popular balloting. I personally feel though, that if a party announces such candidates, the effect will be productive.

This could keep a segment of the voter's mind on the international situation, and the partially realized but definitely existing interdependance at that level, while the force of the tide is toward the level of national situations. In addition, of course, it is a good suggestion that such offices should be elective so that we voters may express our wishes in matters where our welfare is at stake.

* * *

Now that a robot plane has spanned a large segment of water we wonder what the impression the American mind will be. Chances are it will approximate, "Boy, do we have something on the others." Such a conclusion, that we have something over the others, is quite erroneous in more ways than one. There is nothing basically new in guided missiles and this is no advancement when the Nagasaki-type bomb is already obsolete.

* * *

Special orchids and congratulations should go to Dr. Robert Hutchins and The Committee To Frame A World Constitution. Knowing full well that such a document is fully necessary, this group, headed by Hutchins, is clearing ground that will save much deliberating by any body that will have such composition for its task.

—Don Miller.

Larmeroux:

Events Call For World Citizenship

(Editor's note: At the recent Montreux Conference, M. Jean Larmeroux, French educator, was elected President of the Council of the World Movement for World Federal Government. The following article is a condensation of a recent writing of M. Larmeroux as translated from the French by Ellen Haskell.)

The world is divided into various sections called states. These states are sovereign and their power is not limited except as they wish. Therefore, in important international questions they are prone to give their assent, then at the last moment, refuse it; they can give it, then take it away; they can, having given it, hold it of no account.

In order to pay the financial consequence of war, in order to raise indispensable armies, in order to encourage industries necessary for war, the states slowly bring about their ruin. And, in order to diminish the onrush of this catastrophe, they overload their subjects who founder in a state of general misery.

The balance sheet of man's effort to better his lot has been adorned, in the course of the last few years, with the powerful influence of the atomic bomb, which will solve the military problem in conditions neighboring the absolute.

It will suffice therefore, to open one's eyes and to consider the world, in order to see that, having achieved the height of absurdity, it has enveloped itself in agony.

The nations occupy themselves with modifying frontiers, with replacing people, with changing regimes, while science laughs at their efforts and prepares with the sublime indifference of the absolute and according to the direction of its efforts, either the end of the world or the happiness of man.

The only remedy to such a tragic situation is to reduce the national sovereignty of each state for the profit of a supranational sovereignty.

Those who object that such a program is too grandiose and that it will be difficult to realize, commit an error. There are those, who, time after time, have doubted the human intelligence and the power of science. They have doubted steam, electricity, aviation and the radio. Always they have doubted, and everything, and always the outcome has proved them wrong.

That which we wish to realize will be realized with certainty; because in this age of speed and science, the frontiers are an anachronism, the customs barriers a childishness, the diversity of moneys a stupidity. In short, the obsolete world survives by itself, but it is a world which is dying and which already smells the corpse.

A new world will be born, the conception of which can be opposed by nothing, because its arrival is in the nature of things. The world is one. It moves toward an infrangible unity. In fact, civilization has developed by leaving the stage of the clan, the tribe, feudalism and independent villages, in order to arrive today at the system of nations. And we have now arrived at the superior stage calling for the unification of continents, where each country is no more than a province of the land, and each man, a citizen of the world.

If this transformation of the world is not accomplished, men will die beforehand by the tortures of war. Is it not wiser, since this unity is in the evidence of nature, since no thing nor person can prevent it, to save ourselves untold suffering and to create immediately an organ of safety—a world government?

World Republic Elects Board

At the meeting of the National Assembly of World Republic the following were constituted the Board of Directors for the following year: Prof. William Byron, Rev. Fred Carney, Rempher L. Whitehouse, Robert L. Young, Richard Carter. Prof. Byron has not accepted.

Please enter my subscription to

THE PLANET

$1.00 for one year

50 cents for six months

Name _____

Address _____

THE PLANET is issued twice each month at 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois.

THE PLANET is published twice each month by World Republic Press. James Wahlman, Editor. Signed articles reflect the views of the writer alone, and are not necessarily endorsed by THE PLANET.

World Republic, 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois

CHICAGO 89 ILL.

14

Southern Com. on Interracial Co-Op.
710 Standard Bldg.
Atlanta, Georgia

RECEIVED
MAY 10 '48
Southern Regional Council

SOME ASPECTS OF THE DISPLACED PERSONS PROBLEM

April 7, 1948

		Page
I.	Fact Sheet on the International Refugee Organization	1
II.	Occupational Skills of Displaced Persons	4
III.	Employment Outlook for Displaced Persons	6

Division of Public Liaison
Department of State

I.

FACT SHEET ON THE INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

By the end of the last war, the western Allies had found almost eight million displaced persons in Austria, Germany and Italy. All but one million were repatriated to their homelands. Those remaining refuse to return because they are not in sympathy with the ideology of their nations' governments or because they fear religious or political persecution.

Recognizing that the nature and solution of the refugee and displaced persons problem constitute an urgent matter which is international in scope and character, the United Nations provided for the establishment of the International Refugee Organization. Its Constitution was approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 15, 1946. Under the terms of the Constitution, however, the IRO will not come into being until fifteen members of the U.N., whose contributions total at least 75 percent of its first year's operational budget, have adhered unconditionally to the Constitution.

As of April 5, 1948, although more than 76 percent of the budget had been subscribed, one member was needed to bring the IRO proper into existence. The following countries have signed the IRO Constitution. Those starred have adhered unconditionally to it.

*Argentina
*Australia
*Belgium
Bolivia
Brazil
*Canada
*China
*Dominican Republic
*France
*Guatemala
Honduras
*Iceland Liberia
*Netherlands
*New Zealand
*Norway Panama
Peru
Philippines
*United Kingdom
*United States

Until the International Refugee Organization itself comes into being, its functions are being carried out by a Preparatory Commission which has been operating since July 1, 1947. On that date, the Preparatory Commission took over the functions of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees and the pertinent functions of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA).

Responsibilities

Responsibilities

PCIRO has six responsibilities: (1) repatriation; (2) identification, registration and classification; (3) care and assistance; (4) legal and political protection; (5) transportation; and (6) resettlement and reestablishment in countries able and willing to receive displaced persons and refugees*.

Accomplishments

There are now approximately 634,000 refugees being cared for by the Preparatory Commission. Practically all of them are maintained in camps and assembly centers in Germany, Austria and Italy. During the first six months of PCIRO operations (through December 1947), 35,435 displaced persons were repatriated and 92,236 were resettled by PCIRO and other agencies. Among the nations accepting displaced persons have been the United States, United Kingdom, France, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, the Netherlands, North Africa (French), Peru, and Venezuela. It should be noted, however, that despite the fact that 127,671 have been removed from PCIRO's care during the period under consideration, the number receiving care decreased only from 688,110 to 633,680.

This is because PCIRO could not take over all groups of D.P.'s at one time and is still in the process of assuming responsibility for the remaining groups.

---

*Briefly stated, the IRO Constitution defines the term "refugee" as follows: (1) a person, outside of his own country, who was either a victim of Nazi or Falangist persecution or a pre-war refugee; (2) a person, outside of his own country, who, as a result of events subsequent to the outbreak of the war, is unable or unwilling to avail himself of the protection of the Government of his own country; (3) persons who, having resided in Germany or Austria, and being of Jewish origin or foreigners of stateless persons, were victims of Nazi persecution and were detained in or were obliged to flee from and were subsequently returned to, one of those countries as a result of enemy action, or of war circumstances, and have not yet been firmly resettled therein; (4) Unaccompanied children who are war orphans or whose parents have disappeared, and who are outside of their own countries. The term "displaced person" applies to a refugee who was forced to leave his own country as a result of official action by the Nazi or Fascist authorities.

Budget

PCIRO's budget for 1947-1948 was approved at a figure of $115,645,000, scaled down from a proposed figure of $155,860,500 due to lack of membership. The budget provides for:

Administration.....	$16,500,000
Care and Maintenance.....	80,480,000
Resettlement.....	14,020,000
Repatriation.....	4,500,000
Short-term loans.....	145,000

Administration

The administration of the Preparatory Commission is under the direction of the Executive Secretary, William Hallam Tuck, who maintains a staff of about 300 persons at the headquarters in Geneva.

PCIRO operations are administered from field mission offices located in Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Germany (the American, British and French zones), Canada, Czechoslovakia, China, France, Italy, Egypt, the Netherlands, Poland, the United Kingdom, the United States, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia. Employed in these offices are about 1,700 internationally recruited and 2,400 locally recruited staff members.

OCCUPATIONAL SKILLS OF DISPLACED PERSONS

The report on the occupational skills of 330,000 refugees in assembly centers of the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization, located in Germany, Austria and Italy, prepared by Mr. William K. Shaughnessy of the United States Employment Service, indicates that these refugees have a wide variety of skills.

Among the male displaced persons, the largest group is that of skilled workers, with agricultural workers second and professionals third. Percentage figures follow:

Major Areas	Total Males Classified	% Skilled	% Agricultural	% Professional
British Zone, Germany	85,888	27.8	35.1	9.0
US Zone, Germany	90,507	34.8	17.5	10.3
French Zone, Germany	14,431	26.6	39.1	10.4
Italy	14,656	42.0	23.2	10.2

Skilled male workers are found in sixty occupations, varying from airplane mechanic to woodworker. The following statistics are representative:

Occupation in which there are large numbers of skilled male workers among D.P.'s	Total in U.S. zone, Germany	Total in British zone, Germany
Tailor	4,890	1,568
Shoemaker, saddler	4,269	2,782
Locksmith	3,317	2,695
Carpenter	2,252	1,723
Auto & truck Mechanic	1,863	1,637
Butcher	1,698	1,153
Electrician	1,398	1,042
Baker	1,331	964
Woodworker	1,220	1,117

There are also significant numbers of such highly skilled workers as tool makers, machinists, structural steel workers, plumbers and masons.

It is not surprising that there are large numbers of skilled and agricultural male workers among the refugees since a great many of them were selected for forced labor by the Nazi authorities because they possessed needed skills and had the physical capacity to perform under strenuous work schedules.

Large

Large numbers of male professionals are found in the following occupations. The British Zone of Germany is used as an example.

Profession	British Zone of Germany numbers Reported
Teacher, Professor	1,410
Civil Engineer	469
Musician	456
Clergyman	451
Lawyer	422
Agronomist	421
Physician, Surgeon	419
Mechanical Engineer	355
Singer, Actor, Dancer	281
Architect	265
Electrical Engineer	227
Artist, Sculptor	210
Chemist	207

The remaining male refugee workers are classified as clerical, service, semi-skilled and unskilled. Their numbers are relatively few.

Among the women displaced persons, there are many agricultural, domestic and professional workers. The two leading groups of professional women are nurses (3,495) and teachers (4,590). Among the skilled female workers are 14,238 seamstresses. In the domestic service classification are 18,064 women.

III.

EMPLOYMENT OUTLOOK FOR DISPLACED PERSONS

Prepared by the U.S. Employment Service Technical Service Division
Analysis Section
March 4, 1948

Any discussion of the effect that the entry of displaced persons would have on the labor market of the United States must include the number who are to enter and the extent to which they will disperse geographically and industrially throughout the country. In his testimony before the Subcommittee on Immigration of the House Judiciary Committee, Mr. Philip Hannah, Assistant Secretary of Labor, pointed out that historically the United States has benefited from immigration and that further benefits could be expected from the admission of displaced persons. In view of the completeness of Mr. Hannah's testimony, it seems needless to further elaborate this point.

The United States now has an employment level of 57 million workers and a labor force of approximately 59 million. Even if nearly 600,000 additional workers were to enter, the labor force would be increased only one percent. Thus the number of entrants being discussed represents but a few tenths of one percent of the American labor force. An increase as small as this would hardly be noticed in the labor market.

With the current high level of business activity and with unemployment at a level of only approximately two million, it is to be expected that in some occupations and even in some industries and areas there is a stringency of labor. Such is the case. For example, the most recent analysis by the United States Employment Service showed that of 110 important labor market areas in the country only 29 had a substantial labor surplus; in 28 areas unemployment was at a minimum level; in 31 areas there was a "slight" surplus of labor and in 32 areas a "moderate" surplus. This analysis was based upon total unemployment in the area compared with the labor force of the area. Even within areas of substantial unemployment the workers available frequently do not meet the skill requirements of employers and it is difficult to recruit workers with particular abilities and qualifications.

Mr. W. K. Shaughnessy's report on the occupational skills of refugees in the assembly centers of the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization, while indicating the problems of obtaining a uniform standard inventory of occupational skills, presents a breakdown of such skills for some 330,000 refugees. According to this report most of the classified workers are male and among males, skilled workers, and agricultural workers are the two largest groups, with the professional group third. The occupational skills possessed by refugees are, according to Mr. Shaughnessy, varied, and represent a rich source of labor supply.

while

A gneral discussion of the present labor market situation in the United States with respect to broad occupational groups is presented below.

Professional and Managerial Occupations--The United States could profit from a larger supply of professional and managerial workers. More doctors, nurses, dental technicians and similar professional workers are currently needed. Shortages also exist in some areas for mechanical, electrical and civil engineers. Draftsmen are in generally short supply. Teachers are also needed but local residence requirements would probably limit employment opportunities in many areas. Such research professionals as chemists, physicists, and various types of engineers can make a great contribution to the United States, if they have particular skills and abilities. Numbers have already been recruited to aid American military and business research.

Clerical and Sales Occupations--There are widespread shortages of workers in many of the occupations in this group, including stenographers, typists and general clerical workers. The general high level of business activity indicates that additional administrative and commercial help may be needed.

Service Occupations--This group of occupations includes workers engaged in domestic, personal, and protective service. There is a widespread and acute shortage of domestic workers and no immediate prospect that supply will approach demand. Similarly, such occupations in the personal service group as cooks, hospital attendants, kitchen workers and laundry workers are also difficult to recruit.

Agricultural Occupations--One of the three large groups of refugees consists of those with agricultural experience. Although currently at a seasonal low, there are now over 7 million workers in agriculture in the United States. During the seasonal peak this number will rise to approximately 10,300,000. The need for agricultural workers is indicated by the fact that as many as 65,000 foreign workers were imported for agricultural work at the peak of operations in 1947.

indicated

Skilled Group--Skilled workers also constitute one of the three largest groups of refugees. Workers in these groups have a variety of specific skills. There are definite shortages of some of these skills such as tailors, seamstresses, and automobile and truck mechanics in this country, and a general stringent supply in other occupations. The high level of business activity in this country, following a long period during which normal apprenticeship training was at a low ebb, has resulted in an under supply of workers in many of the skilled occupations. Reports from employers continually indicate difficulty in recruiting needed skilled workers, even where such skills are not in actual short supply.

Semi-Skilled Occupations--Generally speaking, the same comments made with respect to the skilled occupations apply, although to a much lesser degree, to semi-skilled occupations. Most industries in the United States are operating at a high employment level and, with some exceptions, could use additional workers, if they were readily available.

17- Immigration

Illegal Mexican Immigration

". . . wholesale violation of the laws . . . systematic exploitation . . . American levels depressed . . . social problems for the community . . . that is the situation today."

GLADWIN HILL, New York Times.

Extension of Remarks of

Hon. Paul H. Douglas

of Illinois

in the Senate of the United States

April 9, 1951

RECEIVED
JUN 18 1951
Southern Regional Council

Not printed at Government expense

United States Government Printing Office, Washington : 1951

942350—38894

Illegal Mexican Immigration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL H. DOUGLAS

OF ILLINOIS

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a series of five articles by Gladwin Hill, dealing with the illegal Mexican immigration into Southwest United States, which appeared in the New York Times March 25 to 29. Notwithstanding the estimated cost of printing these articles is $430.50, it is most timely that the economic and sociological problems analyzed in them be now brought to the attention of Senators and Representatives. The Nation's manpower needs are becoming acute. The agreement with Mexico is up for renewal. Legislation is about to be reported out in the House and Senate. The report of the President's Commission on Migrant Farm Labor has just emphasized again the grave consequences of our neglect of this situation. And the so-called wet-back traffic affords alarming opportunities for the entry of Communist spies and saboteurs.

The New York Times has again performed a significant public service in arranging for this survey and printing its findings on this problem.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of March 25, 1951]

MILLION A YEAR FLEE MEXICO ONLY TO FIND PEONAGE HERE—ILLEGAL MIGRATION ACROSS 1,600-MILE BORDER BY SEASONAL SLAVE LABOR DEPRESSES LATIN AND UNITED STATES LEVELS ALIKE

(By Gladwin Hill)

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., March 24.—A visitor to the Southwest today has to make a double mental adjustment to comprehend the conditions he finds.

First, he has to think back 20 years to prohibition days, when wholesale violation of the laws of the United States was being ignored, tacitly sanctioned or overtly encouraged by a large cross-section of the population.

Second, he has to project himself in imagination back a full century to the days of slavery, when the systematic exploitation of an underprivileged class of humanity as cheap labor was an accepted part of the American social and economic order.

Then the observer has to compound mentally these two diverse anomalies and conceive of their existence in 1951.

For that, in effect, is the situation today in the Southwest, and in parts of the deep South and the far West as well, arising from the ceaseless and steadily increasing tide of illegal immigration from Mexico into the United States.

This illegal immigration now amounts to more than 1,000,000 individuals a year. They sneak across the thinly patrolled 1,600-mile border between Brownsville, Tex., and San Diego, Calif., in an unending hegira from Mexican unemployment and wage levels as low as 40 cents a day, seeking farm work and any other labor available in this country.

Some 500,000 of these wetbacks—so-called because of those who swim the Rio Grande, the Texas-Mexico boundary—were caught by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Services' border patrol last year and put back across the international line.

The estimate of a total traffic of 1,000,000 is conservative, based on the surmise that for every one caught there is one who isn't caught. Most immigration officers would concede a more likely average of 5 or 10 to 1, and for some areas responsible estimates go as high as 100 to 1; in such a reckoning many of the total would be not different individuals, but repeaters who recross after having been deported.

There are fewer than 900 border patrol officers to guard the whole 1,600 miles of boundary, and sometimes the deportees get back into the United States before the deporting officers do. Some Mexicans have been deported as many as 20 times, only to return again and again.

SOME RETURN, SOME STAY

A large number of wetbacks regularly slip back into Mexico after seasonal farm work ends. But tens of thousands of others have remained in the United States, managing to settle down in semihiding in hundreds of communities along the border, or becoming transient laborers and filtering northward over the western half of the country all the way to the Canadian border.

Technically every one of these wetbacks is an illegal alien, the same as a foreigner who slipped through the paradoxically tight immigration patrols at Ellis Island—a violator of the Federal law, subject to imprisonment.

But because the bulk of this immigration is tidal, advancing and receding with the regularity of the seasons, it has come to be taken for granted, both by the United States border population and the Nation at large.

Superficially, the wetback traffic is just a picturesque cat-and-mouse game on a grand scale between a mass of amiable Latins and an overwhelmed border patrol.

In actuality, however, a year's study of the situation by this correspondent, ending in a recent 5,000-mile tour of the border area, shows it to be a phenomenon whose real economic and social implications should shock the average American when fully known and comprehended.

PEONAGE AND SLAVERY

The impression is widespread that these Mexicans simply come over as a regular essential and harmless supplement to the domestic harvest forces.

The fact is that they are attracted by the glittering prospect of high American wages, and in many cases actively recruited by large-scale ranchers or their representatives, only to work for wages that have been described by United States immigration officers as tantamount to peonage and under conditions compared on the same authority to antebellum slavery.

"This traffic in contraband labor actually is worse in its elements than either prohibition or slavery," a nationally prominent figure in the Southwest commented a few days ago. "Prohibition involved only traffic in alcohol. This is traffic in human beings. And in slavery some responsibility, at least, was acknowledged for the release of the slaves. Here there is none."

The wetback, a penniless fugitive, has to take whatever wages are offered, which, because of the multitude of wetbacks available, usually are at a bare existence level or below it. His traditional housing is the crudest form of shack or hovel, wherever he can find it, or just the open air. His status denies him access to regular community legal and welfare agencies. If he doesn't like his situation he can go back where he came from. There are thousands of other hopefuls south of the border ready to take his place.

AMERICAN LEVELS DEPRESSED

Aside from the abuses to which these Mexicans themselves are subject, the traffic in wetbacks has manifestly baneful effects on the citizenry with which they mingle.

In many sections of Texas, Arizona, California and other areas they depress the general standards of wages and working conditions below the accepted American levels. Instead of supplementing the domestic labor force they undercut it, taking jobs from tens of thousands of native citizens, farm and urban workers alike.

In the agricultural field, particularly, the resulting native displaced persons have to join the great stream of migrant labor that fans out annually northward all the way from New York to Oregon, working a good deal of the time for substandard wages and working conditions and, in turn, taking jobs from resident local workers.

From a sociological standpoint, the wetback traffic has obliterated the border completely, transforming the 3,000,000 Spanish-American citizens of the Southwest—many of whose families have been in the area for centuries—into a cultural peninsula of Mexico, retarding their assimilation, in the opinion of experts, by a generation or more, and perpetuating and aggravating some of the worst conditions of health, education and social, economic and political unintegration that can be found in the country.

Finally, the wetback traffic has engendered, in somewhat the way prohibition did, an atmosphere of amorality and warped thinking which demonstrably extends from the farmer exploiters of wetback labor through their communities and local and State officials, to the highest levels of the Federal Government.

IT'S OUT IN THE OPEN

Although this may sound sensational, the remarkable thing is that there is no secrecy about the situation. Despite an elaborate legendry that has grown up to screen it, and occasional efforts to dissimulate the facts, most of the details are matters of formal public record or common knowledge in the region.

The main problem in inquiring into it is to preserve one's sense of proportion and avoid entanglement in the falsework of rationalization that has grown up over the years to justify the system and maintain it.

The wetback situation is of particular pertinence at this time. The defense emergency has evoked official proposals for the importation of hundreds of thousands of workers from outside the continental United States.

Before Congress is a draft extension of the 1949 agreement between the United States and Mexico, which expires in June, governing the so-called "importation" of Mexican farm workers under contracts which in actuality have degenerated into the legalization of wetbacks.

Before President Truman is the initial report of the special lay commission he appointed last summer to investigate the problems of migrant farm labor and the wetback evil.

Also, it has lately been realized that the wetback traffic offers a wide-open avenue for Communist spies to enter the country. There is no public record of any having been caught lately. But immigration officers acknowledge that every year at least a handful of Europeans, some of them with Communist backgrounds, are netted among the wetbacks, and that in cold fact Joseph Stalin might adopt a perfunctory disguise and walk into the country this way.

Legal immigration into the United States from Mexico—on which there is no quota limit—involves such complications as fees, literacy standards, job assurance, and consular approval. It is much easier to sail, wade, or swim the Rio Grande, seldom more than 100 yards wide, or just to walk across the largely unfenced dry sections of the border.

Such an illegal crossing is a misdemeanor the first time and a felony after an initial deportation, subject to 2 years' imprisonment and $1,000 fine. But the wetbacks numbers largely defy prosecution.

Detention facilities and court dockets are so crowded that anything beyond quick deportation of first offenders has had to be abandoned. The latest authoritative analysis indicates that only about 25 of every 10,000 caught are prosecuted.

So the influx has snowballed. In the San Antonio immigration district, the largest of three covering the border, the number of apprehensions—generally conceded to be in direct proportion to the total traffic—has jumped from 43,000 in 1945 to 215,000 last year.

In the Los Angeles district, covering California and western Arizona, they jumped from 4,000 in 1943 to 230,000 last year. And the traffic is mounting steadily. The Los Angeles district's apprehensions in January and February of last year totaled 19,500; for the same period this year they were 33,800.

The wetback traffic dwarfs the legal contracting of Mexican labor under the international agreement, and has become almost inextricably enmeshed with it. At the moment, according to the United States Employment Service, there are about 28,000 contract Mexicans in the country. Most of them were not imported at all, but are exwetbacks who were rounded up north of the border, processed at border immigration and consular stations, and given legal work permits under guaranties of somewhat better conditions than those accorded wetbacks.

Once across the line, the wetback passes himself off as one of the 3,000,000 citizen Mexican-Americans. The main centers of wetback labor are the large-scale cotton, citrus, and vegetable ranching areas of Arizona, and the Imperial and San Joaquin Valleys of California.

In lesser numbers wetbacks can be found seasonally on farms in Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and other parts of the West, and over in Arkansas, Mississippi, and Missouri. Every week or two a planeload is shipped from Chicago back to the border.

Employment of wetbacks, although from a realistic standpoint tantamount to harboring a fugitive, has been held by the Federal courts to be not a punishable offense because of the omission in the 1917 version of the immigration laws of any specific penalty.

[From the New York Times of March 26, 1951]

PEONS NET FARMER A FABULOUS PROFIT—ILLEGAL MIGRANTS FROM MEXICO WORKING RICH SOIL OF WEST, A BONANZA TO EXPLOITERS—PAY 15 TO 25 CENTS A DAY, AND MANY RECEIVE FOOD ALONE, WHILE SHELTER IS A HUT, A THATCH, OR THE STARS

(By Gladwin Hill)

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., March 25.—The lower Rio Grande Valley is the heart of the 1,600-mile wide border belt stretching from Texas to California into which more than 1,000,000 Mexicans annually infiltrate illegally in quest of work.

Here, amid such towns as Waslaco, Donna, Harlingen, and McAllen are some of the most fertile and productive cotton, citrus, and vegetable lands in the country.

The lower Rio Grande Valley comprises principally three counties, Cameron, Hidalgo, and Willacy, with 300,000 population. Their only fractionally cultivated gross area of 3,000 square miles, although constituting only 2 percent of the total area of the State, yields some 15 percent of its farm income.

In this relatively small area on an average day during last year's harvest peak, according to a careful study by two leading southwestern sociologists, about 100,000 wetbacks were working. A check of 14 farms taken at random by Dr. Lyle Saunders of the University of New Mexico and Dr. Olen Leonard of Vanderbilt University, disclosed that 93 out of every 100 workers were illegal Mexican aliens.

THROUGHOUT WHOLE AREA

In lesser concentrations as the distance from the border increases, but still in swarms of thousands, other wetbacks can be found in the harvesting and thinning seasons in the Salt River Valley of Arizona, the Imperial and San Joaquin Valleys of California, and many other sections of the West and South—legally fugitives from justice, but beneficiaries—or victims—of skimpy border protection, grasping farmers and an apathetic public.

Over the whole area there are many farmers and farm associations that, because of special circumstances or plain scruples, do not use "wetbacks"; but for the average farmer such a course means bucking an entrenched cheap-labor system.

In contrast to visions of affluence conjured up by the wide disparity in United States and Mexican living standards, the "wetback" finds himself under a system of wages governed entirely by what the traffic will bear.

Farmers acknowledged to the President's Commission on Migratory Labor last summer that they paid field hands as low as 15 cents an hour. According to the Saunders-Leonard study, the prevailing hourly wage for "wetbacks" in this valley last year was 25 cents an hour.

TWENTY-SIX-DOLLAR COTTON PICKERS

Although cotton was selling at exceptionally high prices, the cotton picking rate in the valley was at its lowest in some time, $1.25 a hundred pounds—at which, it was calculated, the average picker might earn a maximum of about $26 for a 7-day week.

Hourly rates like 25 cents do not necessarily indicate the real wage level in a particular situation, because they may be replaced by piecework rates that are less, or by day rates based on a theoretical 8 hours that in practice may stretch out to 10 or 11 hours.

Gross wages, moreover, are often subject to deductions for meals, commissary purchases, and special assessments, such as the common practice of charging workers for binding wire for vegetables, a practice obviously implying either a paring of the nominal wage or profiteering on the wire.

Two cases reported last summer at McAllen were a father, mother, and two children who had worked 4 days for a net of $6.50 and an inexperienced cotton picker who after 3 days' work was told he had just earned the food he had eaten.

SOME GET NO CASH

It is not extraordinary for "wetbacks" to report having worked for weeks only to be told that there was no cash due them. In such a circumstance the "wetback" has little scope for argument; the farmer can just turn him into the immigration authorities for deportation.

A few days ago I talked with a "wetback" named Felix Moreno who had come into El Centro, Calif., to get help in collecting $47 he said a nearby farmer owed him for 10 days of carrot-bundling. He was 1 of 50

"wetbacks" in a crew of 65. A typical "wetback" in many respects, Moreno was 24 years old and had a wife and year-old child back in Mexico.

Last fall he had taken more than a month's Mexican wages to buy a train ticket from Santiago, Guanajuato, 800 miles south of the border. He had walked across the line in the desert and worked intermittently in cotton and vegetables in the 6 months since. In his pocket he had 20 cents.

Aside from wages, the "wetback" gets nothing. His lodging is seldom better than an irrigation ditch-bank or hut improvised from junk or thatch. The worker housing situation in Lower Rio Grande Valley ranches was tersely summarized in a report published by the University of Texas last December:

"No housing facilities exist."

Southwestern farmers have two principal explanations for the wholesale resort to labor that is contraband but the employment of which, because of legal technicalities, is not subject to prosecution.

One is that "local labor is not available."

It is true that, under present arrangements, peak harvest labor requirements often exceed the immediate local supply. The University of Texas survey, made by Prof. Eastin Nelson and Prof. Frederic Meyers, found, for instance, that in the Lower Rio Grande Valley seasonal cotton labor needs fluctuated from 5,000 to 125,000 against a permanent total labor force of only 38,000.

However, the same study found that an adequate supply might well be drawn from within the State of Texas if adequate monetary and other considerations were offered.

Observing that "much of the agricultural labor in the valley is performed by illegal entrants from Mexico," and tactfully skirting the question of wages with the notation that they were "low" even in comparison with other parts of Texas, the Nelson-Meyers report continued:

"The valley has an opportunity almost unique in a largely agricultural area of providing steady year-around jobs for a permanent resident labor force * * * (but) no such stable and desirable conditions exist, and the reasons for their lack lie plainly in the instability created by the continuous traffic back and forth across the Rio Grande.

FACILITIES UNNECESSARY

"The living standards which Mexican nationals are willing to tolerate, and the fact that so many of them are only temporary residents, have made it unnecessary for valley farmers to provide housing, sanitary facilities and other nonwage perquisites adequate to retain a permanent resident farm population."

During the last few years while the "wetback" traffic has been increasing at a rate of 50 percent or more a year, there has been more or less constant farm unemployment in the Southwest.

In the face of purported shortages of labor in Texas, every year around 100,000 residents of the State take to the road, joining the migrant farm-labor stream to the States north, west and east, where lessened "wetback" competition brings more adequate compensation.

Granting the possible occasional need for foreign labor, there is machinery under the United States-Mexico agreement of 1949 for the legal importation of workers under contract. But the farmers do not like this, because contracting involves minimum wages—ranging currently from 40 cents an hour for Texas to 60 cents for California—and guaranties of housing, insurance, and other conditions that make it far more expensive than "wetbacks." Consequently, legal contracting has remained minute in comparison with "wetback" employment.

Although wetback employment is such an established institution that Rio Grande Valley newspapers refer to it baldly as "cheap labor," farmers often argue that any greater labor costs would put them out of business.

CAN BE DONE

There is telling evidence in contradiction of this contention. For virtually every case where a crop is being produced with wetback labor, instances can be found of the same crop's being produced competitively—often in less favorable areas—with legal Mexican contract labor or domestic labor.

At the time farmers in the lower Rio Grande Valley were paying $1.25 for cotton picking, farmers in California's San Joaquin Valley—300 miles north of the border—were paying $3—and making impressive profits. Similar differentials customarily exist in citrus and vegetable production, despite California's more costly distance from eastern markets.

Even within Texas, at a time when daily wages for cotton chopping (thinning) in the valley were about $2.25 the Nelson-Meyers report said, "in the northeast Sandy Lands of Texas they were $3, in Corpus Christi and the coast prairie areas they were $4, in the rolling plains $5, and in the high plains $5.25."

The Saunders-Leonard study indicated that valley farmers were able to realize upwards of $5,000,000 extra profit on their cotton crop last summer by their illegal-labor wage rates. This comfortable differential possibly throws light on the fact that during 1949, when the farm income of the State as a whole was declining 8 percent, according to statistics of the State Department of Agriculture, valley farmers were able to increase their income by 7 percent.

[From the New York Times of March 27, 1951]

PEONS IN THE WEST LOWERING CULTURE—ILLEGAL MIGRANTS FROM MEXICO FORM VAST UNASSIMILABLE BLOC OF POPULATION—ALL STANDARDS DECLINE—HEALTH, EDUCATION, DEMOCRACY IN AREAS WHERE WETBACKS WORK ARE DEPLORABLE

(By Gladwin Hill)

EL PASO, TEX., March 26.—The annual invasion of the United States by more than 1,000,000 illegal Mexican border-jumpers, long regarded by some as merely a quaint regional phenomenon of the Southwest, is emerging as a prime factor in some of the worst economic and social conditions in the Nation.

It is a matter of extensive public record that the 3,000,000 Mexican-American citizens of the Southwest are one of the most underprivileged segments of the population, in earnings, health, education, and equality of treatment.

The wetbacks, whose influx in its present proportions is a development of recent years, did not originate these conditions. In the opinion of a large number of expert observers, however, their presence has done much to perpetuate and aggravate them.

"From a cultural standpoint," states Dr. George Sanchez, head of the department of history and philosophy of education at the University of Texas, and probably the foremost student of regional interracial affairs, "the influx of a million or more wetbacks a year transforms the Spanish-speaking people of the Southwest from an ethnic group which might be assimilated with reasonable facility into what I call a 'culturally indigestible' peninsula of Mexico.

NULLIFIES INTEGRATION

"The wetback migration tends to nullify processes of social integration going back 300 or 350 years, and I would say at the present time has set the whole assimilation process back at least 20 or 30 years."

It is the Mexican-American citizens whom, primarily, the wetback cheap-labor invasion deprives of jobs and, through broad economic pressures, pulls down to its own primitive living standards.

It is the wetbacks, as parties to an informal system of peonage, who inexorably tend to set the level of the far from frictionless relations between the Mexican-Americans and the Anglos.

"No citizen who wants to live in even a minimum of comfort and decency can compete with the wetback wage scale," Dr. Sanchez and Dr. Lyle Saunders, of the University of New Mexico, said in a recent report of the University of Texas' continuing study of the Spanish-speaking peoples, a project of the Rockefeller Foundation's general education board.

"With an oversupply of cheap, unprotected labor always present, organization of workers is impossible, individual bargaining is futile.

"There are only two choices: work for what the wetback works for and live as he lives, or leave the area. Many accept the former alternative. Those who can, choose the second and become displaced persons. Either choice results in undesirable conditions for the individual and social problems for the community."

IN THE WAKE OF POVERTY

"For those who stay and attempt to compete, there is poverty and all the evils associated with it: disease, ignorance, child labor, crime and delinquency, lack of concern with civic affairs, slum conditions, and always the weight of a deadened, passive, apathetic population to be carried on the shoulders of other elements of the community.

"For those who leave, there are similar problems of health, education, welfare, and housing—problems that affect those migrating and those in the communities to which they go."

The second alternative is exemplified in the annual migration of around 100,000 Texans, along with thousands of farm workers resident in other wetback States, to other harvest areas of the Nation in quest of remunerative work.

It is possibly more than coincidence that the number of migrant farm workers who course the Nation annually has been independently estimated at 1,000,000—on the order of a conservative estimate of the number of wetbacks who annually breach the border.

The sources of this migration vary in many cases in direct proportion to the presence of wetbacks. In the lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas, the heart of wetbackland, where as many as 100,000 wetbacks may be working at one time during the harvest peak, a recent survey showed that of 15,000 families, 8,000 had hit the migrant trail during a 2-year period.

NOT MERELY AGRICULTURE

The dislocations are not confined to the agricultural field. Wetbacks filter into every occupation from culinary work to the building trades. Practically any labor union in the 1,600-mile border zone from Texas to California can cite local instances of wetback competition in its field.

An analysis of a group of 160 supposedly agrarian wetbacks picked at random from among a summer's deportations by Dr. Saunders disclosed nine bricklayers, seven truck drivers, three miners, two factory workers, two welders, two weavers, a painter, a barber, a blacksmith, a butcher, a shoemaker, and a policeman.

A check of a single residential block in El Paso, Tex., one day last summer turned up three wetbacks doing craft work—a painter, a carpenter, and a carpenter's helper—working at rates from 57 cents an hour down to 37 cents.

In southwest Texas, wetback competition is so strong that even such nationally powerful unions as the teamsters' and the building trades' are only sketchily organized. An organizer for the American Federation of Labor in the area acknowledged sadly that even loyal union members had got in the habit of working on jobs beside wetbacks without protest.

The approximately 1,250,000 Mexican-Americans in Texas comprise one-sixth of the State's population. In many parts of southwest Texas they are predominant in the population.

COMPARATIVE DEATH RATES

Among the Anglo-American population, the 1946 death rate from diphtheria was 1.81 per 100,000 population; for the Spanish-speaking people, a synonym for Mexican-Americans, it was 6.47; the Anglo-American whooping cough rate was .64, the Mexican-American 5.73; the tuberculosis death rate was 25.4 for Anglo-Americans, 159 for Mexican-Americans.

In San Antonio, the largest city of southern Texas, the tuberculosis death rate among Anglo-Americans is 40, among Negroes 50, and among Mexican-Americans 150.

General conditions worsen as you progress into the wetback country. In Hidalgo County, one of three that make up the lower Rio Grande Valley, a United States Public Health Service survey of 3,103 resident Spanish-speaking families comprising 16,782 persons, disclosed that in 1947–48, 9.8 percent had annual incomes below $500, 41.6 percent below $1,000, 68.3 percent below $1,500, and 82.9 percent below $2,000.

In Hidalgo County in 1949, the infant death rate among Spanish-speaking people was nearly five times that among the non-Spanish speaking. In 1949, Hidalgo and adjacent Cameron County, although containing only one-thirtieth of the State's population, accounted for one-fifteenth of all the State's meningitis, one-twelfth of its typhoid and diphtheria, one-seventh of its dysentery, and one-fifth of its malaria.

EDUCATIONAL DEFICIENCIES

Comparable educational deficiencies characterize the region. The farm-worker migration from Texas customarily starts in the early spring, months before the school year ends, and the workers do not return until fall, after the school year has started.

Among families who do not migrate, and who are faced with making livings under the competition of wetback wages, child labor is so common that in some parts of west Texas the public schools remain closed for an extra month while the fall harvest is on. They remain open an extra month at the end of the year, but this evidently is a minor compensatory factor. In the three valley counties, a recent University of Texas study disclosed, in the age bracket 6 to 17, more than 40 percent of the children were absent from school on a given day.

942350—38894

"It seems perfectly plain from the figures that a fairly large percentage of the scholastics belong to the labor force in some degree * * * and that a fairly large percentage of (children above 14) belong regularly to the labor force."

The United States Public Health Service survey of 3,103 Hidalgo County Spanish-speaking families disclosed that 53 percent of their members had no formal schooling, 75 percent had less than 3 years, only 15 percent had from 3 to 6 years, only 1 percent had completed high school, and only 1 out of 1,000 had attended college.

Of those persons over 21, 45 percent had no schooling, only 2 percent had completed high school, and only 2 out of 1,000 had attended college. Sixty-seven percent could not speak English, and 39 percent were illiterate even in Spanish. For comparison, the latest available State statistics on education among the over-all population of the same county show that 54.6 percent had completed five grades or more, and that 20.6 percent had completed high school.

The retarded assimilation of the Spanish-speaking people, the University of Texas report stated, is revealed in second and third generation citizens who do not speak or who are not fluent in the language of their country, in poor school attendance records and low educational attainments, in abnormally high concentrations in unskilled occupations, in the persistence of separate, segregated institutions, and in subjective out-group feelings toward non-Spanish-speaking citizens.

Despite all the problems of assimilation, Dr. Saunders concluded from a recent study of the valley, it is conceivable that a mutually satisfactory adjustment involving a considerable cultural and perhaps even biological blending of both groups might have been reached had it not been for the continual inflow of large numbers of wetbacks.

"For the wetback embodies most of the elements necessary to reinforce the stereotyped notions of the Anglo through which he sees or fancies he sees undesirable characteristics in the Spanish-speaking group, and tends to assign to all Spanish-speaking people the characteristics he thinks he sees in the wetbacks. * * * poor, uneducated, unskilled, underfed and frequently unclean.

DISCRIMINATION RAMPANT

Although the Texas courts have held that Mexican-Americans are white and therefore not subject to the same level of segregation as Negroes, they are still subject to extensive discrimination—both organized as in certain public housing projects, and informally. A typical example reported by Dr. Saunders is that where Anglo-American stenographers get between $150 and $250 a month, and average about $167, the standard scale for Mexican-Americans, despite their convenient bilinguality, is $100 to $150.

Although constituting some 16 percent of the population of Texas, Mexican-Americans account for only 2 percent of the enrollment in the State's 4-year colleges and universities.

Consonant conditions obtain, in varying degrees, throughout the Southwest.

Possible illumination of the correlation between the status of the wetbacks and that of the Mexican-Americans is provided by a comparison of their role in public affairs, in the States of Texas, New Mexico, and California. In all three States, Spanish-speaking populations have been established for more than a century. In New Mexico, the Spanish-speaking people constitute a larger proportion of the over-all population than in the other States—about half—but from a governmental standpoint their concentration is no greater in various areas than in important sections of Texas and California.

In the latter two States, prime termini of the wetback influx, you can search the rosters of State, county and local legislative and administrative personnel through hundreds of names without encountering one that is Spanish.

In New Mexico, which has only 100 miles of border contiguous to Mexico and where there is relatively little farming to draw wetbacks for practically every Anglo-American in public office—including the State's representation in Congress—you can find a person of Latin extraction.

[From the New York Times of March 28, 1951]

SOUTHWEST WINKS AT WETBACK JOBS—ETHICS CAST ASIDE AS GROWERS ACCEPT PEONAGE IDEA AND BRIDLE AT INTERFERENCE—FEDERAL SANCTION NOTED—BORDER PATROL OFFICERS REPORT PRESSURES FROM WASHINGTON TO "GO EASY" IN RAIDS

(By Gladwin Hill)

EL PASO, Tex., March 27.—The rise in illegal border-crossing by Mexican wetbacks to a current rate of more than 1,000,000 cases a year has been accompanied by a curious relaxation in ethical standards extending all the way from the farmer-exploiters of this contraband labor to the highest levels of the Federal Government.

Although wetbacks are fugitives from justice, southwestern cotton, citrus, and vegetable growers have come to the fixed view that there is nothing wrong in employing them, harboring them or even in actively recruiting them across the international boundary.

Further, they have come to feel they have a vested right in the traffic. Any more than the normal token interference with it by the Immigration Service's skimpy border patrol—with less than 900 officers for the 1,600-mile expanse from Texas to the Pacific Ocean—brings an outraged hue and cry from communities thoroughly indoctrinated with the farmers' attitude.

A year ago, in a special drive, border-patrol officers were concentrated temporarily along the Rio Grande and in 1 month increased their apprehensions from 16,490 to 24,415.

GESTAPO TACTICS CHARGED

Newspapers of the lower Rio Grande Valley immediately accused the Immigration Service editorially of "siding with Mexico" and described valley farmers as "justifiably resentful" at having their scheme of things thus disrupted.

A barrage of feature articles followed, describing in emotional verbiage the purported separation of families by the deportation of border jumpers (an exigency specifically exempted in the immigration laws); and dire conditions allegedly created on the Mexican side of the border by the congestion of deportees (which Mexican officials promptly denied).

The border patrol, long known for its anomalously amicable relations with both the farmers whose fields it periodically raids and the Mexicans it deports, was accused of almost as heinous a roster of outrages as was laid to the Nazi Government, in headlines such as: "Says border patrol uses Gestapo methods." * * * "Illegal search and seizure is issue" * * * "Valley Legion scores acts of border patrol." * * * "Crime against humanity."

Representative LLOYD M. BENTSEN, JR., Democrat, of Texas, member of a prominent valley farming family, took the floor of Congress to demand a full-dress investigation of a report that border patrolmen called at a house in Mission and questioned the occupants "without a search warrant."

SOCIAL SECURITY CARDS ISSUED

Communities have become so accustomed to "wetbackism" that in the leading "wetback" areas of Texas, Dr. Lyle Saunders, University of New Mexico sociologist, recently reported after extensive first-hand study of conditions, "almost anyone who needs help of any kind will hire a wetback—farmers, contractors, businessmen, housewives, city governments, county governments, and even the International Boundary Commission." In this, Texas does not differ substantially from the wetback areas of Arizona, California, and other Western States.

On the hallowed bureaucratic principle of the left hand's not knowing what the right hand is doing, while the Immigration Service struggles with the wetback influx, the Social Security Administration freely issues cards to wetbacks on which they have little chance of collecting benefits, but which are handy for pseudo-identification. Wetbacks get draft board cards for the same purpose, giving worthless addresses. State employment offices in many places—quasi-Federal agencies—refer wetbacks to employment opportunities right along with citizens.

A leading California labor contractor, asked by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor where he located the wetbacks in which he admittedly trafficked, replied blandly: "From the State employment service."

The notion that wetback labor is both proper and indispensable has become so firmly implanted in southwestern communities that its accompanying evils are taken as a matter of course.

WETBACKS LINKED TO CRIME

The (Lower Rio Grande) Valley Express last March quoted District Attorney Jack Ross, of Edinburg, Tex., as saying that in the previous year as much as 75 percent of the convictions in certain major crime categories had been against wetbacks and that since the stepped-up drive against them crime generally had dropped off 50 percent. The newspaper added, without comment, that local police in several valley cities reported such petty crime as pilfering and drunkenness had dropped sharply.

About the same time the San Benito (Tex.) News reported blandly: "It was quite a weekend in San Benito. Only a few habitual drunks got into jail. The round-up of wetbacks may worry San Benito district farmers and cut down receipts of beer joints, but it is a blessing to local police. 'No petty thefts, few fights, no burglaries, and everything peaceful with most of the wetbacks gone, at least for a time, is the police view."

Sheriff Robert Ware, of Imperial County, California's leading wetback area, asked by this correspondent if wetbacks constituted any particular law-enforcement problem, said, "No, they don't give us much trouble. They're mostly quiet, law-abiding people who just want work." A few minutes later he acknowledged that of 135 inmates in the county jail, he estimated 25 percent were wetbacks.

The public record offers extensive evidence of tacit or active Federal sanction of the wetback traffic all the way from the border patrol to the White House level.

ARREST TRENDS ANALYZED

Some responsible regional observers have noted a curious inverse correlation between the rate of the border patrol's apprehensions, which vary widely seasonally, and local demands for wetback labor. One way or another, these sources suggest, the border patrol functions less as a law-enforcement agency than a checkvalve, restricting illegal immigration to the level of active public alarm. No corruption of border-patrol officers is implied. It is just, these observers explain, that after apprehension activities have gone so far, as in last year's special Rio Grande campaign, pressures, public and pri- v ·, build up to dampen the border patrol's ardor.

Some immigration officers deny this, contending that they consistently and conscientiously do as well as they can with their skimpy resources to stem the wetback tide, and that fluctuating apprehensions simply reflect fluctuations in the overall wetback migration rate.

Other officers differ. One after another testified before the President's Commission on Migratory Labor that the border patrol was subject constantly to invisible but emphatic pressure exerted from farm quarters through Washington and relayed through Immigration Service channels, to go easy on the wetback round-up.

This was epitomized in the testimony of the late Grover C. Wilmoth, veteran director of the El Paso Immigration District. He said:

"All we need is a go-ahead signal and we can enforce the law 90 to 95 percent. With a little additional men and equipment we could do an efficient enforcement job. It's a disgrace to this country that her laws are openly flouted and evaded. The farmers once were ashamed of using wetbacks. Now they have come to the point where they believe they have a vested right in these illegal workers. They go to their Senators, their Congressmen, the Attorney General, or the President to complain."

It was in Mr. Wilmoth's district, during the 1948 Presidential campaign, that there occurred the notorious "El Paso tea party." The supply of Mexican labor had not been sufficient to satisfy farmers of the area.

As reported by Art Leibson of the El Paso Times, "When President Truman came to El Paso for a campaign address, the problem was laid before him by cotton men and by Texas and New Mexico Congressmen. Soon after his train moved east through Texas, there was a meeting of top immigration officials at El Paso." What went on behind the scenes is still a matter of equivocal explanation by immigration officials. What happened openly was that—in outright violation of United States commitments, according to the subsequent protest of the Mexican Government—border-patrol officers turned their backs for 48 hours while some 7,500 wetbacks streamed across the river unhindered to fill the farmers' wants.

A similarly questionable incident occurred only a month ago in California. Some ranchers rounded up one hundred-odd wetbacks some 30 miles north of the border and took them in chartered buses to the immigration station at Calexico. The ranchers and the border patrol were in the midst of a still mysterious proceeding evidently aimed at legitimizing these workers for transportation to ranches in the north, when representatives of the National Farm Labor Union, AFL, intervened and protested to the local Mexican consul that the law was being violated. Although the district headquarters of the Immigration Service still contends that the proceeding was in full compliance with regulations, the union's protest had sufficient validity so that the operation was halted and the wetbacks returned to Mexico.

AGREEMENT CALLED A TRAVESTY

The most conspicuous official hypocrisy regarding wetbacks has been that surrounding the United States-Mexico farm labor agreement of 1949, one of the periodical extensions of which is now before Congress. The professed aim of this agreement was to eliminate the wetback traffic by providing for the recruitment of Mexican farm labor below the border and its orderly importation into the United States for maximum work periods of 1 year where real shortages of domestic labor were duly certified by the United States Employment Service.

After 18 months of its operation, however, many close observers feel that the agreement manifestly has worked out as a travesty on this intent.

The agreement opened with a solemn declaration of representatives of the United States State Department and the Mexican Foreign Ministry deploring the wetback traffic of Mexican workers, which has mounted steadily and no appreciable steps have been taken to reinforce the border patrol.

The agreement then offered an incentive to border jumping by providing that wetbacks should have preference in hiring under the contract system. Such priority was limited to wetbacks in the United States at that time, but this deadline for absolution from law violation has been extended over and over. Last summer the legalization of wetbacks in the United States before July 26 was authorized. When this did not produce enough cheap Mexican labor, the preference was extended to all wetbacks in the country before October 20.

CROSS BORDER IN RITUAL

Of the first 98,000 laborers contracted under the agreement in the fall of 1949, 78,000, by acknowledgment of the Department of Labor's Bureau of Employment Security, were wetbacks who were legalized.

Nominally this legalization process consists of the wetbacks voluntarily surrendering and returning to Mexico for subsequent recruiting.

As it works out in practice, the wetbacks are rounded up in the United States and taken to legalization centers on the border, where as part of their processing they go through the formality of momentarily crossing the Mexican line—a ritual that has become known as "walking around the statue."

Of 28,000 Mexican contract laborers now in the United States, virtually all were wetbacks legitimized in this way.

Article 6 of the agreement affirmed that Mexican nationals should not be contracted to work "in localities where Mexicans are discriminated against because of their nationality or race." They have been put to work in such localities.

Subsequent articles said Mexican contract labor should be paid the prevailing wage rates for a given area, that this should not be promised on wetback-wage scales, and that the contract labor should not displace domestic citizen labor.

These stipulations, if complied with, observers agree, would virtually have precluded contracting, since farm wages in key areas of the Southwest are geared to the wetbacks' minimal compensation to such a degree that domestic citizen workers by the hundred thousand are frozen out of the market. This was circumstantially corroborated when contract minimums of 40 cents and 60 cents an hour were adopted under the agreement, respectively, for Texas and California, for identical work—reflecting accurately the differing concentrations of wetbacks in the two areas.

The final irony of the agreement was a stipulation that contract workers should not be provided to employers of wetbacks, and that any employer found to have wetbacks should have his contracting privileges withdrawn.

This again, if complied with, virtually would have eliminated key areas of the region, wetback employment is so prevalent.

In one day recently the farm-labor union supplied United States and Mexican officials a list of eight large vegetable ranches in the immediate area of El Centro, Calif., employing wetbacks, the most prominent being the firm of O'Dwyer & Mets, headed by Frank O'Dwyer, brother of William O'Dwyer, United States Ambassador to Mexico. Immigration officers seized 300 wetbacks on that ranch. The union demanded that its contracting right be withdrawn.

Six weeks have elapsed, and as this was written the regional office of the United States Bureau of Employment Security in San Francisco acknowledged that no action had been taken. It said an inquiry was under way. The first step in the inquiry was a so-called hearing at El Centro of parties in the case.

The hearing was an unannounced private conference on a Sunday night between a lawyer from the Employment Security Bureau and representatives of O'Dwyer & Mets.

When this correspondent sought to interview Mr. O'Dwyer, the latter referred him to Mr. Mets. Asked where Mr. Mets could be seen, Mr. O'Dwyer said, "He's in Washington."

[From the New York Times of March 29, 1951]

INTERESTS CONFLICT ON WETBACK CURE—EVEN BORDER POLICE DISAGREE ON MEASURES TO STEM FLOOD OF MEXICAN LABORERS—NATIONS' PACT IN DISPUTE—UNIONS SEE A MOVE TO CUT PAY BY FARMERS WHO OPPOSE UNITED STATES RULE ON CONTRACTS

(By Gladwin Hill)

LOS ANGELES, March 2.—Almost every segment of the Nation's population interested in the wetback problem has a simple straightaway solution for it.

The trouble is that because of conflicting interests, no group's solution is very satisfactory to anyone else.

Even experienced officers of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Services, targets of a mounting barrage of criticism as illegal crossings of the Mexican border have mounted, are in wide disagreement about the most effective measures.

Some contend that simply augmenting the border patrol's present skimpy facilities—with a nucleus of less than 900 men to guard the 1,600 miles from Texas to the Pacific coast—might largely stem the tide of upward of 1,000,000 Mexicans who annually cross the line to work for minimal wages and who depress both economic and social standards in the Southwest.

Others contend that it would take a large standing army to make the border impregnable, and that the problem should be tackled from another angle.

Most concur that stiffening the present penalties for illegal entry—up to a year's imprisonment for the first offense and 2 years for a repetition—would be useless against the horde of amiable wetbacks who, by their numbers, overwhelm the facilities for apprehension and prosecution.

THE POLITICAL FACTOR IS CITED

Some think that if the immigration laws could be fixed up logically to make it an offense to employ wetbacks, who are technically fugitives from justice, it would eliminate their chances of getting jobs, and along with that the incentive for sneaking into the country.

Here again immigration officers disagree about the political practicality of such proposals. Some think that Southwestern farmers, with their vested interest in cheap wetback labor and their influential lobbies, would surely try to scuttle such steps. One immigration officer of exceptionally long experience, however, said: "They wouldn't dare to oppose it, because that would focus public attention on their system."

Members of Congress, whipsawed between the constant farm pressure for alien labor and the obvious need to do something about the wetback traffic, ratified the 1949 agreement between this Nation and Mexico for the importation of Mexicans under contract. A periodical extension of this agreement is now before Congress.

This agreement has not pleased anybody particularly. By providing for preference in job recruiting to wetbacks already in the United States, it has probably acted as an incentive to border-jumping, which has increased at a rapid rate ever since the agreement became effective.

FARMERS DISLIKE THE PACT

Farmers dislike it for many reasons. Requests for labor to be imported have to be filed 60 days in advance. With the principal Southwestern crops of cotton, citrus, and vegetables, it is often difficult to predict precisely so far ahead just how many hands are going to be needed, when and for how long.

Also, minimum wages—ranging from 40 cents an hour in Texas to 60 cents in California—and housing, insurance, transportation, bonds, and other requirements under the contract system, raise the cost of this labor. In some cases, farmers have averred, actually above the cost of domestic citizen labor.

Farmer objections to transportation costs and complications have brought about the virtual scrapping of the original concept of recruiting labor in the interior of Mexico, where there was a dearth of local employment opportunities, in favor of recruitment right at the border through the legalization of wetbacks.

A return to recruiting south of the border is one of the principal proposals in connection with extending the international agreement, now under debate. Another is for resumption of active participation by the United States Government—as during World War II—in the transportation and allocation of the imported labor and in the handling of certain of the moneys involved.

This is objected to as quasi socialism. There is also palpable concern in farm circles that Government management of alien labor would soon extend to allocation of domestic labor. Such a step, it may be noted, might nullify the traditional contention that domestic labor is not available, a contention that farmers use to justify the employment of alien labor, legal and illegal.

In contrast to such proposals, influential farm quarters long have been advocating what they habitually refer to as a simple crossing-card system, but which critics call simply legalized wetbackism.

Under this system, Mexicans would receive border passes to circulate in the United States, confined in theory to areas of farm labor shortages, and to work without any of the burdensome guaranties of minimum wages, housing, insurance, and transportation required under the present contracting system.

Organized labor in the United States, as expressed in repeated declarations particularly of the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates, would approach the problem from the other end.

It contends that the agitation in the United States since World War II about obtaining alien labor generally has been an oblique effort to undercut American workers, predicated on illusory shortages of domestic labor. These shortages are said to result from a refusal to offer adequate wages.

This contention is at least partially corroborated by a recent study at the University of Texas, previously cited in these articles, which concluded that the labor needs of certain key farm areas could, with adequate inducements, be filled entirely from within the State. This is contrasted to the present situation in which wetbacks pour in by the hundred thousands, while domestic workers leave the State regularly in similar numbers to seek more adequate wages elsewhere.

The National Farm Labor Union, the AFL's principal affiliate in the field, contends that domestic labor shortages should be established by public hearings in the areas in question instead of by the present unilateral certification by Federal-State employment offices, whose personnel may be subject to local pressure from farmers.

Secondly, the union advocates on the question of what is the prevailing wage for given work in a given area—a critical factor in considerations both of the availability of domestic labor and of the terms that should be accorded alien labor—that this wage be similarly arrived at in open hearing rather than as now, in the uncertain realm of administrative decisions.

If these two conditions were met, labor maintains, many of the current problems would be dispelled because underlying them is a simple reluctance to pay adequate wages.

With these conditions met, it is contended, domestic citizen labor would be forthcoming; and even on the condition, quite foreseeable in the current war emergency, that alien labor were needed, a frank approach to wage and cost economics would eliminate the present haggling and complications that attend the contract system.

From labor and independent observers of the wetback problem, including educators, economists, sociologists, and welfare and church agencies, the suggestion also has come that the wage chiseling that underlies the wetback influx might be obliterated by applying Federal minimum wages to agriculture, at least in cotton, which is a Government-subsidized crop around which much of the wetback traffic revolves.

Farmers have long contended that minimum wages in agriculture are unworkable. But a minimum wage has long been in effect under an exceptional Federal law for the sugar-beet crop.

S42350—38894

O

17 - Immigration

(Not printed at Government expense)

United States of America

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 82d CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Liberalized Immigration Bill Introduced

Senator Lehman and 14 Others Submit Bipartisan Proposal To Ease Quota Limits, Remove Discriminatory Provisos, Set Up BIA Board

REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, October 20, 1951

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BENTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MOODY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], my colleague, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to make certain basic revisions in our immigration laws, chiefly designed to bring the quota system up to date, and remove the ancient relics of racial discrimination and discrimination against women from our immigration code. I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill by me be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2343) to amend the immigration laws so as to eliminate discrimination based on race and sex; to provide for the use of unused immigration quotas; to provide nonquota status for parents of citizens, orphans, and alien members and former members of the Armed Forces; and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. LEHMAN (for himself and other Senators), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The explanatory statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

This bill, of bipartisan sponsorship, is the result of long study and review of our immigration laws. It is the product of consultation with and deliberation among more than 30 voluntary agencies and great religious groups and organizations which are concerned with immigration and the handicaps to its orderly and humane functioning.

Under the terms of this bill, the outmoded system of quota distribution, devised in 1924, and based on our population in 1890, would be modified so as to permit the orderly entry into the United States of the same number of persons already provided for by law, namely, 154,277 annually. This number, as originally laid down in our immigration law of 1924, which has never had a basic revision, is now inflexibly allocated among national origin groups, largely from Western Europe.

Thus, of the total number of persons annually eligible to enter the United States as immigrants under our quota laws, more than one-third of the total, or 65,721 quota numbers are allocated to persons of British descent and citizenship. Other large quotas are available for natives of France, Ireland, and other countries of northern and Western Europe.

These quotas are not being fully used. There is no prospect of their being fully used. Meanwhile, quotas for persons from southern and Eastern Europe—the ones who really need asylum, the ones for whom the United States could really provide home and haven, are far oversubscribed and mortgaged far into the future.

This is especially true of Italy, Greece, and the countries behind the iron curtain. Refugees from the latter areas especially, huddled in the overcrowded cities of Western Germany and Austria and Western Europe generally, look desperately across the Atlantic in the hope and dream of somehow finding haven here. These individuals have fled from behind the iron curtain, often at the risk of their lives, seeking the boon of freedom. The least we, in this country, can do at this time is to make room for the admission of some of these refugees to the maximum extent possible under our quota laws, consistent with the requirements and interests of our national security.

Nor do I wish to understate the importance of providing for the admission of numbers of Italians and Greeks who dream vainly now of joining their relatives in this country.

There is also the Middle East, with its refugees, some of whom should have the right to enter this country even under the limitations of our quota system.

Under the terms of the bill we have today introduced, the unused portion of these quotas would be pooled and allocated to persons of other national origins, like Italians, Greeks, Poles, Hungarians, and Arabs—to mention a few.

Under the terms of this bill, preferences would be established for political and religious persecutees, for relatives of American citizens, for relatives of aliens now resident in the United States, and for persons with special skills and talents especially needed in this country.

Under other terms of the bill, nonquota preference would be granted to persons who had served in the Armed Forces of the United States, and to their wives and children, and to orphans who are brought over for adoption by American citizens.

Another provision of the bill would strike out the archaic discrimination based on sex now existing in our immigration laws. Under present law, certain preferences are given to wives of American citizens but not to husbands. This kind of discrimination would be deleted from the entire body of our immigration code.

Still another vital provision would strike out the unsupportable discrimination based on race which now bars persons of certain oriental races from admission as immigrants into the United States under any circumstances.

A further important provision of the bill would establish a statutory Board of Immigration Appeals, to be appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, to replace the present Board established by administrative regulations.

Other provisions are as follows:

1. To delete the present exemption of immigration proceedings from the terms of the Administrative Proceedures Act.

2. To make eligible for admission into this country reformed Communists and Fascists who can prove that they are reformed and are now devoted to democratic principles; and also to make eligible individuals whose membership in Communist and Fascist organizations occurred or ended before they reached the age of 16.

I hope that this bill, which does not include, by any means, all the desirable improvements in our immigration laws, will provide a basis for a new approach to the whole subject of immigration. This is vital if we are to discharge successfully our responsibilities as world leaders and to demonstrate to the world that we are sincere in advocating principles based on equality of men of all races and nations.

From a purely selfish point of view, we can use the special skills, talents, and labor of these individuals in our expanding and dynamic economy.

973433—40874

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1951

REPRINTED FROM THE NATION, MARCH 29, 1952

McCarran's Iron Curtain

BY ALEX. BROOKS

SHORTLY after the First World War the United States went through a period of intense anti-foreign isolationism which eventuated in the Immigration Act of 1924. This act established the rigid and restrictive quota pattern under which we have been operating since. Introducing into our law a racist concept of national origins, it gave large quotas to the Northern and Western European nations, where the pressure to emigrate was slight, and small quotas to the Southern and Eastern countries, where pressure was great. As a result, the Northern and Western quotas have been largely wasted, and European immigration to the United States for the last twenty years has totaled less than one-third of the allowable amount.

Now we have come full cycle again, and current postwar jitters threaten to cause another wave of discrimination and restriction. Unfortunately, little public notice has been given to quietly planned long-range changes which would effectively strangle for many years to come a flow of immigration which only recently was temporarily augmented by hard-won D. P. legislation.

Under the guise of preparing a streamlined and efficient revision and modification of our antiquated immigration laws, Senator Pat McCarran and Representative Francis Walter have presented two practically identical omnibus bills which provide thirteen new grounds for excluding future immigrants, more than twenty new grounds for deporting displaced persons and other immigrants admitted in past years, and a practically undetermined number of new ways of depriving a naturalized American of citizenship. These bills purport to eliminate racial discrimination and to tighten naturalization and denaturalization procedures. Actually, they embody more than a hundred changes which would weaken the rights of immigrants and aliens.

The most blatant hypocrisy of the new bills is their claim to eliminate racial discrimination. They make a gesture in this direction by admitting a sharply limited number of Japanese, Koreans, Indonesians, and Burmese. The Japanese would be given a quota of 185. In addition, all Orientals, many of whom are at present ineligible for naturalization, would be allowed to become American citizens. This would enable 85,000 first-generation Japanese already living in this country to achieve their dream of citizenship.

Though they make this partial concession to racial equality, the bills retain many obsolete and obnoxious discriminations and add a number of new and unwarranted ones. For instance, the retention of the 1920 census figure as a base for determining the rate of immigration perpetuates a discrimination against the Southern and Eastern Europeans, who have contributed the bulk of our immigration in the last thirty years. It is these people who are in dire need of asylum in this country. All their quotas are oversubscribed; some of them are mortgaged into the next century by recent D. P. legislation.

The framers of the Walter-McCarran bills make certain that Orientals will be strictly limited to their quotas by expanding an already enacted racist measure to provide that any immigrant "who is attributable by as much as one-half of his ancestry to a people or peoples indigenous to the Asia-Pacific triangle" is to be charged to the quota of the country of his "ancestry," regardless of his place of birth or citizenship. Total immigration from this group is limited to 2,000 a year. This discriminatory provision, strikingly reminiscent of Hitler's abhorrent Nürnberg laws, was openly fashioned to exclude all but the bare handful of Orientals provided for under stringently limited quotas. Under this rule, a citizen of Great Britain, born in that country of a British father and a Chinese mother, would not be admitted to the United States as a member of the British quota of 65,000 but would be shunted to the Chinese quota of 105.

The Walter-McCarran bills go still farther in discriminating against Negroes. Under the present law immigration from colonies and other dependent areas is charged to the quota of the governing country. Citizens of Trinidad, Jamaica, and other West Indian colonies, most of whom are Negroes, at present have relatively free access to the United States. The new bills stipulate that hereafter not more than 100 persons may enter annually from one such colony. This would have the intended effect of reducing Negro immigration from the West Indies by about 90 per cent.

In order further to enlarge the grounds for exclusion, deportation, and denaturalization, the Walter-McCarran bills eliminate the non-quota status of professors. Restrictions are also tightened against the victims of religious persecution, who were formerly granted an exemption from literacy requirements. A similar exception for close relatives of legally admitted aliens and citizens of the United States has also been dropped.

One of the profound ironies of the Walter-McCarran bills is their subversion of certain safeguards against administrative abuse favored by their authors six years ago. Senator McCarran himself hailed the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, designed by his Senate Judiciary Committee to provide additional judicial checks on possible abuses by administrative officials, as a "widely heralded advance in democratic government."

ALEX. BROOKS is a lawyer who works in the fields of political and civil rights and inter-group relations.

The Administrative Procedure Act is, in effect, emasculated at many points by the new proposals. Prosecutors, for instance, may also serve as judges in immigration cases. Exclusion or deportation is not based on whether an alien has actually done something wrong but on whether an immigration official is "satisfied" or "has reason to believe" he has. The Attorney General is even empowered to sanction deportation or deprive a resident of his precious citizenship when certain facts appear in his "opinion" to warrant such drastic action.

One of the three liberalizations embodied in the McCarran-Walter bills weakens the absolute bar against the admission of totalitarians set up by McCarran's own Internal Security Act of 1950. Totalitarians actively reformed at least five years prior to their application for admission may come in if their presence here is thought to be "in the public interest." But an alien who at any time after he was admitted to this country has been engaged in a Communist or totalitarian cause, regardless of whether he later acknowledged his mistake and became a valuable member of the American community, must be deported. Finally, the bills would disqualify from citizenship an applicant who had been unlucky enough to belong to a "direct predecessor" of a Communist or totalitarian organization, even one originally democratic in character, from which he later resigned in protest.

At their joint hearings the Walter-McCarran bills met vigorous opposition from representatives of Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish religious groups and of Italian, Czech, and other nationality groups, from the American Bar Association Committee on Aliens and Naturalization, and from other quarters. Some of the more objectionable sections were removed as a result of this criticism; most of them remain.

THE Walter bill was suddenly reported out and scheduled for floor debate two weeks ago. Senators Lehman and Humphrey and Representative Roosevelt, alarmed by Congressional apathy concerning the bill, alerted others. A vigorous effort, headed by Roosevelt in the House, was made to postpone floor debate until Congress could be informed of the widespread organizational opposition to many of the bill's features. As a result, consideration of the bill was postponed. Since then, numerous religious, civic, educational, nationality, and labor groups have urged recommittal so that there may be time to consider thoroughly the more than one hundred amendments being prepared.

In the meantime, a substitute omnibus immigration bill which will almost certainly get Administration support has been introduced by Senators Humphrey and Lehman and Representative Roosevelt. This bill, cosponsored by Senators Benton, Langer, Kilgore, Douglas, McMahon, Green, Pastore, Kefauver, Morse, and Moody, is everything the Walter-McCarran bill is not. It would codify, simplify, and humanize the present law in many ways. It would modernize the quota system by basing quotas on the 1950 instead of on the 1920 census (thus increasing the total quota), and would provide much greater flexibility in the operation of the quota system by allowing for the "pooling" of unused quotas. The previous year's unused quotas would be allocated to immigrants who are relatives of American citizens and of aliens residing here permanently, to those whose services are urgently needed in this country, to victims of religious and racial persecution, and to special-hardship cases. The total flow of immigration would be enlarged by as much as 75,000 each year merely by the intelligent use of the quotas conceived appropriate when our present immigration law was enacted.

Unlike the McCarran-Walter bill, the Humphrey-Lehman-Roosevelt bill actually eliminates all vestiges of racial discrimination. It provides, for instance, for proportional quotas to Japanese, Burmese, Koreans, and other Asiatic groups who at present have no quotas, and also for proportional quotas for such groups as the Chinese, who have been limited to approximately 100. The concept of nationality by ancestry instead of by birth is eliminated.

The H-R-L bill provides the protection against administrative abuse absent from the McCarran-Walter bills. Exceptions to exclusion can be based on special circumstance. By relying to a heavy extent on factual grounds for exclusion rather than on the "opinion" of administrative officials, the bill avoids a large area of potential administrative abuse. Its administrative features are a striking improvement over those of the current law.

The H-L-R bill provides a statutory basis for the Board of Immigration Appeals—assuring its freedom from administrative influence in weighing appeals and reviews in deportation cases—establishes a Visa Review Board within the State Department to handle appeals against the decisions of consular officials, and makes the Administrative Procedure Act applicable to deportation cases. All new powers granted to the Attorney General are surrounded by safeguards.

FOR ADDITIONAL COPIES, WRITE TO

Community Relations Service

386 FOURTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

IMMIGRATION BILLS PENDING IN CONGRESS

April, 1952

By Rhoads Murphey, Friends Committee on Nat'l Legislation, 1000 11th St., N.W., Washington, D.C.

Four Omnibus Bills designed to revise and codify our immigration laws are now before the Congress. There are two Senate Bills: S. 2550, by Senator Pat McCarran, and S. 2842, by Senators Hubert Humphrey and Herbert Lehman; and two House Bills: H.R. 5678, by Representative Francis Walter, and H.R. 7032, by Representative Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (An earlier bill by Representative Emanuel Celler, H.R. 6034, is not presently at issue.) The Humphrey-Lehman Bill and the Roosevelt Bill are identical, and the McCarran and Walter Bills are generally similar.

All four bills would permit the naturalization of some 80,000 Japanese residents of the United States, and the admission as citizens of Japanese war-brides and war-husbands, but in most other respects there are basic differences among them.

It is not easy to summarize these bills. We have studied each of them carefully, and have profitted by the analyses of them made by authorities in the field of immigration and by private agencies, such as the American Friends Service Committee, which are engaged in work with refugees and displaced persons.

The McCarran and Walter Bills are Restrictive

It is our considered opinion that the McCarran and Walter Bills are both basically restrictive measures, designed to exclude immigrants rather than to admit them, and specifically to discriminate in a variety of ways against immigrants on the ground of "race". While both bills include for the first time a legal quota for all Asian countries (in most cases this quota is set at 100 annually, including that for India), they provide that a person who is "attributable by as much as one half of his ancestry" to any Asian country east of Persia must be charged to the quota for that country, regardless of his citizenship or place of birth. Both bills would largely cut off non-white immigration from British colonies in the Caribbean by removing nationals of these areas from the never-filled quota of the mother country and assigning them instead a yearly quota of 100 for each such colony. These are only samples of the bills' provisions, but they are characteristic ones.

Both bills would give virtually unlimited power to our consuls overseas to refuse visas to immigrants, selecting from a long list of new grounds for exclusion included in the bills; some of these grounds are regrettable, but at least straightforward: illiteracy (in certain cases), previous jail sentences of five years or more (even though this might have been for "crimes" against a totalitarian state), in certain cases lack of special skills, or possession of skills in which the United States already has an adequate supply. Some of the more ambiguous grounds would allow great abuse by the consular officer: he is empowered to keep out all those who "in the opinion of the consular officer at the time of application for a visa, are likely at any time to become public charges." ; or those who "in the opinion of the consular officer at the time of application for a visa" are likely to engage in immoral practices in the United States. The bills make no provision for review of consular decisions.

Both bills add many new grounds for deportation, and make these grounds retroactive to cover all immigrants who have hitherto been admitted to the United States. Here also vague and general language stating grounds for deportation would be an invitation to arbitrary application by immigration officials, whose actions could be reviewed in many cases only by "the opinion of the Attorney General" rather than by an established board of appeals. Finally, the bills give the President the power to suspend all immigration whenever he feels it is in the national interest to do so. These powers in the hands of individuals could, and doubtless would in individual cases, be used to stifle immigration whenever the official was so inclined.

The Humphrey-Lehman and Roosevelt Bills are Designed to Admit More People

The Humphrey-Lehman and Roosevelt Bills represent another approach. They are designed to admit immigrants, not to keep them out. They provide for the revision of our quota system on the basis of the 1950 census instead of on the census of 1920 as at present, and they provide that unused quotas from any nation (such as the United Kingdom with 65,000 quota spaces, less than half of which are used) shall be placed into a general pool, to be allocated to applicants whose national quotas are over-applied. The net effect of these two changes would be to allow about 210,000 immigrants a year instead of the present 154,000 quota spaces. (Because quotas are not pooled under present law, actual quota immigration has averaged only about 86,000 annually since 1947.

The Bills provide for a Visa Review Board to consider appeals from arbitrary consular decisions, and they set up a Statutory Board of Immigration Appeals. They eliminate all race discrimination. They cancel the debts placed on quotas by the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, whereby DP's entering under the Act were chargeable to the future quotas of their respective countries up to 50 per cent in each year. Under present law, half of the quotas of many central European countries are thus mortgaged to and beyond the year 2000. The McCarran and Walter Bills would not change this.

We believe that the Humphrey-Lehman and Roosevelt Bills are in the best tradition of America, and that they provide a safe, intelligent, and beneficial immigration policy for this country. We believe that you will share our concern for the very important issues involved. America is judged in significant part abroad by its immigration policy. The McCarran and Walter Bills would make that an adverse judgment, with serious and harmful results to our world position and to the friendship with other peoples which is the basic foundation of strength. The Humphrey-Lehman and Roosevelt Bills would help us to keep that friendship, to meet a desperate human need, and to add vigour to our national life by taking in those with the courage and the vision to seek us out.

President Truman in a public statement on March 24 asked Congress to make provisions for the admission of 300,000 European refugees over a three-year period. His statement was printed in the NEW YORK TIMES for March 25, and reported generally in the nation's press as a while. It outlines the need of refugees for asylum, and makes a plea for the United States to answer it as we have traditionally done in the past, to our own advantage. The Humphrey-Lehman and Roosevelt Bills would accomplish this emergency job, and would in addition put our immigration system permanently on a sound and workable basis.

Suggested Action

There is hope that the McCarran and Walter Bills may be blocked and the Humphrey-Lehman and Roosevelt Bills may be passed, IF members of Congress are convinced by their constituents that this is not a minor matter but one on which all responsible Americans have firm opinions. The Walter Bill (H.R. 5678) is expected to come up in the House very soon. The Roosevelt Bill will not come up in the House because Senators Humphrey and Lehman prefer to have an unprejudiced discussion later of their own identical Bill in the Senate. (The Humphrey-Lehman Bill, S. 2842, was the original from which the Roosevelt Bill was taken. It is the outgrowth of many months of study and preparation, and was introduced in the Senate by a bi-partisan group of nine Democrats and three Republicans.) Senator McCarran has indicated that he will press to have his Bill brought up in the Senate in the near future.

Both the McCarran and Walter Bills could probably muster enough votes to pass their respective Houses at the moment. We believe that this is because the people as a whole have not bothered to tell their Congressmen how they feel about the issue, and Congress has therefore been willing to let McCarran and Walter make the policy. The most effective way to alter this situation is to write to your Representative outlining your objections to the Walter Bill, and urging him to vote for its re-committal until Congress and the people have had an adequate opportunity to consider the important problem with which it deals, and alternative solutions which have recently been proposed, such as the Roosevelt Bill, which was introduced in the House only on March 12. It will be helpful also to outline the positive provisions which you feel an immigration law should include, such as those made by the Roosevelt Bill (H.R. 7032).

We suggest that you also write to your two senators urging them to oppose the McCarran Bill and to give vigorous support to the Humphrey-Lehman Bill, outlining in each case your reasons for such a course. So much hangs on this issue, on grounds of national self-interest and on humanitarian grounds alike, that we hope you will be willing not only to write yourself, but to persuade as many others as you can to write too. Letters to Representatives should go to House Office Building, Washington 25, D.C. Letters to Senators should go to Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D.C.

We shall be glad to supply any further information on this matter, and we hope we may have your energetic cooperation.

5-8-52

CLSA Reports

COMMISSION ON LAW AND SOCIAL ACTION of the AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS
15 East 84th St., New York 28, N. Y. • TRafalgar 9-4500

ANALYSIS OF HOUSE DEBATE ON WALTER OMNIBUS IMMIGRATION BILL H.R.5678

The Walter omnibus immigration bill, H.R. 5678, reached the floor of the House of Representatives on Wednesday April 23, 1952 and in accordance with House Rules was first debated in the Committee of the Whole.

Debate began at an inopportune and unexpected moment. It had been believed that the floor discussion of other legislation would continue throughout Wednesday afternoon and that the immigration bills would not be considered until the following day. Many Congressmen, therefore, who intended to assist personally in the floor fight against the Walter bill were absent from the House on Wednesday.

General Debate

Rep. Walter (D.,Pa) led off. He undertook a point-by-point refutation of arguments urged against H.R. 5678 by the CIO ("although they merely parrot attacks made by various organizations who would like to prevent the enactment of any legislation.")

Specifically, Walter denied that his bill:

1. Needed further study. ("usual sort of an argument that is advanced when there is no logical, valid reason for opposing legislation.")

2. Perpetuates racial discrimination. ("out of the whole cloth. Among the groups most interested in the enactment of this legislation is the Japanese American Citizens League.")

3. Broadens grounds for loss of citizenship. ("simply is not true.")

4. Abolishes statutes of limitations and establishes new retroactive grounds for deportation. ("H.R. 5678 does not do that. The Internal Security Act does, and the Internal Security Act is a part of the law of the land today. It is restated, that is true, in this bill." H.R. 5678 provides new grounds for deportation only to over the case where an illegal immigrant "succeeds in hiding in the United States.")

5. Establishes new unnecessary grounds for exclusion. ("Immigration is rendered difficult [only] for the criminal. If you are opposed to that then you will agree with the CIO.")

6. Restricts judicial review and authorizes arbitrary administrative procedures. ("... instead of our destroying the Administrative Procedures Act, we actually see that it is reinstated in every instance." Walter recalled the assistance given by the House Judiciary Committee To Ellen Knauff and asserted that H.R. 5678 would prevent a repetition of the injustice done her.)

7. Curtails discretion of Attorney General to suspend deportation or adjustment of immigration status. (Although "The fact of the matter is, the discretionary power ... is enlarged ... rather than limited," there is one situation "that perhaps gives some color" to the CIO's claim. The bill changes the language in suspension cases from "economic detriment" to "extreme and unusual hardship" to put an end to the "racket which has grown up" in which pregnant women visit the United States on temporary visas and then seek to remain here permanently when their children are born in this country.)

Walter concluded by urging his colleagues not to be influenced by the CIO letter which had been sent over the signature of Nathan E. Cowan, director of the legislative department of the CIO. Walter suggested they "call somebody in the CIO, and find out whether ... this letter is the official position of that organization."

Walter's statements were warmly endorsed by Rep. Jenkins (R.,Ohio) and Rep. Graham (R.,Pa.) who announced that the Walter Bill had been endorsed by the national convention of the American Legion. Delegate Farrington (R.,Hawaii) declared that he was "strongly in favor" of the bill principally because it eliminated racial barriers to naturalization.

Rep. Celler (D.,N.Y.) was the first speaker opposing H.R. 5678. Noting that the Immigration Subcommittee had "worked painstakingly" on this bill, Celler observed that H.R. 5678 would have to be "amended materially before I shall vote for it."

Celler urged rejection of that section of the bill which gave broad powers to the President to suspend immigration. He also vigorously attacked the national origins quota system as un-American and urged the pooling of unused quotas citing statistics for 1930-1948 indicating that during that period 2,151,372 quota numbers had been wasted and unused.

Celler continued, "... despite the fact that this is a worthy bill, there are one or two other provisions that stick out like sore thumbs." One of these sore thumbs is the proposed limitation of an annual quota of 100 for colonies and dependent areas. (Under existing law dependent areas may use visas allocated to the mother country. Thus, for example, West Indian Jamaicans now are permitted to enter the United States under the ample British quota of 65,000. H.R. 5678 would permit only 100 Jamaicans each year to enter.) This provision is directed against persons with "darker skins," it is "unfair to a minority race in this land of ours." Celler attacked the pretense that a bill containing this provision eliminates racial discrimination.

(Walter interrupted Celler to remark that the reason for this provision "is a very simple one." The St. Thomas Labor Conference in the Virgin Islands and the Virgin Island Civic Association had written the House Immigration Subcommittee urging this provision to "protect" those islands from large migrations from Jamaica. It is "not designed to militate against the Jamaicans because of their color." Rep. Celler "could not believe" this explanation.)

Celler sharply criticized the Asia-Pacific Triangle provision of the Walter bill. This provision requires that persons - no matter where they themselves were born - who are attributable by as much as one-half of their ancestry to races indigenous to Asian countries should be charged against limited quotas established for those areas. The practice with all other persons, of course, is to charge them against their quotas of their country of birth. "There is no doubt that many of the peoples of Asia are going to consider this provision offensive." Rep. Celler concluded by urging amendment of those sections of H.R. 5678 which permit ex-communists abroad to be considered redeemed for the purpose of the immigration law after five years of active opposition to communism, but which require ten years of active opposition by ex-communists within the United States.

Rep. Dolliver (R.,Ia.) spoke generally in favor of the bill because it would substantially lessen the introduction of private bills. Rep. Thompson (R.,Mich.), as a member of the House Subcommittee on Immigration commended the bill to the House.

Reps. Addonizio (D.,N.Y.), Rodino (D.,N.Y.), and Heller (D.,N.Y.) each made a long statement presenting detailed reasons for rejecting the Walter Bill. Each attacked the national origins principle and asked for pooling of unused quotas. Each called for enactment of "an immigration bill which will more clearly speak to all the world of what we mean by the idea of American democracy." Heller's remarks condluded "general debate" on the bill.

Walter then requested the bill be considered open for amendment.

Amendments

Some forty amendments prepared and recommended by the Judiciary Committee were adopted without opposition. Almost all were designed to correct clerical and typgraphical errors in the bill; with one exception, none made any significant change in the bill. The following analysis summarizes debate on some of the more important substantive amendments

1. Pooling of Unused Quotas. Celler offered an amendment to pool unused quotas among those countries whose annual visa allocations are under 7,000. Walter led the opposition. He asserted that "adoption of this amendment would have the effect of destroying entirely our theory of national origins." Walter cited testimony by Will Maslow, representing the American Jewish Congress, during Joint House-Senate Congressional committee hearings on the Walter-McCarran bills, as reflecting hostility to the national origins formula. Walter concluded: "It certainly seems to me that if there is to be a departure from our fundamental philosophy, that it ought not to come until there has been a full and complete analysis of the census of 1950. Our committee has requested of the Bureau of the Census that this analysis should be made. They are working on it now. We have been informed it will take upward of a year to prepare the material."

Celler responded by asserting that unless we permit "new-seed" immigration our population will be static by the year 1970.

Rep. Wood (R.,Idaho) rose to oppose the amendment. Entry into this country is a privilege, not a right. The Kefauver Committee proved a "tremendous development of crime" among new immigrants. (Celler checked Wood by reminding him that according to the FBI "there is more crime among the native-born than among the alien.") So far as "the question of racial origins" is concerned, Rep. Wood felt that " -- although I am not a follower of Hitler -- there is something to it. We cannot tie a stone around its neck and drop it into the middle of the Atlantic just because it worked to the contrary in Germany ... I believe that possibly statistics would show that the Western European races have made the best citizens in America and are more easily made into Americans." Wood might not object to new immigration if "there was some law that could make these people that you ... wish to bring here and put them out on the prairies of the West ..." The trouble is that they remain "penned up among the people of their own kind in the large eastern cities where they do not learn to talk English readily. They read their own newspapers." Rep. Wood "feels very stongly about this." Not that he has any prejudice. "I do not know that I have any opposition to any peoples at all; the only importance with me is whether they are material that will make good American citizens readily; if they are, it is all right with me."

Rep. Hoffman (R.,Mich.) "agreed wholeheartedly with the views so logically expressed by the gentleman from Idaho." Hoffman's information is that "every mother's son of them who lives abroad wants to come here not to contribute to this country but to better himself." Moreover, "as soon as they get here they say our government is no good, our way of life is no good, and they want to change it, just like Anna Rosenberg who wants to take all the boys and girls and put them into the armed services."

Rep. Rankin (D.,Miss.) opposed the amendment. Rankin "of course" is for restricting immigration. "Nine out of every ten of the Communists who have been convicted of treason in this country were foreign born." Rep. Rankin's first duty "is to the American people." They can call Rep. Rankin an isolationist if they want to. Really though, "I am a nationalist. I believe in America first." Rep. Rankin says, "Save America for Americans."

The Celler amendment was rejected by a voice vote.

2. Asia-Pacific Triangle. Celler offered an amendment which would eliminate the racial features of the "Asia-Pacific" provisions by stipulating that only persons born within the Asia-Pacific Triangle would be charged to the quotas for those countries.

Walter opposed the amendment. If adopted "it would make eligible for admission to the United States over two million Orientals on this continent, something that is opposed by the Japanese-Americans in this country." Walter quoted at length from statements by Mike Masaoka of the Japanese American Citizens League in support of his views. ("We reluctantly acknowledge that the political realities which conceived this formula reamin today. Opening wide the doors of immigration to the hundreds of thousands of orientals now residing in Canada and Central South America would threaten to revive the now dead anti-orientalism of the west coast.") On the basis of this statement alone, Walter urged rejection of the amendment. "Nobody knows better than this group what this bill should contain with respect to the admission of Orientals or partial Orientals into the United States."

Rep. Roosevelt (D.,Lib., N.Y.) supported the Celler amendment. He cited other statements by Masaoka in which the JACL attacked the racial discrimination of the Asia-Pacific provision. ("Fears that immigrants of Asian extraction would flood our gates via countries bordering us to the North and South are groundless in our considered judgment, for every nation in the Pan American Union has for many years past either practiced a policy of complete exclusion (which was patterned after our laws in this regard) or rigidly controlled immigration from the Orient.") He cited support of Celler's amendment by the AFL, the Liberal Party of New York, the American Friends Service Committee, National Catholic Rural Life Conference and the American Jewish Congress.

Celler's amendment was defeated upon a division by a vote of 70-25. (A division is a standing vote counted by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.) Celler asked for tellers, i.e., a vote in which the Representatives pass between two tellers and are counted by them. By teller vote his amendment was defeated 102-29.

3. West Indian Quotas. Celler offered an amendment making immigrants born in colonies for which no separate quota had been established chargeable to the quota of their governing country. This would negate the discrimination contained in the Walter bill against Negroes migrating from islands and possessions in the Caribbean.

Walter opposed the amendment. He repeated his assertion that the provision in his bill limiting the availability of mother country quotas to colonial possessions is required to preserve the economy of the Virgin Islands. He denied that there was "a word of truth in the intimation that this language under discussion was designed to prejudice anybody." This provision is included only because it is unfair to give a greater preference to the British colonies than is given to dominions like Australia, New Zealand, India or Ceylon and moreover, the limitation is necessary to "protect" the labor market in the Virgin Islands.

Rep. Roosevelt urged adoption of the amendment "from the point of view of equality for all citizens of the Western Hemisphere."

Rep. Forrester (D.,Ga.) endorsed the statements made by Rep. Wood. Forrester wants aliens and immigrants "to understand and to know it (immigration) is an exalted privilege - a privilege we can grant or deny." Forrester continued that he has "come to the realization that the persons who are being discriminated against in America are the old fashioned Yankee and the old fashioned Southerner." Forrester wanted to say one more thing: "it is strange to me, but the men who are always hollering 'discrimination' I find are living in the most palatial apartments in Washington and driving the best automobiles."

Rep. Multer (D.,N.Y.) supported the Celler amendment. He did "not know whether he would fit into the definition of Yankee or any of the other sectionalistic words used during the course of the debate." He said he did not know whether his parents migrated to the United States because "somebody gave them the exalted right or the exalted privilege to come here" but he did know that the world has not been divided geographically by any divine power. There was no geographical division "when God enjoined us to proclaim liberty throughout all the land whether it be Yankee land or Southern land or Europe or the West Indies." Moreover, he asserted that "no member of this Congress has any right to be resentful because amendments are offered to this bill and no one of us has any right to attack the good faith of any other member for any position he takes as to any portion of the bill or any amendment in it." Multer cited support by Catholic, Jewish and Protestant groups to this amendment.

Rep. Javits (R.,N.Y.) urged adoption of the amendment as a means of reinforcing our foreign policy and holding out "a real hand of friendship to our next door neighbors in the Caribbean when it counts."

Rep. Hoffman of Michigan arose to attack the amendment stating that Celler by emphasizing the importance of "new seed" immigration was expressing "little faith in the present generation of Americans." He asked Rep. Celler whether he proposed "that when people who come here from abroad regardless of their station in life ... or their race, that they should intermarry with those who are here and create a new race of people? Is that your argument?" Rep. Hoffman "goes along with Rep. Rankin in one thing." Over the years he has insisted that if there were any people in this country who needed protection from those who practice discrimination while condemning it, it was the white Gentiles.

Upon a division the Amendment was defeated 90-22.

4. Expatriation of Naturalized Americans. Walter offered a Committee amendment exempting naturalized citizens who have resided as citizens in this country for more than 25 years from expatriation because of prolonged residence abroad. Walters' amendment permits naturalized Americans after 25 years of uninterrupted residence in the United States to have the same right of permanent residence abroad as native-born citizens. (Under section 404(b) and (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940 naturalized citizens now lose American nationality by remaining away from three or five years. Many liberal groups have attacked these sections as improperly discriminating against naturalized Americans. Although sustained in Lapides v. Clark, 176 F.2d 619, the constitutionality of these sections is being challenged anew in Mendelsohn v. Acheson, now pending in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.)

The amendment was accepted by a voice vote.

5. Board of Immigration Appeals. Celler introduced an amendment to give statutory authority to the Board of Immigration Appeals. H.R. 5678 made no provision for the Board of Immigration Appeals. The existing Board has no statutory warrant being created by an internal regulation of the Department of Justice. Celler alluded to the Knauff case as illustrating the need for effective appellate machinery. No one spoke in opposition to the amendment. On a division the amendment carried 32 to 26. This was one of only two amendments carried by the so-called opposition. Note that it was not opposed by Walter.

6. Judicial Review. Rep. Meader (R.,Mich.) introduced a series of amendments which would restore the right of judicial review of administrative decisions in immigration cases. Meader suggested that his amendments were responsive to criticisms made by the American Bar Association of provisions in the Walter bill. Meader referred to testimony offered during Committee hearings by Jack Wasserman on behalf of the American Bar Association. Hoffman questioned the right of those who are not citizens "to appeal to the courts and go on up to the highest court." Meader replied that an alien who has lived here and established a family and acquired property "has rights which should be determined by a court, and not by an arbitrary bureaucratic official."

Rep. Walter opposed the amendment. He reminded Meader that both he and Sen. McCarran had been commended by the ABA because of their efforts to insure judicial review of administrative decisions. Keating asked whether he was to understand from this statement that the ABA had withdrawn its original objections to the bill. Walter replied that he had never heard from the ABA officially and "There was nothing in the hearings except a statement made by a Mr. Jack Wasserman who appeared and said he represented the ABA as well as the American Jewish Congress and other organizations. I don't know whether the ABA took any official action on the position he took." (It should be noted that the following day Meader inserted into the record a letter from the American Bar Association attesting to the authority invested in Jack Wasserman to represent its views on the Walter bill.) Walter opposed these amendments because his bill had already provided adequate safeguards for judicial review -- "perhaps more than these people are entitled to."

The amendment was rejected by voice vote.

7. Visa Review. Rep. Javits (R., N.Y.) proposed establishment by statute of a visa review board. He urged some provision to permit "American citizens or organizations who sponsor an alien to review findings by the local consular officer who is not bound now...except by his own discretion." Graham opposed Javits' amendment because "It would permit every alien to have his case brought to this country for final disposition" and that it would "clog up" administrative procedures and court calendars "for months and months."

Javits' proposal was rejected by voice vote.

8. Census of 1940. Javits proposed an amendment to use the census of 1940 as the basis for computing national quota allocations. Javits, Roosevelt and Celler all emphasized the inadequacy of statistical techniques employed in 1920. In response to a question from Rep. Morano (R.,Conn.) Javits asserted that his amendment would not increase overall figures but would merely bring them up to date. Walter opposed the amendment. He stated that on the basis of 1940 figures Russia, Italy, and Germany would receive increases in quota allocations, while Poland, England and Ireland would suffer reductions. He asked whether "it is a good sound policy of the United States to take immigration privileges away from those nations who fought on our side and give them to our enemies?" He believed that "The only hope for the solution of the problems brought by over-population is the extension of the activities of Provisional Inter-governmental Committee for the Movement of Migrants from Europe (PICMME)." "Certainly we cannot bring them (surplus populations) over to the United States; we cannot absorb them in any significant number and all this maneuvering around and flirting for votes is merely hindering people who seriously want to do something."

Roosevelt pointed out that a reduction in quotas to England by using the 1940 census would impose no real injury. Since, using Walter's own figures, 43,000 British visas annually are unused, "to deprive them of 1300 or 1400 visas could not possibly be construed as an unfriendly act by the people of Great Britain."

Javits asserted that Walter "made a point about Russia and that is supposed to panic the House. Let us see how that works out." Persons now in Russia are imprisoned and cannot get out to emigrate. There are, however, thousands of persons of Russian origin who are violently anti-Communist and who are distributed in countries throughout the world. An enlargement of the Russian quota would assist those persons. Roosevelt asked Walter whether he is opposed to changing the 1920 date in principle forever or whether he does not agree that at some time this date must be revised. Walter replied he did not wish the date to be changed until the submission of a study by the Census Bureau which will take another year to complete.

Javits' amendment was defeated 82 to 23.

9. College Professors. Javits proposed an amendment to restore non-quota immigrant status granted under present law to college professors. Walter opposed the amendment because he felt that "there is no reason in the world why they /professors/ should not be treated just as we treat other specialists such as doctors, nurses, watch-makers." Walter asserted that the change in the present law was made to prevent "a continuance of a racket that this committee has heard about" in which visas have been improperly granted "alleged professors."

The amendment was rejected by voice vote.

10. Extension of Re-entry Permits. Rodino (D.,N.J.) urged an amendment giving discretion to the Attorney General to extend the validity of re-entry permits in deserving cases beyond one year after date of issuance. His amendment would restore discretion granted the Attorney General by existing law. Rodino argued that there might well be circumstances arising while the alien is abroad and which are entirely beyond his control which might delay his return. He cited such instances as the sudden illness of a member of his immediate family, transportation difficulties,etc. Walter opposed the amendment because: "I believe that it is desirable that every eligible alien be encouraged and persuaded, and perhaps compelled, to become a citizen of the United States as quickly as possible. The adoption og this amendment would encourage people to come into the United States and go right back to where their real allegiance lies. I do not think that kind of person is entitled to too much consideration."

By voice the amendment was rejected.

11. Adoption of Alien Children. Rep. Armstrong (R.,Mo.) urged an amendment which would permit non-quota admission of alien children adopted by American citizens abroad.

Walter opposed the amendment because he felt that this provision might easily develop into a "racket." It would be in the best interests of the United States to decide each one of these cases individually. Many young American couples go abroad and "cannot help being touched by what they see." But "It may well be that after they have been moved to adopt a child and come to the United States with it they might find that a mistake had been made, then what?"

Armstrong felt that because his proposal did not operate save in the case of immediate adoption of a child, there exists no danger that this provision might be used as a "cover" for the illegal importation of children. Rep. Judd (R.,Minn.) replied that despite this provision it was improbable that the United States would ever deport two-year-old children — "once a child is in, it is in. It us much wiser to take care of these cases by individual bills." Walter also pointed out that under the law of most states adoption could not take place abroad since American counts would not assume jurisdiction in adoption cases unless a child was physically before the court.

By voice vote the amendment was rejected.

12. Presidential Suspension of Immigration. Multer proposed an amendment which would restrict the power of the President to suspend immigration to periods of war or national emergency and, in addition, would confer upon him authority to remove immigration restrictions when deemed necessary to provide sanctuary to persecuted aliens.

Halleck asked Multer whether his amendment would invest the President with authority to enact a displaced persons act on his own motion. Multer stated that in effect it might have that result but only for a limited period and only at certain times. Walter opposed the amendment. He urged that the power to suspend immigration be permitted the executive whenever he finds "it detrimental to the interests of the United States." He urged that this authority is "absolutely essential because when there is an outbreak of an epidemic in some country whence these people are coming, it is impossible for Congress to act. People might conceivably in large numbers come to the United States and bring all sorts of communicable diseases with them. More than that, suppose we have a period of great unemployment?"

On a division, Multer's amendment was rejected 53-8.

13. Illegal Entry. Rep. Hand (R.,N.J.) proposed to amend the Walter bill by restoring statutes of limitations (contained in the existing law) exempting aliens from deportation because of improper entry after five years of continuous residence in the United States. Walter objected to the amendment. "The effect of the adoption of this amendment would be to place a premium on the ability to hide .... It seems to me that the United States should have the authority to deport at any time an alien who is illegally in the United States."

The amendment was rejected by voice vote.

14. Religious Persecutees. Rep. Dollinger (D.,N.Y.) offered an amendment to admit close relatives of citizens or lawfully admitted alien residents who are seeking admission to this country to avoid religious persecution.

Without debate Dollinger's amendment was rejected by voice vote.

15. Alien Registration Cards. Rep. Chudoff (D.,Pa.) offered an amendment penalizing only "wilful" failure to carry an alien registration card. ("I do not think anybody who inadvertently forgets the card should be guilty of a crime.") Rep. Andresen (R.,Minn.) felt that aliens should be "happy" to carry their alien registration cards and that this provision imposes no greater burden than that attached to the carrying of an automobile license. Walter opposed the amendment. He held that "The effect of the adoption of this amendment would be to shift the burden of proof, and make it impossible to prove that an alien was not carrying his card deliberately." At the present time the burden of proof is on the alien.

The amendment was rejected by voice vote.

16. Mental Deficiency. Celler offered an amendment exempting from deportation aliens who acquire a mental deficiency within 5 years of entry if it is established that such defect did not exist prior to admission to the United States. Rep. Walter supported the amendment. The amendment was accepted by voice vote.

17. Suspension of Deportation. Rep. Zablocki (D. - Wisc.) began to introduce an amendment providing for complete amendment of the Walter bill's provisions narrowing the discretion of the Attorney General in suspension cases. However, "since the temper of the House is obvious" Zablocki asked consent to withdraw his amendment. Zablocki's amendment was the last offered the House.

18. Miscellaneous Amendments. Five or six miscellaneous amendments were offered the House.

Delegate Farrington (R. - Hawaii) proposed three amendments to eliminate discriminatory treatment of residents of that Territory. One of them, retroactively suspending parts of the Nationality Act of 1940 as applied to persons collectively naturalized under the Hawaiian Organic Act, was endorsed by Walter. Although it "covers a very limited group, not more than two persons that I know of" the amendment carried on a division 39-5. Farrington's other two amendments were rejected.

Rep. Chudoff (D. - Pa.) offered amendments to improve service upon aliens subjected to legal proceedings by the Immigration Service. (Rejected by voice vote.)

Rep. Anfuso (D. - N.Y.) offered amendments to provide for current use of Italian visas unused during the war. (Defeated 77-21.)

Rep. Shelley (D. - Cal.) offered a technical amendment granting immunity as to detention expenses in cases involving persons who possess documents of entry other than a Certificate of Identity. (Carried by voice vote.)

Rep. Zablocki introduced an amendment to restore the present discretion of the Attorney General to readmit otherwise excludable aliens returning to their homes in the United States if they have maintained an unrelinquished domicile for seven consecutive years in the United States. (Rejected by voice vote.)

It is significant that at one point during the debate Graham asked assurances that the wording of the Oath of Allegiance, required in connection with a petition for naturalization, would permit conscientious objectors to obtain citizenship without violation of their religious beliefs. Walter assured him that it would. Walter pointed out that in this respect his bill differed from the McCarran bill. Graham said he had been approached on this score by the Amish, Mennonites and Quakers.

19. New York Times Advertisement. The advertisement inserted in the New York Times of Thursday, April 24, by opponents of the Walter bill figured prominently in the debate.

Using his comments on an amendment introduced by Delegate Farrington as a springboard, Walter irrelevantly took time to call the attention of the House to "misstatements" contained in the Times ad. Walter warned that "Somebody is trying to force me to tell what is in back of the opposition to this immigration bill. Perhaps I ought to do so. But at the moment I am going to refrain from doing so." Walter made a point-by-point reply to the "misstatements" in the ad. In general they were identical with the arguments he had made earlier during the floor debate on specific amendments.

Rankin interrupted Walter to inquire as to the names of the signatories. Walter stated that although he would be glad to tell Rankin who had signed the ad, it really wasn't necessary. "...(the gentleman) can guess and he wouldn't miss by many." Later, when rankin again pressed for the names of the signatories, Walter said he was endeavoring to find out. The only name he wished to mention individually was that of George Chintong, President of the Chinese American Citizens National Association. He had been informed that there was no such organization. Rankin asked whether the ad was "signed by Joe Stalin." Walter didn't think his name was on it. Walter expressed surprise at finding Earl Harrison's (Dean of the University of Pennsylvania Law School) name among the signatories. He could account for it, however, because of Harrison's opposition to any quotas or limitations at all. Rankin concluded the colloquy by stating that the "advertisement sounds like Communist propaganda and I think that is what it is."

Rep. Multer later arose to deplore the fact that "the authors of this bill find it necessary to allow their pride of authorship to cause them to urge the defeat of every worthwhile amendment...let us not cloud the issue by calling names. Every person who signed (the New York Times advertisement) is a decent law abiding American citizen whose loyalty and patriotism can withstand any challenge. There are about seventy names subscribed to that advertisement and

I submit that there is not a person who can be accused of being a Communist or a pro-Communist. Every one of them has the security and interest of this nation at heart. They urged the defeat of this bill...to take out of it all of the bad things we have heard about it so far and the many other things we will not have time to hear about because the debate has been cut off." Multer included the text of the ad as an appendix to his remarks.

Similarly, near the close of the time alloted for floor discussion of the Walter bill Rep. Powell arose, although he had "not intended to speak on this bill because I can see by the temper of the House, it is going to roll through preponderantly." However, "some things have been said here this afternoon which are not quite correct and I rise to put the record straight even though the voting may not be straight." Powell then introduced for the record a full analysis criticizing in detail all of the provisions of the McCarran-Walter bills. Powell stated that Walter was incorrect when he declared that the ad in the New York Times might have been placed there by those who were Communists. (Walter objected that he did not say that. Powell refused to yield for debate on the point.) Powell declared that the signatories to the ad comprised a roster of anti-Communists. The Walter bill, he alleged, "sets up a Capetown-Washington, D. C. axis ... This bill makes this no longer a land of the free but a place only for Anglo-Saxons ... We are setting up a policy that is not going to help us in our fight throughout the world. What you are doing here is going to be heard in the Caribbean, is going to be heard where there are people of the dark races ... I know you are going to rush this bill through, the chips are down, but I hope to God that the other body or the President vetoes the bill ... If the McCarran-Walter bills are passed by Congress and signed by the President the United States will itself become an iron curtain country. We will become the Western counterpart of the Union of South Africa's apartheid."

20. Attack on Non-Christian Immigrants. Much of the debate was characterized by unhesitating attacks upon "non-Christian" emigrants to the United States. At the conclusion of the debate Rep. Jenkins (R. - Ohio) arose to congratulate those responsible for the Walter bill. "The fact that every amendment offered that was not approved by those in charge of this legislation has been defeated is a great compliment....to those in charge of the bill." The past two days of debate reminded Rep. Jenkins "of the days of twenty years ago when the wishes of the members was to keep away from our shores the thousands of undesirables just as it is their wish now, while there was a small group who were then as now willing to lower the bars and admit almost anybody, just so more of their own kind could come in without let or hindrance. I think the records will show that the group of people that have complained the most against our immigration laws have profited more from our immigration system than any other group." Jenkins reminded the House that the Attorney General "recently stated that an analysis of 4,984 of the more militant members of the Communist Party of the United States showed that 91.4 of the total were of foreign stock or were married to persons of foreign stock."

Rep. Jenkins was concerned about infiltration by non-Christians: "When our country was young, immigration brought us almost exclusively Europeans whose ideals were those of Western Christian civilization; these people were instrumental in subduing and settling our frontier; they wished to conform to rather than modify or supplant the body of traditions and ideals summed up in the word America.

From about 1880 our immigration shifted sharply to include millions of persons from southern or eastern Europe. Most of these people were less sympathetic to the ideals of the United States and a very large portion of them were non-Christians who had no intention whatever of accepting the ideals of Western Christian cililization but had purposes of their own. These purposes were accomplished by infiltration, propaganda, and electoral and financial pressures. The average American was not aware of what was going on and remained undistrubed."

General Comment

Debate on the Walter bill in ~~the Committee of~~ the Whole began on Wednesday, April 23, continued through Thursday and ended on Friday, April 25. After the Committee had concluded its discussion on amendments to the bill it rose and debate began in the House of Representatives. Rep. Keating (R., NY.) offered a motion to recommit. Javits asked for the roll on the motion to recommit but could not muster the required 20% of the votes in support of his motion. On a division the motion to recommit was defeated 195-62. On the question of the passage of the bill, Javits again asked the yeas and nays (i.e., roll call) and again was refused. On a division, H.R. 5678 was passed 206-68.

It is apparent from the course of the debate that the managers of the Walter bill were in complete control throughout. As Rep. Jenkins pointed out, not a single amendment which failed to receive their approval was enacted. Even the opponents of the bill exercized extreme caution in attacking its provisions or in antagonizing Walter or his associates. This is especially surprising in the light of the no-holds-barred hostility expressed during the Congressional debate by the bill's sponsors to aliens and immigrants generally Few legislative debates in recent years have produced remarks as intensely anti-minority and anti-Jewish. As noted in detail above, Jenkins, Rankin, Hoffman, Wood, and Forrester did not scruple at making remarks which thinly cloaked a deepseated anti-minority group prejudice. One of the most virulent of these attacks occurred following the closing of the debate in an assertion in the appendix to the Congressional Record for April 29, 1952, containing a speech by Rankin in which he asserted that "Communism is racial. A racial minority seized control in Russia and all the satellite countries such as Poland and Czechoslovakia and many other countries I could name....They have been run out of practically every country in Europe in years gone by and if they keep stirring race trouble in this country and trying to force their Communistic program on the Christian people of America there is no telling what will happen to them here."

It is important to note the success with which the managers of the bill exploited the position of the Japanese-American Citizens League as a means of refuting charges that the bill is racially discriminatory. Mike Masaoka's remarks were quoted extensively during the floor debate. As is noted above, at one point Walter suggested that in the light of the Japanese-American Citizens League's position no other group could possibly maintain that his bill was unfair to Orientals. In addition to continual floor references to the official position of the Japanese-American Citizens League, Walter included in the appendix the complete text of Masaoka's letter to the New York Times which not only denied the presence of discriminatory provisions in the Walter bill but affirmatively pleaded for its enactment. It is impossible to compute the amount of harm which the Japanese-American Citizens League and Masaoka caused to effective opposition to this legislation.

It is significant that at several times during the discussion on the floor, notably during his remarks opposing the amendments to substitute the 1940 census figures and to provide for pooling of unused quotas, Rep. Walter, instead of indicating flat opposition, urged instead that action be postponed pending a study currently being undertaken by the Bureau of the Census. Walter informed the House that the Bureau, at the recommendation of his subcommittee is now preparing a report to be used presumably in connection with recommendation for revisions of present quota allocations. While these statements must not be mistaken as in any way indicating Walters' recognition of the need for modifying the national origins system, they do at least provide a basis for again raising these issues. No matter what the ultimate disposition of the McCarran-Walter bills, opposition to the national origin quota system is not to be regarded as having ended.

The strength of the Walter group indicates that opposition to the bill will find it similarly difficult to muster strength in the Senate unless they are prepared to engage in a determined hard-hitting floor debate.

Because of the possibility of successful enactment of this bill in the Senate, it is imperative also that some consideration now be given to the possibility of a Presidential veto. Rep. Sabath (D., Ill.) in an extension of his remarks in an appendix of the Record referred to President Taft's veto of a similarly restrictive immigration bill of 1912 at Sabath's urging and President Wilson's veto of a comparable bill in 1915. Sabath "feels certain" that President Truman would dispose of this bill the same way if it reaches his desk.

5/8/52

SUMMARY OF NEW
HUMPHREY-LEHMAN
OMNIBUS IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION BILL
(S. 2842)

The proposed new omnibus immigration and naturalization bill (New Omnibus Bill) would modernize the quota system by basing quotas on the 1950 census (thus increasing the total quota), would provide greater flexibility in the operation of the quota system by allowing the pooling of unused quotas, and would eliminate racial discrimination. It would admit to this country additional classes of deserving aliens without regard to quota restrictions and would establish a system of preferences, based on national need and family reunion, for most quota immigrants while at the same time reserving a portion of each quota for self-initiated immigration. The New Omnibus Bill would assure adequate review of denial of visas and denial of admission to this country and would make the McCarran-Walter Administrative Procedure Act applicable to deportation cases. It would provide adequate protection against subversive and other undesirable aliens without resorting to abusable and repressive restrictions.

In these provisions and in other vital matters of substance the New Omnibus Bill differs from S. 2550, recently reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The two bills correspond in general form, and in making many technical changes involved in codifying existing immigration and naturalization laws.

The following summary of the major provisions of the New Omnibus Bill emphasizes the principal changes that would be made in existing law and the most important differences between the New Omnibus Bill and S. 2550.

1. Non-quota status: The New Omnibus Bill would add several new classes of non-quota immigrants to those of existing law. Recognizing the desirability of reuniting families, the bill would exempt the immigrant parents of citizens from quota limitations. Other classes deserving special consideration to which non-quota status would be accorded are orphans entering the country for adoption and immigrants who have served honorably in the armed forces. Existing laws grant non-quota status to immigrants born in Canada or in independent countries in Latin America but deny such status to immigrants born in colonies or dependent areas in the Western Hemisphere. The New Omnibus Bill would correct this obvious inequity. Furthermore, S. 2550 would require professors, who are now admitted as non-quota immigrants, to enter under quota restrictions. S. 2550 places unnecessary restrictions even on the time-honored non-quota status of religious ministers. The New Omnibus Bill would strengthen the provisions of existing law in regard to both ministers and professors.

2. Quotas: While adhering to the principle of establishing a ceiling on immigration and while retaining the national origins quota system as the basis for the initial allocation of quotas, the New Omnibus Bill would make a number of much-needed improvements in the operation of the quota system.

By providing for the use of the 1950 census as the basis for calculating quotas, rather than basing quotas on the 1920 census as would S. 2550, the New Omnibus Bill would take into account increases in population and changes in the composition of the population which have taken place in the last thirty years.

The New Omnibus Bill would amend existing law so as to eliminate racially discriminatory features remaining from the Oriental Exclusion Act...the features which have been so bitterly resented throughout Asia. S. 2550, too, purports to eliminate racial discrimination, but, instead, merely disguises it in a new form. In S. 2550 certain Oriental nations are given, for the first time, minimum quotas of 100 and the right to naturalization. But in place of outright exclusion, there is substituted the novel concept of an "Asia-Pacific Triangle" with a total limit of immigration from this area, and a mortgage against quotas in this area for all immigrants, wherever born, who can trace as much as 50% of their ancestry back to this area, however remotely.

The New Omnibus Bill abjures not only this new form of racial discrimination but all other racial discrimination existing in present law. Thus, the New Omnibus Bill rejects the intolerable exclusion of American Negroes from the census for purposes of establishing quotas, an exclusion provided in the Immigration Act of 1924 and proposed to be perpetuated in S. 2550.

Also the New Omnibus Bill would grant equal non-quota status to all nations and dependencies in the Western Hemisphere, avoiding the further racially discriminating feature of S. 2550 which limits to 100 the possible immigrants from colonies, even those within the western hemisphere; this feature of S. 2550 discriminates especially against the natives of Jamaica, Trinidad, and other Caribbean dependencies. (present law gives these latter nationals the equivalent of non-quota status by charging immigrants from these dependencies against the quotas of the mother countries).

S. 2550, in addition to its other racially restrictive and discriminatory features, places an outside limit of 2,000 on immigration of persons either coming from the so-called Asia-Pacific Triangle, or born outside this geographic area but tracing as much as 50% of their ancestry back to it. S. 2550 provides further for the reduction in the minimum quotas of countries within the Asia-Pacific Triangle if their combined quotas should ever exceed 2,000. The New Omnibus Bill avoids all these novel, provocative and discriminatory features.

In the allotment of most quota immigrant visas, the New Omnibus Bill would give preference to persons whose services are urgently needed in this country and to certain relatives of citizens and of aliens admitted for permanent residence. Unlike S. 2550, the New Omnibus Bill would set aside a portion of each quota to encourage self-initiated so-called "new seed" immigration, in addition to making available for that purpose quota numbers not used by preferred immigrants.

By providing for the pooling of unused quotas, the revised bill, unlike S. 2550, would remedy one of the most serious shortcomings of our immigration system. Experience has shown that while some quotas are generally oversubscribed, others have consistently been used to only a small extent and that, as a result, only 44% of the authorized quota immigration visas has ever been issued. It has generally been recognized that, in its operation, the rigid structure of the quota system has discriminated against natives of southern and eastern Europe. The New Omnibus Bill would alleviate this situation by allowing quota numbers which remain unused during any given fiscal year to be used during the following year without reference to national origin.

Pooled quota numbers would be issued on a preferential basis to relatives of citizens and of aliens admitted for permanent residence, to persons whose services are urgently needed in this country, to persons who have been persecuted abroad on racial or religious grounds or because of their adherence to democratic beliefs, and to persons whose cases, because of special circumstances or hardship, merit special consideration.

The New Omnibus Bill would eliminate charges made against quotas by the Displaced Persons Act. No good purpose can be served by continuing to permit these quota mortgages, some of which extend well into the next century, to bar the present immigration of qualified aliens.

These quota mortgages bear especially heavily on countries like Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, and Poland whose nationals, refugees from the Soviet terror, most desperately need to find haven in the United States.

3. Exclusion: The New Omnibus Bill would establish, as would S. 2550, several new grounds for excluding undesirable aliens such as persons who have violated narcotics laws, laborers who would actually displace American workers, and persons who have been convicted in their own countries of two or more offenses (other than purely political offenses) not involving moral turpitude. In the latter case, the New Omnibus Bill, unlike S. 2550, would permit exceptions to be made on the basis of special circumstances.

In general, the New Omnibus Bill relies to a greater extent on factual grounds for exclusion than does S. 2550, which relies heavily on the "opinion" and "belief" of administrative officials.

The New Omnibus Bill contains provisions similar to those of the Internal Security Act of 1950 relating to the exclusion of subversive aliens.

These provisions are designed to prevent the admission of persons subscribing to the practices or teachings of the world Communist movement, or of any movement whose object is the establishment of totalitarian Government in the United States, or the control of the United States by a foreign power.

Past association with such movement or doctrines is deemed presumptive evidence of ineligibility for admission into the United States. But individuals who have broken with their past and who can show positive and conclusive evidence that they are anti-totalitarian are made admissible. The New Omnibus Bill and S. 2550 have similar provisions to this effect.

The New Omnibus Bill, however, is consistent in its treatment of such reformed persons, among whom are found some of the staunchest and most effective fighters against Communism. S.2550, however, while admitting the possibility that aliens abroad who once were associated with totalitarian movements can break with the past and reform, makes no such allowance for aliens within the United States. Aliens legally resident in the United States who have belonged to Communist or even to Communist-front organizations, no matter how remotely in the past, are made automatically deportable. The fact that they may have broken completely with their past and become outstanding advocates of democracy is no bar to deportation under the terms of S. 2550.

The New Omnibus Bill, like S. 2550, places new restrictions and safeguards against the entry of stowaways and other illegal entrants, and would protect the United States against the discharge of alien seamen at ports within this country.

The New Omnibus Bill would grant the President the right, in time of war or national emergency, to suspend all immigration, or, in such emergency periods, to admit temporarily any aliens whose entry would be in the national interest. This is in contrast with comparable provisions of S. 2550 which would simply authorize the President to suspend all immigration at any time in his discretion; no standards are established for the exercise of this extreme and extraordinary authority.

4. Board of Immigration Appeals and Visa Review Board: The New Omnibus Bill makes provision for adequate review of administrative actions, both in the granting of visas and in deportation proceedings. A statutory basis is provided for the Board of Immigration Appeals, and it is made an Independent Board, to assure its freedom from administrative influence in weighing appeals and reviews in deportation cases.

A Visa Review Board is established within the State Department to handle appeals on the granting of visas by consular officials. This is designed to provide uniformity of practice in the granting of visas; the absolute right of appeal is reserved to American citizens who have filed petitions in behalf of would-be immigrants on the basis of blood relationship or other preference qualification.

5. Deportation: The New Omnibus Bill grants new powers to the Attorney General to accomplish deportation more effectively and expeditiously. It establishes new grounds for deportation, analogous to the new grounds for exclusion of would-be immigrants. These powers are surrounded, however, with safeguards assuring the right of review and appeal, based on facts and findings, rather than on mere "opinion" or"belief" as provided in numerous provisions of S. 2550.

In the New Omnibus Bill the provisions of the McCarran-Walter Administrative Procedures Act are made applicable to deportation proceedings, along with provision for review by the Board of Immigration Appeals. S. 2550 specifically exempts deportation proceedings from the terms of the Administrative Procedures Act.

The New Omnibus Bill makes involvement in subversive activities grounds for deportation. Present membership in Communist or Communist-front organizations is made grounds for deportation, except that in the case of Communist-front organizations, non-awareness of the nature of the organization can be successfully pleaded if proved.

Under S. 2550, many new grounds for deportation would be retroactively applicable. An alien could be deported for an act which did not constitute a ground for deportation when committed. The New Omnibus Bill makes the new grounds for deportation applicable only to acts performed after the new bill becomes law.

S. 2550 would so restrict the discretionary authority of the Attorney General to suspend deportation that such authority would be meaningless. The New Omnibus Bill recognizes that extenuating circumstances may make deportation unduly harsh in certain cases and would give the Attorney General broader authority to suspend deportation than would S. 2250.

The New Omnibus Bill, unlike S. 2550, would restrain deportation to any country in which an alien would be subjected to any form of persecution because of race, religion, or political opinion. S. 2550 would permit deportation to any country unless the deportee would face in such country actual physical persecution.

6. Naturalization and denaturalization: The New Omnibus Bill and S. 2550 include many similar provisions governing naturalization, denaturalization, and expatriation. However, the New Omnibus Bill, unlike S. 2550, would not erect unnecessary barriers to naturalization such as the stipulation of S. 2550 that any absence from the United States, of whatever duration, would break the continuity of required residence.

The New Omnibus Immigration Bill eliminates, for all practical purposes, the distinctions, of recent origin and of doubtful constitutional validity, between naturalized and native-born citizens.

The New Omnibus Bill eliminates from present law the provision, included in S. 2550, that naturalized citizens who join Communist front organizations can be de-naturalized. The New Omnibus Bill reenacts the provisions of present law which provides for denaturalization in any case where "fraud" and "illegality" occurred in procuring naturalization.

The New Omnibus Bill would permit, under careful safeguards, the naturalization of persons who, because of religious training or belief, object to swearing to bear arms. S. 2550 would bar such persons from naturalization.

7. Other provisions: The New Omnibus Bill would establish a Joint Committee on Immigration and Naturalization Policy, composed of members of the Senate and House Judiciary Committees, to make a continuous study of the administration of immigration and naturalization laws, the effect of such laws on the national security, economy, and social welfare of the United States, and other matters having a bearing on immigration and naturalization policy. S. 2550 would not establish this highly important committee.

The New Omnibus Bill would not, as would S. 2550, tamper with the internal organization of the Department of State in violation of the Hoover Commission's recommendations in order to create a Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs. However, the New Omnibus Bill would make available to the Secretary of State a position at a salary equal to that paid the highest grade of the Classified Civil Service. Such a position will give adequate recognition to the officer to whom the Secretary of State may delegate authority to supervise the Department's consular activities under the bill.

The New Omnibus Bill would not, as would S. 2550, confuse lines of authority in both the Departments of State and Justice.

Under existing laws, carriers are, except in certain well-defined cases, required to pay the detention and deportation expenses of aliens whom they have brought to this country and who must be detained for examination or deported. Administrative fines are levied against carriers for bringing certain aliens to this country. S. 2550 would incorporate into the law vague new provisions for the relief of carriers, foreign as well as domestic, from expenses and fines and would probably have the effect of shifting the payment of most such expenses to the United States taxpayers. The New Omnibus Bill would retain provisions similar to those of present laws at least until further examination can be made of this matter.

Summary of McCarran-Walter Omnibus Immigration Bill

(S.2550, H.R.5678)*

Thirteen new grounds for excluding future immigrants, more than 20 new grounds for deporting those admitted in past years, and an undetermined number of new ways of losing one's American citizenship would be written into law by the pending McCarran-Walter Omnibus Immigration Bill (S.2550, H.R.5678). This 302 page bill (reduced to 162 pages in the House version by using half-sized type), although advertised as a "codification" statute, would make more than a hundred changes in Federal law governing immigration, deportation, and citizenship. Of these changes, three are in the direction of liberality: (a) Asiatics are made eligible for immigration, under minimum quotas, and citizenship; (b) sex-discriminations are eliminated: (c) reformed totalitarians may be admitted (but can never become citizens.) These liberalizing provisions are also contained in several other pending immigration bills, including H.R. 403 (allowing quota immigration from Asia), which passed the House on February 19, 1951, and S.2343, sponsored by Senators Kefauver, Lehman, Humphrey, Ives, Hendrickson, Benton, Kilgore, Moody, Douglas, Murray, Magnuson, Langer, Morse, Pastore and Gillette.

In substance the McCarran-Walter Omnibus Bill would prohibit future immigration to the United States, except for certain narrowly restricted categories, and provide for deporting Displaced persons and other immigrants admitted in past years who do not meet the new rigid McCarran-Walter standards, which the bill would make retroactive. The bill would also deprive American citizens of citizenship on various grounds which the Supreme Court has not hitherto allowed.

---

* This memorandum is a brief summary of those provisions of the Omnibus Bill (as reported out by Senate and House Judiciary Committees) which change existing law. All or some of these changes seriously criticized by the following organizations: American Bar Association, American Civil Liberties Union, American Federation of International Institutes, American Federation of Labor, American Friends Service Committee, American Jewish Committee, American Jewish Congress, Americans for Democratic Action, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Association of Immigration and Nationality Lawyers, Common Council for American Unity, Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, International Rescue Committee, Jewish Labor Committee, Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A., National Catholic Rural Life Conference, National Catholic Welfare Conference, National Community Relations Advisory Council National Council of Jewish Women, Synagogue Council of America, Union of American Hebrew Congregations, United Service for New Americans, Young Women's Christian Association. Fuller explanations of the provisions here summarized will be found in the Hearings before the Subcommittees of the Committees on the Judiciary, 82nd Congress, 1st Session, on S.716, H.R.2379, and H.R. 2816, expecially in statements beginning at pages 126, 230, 378, 413, 526, 562, 615, 656, 661, 667, 732, 738, 743, 747 and 752.

Note: The listing in the above footnote of organizations which criticized some or all of the changes to existing law which are contained in the McCarran-Walter measures is not intended to imply that all of these organizations necessarily oppose the Bills as a whole.

I New Immigration Restrictions

Among other changes in existing law the pending bill would:

1. Limit all future immigration to the United States to immigrants of "high education, technical training, specialized experience, or exceptional ability" who are "needed urgently in the United States" (sec.203 (a)), and to parents of adult citizens, and spouses or children of admitted immigrants, except to the degree that unused visas, if any, under these categories may be used for immigrants without such special qualifications.

2. Eliminate college and university professors from the class of quota-exempt immigrants. (Sec.101(a)(26)(F) in Senate Bill; 101(a)(27)(F) in House Bill)

3. Change immigration quotas for Jamaica and other Caribbean colonies from the never filled United Kingdom quota of 65,721 to a special quota of 100 for each such colony, thus drastically curtailing colored immigration. (Sec.202(c))

4. Establish a special inferior status for any person "attributable by as much as one half of his ancestry" to Asiatic races, regardless of the citizenship or country of birth of such person, and exclude such persons from the quotas of the countries in which they are native-born citizens. (Sec.202(b))

5. Authorize the Executive to set up new restrictions, and even absolute bars, against immigration, without legislative or judicial review, in peace-time as well as war-time. (Sec.212(e))

6. Repeal the provision of the 1917 law allowing entry of victims of religious persecution who are illiterate.(Sec.212(a)(25)

7. Repeal a similar dispensation for parents, grandparents, wives and widowed or unmarried daughters of citizens or legally admitted immigrants. (Sec.212 (a)(25))

8. Allow courts of foreign nations to exclude immigrants from admission to the United States, thus making Nazi or Communist court convictions a bar against entry, even if the offense involved no "moral turpitude" by American standards. (A violator of a Communist law against religious worship, if sentenced by a Communist court to a five year prison term (under H.R.5678, or if he could have been so sentenced under S.2550), becomes ineligible to enter the U.S.A.(Sec 212 (a) (10)

9. Bar immigrants (including quota exempt immigrants from the Western Hemisphere) who are either skilled or unskilled laborers, unless rigid tests are met establishing the unavailability of domestic labor. (Sec.212 (a)(14))

10. Bar all immigrants who, in the opinion of a consular officer are "likely at any time to become public charges" (i.e. anybody who is not a skilled or unskilled worker). (Sec. 212 (a)(15))

11. Bar all immigrants who may intend "to engage in any immoral sexual act." (Sec.212(a)(13))

12. Bar aliens who received any travel documents (even in Communist lands) by "misrepresentation". (Sec.212 (a)(19))

II Deportation

The broad grounds of deportation set up by the McCarran Internal Security Act of 1950 and various prior laws are considerably widened by the new McCarran-Walter Omnibus Bill, which would:

(1) Abolish existing statutes of limitation in deportation cases, thus allowing deportation for alleged acts fifty years past, as to which no witnesses or documents are available. (Sec.241)

(2) Require deportation of any person who goes to a mental hospital or institution within five years after immigration, even if he or his family pays for such care or treatment. (Sec.241(a)(8))

(3) Authorize deportation of immigrants who are mistakenly classified as "public charges" (whereas present law allows deportation only if the immigrant is correctly so classified.) Sec. 241 (a)(8))

(4) Authorize deportation of immigrant brides or bridegrooms who fail to fulfill marital agreements "to the satisfaction of the Attorney General". (Sec. 241 (c))

(5) Require deportation of immigrants who become addicted to the use of narcotic drugs after entry. (sec241(a)(11))

(6) Establish numerous other grounds of deportation, some of which are trivial (including traffic offenses, under Sec.241(a)(4) of S.2550) and others of which are framed in vague general language that precludes any possibility of judicial review. (Sec.241)

(7) Make all grounds of deportation retroactive to cover all immigrants who have hitherto been admitted to the United States. (Sec.241 (d))

III Status of Immigrants

In addition to the foregoing new grounds of exclusion and deportation of immigrants, the McCarran-Walter Bill would change the status of immigrants and visitors in several important respects:

First, the bill would drastically curtail the authority of the Attorney General to (1) suspend deportation in "hardship cases" (Sec.244(a)); (2) adjust the status of visitors, students, and other non-immigrants by "pre-examination" and issuance of quota visas (sec.245); (3) extend the time during which immigrants may make visits abroad without losing the right to return to the U.S. (Secs. 212(c), 223(b))

Secondly, the bill would abolish the confidential character of social security files and make such files available for use in establishing the deportability of immigrants as "public charges". (Sec.290(c))

Thirdly, the bill would subject the acquisition of citizenship to a series of new requirements, retroactively covering the entire life of the applicant. (Secs. 313,316,318)

Finally, the bill would deprive immigrants and native-born Americans, alike, of the protection of court review in many cases. In general, mistakes and abuse of discretion by consuls and immigration officials would be exempted from effective judicial review by substitutive subjective standards ("the satisfaction of the Attorney General," "the opinion of the Attorney General," etc.) for present objective standards.

IV Impact of Bill on American Citizens

The right of American citizens to be immune from search or official interrogation without a warrant is terminated by Section 287. Any car or vehicle within a "reasonable distance" of Mexico, Canada, or the Atlantic or Pacific Ocean may be searched without a warrant, under Section 287(a)(3); any citizen may be interrogated if an Immigration official believes him to be an alien. (Sec. 287(a)(1)

American citizens employing immigrant workers become subject to a prison term of one year and a fine of $1000 for each immigrant worker so employed, if the employer had "reasonable cause to believe" that the immigrant had failed to conform to some requirement of the immigration laws (including the many new retroactive McCarran-Walter standards) or if the employer "encourages or induces, or attempts to encourage or induce, either directly or indirectly" any irregular entry by immigrant workers (even if they had a perfect right to enter the United States as quota-exempt Western Hemisphere immigrants).Sec.274(b) of H.R. 5678; S.2550 contains somewhat similar but vaguer language, with 5 year imprisonment and $2000 fine for each irregular immigrant.)

American citizens will henceforth be deprived, under Section 349, of citizenship if they engage in military or civil service for a foreign state, even if foreign nationality is not acquired. Naturalized citizens are made subject to denaturalization, at the instigation of any private informer who files a proper affidavit, for acts which were not grounds of denaturalization when they acquired citizenship. (Sec.340(a)) Section 360 abolishes, in certain cases, the right of an American citizen to court review if his citizenship is challenged by a consul or other officer.

The result of all these provisions would be to subject about ten million foreign-born Americans to a special police regime operating without regard to "due process" as hitherto defined. The impact of these enlarged controls upon the taxpayer has not yet been calculated.

ADL SOUTHERN OFFICE
11 PRYOR ST., S. W., ATLANTA, GA.

For your information

721

Harold Fleming

Some of this may be of interest to Jim + Benny

Alex Miller

Confidentially Yours

A PERSONAL REPORT FROM THE

WASHINGTON, D.C. REGIONAL OFFICE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
1003 K Street, N.W.

WASHINGTON, D. C. NO. 28 JUNE 1952

Dear Friends:

The behind-the-scenes struggle to enact the McCarran-Walter Immigration Bill was the most devious and bitter of any at this session of Congress. The bill's sponsors had assumed -- erroneously, it turned out -- that if President Truman vetoed the bill, the veto would be sustained in the Senate. (In fact a shift of two votes in the Senate would have prevented the bill from becoming law. The Senate overrode the veto 57-26; the House 278-113.) The forces of Senator McCarran and Congressman Walter made a desperate effort to get Truman to sign the bill. They realized that Truman's liberal instincts would be opposed to the discriminatory and repressive features of the bill, so they pulled every political trump card in the deck to get his approval, regardless.

McCarran, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee and chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee that handles the State Department budget, did not hesitate to throw his weight around. He knows he is not the most popular Senator with the White House, but he managed to get such White House favorites as Secretary of State Dean Acheson and the new Attorney-General McGranery to run interference for him and urge the President to sign the bill. Congressman Walter, Chairman of the House Immigration Subcommittee, let it be known that the special bill for refugee relief in which President Truman was interested, couldn't get anywhere if Truman didn't sign the immigration bill.

On the other side were the forces of the religious and nationality groups. The White House was aware that Americans whose ancestors came from Southern and Eastern European countries regarded the McCarran-Walter bill as an affront. (But when the White House told me it would not be able to receive the delegation of sixteen nationality and religious leaders we tried to arrange, I regarded it as ominous--the White House didn't want to bring people to Washington and then deny their request.)

The Protestant churches, through the National Council of the Churches of Christ, asked the President for a veto. The Catholic Church was split. The National Catholic Welfare Conference unexpectedly announced support of the McCarran bill -- gave McCarran a letter which he flaunted as a trump card. But thanks to the untiring efforts of that staunch liberal, Msgr. John O'Grady, important Catholic voices in the hierarchy and the press finally joined in asking for a veto.

Senators Lehman, Humphrey, and Benton kept pressing on all fronts for a veto, arguing in action as well as in words, that courage and integrity were the best politics.

President Truman, who isn't allergic to the smoke of political battle, listened to both sides and kept his own counsel. He seemed to enjoy the suspense and mystery that mounted as he guarded his decision. Both sides, after their emissaries left the White House, breathed confidence -- but, really, they weren't quite sure. Liberals reported that the President was saying, "The bill hasn't reached my desk yet, but when it does, I'll take care of it," as evidence of a certain veto. But less optimistic souls pointed out, "Isn't that another way of saying: we'll cross that bridge when we come to it?" But then another White House visitor came back and said, "The President patted my knee when he said he would take care of it" -- and still people weren't sure.

Just a day before the deadline, Congressman Emanuel Celler was confident of approval. He was arranging to get the White House pen which would be used in signing the bill for his colleague, Walter. From the beginning, Celler had chided us for not seeing that the Walter bill was an "improvement" over the present law, (although he fought for liberalizing amendments and to sustain the veto.) He had insisted there was no "Jewish issue" involved. He scoffed at our political naivete for thinking that any President would ever veto a general immigration bill. (Actually, Wilson had.)

But in case a veto should come -- McCarran and Walter, a couple of veteran political traders, began to line up the votes to override, including, strangely enough, Senate Majority Leader McFarland (D.-Ariz.).

On the morning of June 25, the last day on which the President could act, liberal Senators had two press statements prepared -- one in case of veto, one in case of approval. When the President's veto message came, it was delivered with characteristic vigor. Striking at the immigration quota system which gives artificially high quotas to England and Ireland which go to waste year after year, the President said, "This quota system, always based on assumptions at variance with our American ideals -- is long since out of date and more than ever unrealistic in the face of present world conditions." Admitting that the bill contains some good provisions, the President said, "But the price is too high, and in good conscience, I cannot agree to pay it." And the President condemned the bill because "it would perpetuate injustices of long standing against many other nations of the world," and would "intensify the repressive and inhumane aspects of our immigration procedures." But Congress, knowing that the President wasn't running for reelection, summarily rejected his views.

The retirement of Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin as President of George Washington University, the largest institution of higher learning in the nation's capital, removes one large obstacle in the way of good human relations in education. For years Marvin has rejected proposals, sponsored in some cases by his deans, to include courses in intercultural education. Under Marvin, Jewish representation on the faculty has been so abnormally small as to raise grave questions concerning G.W.'s hiring policy.

President Marvin carried his prejudices on his sleeve. A few years ago, as part of a national survey, we asked George Washington University to tell us about its admission practices. Marvin replied by inviting me to a meeting to which he also brought the deans of his various schools. These gentleman winced when Marvin remarked, at the very outset of the meeting, "Why is it that the Jews have been expelled from every land in which they ever lived?" Later, one of the embarrassed deans called me to express his regret and disappointment over Marvin's conduct. He held out the hope that Marvin was due to retire shortly and the University could then adopt a more enlightened educational policy in the field of human relations.

Senator Robert A. Taft slapped down the hatemongers who have muscled in so extensively in the Republican primary campaign. He singled out Joseph P. Kamp, whose paper "Headlines" tries to make Eisenhower out to be the candidate of the Zionists and pro-Communists, and Gerald Winrod, the Midwest anti-semite who is booming MacArthur. Taft said, "This kind of slander can only hurt the Republican party and only serves to prove that these people are not interested in the Republican party." The Washington News carried a fine expose of Kamp.

Unfortunately, hundreds of thousands of copies of this scurrilous material have been sent out by people who claim to be campaigning for Taft or MacArthur. In Baltimore, Irving H. Mezger and Louis D. Carroll, Chairman of something he calls "The Marylanders-for-Taft Committee," admitted sending copies of "Headlines" to all Republican delegates.

ADL and all the other Jewish agencies have joined in a request to the two major political parties to include a sweeping condemnation of appeals to racial or religious bigotry in the party platforms, and to take effective measures to prevent the use of such smears in the elections.

Averell Harriman's smashing 4-1 victory in the Democratic primary in Washington proved one thing above all else. Civil rights is a major issue in the big cities. For millions of Americans, that will be the decisive issue -- the one on which they will cast their votes. Harriman's chief plank and talking point in the Washington primary contest with Senator Kefauver was his endorsement of the full civil rights program as enunciated by President Truman. Veteran political reporters in Washington feel that the Washington primary has reduced the chance that the Democratic nomination will go to a candidate who is not all-out for the civil rights program.

President Truman's fighting civil rights speech at Howard University mentioned "four states and six cities" which have adopted anti-mask laws directed at the Ku Klux Klan. The President's research staff supplied him with outdated information. Perhaps they cannot be criticized for not keeping up to date with the rapid developments in this field, but the fact is that as of now, there are five states and some forty odd cities which have adopted anti-KKK laws and ordinances, thanks largely to the work of ADL's Southern Regional Office.

The Troublemakers, ADL's exciting expose of the hate mongers, has gone into its third printing. The critical acclaim that this book has won from Senators Morse, Kilgore, Benton and from news commentators Drew Pearson and Walter Winchell, has been followed by generous public acceptance. Drew Pearson, on his TV program, plugged the book as being the authoritative account of the smears against Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg.

Like its predecessors, The Troublemakers promises to become the standard reference work in the field of bigotry for newsmen and public officials. It's a desk manual at Eisenhower campaign headquarters for its expose of the smear artists. Copies are available in this office at $2.00, a saving of $1.50 from the regular book store price.

FEPC took on a new look -- FEOPE -- when the Senate Labor Committee by a vote of 10 to 3 reported out a Fair Employment Practices Act under the new name of a Federal Equality of Opportunity in (for) Employment Act. The "alphabetic" change was designed to bypass the emotional opposition that had been whipped up in the South against the "punitive" "jail sentence" FEPC. Voting for the bill were Senators Murray, Humphrey, Douglas, Lehman, Pastore, Neeley, Morse, Ives, Smith and Aiken. The three who voted against the bill were Taft, Nixon and Hill.

The bill, S3368, sponsored by a bi-partisan group of 16 Senators -- 9 Democrats and 7 Republicans -- is essentially the old FEPC bill. It sets up an Equality of Opportunity in Employment Commission with power to hold hearings and to issue cease and desist orders which are enforceable in the courts. With Congress about to adjourn, its chances of Senate consideration are acknowledged even by its sponsors to be remote or non-existent. Backers of the bill, however, view its introduction at this time as an educational step to keep Congressional interest in FEPC alive and to influence the civil rights planks in both party platforms.

Though opposed to FEPC with enforcement powers, Senator Kefauver has pledged that he "will feel it my duty to get it enacted into law" if an FEPC plank is included in the Democratic party platform. And he has just joined with Senators Lehman and Humphrey in sponsoring a resolution to curb the filibuster -- the chief stumbling block to the enactment of civil rights legislation.

The High Wall is piling up enthusiastic press notices. The Saturday Review of Literature says ADL's new film comes "the closest of any film yet made to showing the basic origins and meanings of prejudice.. highly suitable for adult discussion programs." The Film Council of Boston has awarded the film its First Prize on films for adult education. The Fifth Annual Cleveland Film Festival gave it an Oscar (first prize) as the best film in the mental health category. While the National Institute of Mental Health is completing its study of high school student reactions to the film, the Human Resources Laboratory of the Army Air Forces will examine it and our other recent film "To Live Together" for their value in the Air Forces human relations training program. The Department of Labor's Bureau of Employment Security is also planning a preview. It's available from this office for free showing at your PTA or civic association.

Confidentially yours,

Herman Edelsberg

HERMAN EDELSBERG

1952 WORKSHOP ON INTERGROUP EDUCATION
DIRECTOR OF THE SUMMER SESSION
THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA
WASHINGTON 17, D. C.

WASHINGTON
APR 9 52
D. C.

U.S. POSTAGE
.02
№ 7155 N.P.M.

Human Rel Ed

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Ave., N. E.
Atlanta, Ga.

Before posting, detach here

Professor Jacques Maritain, distinguished Catholic Philosopher, writes concerning this Workshop:

. . . I am particularly happy and proud, as a Catholic, to know that the Catholic University of America is doing such outstanding work in meeting race problems in all their concrete implications, and helping people to see them in the light of the Gospel's spirit and the concept of the dignity of the human person.

APPLICATION FORM

WORKSHOP IN INTERGROUP EDUCATION, June 30–August 8, 1952

Fill out and mail this application form to the Registrar of the Summer Session, The Catholic University of America, Washington 17, D. C.

Name _____
(LAST) (FIRST) (MIDDLE)

Mailing address _____

Please circle answers below.

Education: H.S. DIPLOMA B.A. or B.S. M.A. or M.S. Ph.D. OTHERS_____

I have matriculated at C.U.A. previously: YES NO LAST DATE _____

I wish living accommodations on campus: YES NO

I am ENCLOSING HAVING SENT one of the following credentials:
(circle)

Circle number:

1. statement of good standing from school currently enrolled
2. statement of honorable dismissal from last school enrolled
3. transcript of record including honorable dismissal from last school enrolled

ONE OF THE ABOVE LISTED CREDENTIALS MUST BE SUBMITTED FOR ADMISSION TO THE SUMMER SESSION

PLEASE POST

THE SECOND ANNUAL
WORKSHOP IN INTERGROUP EDUCATION

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY of AMERICA JUNE 30 to AUGUST 8, 1952

PURPOSE: The basic purpose of the Workshop is to implement our ideal of democratic life. In a country like ours, people of various races, creeds, social classes, and national origins live together harmoniously. In the Workshop we discuss and practice methods for reducing intergroup tensions and promoting intergroup harmony.

FOR WHOM PLANNED: For educators and educational leaders at every level from the kindergarten to the university, for group workers, case workers, librarians, guidance workers, counselors, public-health workers, psychologists, for every person interested in practical ways for making his community a better place for every citizen to live in.

HOW IS THE WORKSHOP RUN? It is run very democratically. Students themselves do the major part of the planning. There are general morning sessions and small afternoon work groups. There are field trips, demonstrations of audio-visual aids, library work, sociodrama, panel discussions, and talks by visiting experts. For those who are interested there will be an opportunity to participate in radio and television shows on local stations.

ACADEMIC CREDIT. Students may earn six semester hours on the graduate or undergraduate level.

FEES. Eighty dollars tuition and a five dollar registration fee.

LIVING ACCOMMODATIONS. These are available on the campus for laywomen, nuns, and priests. Please make reservations early. Laymen may secure rooms in nearby private homes.

For further information, write to:
DR. ROY J. DEFERRARI, DIRECTOR OF THE SUMMER SESSION,
THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA, WASHINGTON 17, D.C.

WORKSHOP IN INTERGROUP EDUCATION

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF AMERICA

STAFF

OFFICERS OF ADMINISTRATION

Most Reverend Patrick A. O'Boyle, D.D., LL.D., Chancellor
Most Reverend Patrick J. McCormick, Ph.D., LL.D., Rector
Very Reverend Jerome D. Hannan, S.T.D., J.C.D., Vice Rector
Reverend James A. Magner, Ph.D., S.T.D., Procurator
Roy Joseph Deferrari, Ph.D., LL.D., Director of the Summer Session
Catherine R. Rich, A.B., LL.D., Registrar
Very Reverend Louis A. Arand, S.S., S.T.D., President, Divinity College
Eugene P. Willging, A.B. in L.S., Director of the Library
Reverend Paul Hanly Furfey, Ph.D., LL.D., Director of Workshop in Intergroup Education

GROUP LEADERS

Ira L. Gibbons, M.S., Associate Professor, School of Social Work, Howard University, Washington, D. C.
Verna D. Linzel, B.A., Director, Washington Area Office, National Conference of Christians and Jews
John J. O'Connor, LL.B., Ph.D., Professor of Philosophy and History, Georgetown School of Foreign Service, Washington, D.C.
Mary Elizabeth Walsh, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Sociology, The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C.

SPECIAL GROUP LEADER

Saul D. Alinsky, Ph.B., Executive Director, Industrial Areas Foundation, Chicago, Illinois

SPECIAL CONSULTANT

Alex Weinstein, M.A., Director of Community Relations, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Washington, D.C.

(In addition to the above, consultants will be called in, as need arises, to discuss subjects within their special fields of competence.)

COOPERATING COMMITTEE

Reverend Paul Hanly Furfey, Chairman
(Director of the Workshop,
The Catholic University of America)

Mrs. Verna D. Linzel, Secretary
(Director, Washington Area Office, National Conference of Christians and Jews)

Leonard P. Aries
(Education Committee, NCCJ)

Dr. Francis J. Brown
(American Council on Education)

Rev. Ramon A. di Nardo (Ass't. Director of Education, Archdiocese of Washington)

Mrs. Milton Dunn
(League of Women Voters)

Isaac Franck
(Jewish Community Council)

Abraham J. Harris
(American Jewish Committee)

Miss Lucille Herrick (Sodality Union of Archdiocese of Washington)

Captain Watson B. Miller
(American Legion Headquarters)

Miss Pearle E. Minor
(Federation of Parents & Teachers)

Thomas Moran
(District of Columbia Council, CIO)

Miss Margaret R. Pepper
(Executive Ass't. to D. C. Supt. of Schools)

Clem F. Preller
(Washington Central Labor Union, AFL)

Mrs. Leo Raywid
(D. C. Congress of Parents & Teachers)

Dr. Frederick E. Reissig
(Washington Federation of Churches)

William E. Schuyler, Jr.
(Exchange Club of Washington, D.C.)

Mrs. Michael Shapiro
(Argo Chapter, B'nai B'rith Women)

Llewellyn K. Shivery
(Urban League)

Dr. O. Glenn Stahl
(Federal Personnel Council)

Lofton S. Wesley

the ADL bulletin
PUBLISHED BY THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
OCTOBER 1952

Immigration

Under recent laws these new citizens are never the equal of native-born Americans. The most repressive penalties come from McCarran laws.

WHY PENALIZE OUR NATURALIZED CITIZENS?

Since 1906 we have placed increasing restrictions on the foreign-born citizen, pushing him into second-class status. Why a double-standard?

By SOL RABKIN

MORRIS MENDELSOHN, born in Poland, arrived in the United States in 1920. He was six years old. By the time he was nine, Morris was an American citizen, his parents having taken the oath of allegiance in a naturalization ceremony.

In 1936 Morris journeyed to Palestine. When he prepared to return five years later he found it impossible to get transportation, the outbreak of war having disrupted shipping. True, you could book passage, but at premium rates. Morris did not have that kind of money.

He was stymied by these conditions until 1946. Again, Mendelsohn prepared to return to his adopted land. Again, he was temporarily thwarted, this time by the sudden serious illness of his wife.

The Mendelsohns never got a third chance to come home. In October 1946 the American consul in Palestine called Mendelsohn to his office. When Morris arrived he was relieved of his American passport. "It is cancelled," he was told. "You are no longer a citizen of the United States."

The flabbergasted Mendelsohn learned that by his failure to return to the United States within five years he had unwittingly surrender his right to citizenship.

He argued the case in court, questioning the constitutionality of a law enacted in 1940 (four years after his departure and shortly before his first attempt to return) and detailing the formidable circumstances — a world war — that prevented his return. The courts merely shrugged and told Mendelsohn, sorry, it's the law; you've lost your citizenship.

There is one way Morris Mendelsohn could have been spared his difficulties. He could have been born on American soil. Then his citizenship would have remained inviolate—even if he stayed abroad for 50 years.

UNDER OUR DEMOCRATIC way of life, all citizens are presumed to be equal before the law. Such equality is a basic prerequisite in a system which is founded upon a belief in the dignity of the individual.

But a study of our laws governing citizenship shows that in many cases we maintain two different classes of citizens —citizens by birth and citizens by naturalization. And the naturalized citizen, such as Morris Mendelsohn once was, is given second-class treatment.

This, strangely enough, is a comparatively recent development. The glory of American political history is the inexorable widening of democratic frontiers, a trend to more and more practical expressions of the rights of man. But in the case of American naturalization policies (as well as its restrictive and discriminatory immigration program) the opposite is true.

As far back as 1824, Chief Justice John Marshall, the legal scholar who laid the foundation for the greatness of the U. S. Supreme Court, said:

> A naturalized citizen becomes a member of society, possessing all the rights of a native citizen, and standing, in the view of the Constitution, on the footing of a native. The Constitution does not authorize Congress to enlarge or abridge these rights.

But Congress, sustained by the courts, has abridged these rights. Since 1906 our lawmakers have been retreating from the principle established by Justice Marshall. The result has been an accumulation of

Continued on page 7

They've Dropped the "A" in NCRAC

COMMENT:

MUCH of America's political passions are kept heated by the fiery issue of states' rights as opposed to primary national interests and the general welfare. Narrow sectional interests often stymie the common good and a "minority" of states often dictate to the nationwide "majority."

In Jewish affairs, a parallel can be drawn from the controversy that has flared for nearly two years over community relations work, in which a "minority" coalition of community relations agencies wielded a power grotesquely out of proportion to its constituent representation.

This coalition—speaking for a limited number of Jewish communities—amplified its voice in such a way as to drown out mature counsel and to seize power in the name of the "minority" it represented, thus ending a proud unity that has characterized American Jewish community relations affairs for a number of years.

When the executive committee of B'nai B'rith, parent body of ADL, voted unanimously to withdraw from the National Community Relations Advisory Council, it acted for the "common good and general welfare" of the American Jewish community. It held, by that decision, that the future of Jewish community life in America could only be secured by the continuance of its traditionally democratic character.

•

ADL AND THE American Jewish Committee, the two agencies with the longest and most successful records of service in community relations work, have stood firmly side by side in this long controversy, both withdrawing from NCRAC at its last plenum session at Atlantic City; both rejecting the power-play calculated to dismember and emasculate their effective organizations; both repudiating the coup which would have given a single, centralized body autocratic powers over American Jewish community relations; and above all, both withdrawing with a firm mandate from their respective constituencies.

The NCRAC came into being eight years ago with ADL and AJCommittee playing leading roles in its creation. It was set up to be what its name implied—an advisory and coordinating body for Jewish community relations groups. NCRAC was intended as a friendly body where all could get together to discuss ways of improving upon their work, or to dissent in the event of basic ideological differences. In the broadest sense, it was intended as a democratic forum. NCRAC membership consisted of ADL, AJCommittee, American Jewish Congress, Jewish Labor Committee, Jewish War Veterans, and Union of American Hebrew Congregations. Over the years 27 community relations councils became members. An executive committee and a plenum were the two governing bodies of NCRAC. In the executive committee, the national agencies and the local CRCs had an equal number of votes. In the plenum, the CRCs captured a majority because each community was granted two votes, whereas the national agencies each held five. Thus, within a few short years, the NCRAC "majority" began to foster the exaggeration that they truly spoke for the Jewish community. And they did speak; they spoke with the voice of power; and they finally took power, flaunting their votes in triumph at the last Plenum of NCRAC.

By contrast there are the "minority," ADL and AJCommittee, two organizations with over 40 years of hard-won experience in the Jewish community relations field—pioneers, experimenters, builders—performing perhaps 90 per cent of the total work on a 48-state level.

At the showdown plenum session of the NCRAC last month, what had started with the MacIver Report and ran a two-year gamut of compromise, proposal, counter-proposal, and back to compromise—all in the name of improvement of community relations activities—ended when a final "compromise" was voted upon and adopted by the "majority." ADL and AJCommittee were told to strip down and hack away large chunks of their programs and scuttle the results of nearly a half-century of growth.

•

UNDER THIS KNIFE of "compromise," the vast and expert operations of ADL and AJCommittee were to be given a sterilization treatment, a piece sliced out here, another there, with little flesh or sinew to remain. Translating the compromise plan's language into basic English: ADL's and AJC's fields were interpreted as investigation and counter-action of anti-Semitism and intercultural education, both agencies having done the most effective work in these areas over the years. But, the plan suggested, let's take away other pieces of the job they do and pass them out, to other agencies. Whether or not these newcomers have any detailed experience in organized community relations work was considered of no account.

Another portion of the "compromise" plan called for placing central control over community relations activities into the hands of NCRAC. This would have completed the power grab of the small group, which, under the lop-sided voting structure, would be able to overrule all opposition and declare itself the single voice of American Jewry. The situation would not be unlike that which exists in Georgia under the County Unit system, wherein a county of 3,000 casts the same number of electoral votes for governor as a county with a population of 400,000.

The NCRAC Plenum concluded with that body being transformed from an "advisory" council into a central authoritarian body with "auto-

Continued on page 8

Benjamin R. Epstein
ADL NATIONAL DIRECTOR

the ADL bulletin
212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.
Vol. 9, No. 8 Oct., 1952

Published monthly except July and August by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. 212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. Officers: Meier Steinbrink, national chairman; Barney Balaban, A. G. Ballenger, Phillip W. Haberman, A. C. Horn, Herbert H. Lehman, Charles W. Morris, Donald Oberdorfer, honorary vice-chairmen; Maurice Dannenbaum, Philip Klutznick, Edmund Waterman, vice-chairmen; Richard E. Gutstadt, executive vice-chairman; Jacob Alson, treasurer; Benjamin R. Epstein, national director. Editorial Board: N. C. Belth, chairman; Oscar Cohen, Benjamin R. Epstein, Arnold Forster, J. Harold Saks, Lester J. Waldman. Managing Editor: Bernard Simon. Art Director: Edward Goldman. Subscription rates: Fifty cents per year; $1.00 for 3 years. Re-entered as second class matter September 1, 1951, at Post Office, New York, N. Y. Subscribers should report change of address, giving old and new address. Printed in U.S.A.

HOW GOOD ARE CAR CARDS?

Can you "sell" ideas the same way you sell soap and chewing gum? This survey shows that in promoting human relations—it pays to advertise

FROM Nashville to Seattle, from New York to San Antonio, in almost 200 cities, passengers on buses, subways, and street cars for the past 10 years have been looking at car cards selling an important household product—unity and understanding among all Americans.

The cards, produced by the Institute for American Democracy with the cooperation of ADL, have featured many designs and quotable messages. Like these:

IF YOU HEAR ANYONE CONDEMN A FELLOW AMERICAN BECAUSE OF RACE OR RELIGION . . . TELL 'EM OFF!

WE FOUGHT TOGETHER . . . LET'S WORK TOGETHER.

TRUE AMERICANS ACCEPT PEOPLE ON THEIR INDIVIDUAL WORTH . . . DO YOU?

The IAD's cards have been glanced at, stared at, studied by millions of Americans; they have been endorsed by scores of groups—veterans, chambers of commerce, mayor's committees. They have been the subject of scores of editorial plaudits.

But the use of car cards for selling good human relations has, nevertheless, been a subject of much controversy. Do they pay? is the basic question.

SURE, YOU CAN sell soap and chewing gum with car cards, say the critics. But can you sell the complex concept of good intergroup relations the same way? Three questions, in particular, concerned the cards' producers and sponsors:

Is anybody really looking?
Does anybody remember the message?
Is the message persuasive?

Last month the questions were answered. A group of scientists — from ADL's department of research and evaluation and Columbia University's Bureau of Applied Social Research—took a long, hard look at the three designs illustrated on this page. Their testing ground was Springfield, Massachusetts, where the three cards were posted for a five month period in 50 of the 200 buses of the Springfield transit system. (Not more than one IAD card appeared in each bus.) Then a sampling was taken of bus riders; 401 of them were interviewed in their homes with the use of a carefully pre-tested questionnaire.

A mayor's unity committee volunteer posts IAD car card in a Seattle bus.

The interviewers showed 12 cards to each person. Three were IAD cards; three from the Advertising Council's public service series; three from national commercial advertisers; three from local merchants. The words on all cards were masked with meaningless hieroglyphics to see if readers could really recall them.

Is Anybody Looking? The answer was a resounding "yes." The Institute's car cards are read by twice the number of people that read furniture and hardware ads. The survey, released under the title, Impact of Public Service Advertising: A Controlled Study of Anti-Discrimination Advertising, showed that 31 per cent of the people interviewed read the IAD cards; 29 per cent viewed local cards. But display conditions of the cards varied considerably. Local cards were given a two to one advantage through a longer posting period and a larger display—leading to the conclusion that the Institutes' cards have twice the reader appeal.

Some of the passengers were found to be in a "blind-to-advertising" group —people who did not look at any of the nine non-IAD cards used. But almost half of these people had been "drawn into the audience of IAD's test cards."

Does Anybody Remember? Granted, the human relations message is more complex and difficult to retain. But 62

Continued on page 7

The Hidden BARBE

In cosmopolitan New York, for choose where he would live. Her

IN AUGUST, 1950, Sumner L. Kaplan, a young World War II veteran who had survived the death march on Bataan and somehow had managed to live through nearly four nightmarish years as a prisoner of the Japanese, went house-hunting.

His nerves overwrought, his health poor, he had been advised to live in a quiet community and avoid high-pressure work. He finally found a home he could afford in a new housing development in Needham, Massachusetts, half an hour's drive from his parents' home in Boston.

Kaplan called on the contractor, but when he described the house he wanted to buy, the latter hemmed and hawed.

"May I make a suggestion," he said. "Why don't you look somewhere else? I can find some other place for you—but not there."

"But it's just what I want," protested Kaplan, still unsuspecting. "What's wrong with Needham?"

The other shook his head. "I'm sorry, Mr. Kaplan, but I can't sell that to you. Now, don't get me wrong. . . . Some of my best friends are Jews. But I've sold all the other houses there to veterans with the understanding that I wouldn't sell to Jews." He paused, and brightened. "But there are lots of other places where they allow Jews. . . . Why don't you start looking around again?"

Kaplan spoke bitterly of the incident. "The Japs didn't care whether I was Jewish or not. When they made life hell for us, they didn't ask our religion—any of us. But here, in my own United States, they do care. This is how they show it."

In recent years it would not be difficult to find other Sumner Kaplans—or those belonging to different minority groups—who learned through shattering experience that their own country was in many parts forbidden to them. In New York City, for example—a vast center whose cosmopolitan population tends to make it less marked by racial and religious prejudice than many other cities—it is estimated that at least one in every 15 persons is not free to choose where he would live.

Housing, in the last analysis, really determines whether the community—the very basis of our American society—shall be democratic or undemocratic. The attempt to segregate citizens, to confine thousands of Americans behind the invisible barbed wire of ghettos, Harlems, "hunkey-towns," and little Italys, has dangerous sociological, psychological, and economic repercussions. If it creates a sense of exclusiveness in one group, it creates resentments and tensions in others. Wherever it exists, it is accompanied by a Pandora's box of evils: overcrowding and economic exploitation; inflated real estate values and deterioration of neighborhoods; inadequacy of such services as street maintenance and rubbish collection, and of fire and police protection and educational facilities—with a consequent rise in juvenile delinquency and crime.

THE KIND OF "understanding" between the Needham developer and those who purchased homes there represents only one of the many restrictive practices used to deny Americans the right to choose shelter. These practices take ingenious forms. Until recently the most popular was the restrictive covenant—a written agreement between landlords not to rent or sell to members of certain minority groups.

This covenant was actually a perversion of a type of legal agreement which originally came into use as a means of preventing residential land from being made useless—to prevent others from establishing tanneries, glue factories, steel mills, gambling houses and other industrial or commercial enterprises which would have an adverse effect on neighboring residential sections. When proponents of racial or religious segregation cast about for some legal instrument to use, they found that these restrictive covenants could be twisted to their purposes.

In May 1949, however, the United States Supreme Court in a historic decision ruled that such covenants could not be enforced in the courts because of the "equal protection" guarantee to all persons by the Fourteenth Amendment. This led the segregationists to turn to other devices to gain the same ends, and these ranged from attempts to inflame racial tensions to outright destruction of property.

MR. AND MRS. PRESTON WILSON, a pleasantly mannered couple, purchased an attractive home in Leimert Park, a residential section of Los Angeles. The house had been on the market for a long time.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were unquestionably decent, solid, and well-respected citi-

"A sense of exclusiveness in one group creates rese rare sight in "gentlemen's agreement" neighborhoods.

ED WIRE in Housing for example, one in every 15 persons is not free to Here's a condensed report from "The Troublemakers"

zens. But their skin was not white. Because of this, their white neighbors promptly founded Neighborly Endeavor, Inc., which belied its name by seeking ways and means to sue the original owner for "damages" because he had sold his house to Negroes. In the course of the agitation, Mrs. Wilson found a gaily wrapped gift on her doorstep one morning. When she removed the wrappings, she found a candy box; and inside this, she found a dead rat.

Presently, another member of the community agreed to sell his home to a Negro family. When he returned from a weekend in the country—and before he had actually turned his house over to the new tenants—he found that his neighbors had taken persuasive action. Someone had placed the nozzle of his garden hose through the mail drop in the front door and had turned on the water. The lower floor of the house was flooded and carpets, furniture and floors were ruined.

THIS SAME PATTERN of intimidation has been repeated time and again. In Birmingham, Alabama, when Negroes sought to move into districts inhabited exclusively by whites, the first reaction was the enactment of a zoning ordinance to exclude them. A Negro who had moved into the district enlisted the aid of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He succeeded in having the federal court invalidate the ordinance. Within 48 hours his home was bombed "by persons unknown." In less than a year there were nine unsolved racial bombings in Birmingham.

In Chicago there were more than 19 attacks on Negro residents over a five-month period. In five of these cases, either bombing or arson was resorted to. Similar violence has occurred in Detroit, Baltimore, Spokane, Atlanta, Miami, Dallas, and other cities.

eates resentments and tensions in others." Kids of all faiths and races swinging in a community playground is a hborhoods. Too often the denial of decent housing to minorities explodes into violence, as in Detroit, above.

Real estate interests maintain their restrictive policies in many ways. Sometimes they set up clubs or corporations to which the landowner deeds his land and, in return, is allowed to use it but cannot sell it without the consent of the club or corporation. Another scheme requires each landowner to give a prior option to purchase his land to the rest of the community. Thus, the community committee itself can buy the property and hold it for sale to an approved buyer.

Such schemes have not always proved too successful because the landowner is usually reluctant to give up full control of his property. But they are still in effect in many parts of the United States.

A basic belief among many property owners is that when minority groups move into their neighborhood real estate values drop and the neighborhood promptly becomes less desirable. This contention is often bolstered by owners of local businesses, local political bosses and leaders of local civic and religious groups who have a stake in maintaining the neighborhood status quo. They argue that any change in the business, political, or religious composition of the neighborhood will injure their interests. All these groups may join in efforts to keep the neighborhood as it is, and to encourage the creation of a self-contained, self-sufficient, ghetto-minded minority. They justify their attitude by arguing that the residents want it that way.

YEARS AGO THE argument might have had some validity. In the early 1900s, millions of European immigrants came to this country. They came to a strange land, ignorant of its language and its folkways; they were the prey of economic fears and insecurities. It was inevitable that they would herd together, settle near each other and form nationality islands in the big cities. At about the same time, many Negroes came up from the South. They, too, tended to find lodging near each other. Both groups, because of their low economic status, settled in the less expensive, older, downtown industrial areas.

But as they bettered their economic condition, they followed in the footsteps of other Americans. They sought to move to the more desirable suburbs. Many of the Europeans were able to do this. The Negroes were not so fortunate. They met an unwillingness to rent or sell homes to them; and if they found someone who did sell, they met definite hostility and worse. The great majority consequently remained in the poorer areas. Ironically, much of the hostility toward them came from the very European immigrants and first-generation Americans who had succeeded in entering the more fashionable areas and who feared their new-found social status would be endangered.

Another exclusionist pattern is segregation by law. The first compulsory housing segregation developed in San Francisco, a result of the influx of Chinese into the West Coast in response to labor needs. The city passed a statute limiting Chinese residence to a small area. The federal court struck this down. Nonetheless, through agreement among San Francisco landowners, the Chinese continued to be restricted to a small area even though their numbers increased. Presently, San Francisco's Chinatown became an extremely overcrowded district; soon it deteriorated into a slum.

Here was the sort of irony which has plagued housing experts through the decades: a kind of logic-in-reverse which is constantly invoked by those seeking to perpetuate segregation. For San Francisco's white population, which itself had brought about this slum condition, cited it as proof of the need for continued segregation of the Chinese. The Chinese lived in slums—never mind who forced the creation of those slums—hence, if allowed to live anywhere else, the Chinese would make slums there, too.

This argument was not only unfair, it was untrue. The mere entrance of any minority group into a neighborhood does not tend to depreciate property values or create slums. Where the market value of real estate drops when a minority family first moves in, it is solely from a hysterical fear which is in no way related to the true value of the real estate. If owners would not rush to sell as soon as one "undesirable" family moves in, the chain of cause and effect would not be established.

STUDIES HAVE shown that where Negro families, for example, move into white areas, they usually are compelled to pay exorbitant prices despite the apparent fall in real estate values. Panic—not any decrease in value—causes the flight from a neighborhood and the resultant decline in value. Frequently, mortgagors succumb to the same hysteria; they begin to press for payment or for a drastic reduction of the mortgage principal. Lending institutions add to the panic by refusing to finance the purchase of such property. Ultimately, land and buildings in the neighborhood are permitted to deteriorate: then, finally, there is a real drop in values.

What is significant is that this result never occurs unless the white owners succumb to panic, sell their houses to the first buyers at the first price offered them, and thus start an avalanche of descending prices.

The answer to "panic" is found in an inspiring story—with a moral of its own—of one American family in the city of Omaha. In a way, it symbolizes the greater battle that must be fought.

In the past ten years the Negro population of Omaha has nearly doubled. As a result, more and more Negroes are moving into "fringe" areas. One of these new residents was Woodrow Morgan, a World War II Air Force veteran who had been shot down over Germany and spent several months in a Nazi prisoner-of-war camp.

He purchased a home from a white owner in a white neighborhood. As soon as news of the sale became known, there was an ugly reaction. Neighbors protested. Morgan received threatening letters. Furious telephone calls were made to the seller, to the financing corporation, to the real estate agent who had negotiated the sale. The seller and his family hurriedly moved out, leaving the house vacant for the Morgans to move in.

Neighborhood hoodlums immediately took over. They threw stones through the windows and threatened bodily harm to Morgan and his family if they dared to move in.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD WAS predominantly Catholic. The story of what was taking place was told to Father John Markoe, a Jesuit leader and a highly respected member of the Creighton University faculty. Father Markoe decided he would meet the issue in his own way.

On the morning when the moving van was expected, Father Markoe and one of his white students sat on the porch of the vacant house. Several neighbors walked by. They asked the priest if he was looking for the old tenants.

"No, we're waiting for the new owners. We're helping them move in."

When the moving van arrived, a group of young Negro and white men helped carry in the furniture. The neighbors, organized for threatening action, stood by, astounded. Here was the clergy, whom they respected. Here was clear evidence that the entry into their community of this new neighbor, which they had looked upon as an evil, was indeed quite the opposite: here were whites and Negroes working together, and their own spiritual leader first among them.

The hostility toward the Morgans has long since melted away. Woodrow Morgan and his family have been accepted as neighbors—accepted on their merits as Americans.

ADL Award Honors Lehman

Herbert H. Lehman, United States Senator from New York, distinguished public servant, champion of human rights and one of the nation's outstanding Jewish personalities, is this year's winner of the ADL's annual America's Democratic Legacy Award.

The traditional silver medallion, presented each year by ADL to an American in recognition of "distinguished contributions toward the enrichment of America's democratic legacy," is to be accepted by Senator Lehman this month in Chicago at the concluding luncheon session of the League's 39th annual meeting.

The five-day meeting begins October 22 and continues through October 26.

Senator Lehman was a unanimous choice among this year's nominees for the coveted award. The selection was made by the executive committee of ADL's national commission "in tribute to the unexcelled record of a distinguished and devoted public servant who has exhibited courage and statesmanship as an articulate spokesman and leader for civil rights, in and out of the Congress."

First elected to public office in 1928 as lieutenant-governor of New York, the Senator was reelected to that post and then served 10 years as governor of the state. He has been a member of the Senate since 1949.

From 1943 through 1946 he was director of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, where he gave practical expression to his humanitarian impulses. He has been decorated by many foreign governments for his services to humanity.

Senator Lehman has been equally active in Jewish life. He was previously honored by ADL by being elected an honorary vice-chairman of the national commission.

A previous winner of the award was President Truman, who received it in 1949 in a White House ceremony. Last year's award was presented to Henry Ford II for the establishment of Ford Foundation as an impetus to greater research in human relations problems. Earlier winners include Charles E. Wilson for his work as chairman of the President's Committee on Civil Rights and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt for her service with UN Commission on Human Rights.

Senator Lehman's address accepting ADL's award will be broadcast on the CBS network, Sunday evening, October 26, at 11:15, Eastern Standard Time.

The business sessions of the annual meeting will be devoted to reviewing activities of the past year and establishing policy and programming for the next 12-month period. Commissioners will also participate in the annual election of officers of the League and members to its national commission.

Sessions for Saturday, October 25, will be held jointly with the Executive Committee of the American Jewish Committee and the National Council of the Joint Defense Appeal to discuss fund-raising and other financial policies.

How Good Are Car Cards?

Continued from page 3

per cent of the readers recalled the Institutes' message (remember, in testing, all the words were masked) while only 42 per cent recalled the message of local advertisers. In effect, 20 per cent more passengers knew what the IAD cards said.

Is the Message Persuasive? The scientists — being scientists — were cautious in their conclusions. They noted that the message of the IAD cards was remembered by almost equal percentages of people who were either prejudiced toward minority groups, straddlers on the subject, or else expressed tolerant and understanding points of view. Fifty-four per cent of the prejudiced persons remembered the message; 60 per cent of the straddlers and 68 per cent of the tolerant ones also remembered it.

Perhaps more important is the discovery that 37 per cent of the people interviewed had no previous awareness at all that discrimination existed.

In total, it is a fair estimate that IAD cards serve a broad instructional function: they inform or remind people that there is a problem of anti-minority discrimination, that they can do something about it themselves.

A sub-sample of 162 people was asked another question: "Some people think that these (IAD) cards are educational and some think they are propaganda. What do you think?"

The replies indicate what people think about IAD cards and how they respond to their message.

Propaganda 16%
(". . . pure and simple," "should leave well enough alone.")

Good propaganda 19%
("constructive propaganda" "used to educate.")

Educational 65%
("make you stop and think," "teach you something," "help you understand.")

THE REPORT SHOWS that one of every three prejudiced persons who were interviewed agrees "there is great need for IAD cards." Most of these persons—because they are prejudiced—were probably giving only lip service to the ideal of intergroup understanding.

But lip service to democracy—feeble a practice as it is—is a step in the right direction, away from bigoted rantings about Jews and Negroes. IAD cards do many things. But if their only function was to reinforce the American tradition of equality among men, and make it sociologically unfashionable to be prejudiced, then they would—and do—serve a purpose.

Why Penalize Our Naturalized Citizens?

Continued from page 1

laws which subject naturalized citizens to many penalties and disabilities from which native-born Americans remain free. And the process has now culminated in the McCarran-Walker Act, passed over President Truman's indignant veto. Though this piece of legislation is mainly an anti-immigration device, it has, for good measure, provisions that bluntly impress on the naturalized American a brand of second-class citizenship. Thus, the accident of birth takes precedence over the individual rights of man.

THE 1906 LAW—first effort by the government to distinguish between native and foreign-born citizens—had two primary features. The first provided for denaturalization if evidence later disclosed that the citizenship had been obtained through "fraud or illegality." The second feature decreed that if a naturalized citizen returned to the country of his origin and remained there for two years or more, his doing so created a presumption that he had obtained citizenship through fraud.

Upon the face of it, there appears to be no quarrel with the "fraud or illegality" provision. Certainly the prize of citizenship, to be honestly retained, must first be honestly gained. But the record shows that the interpretation of "illegality" came to mean much more than a deliberate intent to act fraudulently. It was a catch-all for technical and administrative errors committed innocently and unwittingly.

In one publicized case, for example, the government denaturalized and deported a one-time German national. On what grounds? It was proved that he had obtained his citizenship "illegally" by mistakenly making application four years and nine months after his entry—instead of waiting the full five years. Here was the case of an innocent error. It is reasonable to assume that the man, had he been aware that he was jeopardizing his citizenship, would have waited the additional three months. Also, how does one excuse the laxity of naturalization officials who had records and dates in front of them at the time and still found no fault with the man's application?

This fellow was a bad actor, a Bundist leader. His love of Hitler made him no friend to our way of life. But, then, so were many native-born Americans—whose citizenship could not be taken away. Why his? Why a double-standard? Guilt of subversion, hurting the war effort or of treason or disloyalty were punishable by existing laws. If—despite their Nazi leanings—no legal guilt could be established for native-born Bundists, it is no credit to democracy that a different set of standards was applied to naturalized ones.

For the essence of law is the establishment of principle and precedent. Such rulings as the one applied to the Bundist can—and have—taken their toll among decent, democratic-minded persons who fell victoms to hysteria and capricious judgment.

TAKE, FOR INSTANCE, the tragedy of an immigrant labor leader who served in those early days of the 1920s when unions were pilloried as creatures of the devil. An organizer then lived a precarious existence. This fellow was an alien — that is, until he had completed the residence requirements. Then he promptly and proudly obtained his citizenship.

Many years later, and with frightening swiftness, he was denaturalized on the ground that his original application was fraudulent. The fraud: He had written "None" in the space on the application asking if he had ever been arrested. The record later disclosed that STATEMENT required by the Act of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946 (Title 39, United States Code, Section 233) showing the ownership, management and circulation of THE ADL BULLETIN, published monthly at New York, N. Y., for October 1, 1952.

1. The names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor and business managers are: Publisher: Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Inc., 212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. Editor: N. C. Belth, 212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. Managing Editor: Bernard Simon, 212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. Business Manager: None.

2. The owner is: Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Inc., 212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. (a non-profit, non-stock corporation). Meier Steinbrink, national chairman; Maurice Dannenbaum, Philip Klutznick and Edmund Waterman, vice-chairmen; Richard E. Gutstadt, executive vice-chairman; Jacob Alson, treasurer; Benjamin R. Epstein, secretary; all of 212 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

3. The known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: None.

4. Paragraphs 2 and 3 include, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting; also the statements in the two paragraphs show the affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstandes and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner.

5. The average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the 12 months preceding the date shown above was: (This information is required from daily, weekly, semiweekly and triweekly newspapers only.)

N. C. BELTH,
Editor.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 26th day of September 1952.

ARTHUR H. WINSTON
Notary Public, State of New York No. 31-9707350.
Qualified in New York County.
Certs. filed with Bronx, Kings & Queens County Clerks, New York, Bronx, Kings & Queens County Registers.
Term Expires March 30, 1954.

he had been arrested, several times. "I misunderstood," he explained. "I thought they wanted to know if I'd been guilty of a crime. Yes, I was picked up by police. It happened during labor disputes. In those days cops weren't generally friendly to strikers.

"But when I was brought to court the judges dismissed the charge and bawled out the cops for arresting me. I was never convicted of anything—and that includes overtime parking."

Is it reasonable to accept this man's innocent omission as proof that he wilfully intended to commit fraud in obtaining citizenship? About as reasonable and justifiable as the case where citizenship was taken away from another man because one of the character witnesses who signed a statement that he knew the applicant for five years and testified to his good moral character—really knew him for only four years and seven months!

In 1940, our naturalization laws underwent a general revision—again widening the distinctions between the naturalized and the native-born. To the limitation imposed on a naturalized citizen returning to his country of origin was added the additional restriction that he could not stay abroad in any other foreign country for more than five years. And while heretofore such action was a presumption of fraud—that is, (and contrary to the American concept of justice) the man was guilty until he proved himself innocent—the revised law withdrew even this opportunity for a man to argue in his defense; his guilt and his loss of citizenship became automatic—no explanations, no excuses, no extenuating circumstances.

IT WAS THIS provision that brought Morris Mendersohn to grief, just as it did Louis Lapides in another celebrated case. Of Austrian birth and a naturalized American since 1928, Lapides also had gone to Palestine. He returned to the United States in July, 1947. Five days after stepping ashore he was ordered deported for having automatically lost his cherished citizenship. Lapides futiley argued his case on appeal up through the U. S. Supreme Court.

More recently, the two laws sponsored by Senator McCarran (the other is the Internal Security Act) have increased the disabilities suffered by a naturalized citizen—almost to the extent that the man with citizenship papers can best protest them by not enjoying the prerogatives of citizenship.

For example, a person who joins a "subversive organization" within five years of his naturalization is liable to loss of his citizenship. The catch is this: The rule could hold even if the victim is completely unaware that the organization is subversive!

A typical case would be Mr. Jones, naturalized citizen, who joins a neighborhood homeowners' or tenants' group. He has a sense of civic pride and feels it is his duty as a citizen to join in organized civic pursuits.

Without his being conscious of it, a few shrewd, glib Communist infiltrators also join and, as is their practice, quickly work their way into positions of prominence. Soon they're using the group as a Communist front. When he discovers that resolutions sponsored by his organization parallel the Communist propaganda line—resolutions that were never accepted by the great majority of the membership—Mr. Jones awakens to the fact that he is being victimized politically. For a while he tries fighting the infiltration, finally quits the group in disgust.

Would you consider Mr. Jones subversive? The McCarran law permits the charge to be made. Mr. Jones could be denaturalized and deported unless he could prove to a judge and jury that he always was and is strongly opposed to communism and that he is devoted to the principles of the Constitution and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States.

Here, again, Mr. Jones—unlike any native born American—is told that he is guilty until proved innocent.

So long as such restrictions persist, the democratic theory that all citizens are equal in the eyes of the law is being violated. And the naturalized citizen does not, as Justice Marshall once ruled he should, "stand on the footing of a native."

COMMENT:

Continued from page 2

cratic" powers over its member groups. The power-grab was complete.

All the issues stirred up during the long and often bitter controversy ultimately boiled down to a few basic questions: whether differences among Jews shall continue to flourish within a democratic framework, or whether they shall be repressed by dogma; whether an agency, like ADL for example, can be forced to denude its generic structure to such a degree as to destroy its effectiveness, disavow its successful history and forsake its responsibility to its members; and whether any Jewish group, such as ADL, shall subordinate itself to a central authority which can declare itself to be the one, omnipotent voice of American Jewry.

•

IN THE FINAL analysis, outweighing every consideration, is the fact that voting structures and political maneuverings are alien to the nature of Jewish communal life. The basis of Jewish communal organization is voluntary participation and complete freedom of action—where no group may say: "We are the Jewish community and we speak for all the people." Jewish community ways are the American ways of free and unstifled discussion, of dissent and of agreement, but never of coercion and control.

Throughout the long history of the Anti-Defamation League, this organization has served in the best interest of America and of American Jewish life. It shall continue to do so, bringing to bear the devotion and the resources of B'nai B'rith's 350,000 membership; the leadership and skills of ADL's boards of directors and staff; the experience and know-how of nearly a half-century's devoted effort in behalf of the American Jewish community. It shall continue to coordinate its work with, and seek the cooperation of, other communal groups, local and national, in all areas of mutual agreement.

In pursuing the common goal of broadening the horizons of democratic life, ADL believes, however, that it can best serve by being truly responsive and responsible to its large constituency.

the ADL bulletin

212 5th Ave., New York 10.
Entered as 2nd class matter.

Mr. Alexander F. Miller,
Anti-Defamation League,
11 Pryor St., S.W., Suite 305,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

MONTHLY REVIEW

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF ATLANTA

Volume XXXVII | Atlanta, Georgia, November 30, 1952 | Number 11

Foreign Trade Zone No. 2

International exchange of commodities and services is essential for a high standard of living in any country, a maxim which also applies to regions within a country. Here in the South, both agriculture and industry have always depended heavily on foreign markets as an outlet for their products and also upon foreign sources of raw materials necessary for the production of their goods. The diversification of agriculture and the rise of industry in the area, however, have gradually lessened that dependence.

International trade, nevertheless, is still important to the South. Estimates by the Department of Commerce indicate that roughly one-twelfth of the nation's exports in recent years originated in the Sixth District. This is about equal to the proportion of the nation's income originating in the District. About a third of the country's exports in 1951 were agricultural products, consisting mainly of cotton, tobacco, rice, citrus fruits, and cottonseed oil. Other important exports are textiles, lumber, paper, and chemicals—products of industries that employ almost 50 percent of the District's manufacturing workers.

Imports, likewise, are essential to many District enterprises. Manufacturers of transportation equipment, fabricated metal products, machinery, and primary metals—employers of 15 percent of the region's manufacturing workers—require foreign raw materials such as tin, chrome, manganese, bauxite, nickel, antimony, lac, and asbestos.

Paradoxically, while recognizing the value of foreign trade, the United States has carried on such trade within the framework of a protective tariff system. With but occasional lapses, the nation's tariff history reveals a steady rise in barriers to trade, climaxed by the Hawley-Smoot Tariff of 1930. In the ensuing worldwide depression, many nations threw up additional trade barriers, thereby impeding still further the flow of commerce. In 1934, attempting to reverse this trend, Congress passed the Reciprocal Trade Act and the Foreign Trade Zones Act. The former was renewed periodically and is still the law of the land. Other measures were taken in the 1940's in collaboration with the world community; among these were the establishment of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund.

What Is a Foreign Trade Zone?

The Foreign Trade Zones Act was passed in an attempt "to expedite and encourage foreign trade" without in any way altering the nation's policy with respect to foreign trade. Congressman Emanuel Celler, who sponsored the legislation, describes a zone as a "neutral, stockaded area where a shipper can put down his load, catch his breath, and decide what to do next." More specifically, a Foreign Trade Zone is a public utility located in "an isolated, enclosed, and policed area in or adjacent to a port of entry, without resident population, furnished with the necessary facilities for lading and unlading, for supplying fuel and ships' stores, for storing goods, and for reshipping them by land and water; an area within which goods may be landed, stored, mixed, blended, repacked, manufactured, and reshipped without payment of duties and without the intervention of customs officials. It is subject equally with adjacent regions to all the laws relating to public health, vessel inspection, postal service, labor conditions, immigration, and indeed everything except customs."

A survey made jointly in 1929 by the U. S. Corps of Engineers and the U. S. Shipping Board shows that zones have been instrumental in the development of commerce and merchant shipping in many countries, particularly in northern Europe, where there are many large population centers in close proximity and numerous political divisions. Such favorable conditions do not exist to the same degree in the United States. Since American seaports are principally terminals from which ships' cargoes are distributed directly to local or internal markets and at which outbound products are received for direct export, it was felt that American commerce would benefit from the development of consignment markets and trade centers for the accumulation and redistribution of goods, essentially of foreign origin. The small amount of United States transit, or re-export, trade had been handled through the cumbersome bonded-warehouse system.

The bonded-warehouse system dates from 1846, when Congress recognized the need for removing transshipment and re-export trade from the jurisdiction of general customs laws. At the warehouses, merchandise subject to tariff duties may be stored, processed, manipulated, and manufactured without payment of duties. The warehouses may be owned either privately or publicly.

Although this system provided a fillip to transit trade, it has been far from satisfactory because of many hampering regulations. Tariff-free goods cannot enter bonded warehouses; bonds equal to twice the duty levied must be posted; commodities may be stored for no more than three years; and merchandise in warehouses is constantly under the rigid supervision and control of the U. S. Customs Bureau.

These deficiencies were partly overcome by the Foreign Trade Zones Act, which was strongly opposed by warehousemen who saw the zones as possible competitors. Zones possess all the advantages of bonded warehouses but none of their liabilities. And actually, only three of the eight classes of bonded warehouses compete in any way with zones—those used exclusively for storage, those permitting processing, and those permitting certain types of manufacturing.

Opposition from the American Warehousemen's Association has today virtually disappeared. They urge, instead, that legislation extend to the warehouses privileges similar to those enjoyed by the zones. Most major associations interested in foreign trade have wholeheartedly endorsed the zones. Among these are the American Association of Port Authorities, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Foreign Trade Council, and the National Council of American Importers.

Six zones are now in operation in the United States. The first was opened in New York City in 1937. A decade later Zone No. 2 was established at New Orleans, followed in 1948 by the one at San Francisco, in 1949 by Nos. 4 and 5 at Los Angeles and Seattle, and in 1950 by Zone No. 6 at San Antonio. The last named zone, established at the municipal airport, is unique in that it is the only one located inland.

Why New Orleans?

Barely four miles upstream on the Mississippi from the foot of Canal Street in New Orleans is a twenty-acre area, fenced off and patrolled by U. S. Customs guards. Here is located Foreign Trade Zone No. 2. Authorization to apply for its charter was given by the Louisiana Legislature in 1934. Application was made to the Foreign Trade Zones Board in 1942, but the charter was not granted to the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans until September 1946. This five-man Dock Board began operating the Zone in 1947 as an agency of the state of Louisiana.

New Orleans' strategic location has made it a natural gateway to the vast mid-continent area which stretches as far west as Montana, north to Minnesota, and east to Ohio. This area encompasses about half the nation's population and manufacturing area, and nearly three-fourths of its agricultural area. The Port is the terminus for 8 trunk line railroads, 7 barge lines, 80 steamship lines, and 11 national and international airlines, as well as numerous truck lines. In addition, the Port is served by the inland waterway system, which includes the Intracoastal Canal extending from Texas to New Jersey. The Port's facilities include 12 miles of wharves and 35 miles of developed water frontage.

New Orleans enjoys favorable railroad freight rates because of river competition and because, years ago, Gulf ports were granted lower rates to compensate for disadvantages not existing at eastern and western ports, such as slow sailings and poor facilities.

The Dock Board, together with other leading citizens and businesses of the city, quickly embraced the idea of a foreign trade zone as one of a triumvirate of institutions created for the purpose of stimulating commerce. Two years before the Zone opened for business, the now-famous International House was organized as a nonprofit institution to promote trade, provide services to traders, and "shout the Port of New Orleans to the world." The third member of the triumvirate, the International Trade Mart, opened in 1948 as the nation's only merchandising center devoted to foreign trade. A close relationship among them is assured because some of the officers of the International House also serve on the Mart's Board of Directors, and all the officers and Board members work closely with the Dock Board and the Zone officials.

It is impossible to measure the effectiveness of these promotional efforts, but it can be noted that foreign trade through New Orleans rose in value from 279 million dollars in 1939 to 1.7 billion in 1951. In 1939, New Orleans ranked third among the nation's ports in the dollar value of foreign trade; today, it is the only port other than New York doing more than a billion dollars' worth of business a year.

The New Orleans Zone, located in the former Public Cotton Warehouse, is the country's second largest in area and in the volume of business transacted. It is well equipped with economical and highly efficient, modern machinery and facilities. Its 20 acres of operating and storage space include 75,800 square feet of water area with 1,008 lineal feet of concrete and steel-covered wharfage sufficient for berthing three vessels. Its double-decked pier shed, covering 158,042 square feet, is also constructed of concrete and steel and is equipped with a fire prevention sprinkler system. As a result, insurance rates on merchandise stored in the 62 compartments are nominal. The Zone contains 237,555 square feet of open ground area for storing commodities such as mahogany and certain metal products which are not injured by exposure to the elements. Office space is available to zone users, who are free to come and go any time.

Movable cranes and other mechanical devices facilitate loading and unloading of merchandise of all types and weights directly to or from carriers to either deck of the warehouse. Marginal railway tracks permit fast and efficient transfer of merchandise from one part of the Zone to another or to any of the transportation lines for subsequent shipment throughout the United States. Moreover, because of the Zone's proximity to downtown New Orleans, drayage costs are at a minimum. The Zone has the only vacuum fumigation plant on the Gulf coast and the only one located within the confines of a zone in the United States. These conveniences are further enhanced by a multitude of special services and by the ready co-operation of port officials and employees.

How Rapid Has the Development Been?

Business has risen steadily since the Zone's opening in 1947, despite many adversities arising from an unsettled international and domestic situation. The number of different types of commodities received increased from 30 in 1947 to almost 100 in 1951 as foreign traders became better acquainted with the Zone's functions and the advantages accruing to them from their use of its facilities. By 1952, the value of merchandise received had increased 70 percent over 1948, the first full year of operation, and tonnage handled increased 61 percent. By 1951, merchandise shipments had grown 115 percent in dollar value and 38 percent in physical volume above the respective 1948 levels.

Factors in the international situation, such as the rearmament race and the war in Korea, undoubtedly have limited the Zone's development. A strong worldwide demand for goods, together with the limited supply of available goods, meant a rapid transfer of merchandise from producer to consumer, so that the intermediate steps of storage and manipulation were frequently by-passed. A dollar shortage incident to general international monetary disequilibrium, and a factor of major importance even today, has also impeded activity at the Zone.

Stockpiling has so far been the leading activity at the Zone, according to reports showing the disposition of merchandise. For the period 1947-51, storage represented, on the average, two-thirds of the Zone business. The Zone has also served as a minor processing and transshipment center.

One of the outstanding services of a zone is that foreign merchandise may be consigned and held in storage indefinitely to await future sale in the United States market, depending on price changes or new quotas. This avoids tying up working capital in the payment of customs duties. Merchandise can be delivered within a matter of weeks from the Zone to any part of the United States instead of within several months as would be necessary if it had to be shipped from abroad after it was sold. The Zone thus acts as a branch office for foreign exporters and American importers.

Traders from several countries had planned to use the Zone extensively as an operating base from which to tap the vast United States market. After the outbreak of the Korean War, however, most such projects were either canceled or shelved indefinitely. British and French automobile producers, to take but one example, in setting up American distribution agencies, encouraged dealers to carry spare parts. The dealers, however, were reluctant to do so because of the considerable additional investment required. Foreign manufacturers resolved the difficulty by using the Zone as a warehouse from which delivery of parts could be made quickly throughout the United States.

Transshipments of merchandise have accounted for about a tenth of the Zone's activities, although they too have been somewhat erratic from year to year. In the case of transshipment, foreign merchandise is brought into the Zone and later reshipped to a foreign country. A small Mexican port having no direct steamer service to London, for example, might ship sisal to the New Orleans Zone to await transfer to a vessel serving London. Many European zones are quite dependent on transshipments destined for nearby ports and hinterlands. Although this type of trade has shown a relative decline since 1949, it is expected to increase because of the recent Boggs Amendment to the Foreign Trade Zones Act liberalizing zone regulations and permitting manufacturing.

Manipulation has represented about a fourth of the Zone's business. Manipulation includes labeling, sorting, sampling, remarking, weighing, grading, repacking, destroying unfit merchandise, fumigating, and corrugating. Often substandard goods are imported into the Zone, improved, and made acceptable for domestic consumption. This activity gradually increased in importance up to 1950, when it accounted for almost 50 percent of the Zone's business. In 1951, however, it dropped to a third of its 1950 level.

DISPOSITION OF CARGO AT ZONE NO. 2
(Based on Dollar Value)

Among the more interesting manipulations at the New Orleans Zone are the following: an American company corrugates English aluminum sheets at the Zone and exports the finished product largely to points throughout Latin America. Certain foreign commodities, such as tobacco, straw, cotton, seeds, and bulbs, must be fumigated before entry into the United States. The new vacuum fumigation plant has drawn much of this type of business to New Orleans which had previously gone elsewhere for entry. Before the establishment of the New Orleans Zone, Brazil nuts, after payment of customs duties, were sent to New York or Chicago for processing and redistribution. Today, nuts are shipped to the Zone. Here they are dried so that almost 25 percent of their arrival weight evaporates. Then the nuts are culled, graded, and wrapped in attractive American packaging and finally imported into the country. These operations result in a total saving in duty payment of nearly one-third. The Zone thus means "a better product at a lower price for the American consumer."

The most significant provisions of the Boggs Amendment are perhaps those permitting the manufacture and exhibition of merchandise within zones, which had been specifically forbidden before. Liberalization will undoubtedly alter the character of a zone's operations and of the type of trade carried on within it. To date, however, its influence has been negligible. Zone operators foresee a development in light or semi-manufacturing, but not in heavy manufacturing because of space limitations. An example of the type of manufacturing that might be carried on at a zone is the elimination of waste from rare mineral ores, such as tungsten.

Formal permanent exhibits will probably not become important at the Zone because of the proximity of the International Trade Mart that performs this function. Zone exhibits will be limited to occasional shows in specialized commodity lines. Officials of the Mart and Zone are currently contemplating a display of specific lines of consumer goods at the Zone in order to acquaint foreign exporters with the advantages of a zone as well as with modern American merchandising procedures.

Commodities and Countries

A wide variety of commodities flows into the Zone for storage, manipulation, and eventual importation into the United States or for transshipment to other countries. In 1951, merchandise was received from 30 countries. Coffee from Brazil, aluminum sheets and motor vehicles from the United Kingdom, and mahogany from Mexico have been among the leading commodities moving into the Zone. These four commodities accounted for around 50 percent of the total value of all merchandise received last year.

In the five-year period, over 31 million dollars, or three-fourths of the total value of merchandise received, was shipped from the Zone into the United States' domestic market. Among the leading commodities imported into the United States were mahogany, Brazil nuts, burlap, and coffee. Duties paid on this merchandise amounted to around $900,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952, about $215,000 was paid on duties. The New Orleans Zone ranks as one of the lowest in terms of duty paid because of the types of commodities handled.

Because of the Zone's ideal location as a transshipment center, various commodities have been shipped from it to thirty-one different countries. Among these, for the period 1947-51, are corrugated aluminum worth $1,134,242 going to Venezuela; sisal and binder twine worth $463,000 to France; and cotton valued at $182,143, canned meat at $1,101,162, and wax at $216,531, all to the United Kingdom. In 1951, as in every year except 1947, the United States was the leading country of destination. In that year, merchandise valued at $17,579,703 was imported. Venezuela was second in importance with $1,011,869; followed by Portuguese West Africa, $395,353; Germany, $361,870; and Japan, $360,125.

Income and Expenses

In 1952, for the first time, the New Orleans Zone earned a profit from its operations. This profit, amounting to $42,631, offset much of the loss experienced in the preceding five years. For the period 1947-51, the Zone earned a total of $603,677 and incurred expenses of $709,250, with a resulting net loss of $105,573, or an annual average loss of $21,115. When income and expenses for 1952 are included, however, the net loss for the six years amounts to only $62,942, or an annual average of $10,490. This compares favorably with the original anticipated average annual loss of $11,400 for the first eight years, as estimated by the Zone operators in their application for a charter.

On the whole, the operating results of the New Orleans Zone are the most satisfactory of any of the six zones in the United States, except New York. The other four zones have yet to show a profit and their losses have been quite sizable. The 1951 report of the Foreign Trade Zones Board to Congress observes that conditions at some zones may not be favorable for profitable operations.

The major source of the Zone's income has come from rentals of machinery and equipment and from leases of land and building space. In each year, income from this source has accounted for an increasingly large share of the total. For the five-year period, 38 percent of all income came from rentals. Income from dockage and wharfage charges, although averaging about a fourth of total revenue for those years, reveals a declining trend. Income from storage has remained fairly constant, accounting for 31 percent of all income.

Property rent accounts for the bulk of the Zone's expenses. This rent is levied by the Board of Commissioners of the Port for use of the property and is no different from rents chargeable to other users of the Port's facilities. Property rent has represented an average of over one-half of the Zone's cost of operation for the five years, although it has shown a steady but moderate decrease in relation to the total.

Wages and salaries of Zone employees, excluding customs personnel, have grown steadily, averaging about a tenth of all costs. In the future, these costs may well increase in importance. The Zone retains five permanent staff employees. In addition, it employs from 20 to 50 laborers each day, depending on the volume of merchandise moving through the Zone. Zone users, moreover, frequently hire their own labor forces. The Zone also affords opportunity for considerable indirect employment for businesses servicing it, such as local trucking concerns and railroads.

Wages and salaries of United States Customs employees, as distinguished from zone personnel, is the second largest cost component, accounting for almost 30 percent of the total in the five-year period. The 1934 Act specifically requires zone operators to bear the cost of customs personnel, who are responsible for protecting revenue payable to the United States. These include a deputy collector of customs with a permanent office at the Zone, a storekeeper, and about 14 guards, two of whom are on duty at all times. The Zone is thus policed to prevent smuggling and to enforce compliance with the law in regard to public health, immigration, fire, and so on.

Zone operators consider the customs expense a heavy and partially unnecessary burden. They contend that this cost should either be eliminated or else be reduced since identical service is provided without charge at other docks in the harbor. They further believe that the required police force is too large and that this cost could be substantially reduced. On the other hand, opponents reply, by law a zone is intended to be a substitute for a bonded warehouse, rather than an ordinary dock facility, and the provision requiring payment for customs service was intended to be in lieu of the cost of a bond and other special expenditures involved in the operation of a bonded warehouse.

In any event, these costs do compel operators to charge higher fees than would otherwise be the case and may hamper to some extent the purposes for which zones were established. Only by congressional action can the stipulation that the zones absorb such costs be removed. Both the Foreign Trade Zones Board and the Treasury Department now have the problem under advisement. Some progress has been made in this direction at two of the larger zones, in that the number of Customs guards and inspectors has been reduced.

By 1951, expenditures for advertising and promotion accounted for 3 percent of total costs. Most of the publicity is conducted abroad and is designed to stimulate imports. As zone operations become profitable, more funds undoubtedly will be diverted to promotion.

Export, import, and production controls necessitated by national defense and security requirements have interfered to some extent with the progress of all zones by handicapping transshipment and consignment trade. Controls have also obstructed use of the new privilege of manufacturing and have forced a curtailment of manipulating activities.

Officials in New Orleans forecast a continued improvement in the Zone's financial position, which will enable it to improve facilities and to become self-sustaining. They emphasize, however, that a foreign trade zone is only a means to an end, not an end in itself. It exists essentially to stimulate foreign commerce rather than to make a profit. Even if losses are incurred, shippers, freight forwarders, importers, transportation and insurance companies, and others benefit from business attracted to the Zone.

Probable Expansion of Bank Financing

Only rarely have foreign traders financed their operations at the Zone by direct loans from New Orleans banks. One banker stated that total loans by his bank to users of the Zone during the past six years have probably not exceeded $30,000; at other banks, the volume has been even less. Short-term credit has predominated, with such loans running from 60 to 120 days and at current market rates. All the loans have been for carrying merchandise in storage not subject to alteration.

Foreign exporters, or their agents, utilizing a zone for storing merchandise can obtain bank loans in the United States on negotiable warehouse receipts. In financing zone operations, the zone operator, as a disinterested third party, may issue negotiable warehouse receipts which are acceptable to banks. When merchandise is to be released from the Zone, the warehouse receipt is surrendered. In the event of partial release, the warehouse receipt is endorsed and it then continues valid for the balance of merchandise retained. When an individual or firm leases space in the Zone for storing and processing merchandise, however, the Zone does not issue a negotiable warehouse receipt because the goods in effect are not under zone custody but are still in the hands of the owner. In any case, before removing goods from the zone, customs and zone regulations must be cleared.

Bankers are generally optimistic about the possibility of growth at the zones. As this occurs, and particularly when manufacturing becomes important, they foresee an expansion in demand for bank credit.

How Does the Future Look?

Judging from the enthusiasm of foreign trade promoters in New Orleans, the future success of the Zone is practically assured, assuming, of course, a return to worldwide stability and a resumption of trade through normal commercial channels. Success, they believe, will also depend to a considerable degree on the development of industry within the Zone. Manipulation and manufacturing are expected to become the chief Zone functions. The Boggs Amendment, by providing for manufacturing and exhibition, should hasten the growth and strengthen zones by attracting additional transshipment and consignment trade to American shores. As a matter of fact, international traders at home and abroad have expressed widespread interest in transacting business through the zones, now that manufacturing is permissible.

Despite certain barriers to the development of zones in the United States, a number of communities are giving official attention to the possibility of establishing zones. Among these are the ports of Baltimore, Norfolk, and an inland community, Dallas, Texas.

The Defense Program, to date, has not had any appreciable influence on zone activity in the United States. For the fiscal year 1952, many strategic materials such as rubber and sisal were stockpiled by the Government in the New Orleans Zone on a temporary basis. If the Defense Program is stepped up, however, activity at certain zones may well be taken over, wholly or in part, by the Government, as was the case during World War II, when the New York Zone was largely in the hands of the Government.

Although it is probably still too soon to say just how much Foreign Trade Zones have affected the domestic economy, it is evident that they have encouraged the international exchange of goods and services. In this respect, they have contributed in some degree to a narrowing of the persistent dollar gap and to that extent have assisted in raising living standards.

Basil A. Wapensky

Sixth District Indexes

1947-49 = 100

DEPARTMENT STORE SALES AND STOCKS*

Place	Adjusted Oct. 1952	Adjusted Sept. 1952	Adjusted Oct. 1951	Unadjusted Oct. 1952	Unadjusted Sept. 1952	Unadjusted Oct. 1951
DISTRICT SALES	126p	121	112r	132p	126	117r
Atlanta[1]	129	113	114r	136	129	120r
Baton Rouge	108	108r	99	112	119r	102
Birmingham	119	127	108r	118	139	107
Chattanooga	137	121	123r	130	133	117
Jackson	117	101	105r	130	121	117
Jacksonville	122	110	107	134	108	124
Knoxville	122	105	117r	120	110	116
Macon	130	127	126r	137	144	132
Miami	127	131	110	121	108	104
Nashville	121	118	111r	124	123	113
New Orleans	123	113	110r	127	117	114
Tampa	118	119	108	124	113	114
DISTRICT STOCKS	133	130	130r	145	135	142r

[1]In order to permit publication of figures for this city, a special sample has been constructed which is not confined exclusively to department stores. Figures for any such non-department stores, however, are not used in computing the District Index.

GASOLINE TAX COLLECTIONS

Place	Adjusted Oct. 1952	Adjusted Sept. 1952	Adjusted Oct. 1951	Unadjusted Oct. 1952	Unadjusted Sept. 1952	Unadjusted Oct. 1951
TOTAL	147	141	134	144	143	132
Alabama	147	138	132	145	145	131
Florida	144	141	127	131	138	116
Georgia	144	141	129	143	147	128
Louisiana	132	140	141	136	147	145
Mississippi	169	144	153	172	148	156
Tennessee	151	136	129	150	138	129

COTTON CONSUMPTION*

Place	Oct. 1952	Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951
TOTAL	104	108	107
Unadjusted	108	110	111
Alabama	111	113	106
Georgia	106	109	115
Mississippi	125	129	105
Tennessee	102	105	104

ELECTRIC POWER PRODUCTION*

	Sept. 1952	Aug. 1952	Sept. 1951
SIX STATES	157	158	134
Hydro-generated	70	77	77
Fuel-generated	236	233	187

MANUFACTURING EMPLOYMENT

Place	Sept. 1952	Aug. 1952	Sept. 1951
TOTAL	109	109	106
Unadjusted	110	109	107
Alabama	106	104	104
Florida	113	112	107
Georgia	114	112	112
Louisiana	105	104	100
Mississippi	114	111	109
Tennessee	111	110	107

CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Place	Oct. 1952	Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951
DISTRICT	155	693r	158
Residential	134	160r	207
Other	172	1,097r	121
Alabama	78	95r	130
Florida	187	165	188
Georgia	90	140	154
Louisiana	261	109	152
Mississippi	66	126	74
Tennessee	133	2,737	128

CONSUMERS PRICE INDEX

Item	Oct. 1952	Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951
ALL ITEMS	197	197	196
Food	235	237	233
Clothing	208	208	218
Fuel, elec., and refrig.	145	144	144
Home furnishings	202	201	203
Misc.	176	176	173
Purchasing power of dollar	.51	.51	.51

ANNUAL RATE OF TURNOVER OF DEMAND DEPOSITS

	Oct. 1952	Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951
Unadjusted	21.9	23.1	23.0
Adjusted	21.1	22.9	22.1
Index	109.5	118.9	114.7

CRUDE PETROLEUM PRODUCTION IN COASTAL LOUISIANA AND MISSISSIPPI*

	Oct. 1952	Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951
Unadjusted	136	139r	132
Adjusted	137	140r	132

*Daily average basis
Adjusted for seasonal variation
1935-39 = 100 p Preliminary r Revised

The Influence of Spending on Sixth District Long-Term Personal Savings

Long-term personal savings in the Sixth District states reached a new high during 1952. Personal savers put about 594 million dollars more into their long-term savings during the first half of this year than they had at the end of 1951. This six-months' growth was greater than the amount added during any entire year since 1946.

The growth brought total estimated personal holdings of selected long-term savings to approximately 10.8 billion dollars on June 30 of this year. Of this total, 4.8 billion dollars consisted of life insurance equities, which represented a growth of 6 percent since December 1951. At all commercial banks, time deposits of about 1.9 billion dollars were 6 percent greater than six months previously, and savings and loan shares of 1.3 billion dollars had grown 13 percent. Personal holdings of savings bonds for the six states in the District were in the neighborhood of 2.5 billion dollars at midyear, a sum 2 percent larger than at the end of last year. Postal savings accounts amounted to approximately 200 million dollars. There are other forms of savings, but these data are the best available for measuring changes in total savings on a District basis.

Data on member bank time deposits and shares in savings and loan associations indicate a continued increase in total savings since June. Time deposits increased 7.4 percent between the first of the year and the end of October, and savings and loan shares rose 17.3 percent from the first of the year through September.

Personal savers in the District states have added to their holdings each year since 1938, the first year for which estimates are available. In 1951, for example, their long-term savings increased an estimated 480 million dollars. Additions were not always in the same type of long-term savings and the total gains varied from year to year.

SELECTED LONG-TERM PERSONAL SAVINGS

Sixth District States

Although total long-term personal savings have grown each year since 1938, the rate of growth has varied from year to year, and the form in which savings were made has changed.

Because payments are fixed by contract, life insurance equities have shown the most consistent increases. Savings bonds holdings grew most rapidly during the war years, after which time holdings declined slightly from year to year but rose again in 1952. Time deposits at commercial banks have been the most volatile form of long-term savings. The rate of increase has been far from uniform from year to year, and in 1948, holdings declined. Shares in savings and loan associations have risen each year, although the growth has been greater in some years than in others.

SELECTED LONG-TERM PERSONAL SAVINGS

State	Dec. 31 1951 All Types (Millions of Dollars)	PERCENT CHANGE FROM DECEMBER 31, 1950 All Types	Commercial Bank Time Deposits	Savings and Loan Shares	Life Insurance Equities	Postal Savings	Savings Bonds
Alabama	1,513	+5	+3	+21	+12	— 3	— 7
Florida	2,140	+8	+7	+28	+15	— 6	—15
Georgia	2,078	+6	—0	+20	+12	— 8	— 8
Louisiana	1,669	+3	+1	+13	+10	— 5	— 7
Mississippi	775	+3	+1	+18	+12	—11	— 6
Tennessee	1,982	+4	+0	+20	+11	—10	— 7
Six States	10,157	+5	+2	+21	+12	— 7	— 8

These savings figures are of interest to persons other than those in charge of the institutions administering them. To the student of Southern economic development, the five-fold expansion within fifteen years gives further evidence of Southern progress. He sees in it more capital funds available from local sources. To other persons, it may show potential purchasing power. But of particular interest at the present time is the help the figures may give in analyzing changes in District consumer saving and spending.

How Have Income Changes Affected Long-Term Savings?

Currently, consumer expenditures in this District, as measured by department store sales, are higher, compared with last year, than in most other sections of the country. Through November 22 this year they were 7 percent greater than in the corresponding period last year, whereas for the United States they were down slightly. In previous issues of this Review, it has been concluded that this greater-than-national strength of spending reflects a greater-than-national increase in income. Since additions to savings come out of income, does the high rate of income this year also explain the growth in these forms of long-term savings?

Changes in income alone do not satisfactorily explain the savings growth in the past. Since 1938, District income has increased every year except one, but savings have not increased in accordance with these gains in income. Income changes alone, according to the relationship determined by correlation techniques, explain only 3 percent of the variations in saving since 1938.

What Is the Relationship Between Spending and Saving?

Based on the experience since 1938, the rate of consumer spending in the Sixth District has been of greater importance than dollar changes in income in explaining the changes in savings. Consumer decisions about how much income to spend are directly related to consumer decisions about how much to save.

To determine completely the relationship between total spending and savings, it would be desirable to have data on total spending as well as on total savings. But since such information is not available on a District basis, department store sales have been used to measure spending in a general way.

This relationship is evident when the rate of saving for the years 1939 through 1951 is compared with the rate of spending. The spending rate for each year is represented by the ratio of department store sales to total income payments to individuals; the savings rate is indicated by the ratio of additions to long-term savings to total income in the Sixth District states. For example, on the basis of the average relationship between the two ratios for the period, when department store sales are 3.5 percent of total income payments, we would expect savings to be about 3.2 percent of total income. On the other hand, when sales are 2.5 percent of income, savings would be expected to amount to 8.2 percent.

Combining the rate of spending with the amount of income, therefore, provides a much better explanation for the yearly variations in savings than using the amount of income alone. When this relationship is measured by means of mul-

ADDITIONS TO LONG-TERM PERSONAL SAVINGS, 1939-52
Sixth District States

* FIRST SIX MONTHS OF 1952 AT ANNUAL RATE.

Variations in the amount added to savings each year since 1939 have been directly related to the amount of income received and inversely related to the rate of spending. The estimated figures shown in the chart are computed by a formula taking these factors into consideration. In the first six months of 1952, the actual additions to long-term savings conformed closely to the estimates based on the current level of income and spending rate.

Sixth District Statistics

CONDITION OF 27 MEMBER BANKS IN LEADING CITIES
(In Thousands of Dollars)

Item	Nov. 19 1952	Oct. 15 1952	Nov. 21 1951	Percent Change Nov. 19, 1952, from Oct. 15 1952	Nov. 21 1951
Loans and investments—Total	2,921,874	2,933,029	2,701,702	—0	+8
Loans—Net	1,196,292	1,155,370	1,070,604	+4	+12
Loans—Gross	1,216,905	1,175,875	1,089,294	+3	+12
Commercial, industrial, and agricultural loans	700,307	666,311	628,453	+5	+11
Loans to brokers and dealers in securities	12,886	12,468	13,832	+3	—7
Other loans for purchasing or carrying securities	39,923	41,186	34,188	—3	+17
Real estate loans	95,913	93,127	88,719	+3	+8
Loans to banks	4,477	3,449	6,091	+30	—26
Other loans	363,399	359,334	318,011	+1	+14
Investments—Total	1,725,082	1,777,659	1,631,098	—3	+6
Bills, certificates, and notes	757,856	800,503	757,839	—5	+0
U. S. bonds	700,095	713,615	639,397	—2	+9
Other securities	267,131	263,541	233,862	+1	+14
Reserve with F. R. Bank	534,435	523,650	530,019	+2	+1
Cash in vault	48,688	47,219	46,358	+3	+5
Balances with domestic banks	201,863	233,987	197,055	—14	+2
Demand deposits adjusted	2,080,469	2,106,163	2,010,106	—1	+4
Time deposits	559,548	555,922	533,780	+1	+5
U. S. Gov't deposits	109,888	143,938	81,961	—24	+34
Deposits of domestic banks	656,504	681,295	613,209	—4	+7
Borrowings	65,500	17,500	17,500	*	*

*Over 100 Percent.

DEBITS TO INDIVIDUAL BANK ACCOUNTS
(In Thousands of Dollars)

Place	Oct. 1952	Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951	Percent Change Oct. 1952 from Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951	Year-to-Date 10 Mos. 1952 from 1951
ALABAMA
Anniston	35,155	31,112	29,490	+13	+19	+7
Birmingham	445,503	437,640	473,450	+2	—6	+5
Dothan	23,506	21,635	20,237	+9	+16	+1
Gadsden	27,976	23,740	25,602	+18	+9	+3
Mobile	181,832	169,412	160,322	+7	+13	+5
Montgomery	114,626	100,184	115,617	+14	—1	+3
Tuscaloosa*	34,437	31,241	32,667	+10	+5	+1
FLORIDA
Jacksonville	397,361	386,468	386,871	+3	+3	+6
Miami	329,693	311,927	293,290	+6	+12	+9
Greater Miami*	498,566	470,520	456,932	+6	+9	+9
Orlando	84,168	75,006	66,589	+12	+26	+12
Pensacola	54,429	50,799	41,645	+7	+31	+17
St. Petersburg	85,226	78,426	72,429	+9	+18	+12
Tampa	166,540	160,638	151,263	+4	+10	+6
West Palm Beach*	52,186	49,283	49,873	+6	+5	+2
GEORGIA
Albany	37,251	34,896	34,964	+7	+7	+7
Atlanta	1,255,394	1,205,969	1,151,874	+4	+9	+7
Augusta	107,526	98,018	91,011	+10	+18	+15
Brunswick	11,734	11,888	13,360	—1	—12	—0
Columbus	86,361	80,971	79,453	+7	+9	+9
Elberton	6,208	5,965	5,550	+4	+12	+8
Gainesville*	27,710	28,732	25,497	—4	+9	+14
Griffin*	15,890	14,690	14,483	+8	+10	+5
Macon	86,245	85,394	86,103	+1	+0	+3
Newnan	13,749	11,346	15,993	+21	—14	—0
Rome*	33,614	28,718	28,262	+17	+19	+3
Savannah	118,106	118,165	112,727	—0	+5	+4
Valdosta	16,484	16,786	14,875	—2	+11	+11
LOUISIANA
Alexandria*	50,695	49,020	45,567	+3	+11	+11
Baton Rouge	134,231	122,959	119,126	+9	+13	+6
Lake Charles	57,904	52,477	50,094	+10	+16	+13
New Orleans	990,476	901,665	955,829	+10	+4	+8
MISSISSIPPI
Hattiesburg	21,813	22,014	19,539	—1	+12	+7
Jackson	188,692	185,089	179,833	+2	+5	+6
Meridian	38,843	37,194	34,881	+4	+11	+3
Vicksburg	39,796	34,942	40,011	+14	—1	+12
TENNESSEE
Chattanooga	201,604	183,607	190,869	+10	+6	+0
Knoxville	138,969	128,538	132,068	+8	+5	—6
Nashville	450,675	408,142	428,433	+10	+5	+6
SIXTH DISTRICT 32 Cities	5,948,076	5,593,012	5,593,398	+6	+6	+6
UNITED STATES 342 Cities	154,237,000	139,078,000	139,309,000	+11	+11	+7

*Not included in Sixth District totals.

tiple correlation, it is found that about 70 percent of the variations in savings during the period are accompanied by variations in these two factors. Only after variations in spending are taken into account is the influence of changes in income apparent. On this basis, estimated savings in certain years differ somewhat from the actual figures, but the relationship is close, as is indicated on the chart on page 91.

Probably some of the differences between actual and estimated figures can be explained by the imperfections of department store sale figures and additions to long-term savings as measures of total spending and saving, respectively. In addition, some of the differences can probably be best explained by the "abnormal" character of economic development in certain years. During the war years, for example, when savings were higher than the estimates indicated, sales at department stores were stimulated by shortages of many durable goods sold by other types of merchants. Total spending, therefore, did not bear as high a ratio to total income as was implied by department store sales. Or, in 1948, income dropped from 1947, which undoubtedly brought savings below the estimated level. Or, the repayment of consumer debts in 1951 may perhaps explain the smaller-than-expected additions to long-term savings.

Are Savings Unusually High?

Apparently the large addition to savings during the first half of 1952 in the District states conforms closely to the amount that would be expected from past experience, considering the rate of spending and the high level of income. According to past relationships, additions to personal long-term savings for the first half of this year would have amounted to around 442 million dollars. Preliminary estimates indicate an actual figure of 481 million.

Considering the level of income and spending, there seems to be nothing unusual about the large additions to long-term savings in the District states in 1952. They have resulted from high income, together with a rate of spending lower than in any other postwar year except 1951. The 1951 ratio of department store sales to income was equal to that for 1940. These ratios, in turn, are considerably higher than those for the war years from 1941 through 1945, but lower than those for the postwar years through 1950. The additions to long-term savings in 1952 are just about what would be expected on the basis of prewar relationships. A higher amount would have indicated a decline in the rate of spending to one approaching wartime conditions. A lower amount would imply a return to the high rate of consumer spending prevailing from 1945 through 1950.

CHARLES T. TAYLOR

Bank Annoucements

On November 17, the newly organized Glenwood National Bank, Decatur, Georgia, opened for business as a member of the Federal Reserve System. This bank began operations with a capital stock of $100,000 and surplus and undivided profits of $75,000. Its officers are T. D. Dunn, Jr., President; R. W. Hargrove, Executive Vice President and Cashier; C. A. Adair and J. W. Toney, Vice Presidents; and F. W. Brown, Assistant Cashier.

Sixth District Statistics

INSTALMENT CASH LOANS

Lender	No. of Lenders Reporting	Volume: Percent Change Oct. 1952 from Sept. 1952	Volume: Oct. 1951	Outstandings: Percent Change Oct. 1952 from Sept. 1952	Outstandings: Oct. 1951
Federal credit unions	36	+5	+32	+2	+28
State credit unions	18	+13	+27	+1	+29
Industrial banks	9	+12	—10	+1	+8
Industrial loan companies	9	+18	+15	—0	+4
Small loan companies	34	—3	+13	+1	+19
Commercial banks	32	+5	+23	+2	+22

RETAIL FURNITURE STORE OPERATIONS

Item	Number of Stores Reporting	Percent Change October 1952 from Sept. 1952	Oct. 1951
Total sales	143	+7	+6
Cash sales	126	+7	—15
Instalment and other credit sales	126	+7	+9
Accounts receivable, end of month	134	+2	+37
Collections during month	134	+4	+14
Inventories, end of month	98	+3	—3

WHOLESALE SALES AND INVENTORIES*

Type of Wholesaler	Sales: No. of Firms Reporting	Sales: Percent Change Oct. 1952 from Sept. 1952	Sales: Oct. 1951	Inventories: No. of Firms Reporting	Inventories: Percent Change Oct. 31, 1952, from Sept.30 1952	Inventories: Oct.31 1951
Automotive supplies	5	+2	—1	5	+1	—6
Electrical—Full-line	3	—12	—6	.	..	..
" Wiring supplies	6	+1	+5	6	+4	+6
" Appliances	8	+21	+28	7	—7	—24
Hardware	11	+10	+7	6	+2	—5
Industrial supplies	10	+4	+10	.	..	..
Jewelry	4	+17	+17	.	..	..
Lumber and bldg. mat'ls	7	+3	+13	5	—0	+5
Plumbing & heating supplies	4	+10	—20	3	+6	+18
Refrigeration equipment	6	—12	—8	6	—3	—1
Confectionery	5	+13	+16	.	..	..
Drugs and sundries	12	+5	+6	3	—7	—2
Dry goods	13	—1	+8	9	—10	—6
Groceries—Full-line	48	+3	+3	35	+8	—2
" Voluntary group	3	+15	+5	.	..	..
" Specialty lines	12	+11	+8	7	+12	—3
Tobacco products	17	—4	+8	12	+0	—2
Miscellaneous	13	—6	—1	13	—4	—15
Total	187	+4	+6	117	+1	—6

*Based on U. S. Department of Commerce Figures.

DEPARTMENT STORE SALES AND INVENTORIES*

Place	Sales: Percent Change Oct. 1952 from Sept. 1952	Sales: Oct. 1951	Sales: Yr.-to-Date 1952-1951	Inventories: Percent Change Oct. 31, 1952, from Sept. 30 1952	Inventories: Oct. 31 1951
ALABAMA	+3	+14	+9	+7	+11
Birmingham	—8	+10	+6	+10	+9
Mobile	+15	+26	+17	..	..
Montgomery	+13	+17	+8	..	..
FLORIDA	+26	+15	+8	+7	—2
Jacksonville	+34	+8	+7	+7	+8
Miami	+21	+16	+5	+4	—12
Orlando	+30	+12	+7	..	..
St. Petersburg	+30	+15	+10	+12	+7
Tampa	+18	+9	+10	..	..
GEORGIA	+11	+14	+8	+9	+3
Atlanta	+13	+13	+5	+10	—1
Augusta	+11	+32	+29	..	..
Columbus	—0	+8	+9	+6	+1
Macon	+3	+8	+7	+9	+3
Rome	+19	+20	+7	..	..
Savannah	+7	+9	+19	..	..
LOUISIANA	+14	+11	+10	+4	+5
Baton Rouge	+1	+10	+8	+8	+6
New Orleans	+17	+11	+10	+2	+4
MISSISSIPPI	+19	+11	+5	+7	+0
Jackson	+15	+8	+4	+7	+1
Meridian	+26	+19	+4	..	..
TENNESSEE	+11	+8	+3	+9	—1
Bristol	+15	+9	—2	+9	—3
Bristol-Kingsport-Johnson City	+13	+8	—3	..	..
Chattanooga	+6	+12	+6	..	..
Knoxville	+18	+4	—2	+10	—0
Nashville	+8	+9	+9	+10	+8
DISTRICT	+14	+12	+12	+7	+2

*Includes reports from 122 stores throughout the Sixth Federal Reserve District.

In order to permit publication of figures for this city, a special sample has been constructed which is not confined exclusively to department stores. Figures for any such non-department stores, however, are not used in computing the District percentage changes.

NCRAC legal and legislative information BULLETIN

No. 18 December 10, 1953

NATIONAL COMMUNITY RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL
9 East 38th Street • New York 16, N. Y.

New Omnibus Immigration and Nationality Bills in Senate and House

IN THE CLOSING days of the first session of the 83rd Congress, a completely rewritten omnibus immigration and nationality bill was introduced by Senator Herbert H. Lehman and seven other Senators and twenty-four Representatives. This bill (S. 2585) would revise extensively the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 (P.L. 414, 82nd Cong., known as the McCarran-Walter law). Introduction of this bill marked the culmination of eight months of intensive drafting work by teams of immigration experts and outstanding law professors.

The drafters made wide use of the testimony given before the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization (the Perlman Commission) and incorporated many of the recommendations that the Commission had submitted to the President.[1] The bill embodies the result of years of research and experience of social and political scientists, foreign policy experts, students of our immigration and naturalization policies and the public and private governmental agencies involved in the day-to-day operations of our immigration law.

S. 2585, in its 211 pages, would reconstitute our entire immigration and naturalization code. It would eliminate all racial and national bias; establish the right of appeal from administrative decisions and the removal of distinctions between native-born and naturalized American citizens; replace the wasteful and discriminating National Origins Quota System by a non-discriminating Unified Quota System under which the number of immigrants actually admitted each year would be substantially increased; and would create a single new agency, the Immigration and Naturalization Commission, in whose jurisdiction all immigration and naturalization functions would be consolidated.

The immigration and naturalization bill analyzed in this BULLETIN has a total of thirty-two sponsors in the Senate and House of Representatives. In the Senate, the measure is known as S. 2585. Its sponsors are Senators Lehman (D.-Lib., N. Y.), Humphrey (D., Minn.), Morse (Ind., Ore.), Pastore (D., R. I.), Green (D., R. I.), Murray (D., Mont.), Kennedy (D., Mass.) and Magnusson (D., Wash.). Under House procedure, each sponsor introduces his own bill. Accordingly, twenty-four identical versions of S. 2585 are in the legislative hopper of the lower chamber, each bearing its own designated number. The identical House bills, with their numbers and sponsors (all Democrats), are as follows:

H.R. 6820—Celler (N. Y.)	H.R. 6828—Holtzman (N. Y.)	H.R. 6836—O'Brien (N. Y.)
6821—Addonizio (N. J.)	6829—Howell (N. J.)	6837—O'Hara (Ill.)
6822—Chudoff (Pa.)	6830—Kelly (N. Y.)	6838—Rabaut (Mich.)
6823—Delaney (N. Y.)	6831—Keogh (N. Y.)	6839—Rodino (N. J.)
6824—Dollinger (N. Y.	6832—Klein (N. Y.)	6840—Rooney (N. Y.)
6825—Eberharter (Pa.)	6833—Lane (Mass.)	6841—Roosevelt (N. Y.)
6826—Fine (N. Y.)	6834—Machrowicz (Mich.)	6842—Sieminski (N. J.)
6827—Heller (N. Y.)	6835—Multer (N. Y.)	6843—Yorty (Calif.)

EASING THE IMMIGRATION BARRIER

More Immigrants

S. 2585 would establish a ceiling on immigrants that could actually be met; more than 250,000 immigrants could be admitted in any year when there was sufficient demand. This contrasts with the present law, under which actual annual quota immigration is kept well below 100,000.

Under existing law, the ceiling on immigration from the Eastern Hemisphere (Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia) is theoretically placed at 154,657. In fact, far less than this number can come in because most of the available visas are wasted under the National Origins Quota System. About 107,000 visas, or two-thirds of the total, are reserved for persons born in England, Ireland and Germany. Most of these are unused because of the small number of immigrants from these countries and because a visa not used by one country can not be transferred to another. The rest of the total is distributed among the many remaining countries. Italy's quota, for example, is 5,645; Poland's, 6,488; Yugoslavia's, 933; Estonia's, 115.

Even these meager quotas are not fully available now because most of them have been "mortgaged" under the Displaced Persons Act of 1948. Every person who came here under that law was charged against his country's future quotas up to fifty percent for each year. As examples: half of Latvia's annual quota of 235 is mortgaged until the year 2274 and half of Estonia's quota of 115 is mortgaged until 2146.

In the twenty-one years between 1929, when the quota system began operating, and 1950, when a Senate committee studied its impact, only twenty-seven percent of the available quotas were used. Although over 3,000,000 immigrants were admissible in theory, only 836,085 actually entered. Since there were also many departures during this period, the net gain to our population through immigration was only 22,000 per year. The Senate Judiciary Committee has well stated that, as a restrictive device, the National Origins Quota System "served its purpose well."

1. See Legal and Legislative Information Bulletin No. 16, March 10, 1953, "Report of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization." That Bulletin contained much information on the terms and effects of the existing law that has been omitted or condensed here to save space.

The present ceiling represents one-sixth of one percent of the 1920 census, excluding Negroes and Indians. S. 2585 would place the ceiling at one-sixth of one percent of the latest census, thus bringing it up to date, and would include the entire population in the census count, thus eliminating the racial slur upon Negroes and Indians in the present law. Using the 1950 census, this would mean a ceiling of 251,162. Outstanding population experts agree that this figure is fully compatible with our needs and absorptive capacity. In later years the ceiling would be based on then current census figures.

Under the present law, persons born in the Western Hemisphere, except those of Asian ancestry, may come in without regard to the quota system. This has been traditionally regarded as an aspect of our good neighbor policy toward other Western Hemisphere countries. In practice, however, immigration from Latin-America has been sharply curbed by our consular officials, who have simply refused to grant more than a limited number of visas to Latin-Americans. This practice has no legal justification and is plainly discriminatory.

S. 2585 would place Western Hemisphere countries on an equal basis with the rest of the world under its Unified Quota System. There is some basis for criticism of this aspect of the bill. The Perlman Commission recommended adhering to the good neighbor policy by retaining unlimited immigration from Western Hemisphere countries. The policy could be made effective by putting an end to the practice of allowing visa-granting officials to place arbitrary curbs on such immigration.

National Origins Quota System Abolished

S. 2585 would abolish outright the National Origins Quota System. A would-be immigrant's right to enter would no longer be based on his place of birth or his ancestry. Along with the quotas, the mortgages placed upon them by the Displaced Persons Act would go into the discard. This would give our immigration system a fresh start. Also discarded with the quota system would be the McCarran-Walter curb on the immigration of Negroes from colonies in the West Indies.

Perhaps most important, the Unified Quota System would end the discrimination against persons of Asian ancestry perpetuated by the McCarran-Walter Act. At present, for example, all persons of Chinese ancestry, wherever they were born, must qualify under the tiny quota of 105 officially designated as "Chinese (racial)." Those of mixed ancestry must also come within these small quotas if half or more of their ancestry is Asian. These provisions are clearly racist. Under S. 2585, ancestry would be entirely irrelevant.

The Unified Quota System proposed in S. 2585 would establish a completely non-discriminatory plan of admissions, flexible enough to meet the changing needs of our country. It would assure a regulated and controlled flow of immigration from those areas of the world that look to the United States as a haven and that are capable of contributing useful citizenship material. The bill would divide the total annual quota into five groups—four giving preference to certain favored kinds of immigration, the fifth insuring the admission of at least a certain amount of general immigration.

The five quota groups are:

1. Family Unification. For immigrants whose admission would result in uniting families by bringing in close relatives of United States citizens and alien residents. Not less than 25% or more than 35%, or 62,000 to 87,000 visas each year.

2. Occupational. For persons of outstanding technical and professional skills whose services are urgently needed here. Not less than 5% or more than 10%, or 12,000 to 25,000 visas each year.

3. Asylum. For victims of racial, religious and political persecution who need haven and asylum in the United States. Not less than 15% or more than 25%, or 37,000 to 62,000 visas each year.

4. National Interest. For aliens whose coming will serve American foreign policy requirements by helping to solve economic and other problems of friendly nations. Not less than 20% or more than 25%, or 50,000 to 62,000 visas each year.

5. Newcomer Group. For persons who fail to qualify under the four preference groups, but who are nevertheless desirable immigrants of good character. The Newcomer Group is allocated a minimum percentage of 20% of the total, plus the balance of the total not allocated to the four Preference Groups. This represents 50,000 to 82,000 visas each year.

Each year, the Immigration and Naturalization Commission established by the bill (described below, p. 6), would allocate the total of 250,000 among these five groups, within the limits specified and subject to the President's approval. At the end of the year, any visas within a group that remain unused would be "pooled" and added to the regular allotment for the following year. The new total thus obtained would be reallocated among the five groups. This pooling of visas would end the present waste of unused quotas.

The bill would permit the President to reduce, reallocate, postpone or halt altogether the granting of visas to any or all of the various preference groups, regardless of the percentage limitations contained in the bill, but only in case of a national emergency. Under the present law, the President has similar powers, not limited to emergency periods.

Allotment by Countries

Priority in the issuance of visas within the Newcomer Group would be determined under S. 2585 on a "first-come, first-served" basis; qualified, however, by these provisions designed to assure fair treatment of the various countries and to guard against selection of a disproportionate number of immigrants from one or a few countries:

(1) At least one-half of one percent of the Newcomer Group visas would be assigned to every nation with a population of 200,000 or more. The term "nation" would include colonies and other dependencies, all of which would have the same status. The Commission could group individual "nations" into a single quota area. This provision would assure a reasonable distribution of visas throughout the world by assuring at least 250 visas to each nation with a population of at least 200,000.

(2) No more than ten percent of the Newcomer Group visas would be allocated to immigrants from any one nation. Thus, if the minimum of 50,000 visas were allocated to the Newcomer Group, no more than 5,000 could go to any one country. The actual number of immigrants from any one country could, however, be larger. As already noted, as many as 82,000 of the 250,000 visas allotted each year could be assigned to the Newcomer Group and this number could be increased by visas "pooled" from previous years. Moreover, a substantial number of immigrants from any one country might qualify under the four preference groups.

The basis for determining what country an immigrant comes from would be his citizenship or residence and not, as under the present law, his place of birth.

Special Provisions

Under S. 2585, certain groups of immigrants would be admitted entirely outside the quota ceiling of 250,000. "Quota-free" status now available to children and spouses of American citizens would be extended to the citizens' parents. Children adopted abroad by American citizens would be allowed to enter as though they were natural born children of those citizens. Finally, professors coming to this country to teach at colleges and universities would be restored to the non-quota status that they enjoyed prior to the McCarran-Walter Act.

The humanitarian features of S. 2585 are revealed in several additional provisions that respond to the many appeals of private and public agencies, as well as thousands of individual citizens, for legislation permitting alien orphans to be admitted to the United States for adoption. There has also been a need to do something about the illegitimate children of American soldiers whose mothers cannot adequately care for them but who could be adopted by childless couples in this country.

The bill provides for the annual entry of as many as 5,000 children under ten years of age (1) who have been orphaned either by the death or disappearance of both parents or (2) who have been abandoned by fathers believed to be members of the United States Armed Forces, where the mother cannot care for the child and agrees to release him for immigration and adoption; provided that they come here either to be adopted by specific American citizens or alien residents, or under the sponsorship of an approved agency that would initiate adoption proceedings when the child arrives.

The allotment for these children would be deducted from the allotments to the Asylum and National Interest Preference Groups, up to 2,500 for each. This, of course, is a compromise; humanitarian purposes would be better served by admitting these children quota-free or by establishing a separate provision for them outside the provisions for other groups.

Another significantly humanitarian and equally practical feature of the new bill is its emphasis on providing a haven for victims of political, racial and religious persecution. This is accomplished primarily by establishing a quota preference for the Asylum Group. Additional emphasis is supplied by a novel provision that gives the Secretary of State authority to admit temporarily "executive, legislative or judicial officials or leaders of national opinion of any foreign state who seek political asylum in the United States." Thus, officials of foreign governments who escape from behind the Iron Curtain or who are forced to flee from a Latin-American country because of an armed uprising could be granted temporary haven, even where they did not satisfy the usual requirements for immigrants. If the Secretary of State found that the entry of such a person was "in the interest of the United States," he could waive all the usual limitations, including the bans on criminals and subversives and the requirement for a visa.

NATIONAL SECURITY

S. 2585 embodies a carefully considered approach to the problem of national security. It contains provisions that would effectively prevent the admission of immigrants who support subversive and totalitarian principles and permit the deportation of aliens in this country who advocate them. At the same time, it respects our democratic traditions by eliminating existing provisions in the McCarran-Walter Act that penalize every alien who has ever associated with any questionable organization or who has engaged at any time in political activity regarded as suspect.

Definition of Subversive Activity

The bill would exclude from the United States and would permit deportation of and deny naturalization to aliens who have "advocated or taught subversive doctrine" or who have ever "been members of or affiliated with any organization" that has done so. (Five-year "forgiveness" features are described below.) "Subversive doctrine" is defined as including espousal of overthrow of the United States government by force or violence, the establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship in the United States and the extermination or persecution of persons because of race, religion or ancestry. A "totalitarian dictatorship" is defined as an unrepresentative system of government in which party and government are practically indistinguishable and in which opposition to either is forcibly suppressed.

These provisions of the bill would create clear standards to govern decisions by visa-issuing officials. They would replace provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act that provide for the exclusion of aliens on the basis of possibly arbitrary decisions by consuls regarding the "subversiveness" of either an individual or an organization. An immigrant can now be kept out of the country if the consul feels that he "probably" would engage in detrimental activity or that he is a "security risk." No standards are established by which the consul must make these determinations.

It should be noted that one of the glaring faults of the McCarran-Walter Act is that preferential treatment is given to ex-Nazis and ex-Fascists. They are considered admissible although Communists and ex-Communists are not. S. 2585 ends this unrealistic distinction. Members of the National Socialist (Nazi) Party of Germany, or any of its paramilitary affiliates and their successors advocating or teaching subversive doctrines, are specifically excluded from admission to the United States. In addition, the new bill's provision barring admission to members of organizations advocating the persecution of persons because of their race, religion or ancestry would effectively exclude members of most other Fascist parties. This provision, however, might be interpreted as not barring members of such groups as Franco's Falangists.

The barriers to subversives would operate, under the bill, only if membership was voluntary, and the member must have been over the age of sixteen at the time and have had knowledge of the organization's subversive objectives. Those who were forced to join an organization by law or for the purpose of obtaining employment, education, food or other essentials of life would not be considered "members." Nor would membership include those whose affiliation was incidental or perfunctory.

The new bill would eliminate a provision of the McCarran-Walter Act that labels a mere contribution as an act of affiliation where the contributor had no knowledge of the organization's subversive character. It would also eliminate the ridiculous provision that one who has "knowingly" circulated subversive literature must be barred from admission; this provision excludes the owner of a book store who has "knowingly" sold a copy of "Das Kapital."

"Forgiveness" of Past Membership

A "forgiveness" feature provides that aliens who ceased their activities five years prior to their application for a visa, and whose admission would not be detrimental to national security may be admitted. Similarly any "subversive" activity of an alien is forgiven that took place more than five years before the issuance of a warrant of arrest for his deportation. Finally, naturalization would not be denied for "subversive" activity that occurred more than five years before the application for naturalization. These provisions represent an improvement over the McCarran-Walter Act, which provides no forgiveness whatsoever for the resident alien and requires an alien seeking admission to show that he has "actively opposed" his former affiliation for five years prior to his application.

The new bill would also eliminate present provisions that punish persons who belonged at one time to organizations that later were determined to be "subversive." This would prevent deportation of a person for conduct that, at the time, he had no reason to believe would subject him to the severe penalty of banishment.

The problem of security is also affected by provisions applying generally to the exclusion and deportation processes. S. 2585 would lessen the harshness of the present law as it applies to aliens generally; it would end the excesses of the present law in dealing with persons only remotely associated with Communist activity and who pose no threat to our national security. For example, by establishing a reasonable statute of limitations, it would prevent deportation of persons whose only offense was brief membership in the Communist Party twenty years ago. By authorizing waiver of the usual rules as to exclusion in the case of temporary visitors, it would halt the ludicrous exclusion of distinguished visitors who have been invited to attend meetings of learned societies.

EXCLUSION

The present law contains harsh and rigid provisions dealing with exclusion and deportation. Many sections, including some with no bearing on the problem of national security, open the door wide to administrative abuses. Others erect rigid bars against the admission of immigrants that work unnecessary hardships on them and on their American relatives and friends.

S. 2585 would establish objective standards for administrative action wherever possible. Thus, it would repeal provisions of the existing law that, for example, permit a consul or the Attorney General to exclude an alien if, in his "opinion," he is "likely" to become a public charge or if there is "reason to believe" that he seeks to enter to engage in activities prejudicial to the interests of the United States.

Prior Convictions

Before the McCarran-Walter Act, an alien was excluded if he had been convicted of a crime involving "moral turpitude." The McCarran-Walter Act retained this provision and added, as grounds for exclusion, conviction of two or more crimes whether or not involving "moral turpitude." S. 2585 would eliminate the latter provision, which is objectionable because it prevents us from evaluating what other countries regard as "crimes." It is well recognized that certain acts severely punishable as "crimes" in Communist and Fascist countries are not regarded as criminal or reprehensible here. The existing McCarran Act provision makes foreign governments the arbiters of admission under our law, denies the possibility of rehabilitation, permits exclusion for minor infractions of the law, and disregards possible judicial recommendations of leniency. A baker on the French liner Liberte, for example, was refused temporary admission to the United States because he had stolen bread from Nazi authorities during the German occupation.

Temporary Departures

S. 2585 gives important relief to aliens who depart temporarily from the United States after having established lawful permanent residence in this country. Rules respecting the exclusion of aliens now are applied each time an alien re-enters. Under S. 2585 a re-entry permit issued to an alien by an authorized federal official prior to his temporary departure would insure his right to return to the United States.

This would rectify the present law, under which any alien leaving the country must qualify for readmission like one who knocks at our gates for the first time. Regardless of length of residence, close family associations and any contributions he may have made to our country, he may be excluded (and without a hearing) even for conditions that did not exist when he was originally admitted. An alien who contracts tuberculosis in the United States years after he came to live here would be refused readmission if he dared to visit abroad.

Ignatz Mezei, who visited Europe after twenty-five years of apparently blameless residence in Buffalo, was denied readmission when he returned. He could not even obtain a statement of charges against him. Because no other country would accept him after the United States had rejected him, he has in effect been condemned to life imprisonment on Ellis Island, where he already has spent more than two years. His only hope is that some day he can persuade some country to accept him. More recently, Dr. German Arciniegas, a distinguished Latin-American educator and Columbia University professor, was refused readmission to the United States by immigration authorities upon his return from a visit to France. Although he was subsequently released, his detention caused widespread criticism, embarrassment and ill-will.

Temporary Visitors

S. 2585 would reasonably distinguish between those who seek to enter the United States permanently and those intending only a temporary visit—for business or pleasure, to lecture, to participate in a scientific conference, or for some similar purpose. There is no good reason why the privilege of a temporary visit to the United States should be denied to persons whose political thinking deviates, even if in a marked respect, from our own political concepts. Were such a criterion applied on a reciprocal basis by other countries, many American citizens would be refused admission to those countries whose basic political concepts differ from our own.

Under the present law, many distinguished visitors, including famous writers, scholars, musicians and scientists, have been denied admission. Others, whose presence in this country is highly desirable, have suffered petty humiliations and time-consuming investigations. One result of this policy is that eminent personages, refusing to come here, accuse us of erecting our own "iron curtain." International organizations have cancelled conferences formerly held in the United States because of the difficulties their members find in attending them.

S. 2585 would authorize that the usual grounds for exclusion be waived in the case of visitors, students, businessmen and the like. These waivers would be made on conditions determined by the Immigration and Naturalization Commission created by S. 2585. (See page 6 for the functions and responsibilities of the Commission.) As a precaution against abuse or error, all waivers of over thirty days duration would be reported to Congress.

Alien Sailors

Under S. 2585, an alien crewman could still be prevented from landing for any cause that would make him ineligible to receive a visa but the Commission would be given power to waive any such ground if it determined that the health and safety of the United States would not be endangered thereby. This would end the situation, created by the McCarran-Walter Act, that has filled the press of the major maritime countries with reports of unfairness toward their citizens who wish to land temporarily in the United States during the stay of their ships or while awaiting assignment to other ships.

S. 2585 would also give alien seamen a limited right of appeal if they were denied the right to land and would modify the present arbitrary twenty-nine day limit on temporary landing permits. At the same time, the bill would retain all necessary safeguards against the landing of diseased alien crewmen and would prevent alien crewmen from illegally remaining in this country by "jumping ship" or by being discharged or paid off in the United States without permission of the Commission.

DEPORTATION

Deportation is the gravest and severest action that our government can take against aliens. Many believe that it should be employed only against aliens who entered the United States through fraud or otherwise illegally. S. 2585 does not go so far as this, but it would make a number of humanitarian changes in the present law. For example, no alien who has been admitted for permanent residence here before he was fourteen years old could be deported. No alien could be deported because of conviction of a crime if he has been pardoned, if the court recommends that deportation is not warranted or if the alien was under sixteen when the crime was committed. The Commission would be given authority to waive deportation for a single crime where serious hardship would occur and where the continued residence of the alien in this country would not be undesirable.

Statute of Limitations

Practically every criminal law includes a "statute of limitations." If prosecutions are not brought within a limited period after a crime has been committed, they can never be brought at all. This is to prevent trials long after an event has occurred, at a time when a person cannot adequately defend himself because witnesses may have died or disappeared or evidence has been lost. It is also to prevent the threat of punishment being held indefinitely over a person's head. The McCarran-Walter Act swept away the statute of limitations that had stood for years in our laws regarding deportation. Deportation proceedings can now reach relentlessly into the past.

S. 2585 would restore the statute of limitations. No person once allowed to enter as an immigrant could be deported after twenty years of residence in this country (unless he was a fugitive from justice.) Furthermore, a proceeding to deport an alien would have to be brought within ten years after he committed the offense for which deportation is sought. This means, for example, that an alien who entered this country illegally would be safe from deportation after ten years.

Other Deportation Modifications

The McCarran-Walter Act now requires the deportation of any alien who fails to report annually under the Alien Registration Act or who fails to notify the immigration service of a change of address, unless he establishes to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that his failure was reasonably excusable or was not "willful." S. 2585 would abolish these harsh provisions. While, unfortunately, retaining the present provisions as to registration, fingerprinting and regular reports from aliens, who must carry registration cards at all times, it would eliminate the penalty of deportation for failure to make adequate reports.

The bill also would eliminate the existing provision directing that if any country either refuses to accept, or delays acceptance of, one of its nationals whom we want to deport, we shall discontinue issuing immigration visas to its "nationals, citizens, subjects, or residents." This means that if a country refuses to accept a deportee, persons born in that country, wherever they may be now, are barred from immigration. The rule may exert little or no pressure on the country itself but it does punish persons for the conduct of governments over which they may have no control and to which they may even be hostile. Where the country is one that refuses generally to let its nationals come here, it will not be in any way disturbed by an action on our part that helps to enforce its ban on immigration. The alien excluded by the provision may be one who has escaped from such a country; yet he is punished for the action of a government he has rejected.

Relief from Deportation

The government has found, over the years, that strict enforcement of the law against some aliens who are technically deportable would be unfair and serve no useful purpose. The alien may be deportable solely because of factors that could easily be adjusted. Or he may have established such roots in this country that his ouster would be unconscionable.

Two procedures, in particular, have been developed to meet this problem: (1) "adjustment of status" (formerly known as "pre-examination") by which the alien is allowed, in effect, to re-enter the country as a legally admitted immigrant; and (2) "suspension of deportation" in which the grounds for deportation are waived and the alien is given the right of permanent residence together with opportunity to apply for citizenship on a par with legally admitted immigrants. The McCarran-Walter Act severely restricted these procedures. S. 2585 would substantially restore the earlier law.

Adjustment of status applies primarily to persons who entered originally as non-immigrants (visitors, students, etc.). It makes them eligible for permanent residence and naturalization. S. 2585 would allow adjustment for any alien who can show that, if he were applying abroad, he would be eligible for admission and a visa would be available to him. This would eliminate a provision in the McCarran-Walter Act that prevents use of this procedure by aliens who have become deportable, for example, by over-staying their temporary permits or taking a job in violation of the law. Under S. 2585, adjustment of status could be claimed as a right by eligible aliens.

Suspension of deportation could be claimed under S. 2585 as a matter of right by any alien, even though deportable, if (1) he proves good moral character for the past five years and (2) has either resided here for seven years or can show that his departure would cause "serious harm to himself or to a citizen or a previously admitted alien who is his spouse or child." The period of residence required is extended from seven to ten years if the alien is deportable for national security reasons, fraud, or conviction for certain crimes.

NATURALIZATION

Second-Class Citizenship

S. 2585 would arrest the recent trend toward creating second-class citizenship for naturalized citizens, a trend that has reduced their rights as compared with native born citizens. At least as far as immigration and naturalization are concerned, the bill would restore the basic democratic principle that citizens are citizens, regardless of their origin.

"Expatriation" is the process whereby a person loses his citizenship by deliberate abandonment or by action indicating his attachment to another country. S. 2585 would repeal the present discriminatory law providing that, with certain exceptions, naturalized citizens are expatriated if they return to their native land for three years or live anywhere abroad for five years. Mere residence abroad, no matter how long continued, does not now cause loss of citizenship for native born citizens. Under S. 2585 the same rule would apply to naturalized citizens, including those who return to the country of their birth.

The bill would also limit the number of acts that cause automatic loss of citizenship. Native born and naturalized citizens alike would be expatriated only for acts that clearly express renunciation, such as obtaining a foreign nationality or attempting to overthrow the government by force of arms. Voting in a foreign election or taking office in a foreign government would no longer be grounds for automatic loss of citizenship.

Another discrimination against naturalized citizens that would be ended by the bill is that subjecting them to severer penalties for "subversive" conduct than native born citizens. Under the McCarran-Walter Act a naturalized citizen can be deprived of his citizenship if he joins a subversive organization within five years of naturalization. The same is true if, within ten years of naturalization, he is convicted of contempt of Congress by refusing to answer questions concerning subversive activities. The naturalized citizen committing such acts is subject to all the penalties imposed on the native born citizen; in addition, he is deprived of his citizenship and, in most cases, is exposed to deportation. S. 2585, by repealing this provision, would make punishments the same for all citizens, naturalized or native born.

Of course, a naturalized citizen could still lost his citizenship if it had been obtained illegally; for example, if he had concealed subversive or other disqualifying conduct that occurred prior to naturalization. However, S. 2585 would restore the principle that revocation of citizenship must be based on actual fraud in its procurement.

The revocation process would also be surrounded by safeguards that would insure the full protection of a fair hearing and other incidents of due process. A statute of limitations of ten years would be imposed, so that the threat of loss of citizenship would not hang over a citizen's head indefinitely.

Naturalization Requirements

The naturalization process would be liberalized in several respects by S. 2585. It would reduce the residence requirement for the spouse of a citizen from three years to one year. It would raise from fifteen to seventeen years the age limit for children obtaining "derivative" citizenship by the naturalization of their parents. It would liberalize the privilege of accelerated attainment of citizenship by those who serve in our wartime or peacetime armed services.

Aliens seeking naturalization must have lived continuously in this country five years. Under the McCarran-Walter Act, absence from the United States for six months automatically destroys this required continuous residence. Under S. 2585, absences of up to a year would be permitted if the alien could show that he had a reasonable cause for not returning sooner. The bill would also provide more liberal exemptions from this requirement for aliens working abroad for American organizations.

Naturalization applicants would have to be able to speak and read English but (unlike the requirement of the present law) would not have to be able to write it. The bill would also eliminate the mandatory neighborhood check of an applicant, which is frequently unfeasible, in favor of a flexible investigation process. Finally, it would do away with the McCarran-Walter practice of permitting a naturalization examiner to be represented in court by counsel after the Attorney General has ruled against him.

A SINGLE IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION COMMISSION

S. 2585 would end the uncertainty, confusion and waste caused by the administration of the law by two government agencies: the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice and the Consular Service of the Department of State. At present, for example, a consular officer overseas first decides on an alien's admissibility under the law before issuing a visa. When the alien arrives here, a Justice Department immigration official decides the same question under the same law before he permits entry. If these two officials disagree, as they sometimes do, the alien, encouraged to cross the sea by his visa from the consul, must be sent home again. The Hoover Commission, in 1949, sharply condemned this duplication, but the McCarran-Walter Act left it untouched.

S. 2585 would place responsibility for immigration and naturalization in a single, permanent agency, the Immigration and Naturalization Commission, which would be independent of existing departments. The Commission would be a bi-partisan body of three members appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, their tenure to be at the pleasure of the President. An administrator and a general counsel would be appointed by the Commission.

The functions of the Commission would include the admission of aliens into the United States, the prevention of illegal entry, the deportation of aliens, the adjustment of status of aliens, the investigation of citizenship applicants, and the institution of denaturalization proceedings. (Authority over the issuance of visas to diplomats and UN officials would be retained by the State Department.)

The Commission would establish its own field offices in foreign countries (after consultation with the Secretary of State) and take over the job of issuing visas to immigrants, visitors, and others seeking to come to the United States. Once issued, these visas would insure admission of the immigrant to this country. The Commission could delegate its visa-issuing powers to consular officers in areas where few visas are issued, but under the general supervision of the Commission.

Finally, the new bill would improve on the present system of checking undesirable aliens by providing that all investigative agencies of the Federal Government must keep the Commission advised of relevant information they have gathered regarding aliens who are applying, or who may apply, for admission. All information would be concentrated in one place, where it could be acted upon promptly and effectively, avoiding duplication and delay.

The bill would give the Commission authority to establish rules and regulations governing immigration and naturalization proceedings. In addition, the Commission would be given broad powers of investigation and would be required to report annually to the President and Congress.

APPEALS AND REVIEW

Board of Immigration and Visa Appeals

Aliens receiving rulings against them from immigration and naturalization authorities would have broader rights to appeal for a review of those rulings under S. 2585 than they now have. In accordance with the recommendations of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill would establish a statutory Board of Immigration and Visa Appeals, replacing the present Board of Immigration Appeals. The latter exists solely because of an order of the Attorney General that can be cancelled at any time; it is thus subject to departmental pressure. The nine members of the statutory Board proposed in the bill would be appointed by the President for fixed terms, confirmed by the Senate and removable only for cause. It would be empowered to sit, in panels of three or more members, in any part of the country or abroad.

The Board could review, among other things, the denial of visas to would-be immigrants by officials overseas. At present, even if a consul denies a visa for no valid reason, there is nothing that the applicant can do. All too often, consuls prefer to deny a visa arbitrarily rather than grant it to someone who may possibly become a controversial figure at a later date. Similarly, it would not be possible for consuls to limit arbitrarily the number of immigrants from their area, as is now done in South America.

Fair Hearing

The hearing provisions of the bill have been designed to afford fair treatment under clear and uniform procedures, replacing the present complex provisions for different kinds of hearings in various situations affecting aliens. They would assure adequate notice of hearing and the right to be represented by counsel. Hearings would be public unless the examiner or Board determined that national security required a closed hearing. All decisions would be based upon a written record. They would be in writing and would state the reasons for the action taken.

Generally, Commission proceedings would be governed by the Administrative Procedure Act. Although this Act is supposed to assure fair procedure by all federal regulatory agencies, the McCarran-Walter Act makes it inapplicable to almost all phases of the immigration and naturalization process. In the interest of national security, however, S. 2585 provides that, in some exclusion cases, evidence need not be revealed if the Attorney General certifies that it would seriously impair a source of confidential information or the security of the United States.

The bill would guarantee the privilege of reasonable bail, permitting its denial only in cases involving the national health or security and in cases where aliens ordered deported have not left the country. The Commission would have power to impose reasonable rules upon an alien released from custody to assure his availability and to protect the public interest.

Court Review

A significant change would be effected by S. 2585 over present law in that Board decisions, except for visa denials, would be subject to limited review in the Federal Courts of Appeals. The decisions of the present Board are merely recommendations to the Attorney General. The only way to challenge a decision of that officer is by seeking a writ of habeas corpus, available only in certain circumstances. One of the reasons this remedy is inadequate is that it can only be used when the alien is in actual detention.

The effectiveness of court review would also be increased by another provision. At present, if the government declares that a person is not a citizen, he can challenge that view in the courts only if he is present in this country, or if he can persuade a consul or the State Department to issue a "certificate of identity." Thus, a citizen who goes abroad and is then declared to be expatriated may have no legal redress. Under S. 2585, he could assert his citizenship in our courts. If the court found that the suit was brought in good faith, it would issue a "certificate of identity" permitting the plaintiff to come to the United States while his case was pending. He would of course have to leave the country if he lost his suit.

These provisions of the bill concerning judicial review are open to two criticisms. First, where a person is denied an immigration visa by an official abroad, the bill would permit him to appeal to the statutory board but no further appeal to the courts would be allowed. There is little reason for this limitation on judicial review. While court proceedings to review denial of a visa would have to be different in some respects from reviews of other actions, some form of review could be devised that would limit abuse of discretion by visa granting officials.

Second, as already noted, the bill provides that evidence need not be revealed to the party against whom it is used in some exclusion cases if the Attorney General certifies that it would seriously impair a source of confidential information or the country's security. To avoid administrative abuse, the courts could be given power to examine this evidence, without disclosing it to the alien. A court could then determine whether it was reasonable to withhold the evidence and whether the record as a whole justified the action taken against the alien.

CONCLUSION

Introduction of S. 2585 is a vital phase in what will undoubtedly become a nation-wide effort to revise a law that President Eisenhower has characterized as a "glaring example of failure of our national leadership to live up to high ideals." The bill embodies principles that have been endorsed and acclaimed by many organizations representing religious groups, labor, veterans, civic associations and immigration experts. Its supporters hope that it will gain the backing of the administration and that there will be public hearings at the forthcoming session of Congress at which its terms will be subject to close analysis by supporters and opponents. Whether or not such hearings will be held on S. 2585 depends on the extent to which support for it is made known.

THE LEGAL AND LEGISLATIVE INFORMATION BULLETIN is prepared under the direction of the Legal and Legislative Information Committee of the NCRAC. This committee comprises:

HERMAN L. WEISMAN, American Jewish Congress, Chairman
HARRY BLAKE, Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A.
LOUIS J. COHEN, Essex County, N.J.
DAVID M. COOK, Indianapolis
JANE EVANS, Union of American Hebrew Congregations
LOUIS FEINMARK, New Haven
VICTOR GELLER, Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations
HAROLD K. GOLDSTEIN, Cincinnati
ALBERT HURWITZ, Boston
CHARLES H. KRIGER, Brooklyn
JAMES LIPSIG, Jewish Labor Committee
WILL MASLOW, American Jewish Congress
HOWARD METZENBAUM, Cleveland
ISRAEL OSEAS, United Synagogue of America
RICHARD STEIBER, Bridgeport
JACK T. ZUKERMAN, Jewish Labor Committee

This BULLETIN was drafted initially by Joseph B. Robison and Alex Brooks of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress, and thereafter reviewed by the Legal and Legislative Information Committee. The published BULLETIN reflects the thinking of the entire Committee.

Legal and Legislative Information Bulletin
NATIONAL COMMUNITY RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL
9 East 38th Street
New York 16, N. Y.

Return Postage Guaranteed
347

Immigration

RECORDED REMARKS OF SENATOR HERBERT H. LEHMAN
ON S. 2585 -- THE IMMIGRATION AND CITIZENSHIP ACT OF 1953.

I welcome this opportunity to speak to you, my fellow citizens, on a matter which should be of the deepest concern to every one of us --- our national policy with regard to immigration, naturalization and citizenship.

This policy may seem remote from the immediate interests of some of you. But let me assure you that this question involves and affects all of us. It affects aliens abroad, and aliens in our midst; it also affects millions of our own American citizens.

The developments in this field of policy have been fundamental; yet we have overlooked them. For too long we have left the fields of immigration and citizenship to the encroachment of narrow-minded men who have undermined the very meaning of the word citizenship, and have made a mockery of the idea represented by the Statue of Liberty.

Much of this has been done gradually and imperceptibly. But the entire package of law achieving this unfortunate result was laid out in full view of the world -- with a host of new gimmicks added -- last year when Congress adopted, over President Truman's veto, the McCarran-Walter Immigration and Nationality Act.

As I said, our present law corrodes, among other things, the traditional concept of American citizenship. If you are a naturalized citizen, you are, under present law, a second-class citizen. Your citizenship is a temporary license, subject to revocation if you contribute money to the wrong causes, join the wrong unions, or refuse to testify before a Congressional Committee. You cannot leave this country to reside in your native land for as long as three years at a stretch, or in any other country for as long five years. You may not accept a job abroad with a philanthropic organization or with a foreign firm or set up a business abroad if it keeps you out of this country for longer than the permitted period.

Yet a native-born citizen can do all these things with impunity. A native-born citizen does not lose his citizenship on any of these counts.

But you who are native-born citizens, do not imagine that the McCarran Act is good for you either.

You can be sure that the encroachments on the rights of naturalized citizens, unless struck down, will pave the way for attacks on the citizenship of the native-born, too.

The McCarran Act already contains a dozen different grounds for depriving even a native-born citizen of his American citizenship -- grounds which range from very substantial acts such as treason, which of course, should be punished to the utmost degree, to insubstantial acts such as voting in a foreign election or working for a foreign government.

In the American tradition, American citizenship, once acquired, whether by birth or naturalization, was inalienable. It could not be taken away except on the grounds of fraud in the procurement of it, or for acts violative of the basic obligations of citizenship, such as treason and desertion in time of war. But the McCarran Act has ridden roughshod over this tradition. The McCarran Act has eaten the heart out of this tradition.

So, my friends, I think you can understand why I say that the McCarran Act affects all of us. It threatens all of us.

Recently, I and seven other Senators and 24 Members of the House of Representatives introduced a new Bill, a proposal for an entirely new citizenship and Immigration law --- a proposal based on justice and equal treatment for all --- naturalized and native-born citizens -- and aliens, too.

That Bill is the result of nearly eight months of drafting work. Experts from the law schools of the University of Pennsylvania and Harvard University, along with many other immigration authorities, social and political scientists, and immigration lawyers participated in the drafting of the new "Immigration and Citizenship Act."

That Bill, S. 2585, is now pending before the Senate. It does away with all the distinctions and discriminations to which I have referred.

It also does away with the harsh injustices against aliens and the intolerable discriminations, based on race and national origin, built into the immigration provisions of the McCarran Act.

Our immigration laws are of paramount importance because they directly affect the ability of our country to grow, expand its economy, maintain and enlarge its defenses, and fulfill its responsibility as the leader of the free peoples of the world.

Immigration has brought to our country a wealth of human material. Great captains of industry, great scientists and cultural leaders who have made their mark in this country were either immigrants themselves or were the sons and daughters of immigrants. We have profited by the flow of immigrants to this country. So, too, have the immigrants who have won both freedom and opportunity for themselves and their children.

But in recent times there has been a tendency to write into our immigration laws limitations and restrictions which are the product of unfounded fears, and of racial and religious prejudices. Such provisions, as contained in the McCarran-Walter Immigration and Nationality Act, are a shame and a menace to our country.

We boast of the liberties and freedoms guaranteed by our Bill of Rights, and yet we are the only important nation in the world which has upon its statute books an immigration law which authorizes the selection of qualified immigrants on the basis of race, creed and color.

But I am sure that the unhappy page of history which witnessed the passage of the McCarran Act will be blotted out as soon as the people of the United States realize the great injury that Actis doing to our country. I hope that day will come soon.

During the presidential campaign of 1952 both President Eisenhower and Governor Stevenson, the candidates of the major political parties, denounced the McCarran Act for its racial discriminations, and for its many other indefensible restrictions.

I am convinced that the McCarran-Walter Act is not a true expression of the beliefs or desires of the American people. I believe that the McCarran-Walter Act is a thoroughly un-American law on our statute books. It must not remain there long.

That is why I am happy to report that an entirely new Immigration and Citizenship Act has been introduced in Congress.

The proposed new law follows, in major aspects, the recommendations made in the report of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, issued in January 1953.

Our new Bill abolishes the national origins quota system. If this Bill-- I should say when this Bill -- is enacted, there will no longer be a barrier to immigration based on race or creed or color.

In place of the national origins quota system, the new Bill proposes a unified quota system. First of all, there is a limitation on the total number to be admitted annually. The same formula used in the present law is adopted -- 1/6 of one percent of the population -- but this percentage is applied to the population of 1950, instead of the population of 1920, as in the McCarran Act. This formula results in a total of about 250,000 quota immigrants annually. That is the limit. No more than this number can enter. But within the quota limit, the gates are kept open for immigrants who are worthy and qualified and desire to come here to live.

Under the provisions of the new Bill, people will be selected on the basis of their individual worth, and the potential contribution they as individuals can make to the betterment of the United States. Persons immigrating to the United States under the unified quota system will be screened to insure that they meet basic health, education, and security standards, and that they will not become public charges.

The 250,000 immigrants will be divided into five groups. Twenty-five to thirty-five percent of the available visas will be reserved for family reunification -- the bringing together of children, parents, sons, brothers and sisters.

Five to ten percent of the visas will go to persons selected because of their exceptional skills or education, who can make a contribution to our national economy or security.

Fifteen to twenty-five percent of the visas will go to persons fleeing from persecution or oppression -- many of these will be persons who escaped from behind the iron curtain.

Another preference will be for persons in countries in which our Government believes we can alleviate acute political and economic problems by permitting immigration into the United States .... thus serving the purposes of our foreign policy.

Finally, twenty percent of the visas will be reserved for a newcomer group. The residents of every nation of the world will be guaranteed at least 250 of these visas, but there will be an overall limitation of not more than 5000 visas available to the citizens of any one nation. Persons will receive these visas on a first-come-first-serve basis.

All these figures may be hard to grasp all at once. The important thing is that our new Bill will screen people better, treat them better, and give every alien fair treatment under the law.

I have already described how our new Bill affects citizenship. I do not have time to go into further details. Yet almost every provision of this Bill, as with present law, affects the lives of hundreds and thousands of people -- aliens and citizens alike.

I hope you will take an interest in this matter and try to learn some of these details. They are vital.

I hope all of you will try to learn more about the McCarran Act. It is important for you.

Only through an informed and aroused public opinion will we succeed in repealing the McCarran Act and replacing it with a law along the lines I have described.

I hope you will take time to write to the President and to your Congressman and Senators urging support of S. 2585, the new Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1953.

****

K-K-K

All Criticism Answered against Ku Klux Klan

Not a single solitary reason has yet been advanced for putting the Ku Klux Klan out of business. If the Klan is against the Catholics, so are the Masons. If the Klan is against the Jews, so are half of the good hotels of the Republic and three-quarters of the good clubs. If the Klan is against the foreignborn or hyphenated citizens, so is the National Institute of Arts and Letters. If the Klan is against the negro, so are all the states south of the Mason-Dixon line. If the Klan is for damnation and persecution, so is the Methodist church. If the Klan is bent upon political control, so are the American Legion and Tammany Hall. If the Klan wears grotesque uniforms, so do the Knights of Pythias and the Mystic Shriners. If the Klan holds its meetings in the dead of night, so do the Elks. If the Klan conducts its business in secret, so do all of the college Greek-letter fraternities and the Department of State. If the Klan holds idiotic parades in the public streets, so do the police, the letter carriers and the firemen. If the Klan officers bear ridiculous names, so do the officers of the Lambs' Club. If the Klan uses the mails for shaking down suckers, so does the Red Cross. If the Klan constitutes itself a censor of private morals, so does the Congress of the United States. If the Klan lynches a Moor for raping someone's daughter, so would you or I.

George Jean Nathan, Dramatic Critic of the New York "Evening Mail," in March "Smart Set."

Immigration

"whom we shall welcome"

RECEIVED
MAR 30
Regional Council

a short summary of the Report of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization

On January 1, 1953, the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization issued a report calling for far-reaching revision of our immigration and naturalization policies. It is expected that the proposals contained in this report will be considered by the Eighty-third Congress and that they may be the basis of both immediate and long-range legislation. Therefore, this condensation may be of value to those who do not have an opportunity to read the report's 304 pages.

The Commission, appointed by President Truman in September, 1952, heard the views of hundreds of representatives of governmental, religious and welfare agencies. Its report was made public just eight days after the McCarran-Walter Act, to which it devotes much attention, went into effect.

"The Commission believes," the report states, "that we cannot be true to the democratic faith of our own Declaration of Independence in the equality of all men, and at the same time pass immigration laws which discriminate against people because of national origin, race, color or creed."

The American Tradition

The Commission's report contains many reassertions of American tradition. Here are a few:

1. America was founded upon the principle that differences of race, color, religion or national origin should not be used to deny equal treatment or equal opportunity.
2. America, historically, has been the haven for the oppressed of other lands.
3. American national unity has been achieved without sacrificing diversity of opinion and individuality.
4. America's philosophy has always been one of faith in our future and belief in progress.

What's Wrong with Our Immigration Law?

The immigration and nationality law embodies policies and principles that are unwise and injurious to the nation, the report alleges. It cites five major shortcomings:

1. It reflects an attitude of hostility and distrust toward all aliens.
2. It discriminates against human beings on account of national origin, creed and color.
3. It ignores the needs of the United States at home and abroad.
4. It provides unnecessary and unreasonable restrictions and penalties against individuals.
5. It is badly drafted, confusing and in some respects unworkable.

The members of the Commission were Philip B. Perlman, former Solicitor General of the United States, chairman; Earl G. Harrison, former United States Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, vice-chairman;

Msgr. John O'Grady, secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities; the Rev. Thaddeus Gullixson, president of the Lutheran Theological Seminary of St. Paul; Clarence E. Pickett, secretary of the American Friends Service Committee; Adrian S. Fisher, legal advisor to the State Department and Thomas S. Finucane, chairman of the Board of Immigration Appeals of the Department of Justice. Harry N. Rosenfield, former member of the Displaced Persons Commission, served as executive director.

George Washington on Immigration

The Commission leads off with the statement of George Washington from which the report takes its title: "The bosom of America is open to receive not only the Opulent and Respectable Stranger, but the oppressed and persecuted of all Nations and Religions; whom we shall wellcome (Washington's spelling) to a participation of all our rights and privileges, if by decency and propriety of conduct they appear to merit the enjoyment."

Washington was not talking just for the record, the Commission points out. He asked a former aid to help him get several immigrants for his own plantation, stating: "If they are good workmen, they may be of Asia, Africa or Europe. They may be Mohammetans, Jews or Christians of any sect. . . ."

The Country's Needs

The best interests of the nation are imperiled by a short-sighted, outdated policy, says the Commission:

1. The United States needs more manpower, and more immigration to fill this demand.

2. American immigration procedures have frustrated American foreign policy throughout the period since 1924. The interference is acute today.

3. The major disruptive influence in our immigration law is the racial and national discrimination caused by the national origins system.

Why We Lose Friends

The United States, says the Commission, is the only major English-speaking country in the world which has written discrimination into its national immigration law. We must:

1. Take effective measures to provide migration opportunities for worthy escapees from Communism.

2. Exercise the kind of leadership that would encourage other countries to admit a large number of European immigrants.

3. Do away with the restrictions that have made enemies for us in the past, and will continue to lose us friends.

National Origin's System Is Racist

The Commission's report strongly recommends abolition of the national origins quota system of 1924, and calls for other major changes in our immigration and naturalization policies:

1. The national origins quota system, retained with slight changes by the McCarran-Walter Act of 1952, apportions quotas in accordance with the number and national origin of white persons in the United States in 1920, thereby favoring immigrants from "Nordic" countries. The extent of this discrimination is indicated by the fact that 81.6 per cent of the quotas go to Northern and Western European countries whereas the Southern and Eastern European countries get only 16 per cent.

2. Two of the favored countries, England and Ireland, have never filled more than a minor portion of their quotas, whereas prospective immigrants from Southern and Eastern Europe have sought admission in vain because of their small, heavily-oversubscribed quotas.

3. The racist premise of the national origins system is unsound, since there is no evidence that the immigrants discriminated against are inferior in any respect.

4. The McCarran-Walter Act widened the scope of this discrimination by reducing the immigration of colored persons from the Caribbean area by 90 per cent. This was accomplished by limiting dependent territories in the Western Hemisphere to 100 visas, each, annually, whereas formerly they could utilize the larger quotas of their home countries such as Great Britain.

5. Although the Act assigned quotas of about 100 each to various countries of Asia that had previously had no quotas, this was no more than a gesture. These token quotas were rendered even more meaningless by charging against them all persons with as much as 50 per cent of Asiatic "blood," regardless of their place of birth or residence.

U. S. Lacks Manpower

All these limitations, states the Commission, disregard a vital fact. The United States needs immigrants. Both our peacetime civilian requirements and the national defense suffer from lack of manpower:

1. In 1951, the Soviet Union labor force was estimated at 108,000,000, as compared with our 66,000,000.

2. The annual flow of young workers into our labor force is at the lowest point in years, and the number of men annually reaching the military age of 18 is now 200,000 less than in 1940. Normal immigration would give us the young adults we must have to keep this country strong and safe.

But beyond these present needs, the Commission points out, immigration has always been a benefit not only to the immigrant but also to the United States. "Among those whose genius has benefited the United States," the Commission recalls, "are Albert Einstein (German), in physics; Michael Pupin (Serbian), in electricity; Enrico Fermi (Italian), in atomic research; John Ericsson (Swedish), who invented the ironclad ship and the screw propeller; Guisseppe Bellanca (Italian), and Igor Sikorsky (Russian), who made outstanding contributions to airplane development; John A. Udden (Swedish), who was responsible for opening the Texas oil fields; Lycas P. Kyrides (Greek), industrial chemistry," and many other leading businessmen, scientists, artists, musicians and educators. "Any such list," the Commission asserts, "can only be a sample of how much immigrants have enriched the America which granted them hospitality and welcome."

Commission's Proposal

Thus, both for humanitarian and practical reasons, the Commission would discard the national origins system. Instead, a unified quota system is recommended. The maximum annual quota immigration would be one-sixth of one per cent of the population, as determined by the most recent census. This single quota would replace the eighty-five national quotas established by the McCarran-Walter Act. Under the 1950 census, the present immigration limit of 154,657, never fully met, would give way to a completely usable quota of 251,162.

Sets Up Method of Visa Distribution

Distribution of visas, the Commission recommends, should be on the basis of:

1. The right of asylum.
2. The reunion of families.
3. Needs in the United States.
4. Special needs in the free world.
5. General immigration over and above the preceding categories.

For the first three years, the increase of 100,000 would be used for refugees, expellees, escapees and remaining displaced persons, since these people require emergency aid.

Thereafter, once every three years, visas would be allocated by a Commission on Immigration and Naturalization which would take over the immigration and naturalization functions of the Departments of State and Justice. The Commission's members would be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

National Security and Fair Treatment

This discussion of national origins and quotas constitutes an important segment of the Commission's report, but the vexing problem of how to protect national security without the sacrifice of American traditions, also receives much attention.

"A primary function of the restrictions in our immigration law," the Commission states, "is to protect the United States against aliens who are actually or potentially undesirable. But it is difficult to reconcile this sound and important aim with the excessive punishments contained in our immigration laws, or with the attitudes of suspicion and distrust which seem to motivate them."

The Commission observes that the categories of unwanted aliens have grown to the point where the immigration law stresses rejection over acceptance to an overwhelming degree. To ameliorate this situation, the Commission makes a number of suggestions regarding the admission and deportation of aliens and naturalized citizens. Among them are the following:

1. Members of any totalitarian party, including Communists, Nazis and Fascists, should be barred from the country, but exceptions should be made in cases of involuntary or nominal membership. Former members of such parties should be admissible if they have repudiated, and are now opposed to, totalitarianism. The McCarran-Walter Act, the Commission notes, fails to ban members of foreign totalitarian groups other than Communists.

2. Exclusion should not be based on judgments of totalitarian countries, branding political opponents as "criminals."

3. Alien members of totalitarian organizations should not be deported if they entered the United States at an early age or have lived here for so long that their ties to their mother country are remote.

4. The grounds for deportation of aliens should not be retroactive; aliens should not be deportable for acts which were not prohibited when committed.

5. Enforcement of exclusion and deportation provisions should be entrusted to an Administrator who would be supervised by the Commission on Immigration and Naturalization. The same officials should not be permitted to exercise both enforcement and judicial functions.

6. To protect persons against unreasonable or arbitrary decisions, the Commission recommends the creation of a board of immigration and visa appeals, with broad discretionary powers which it would exercise under the supervision of the Commission on Immigration and Naturalization. The board could reverse decisions of United States representatives abroad denying visa applications.

7. No naturalized citizen should have his citizenship revoked for conduct subsequent to naturalization, unless he had obtained his citizenship by fraud or illegality.

8. There should be a ten-year statute of limitations on both deportation and denaturalization.

9. The processing of visas for temporary visitors should be expedited, and restrictions against visiting leaders in the arts, sciences and industry should be kept to the minimum compatible with the health, safety and security of the United States.

The Commission's report provides an excellent guide for the establishment of a fair immigration and naturalization policy.

Additional copies may be obtained from the

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

212 Fifth Avenue

New York 10, N.Y.

347

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

39 - World Affairs

ATOMIC WAR OR PEACE

By ALBERT EINSTEIN
as told to RAYMOND SWING

Reprinted by kind permission of the editors of
THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY

In keeping with its policy of promoting public discussion and evaluation of various proposals for effective international control of atomic energy, the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists takes pleasure in making available to its friends this article expressing the views of Albert Einstein on this vital subject.

EMERGENCY COMMITTEE of ATOMIC SCIENTISTS

INCORPORATED

90 NASSAU STREET

PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY

Trustees

ALBERT EINSTEIN, Chairman
Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton, N. J.

HAROLD C. UREY, Vice-Chairman
University of Chicago

PHILIP M. MORSE
Honorary Vice-Chairman,
Director, Brookhaven National Laboratory

HANS A. BETHE
Cornell University

HARRISON BROWN
University of Chicago

THORFIN R. HOGNESS
University of Chicago

LINUS PAULING
California Institute of Technology

FREDERICK SEITZ
Carnegie Institute of Technology

LEO SZILARD
University of Chicago

VICTOR F. WEISSKOPF
Massachusetts Institute of Technology

ATOMIC WAR OR PEACE

By ALBERT EINSTEIN

As told to RAYMOND SWING

SINCE the completion of the first atomic bomb nothing has been accomplished to make the world more safe from war, while much has been done to increase the destructiveness of war. I am not able to speak from any firsthand knowledge about the development of the atomic bomb, since I do not work in this field. But enough has been said by those who do to indicate that the bomb has been made more effective. Certainly the possibility can be envisaged of building a bomb of far greater size, capable of producing destruction over a larger area. It also is credible that an extensive use could be made of radioactivated gases which would spread over a wide region, causing heavy loss of life without damage to buildings.

I do not believe it is necessary to go on beyond these possibilities to contemplate a vast extension of bacteriological warfare. I am skeptical that this form presents dangers comparable with those of atomic warfare. Nor do I take into account a danger of starting a chain reaction of a scope great enough to destroy part or all of this planet. I dismiss this on the ground that if it could happen from a man-made atomic explosion it would already have happened from the action of the cosmic rays which are continually reaching the earth's surface.

BUT it is not necessary to imagine the earth being destroyed like a nova by a stellar explosion to understand vividly the growing scope of atomic war and to recognize that unless another war is prevented it is likely to bring destruction on a scale never before held possible and even now hardly conceived, and that little civilization would survive it.

In the first two years of the atomic era another phenomenon is to be noted. The public, having been warned of the horrible nature of atomic warfare, has done nothing about it, and to a large extent has dismissed the warning from its consciousness. A danger that cannot be averted had perhaps better be forgotten; or a danger against which every possible precaution has been taken also had probably better be forgotten. That is, if the United States had dispersed its industries and decentralized its cities, it might be reasonable for people to forget the peril they face.

I SHOULD say parenthetically that it is well that this country has not taken these precautions, for to have done so would make atomic war still more probable, since it would convince the rest of the world that we are resigned to it and are preparing for it. But nothing has been done to avert war, while much has been done to make atomic war more horrible; so there is no excuse for ignoring the danger.

I say that nothing has been done to avert war since the completion of the atomic bomb, despite the proposal for supranational control of atomic energy put forward by the United States in the United Nations. This country has made only a conditional proposal, and on conditions which the Soviet Union is now determined not to accept. This makes it possible to blame the failure on the Russians.

But in blaming the Russians the Americans should not ignore the fact that they themselves have not voluntarily renounced the use of the bomb as an ordinary weapon in the time before the achievement of supranational control, or if supranational control is not achieved. Thus they have fed the fear of other countries that they consider the bomb a legitimate part of their arsenal so long as other countries decline to accept their terms for supranational control.

AMERICANS may be convinced of their determination not to launch an aggressive or preventive war. So they may believe it is superfluous to announce publicly that they will not a second time be the first to use the atomic bomb. But this country has been solemnly invited to renounce the use of the bomb—that is, to outlaw it— and has declined to do so unless its terms for supranational control are accepted.

I believe this policy is a mistake. I see a certain military gain from not renouncing the use of the bomb in that this may be deemed to restrain another country from starting a war in which the United States might use it. But what is gained in one way is lost in another. For an understanding over the supranational control of atomic energy has been made more remote. That may be no military drawback so long as the United States has the exclusive use of the bomb. But the moment another country is able to make it in substantial quantities, the United States loses greatly through the absence of an international agreement, because of the vulnerability of its concentrated industries and its highly developed urban life.

In refusing to outlaw the bomb while having the monopoly of it, this country suffers in another respect, in that it fails to return publicly to the ethical standards of warfare formally accepted previous to the last war. It should not be forgotten that the atomic bomb was made in this country as a preventive measure; it was to head off its use by the Germans, if they discovered it. The bombing of civilian centers was initiated by the Germans and adopted by the Japanese. To it the Allies responded in kind—as it turned out, with greater effectiveness—and they were morally justified in doing so. But now, without any provocation, and without the justification of reprisal or retaliation, a refusal to outlaw the use of the bomb save in reprisal is making a political purpose of its possession. This is hardly pardonable.

I AM not saying that the United States should not manufacture and stockpile the bomb, for I believe that it must do so; it must be able to deter another nation from making an atomic attack when it also has the bomb. But deterrence should be the only purpose of the stockpile of bombs. In the same way I believe that the United Nations should have the atomic bomb when it is supplied with its own armed forces and weapons. But it too should have the bomb for the sole purpose of deterring an aggressor or rebellious nation from making an atomic attack. It should not use the atomic bomb on its own initiative any more than the United States or any other power should do so. To keep a stockpile of atomic bombs without promising not to initiate its use is exploiting the possession of the bombs for political ends. It may be that the United States hopes in this way to frighten the Soviet Union into accepting supranational control of atomic energy. But the creation of fear only heightens antagonism and increases the danger of war. I am of the opinion that this policy has detracted from the very real virtue in the offer of supranational control of atomic energy.

We have emerged from a war in which we had to accept the degradingly low ethical standards of the enemy. But instead of feeling liberated from his standards, and set free to restore the sanctity of human life and the safety of noncombatants, we are in effect making the low standards of the enemy in the last war our own for the present. Thus we are starting toward another war degraded by our own choice.

IT MAY be the public is not fully aware that in another war atomic bombs will be available in large quantities. It may measure the dangers in the terms of the three bombs exploded before the end of the last war. The public also may not appreciate that, in relation to the damage inflicted, atomic bombs already have become the most economical form of destruction that can be used on the offensive. In another war the bombs will be plentiful and they will be comparatively cheap. Unless there is a determination not to use them that is far stronger than can be noted today among American political and military leaders, and on the part of the public itself, atomic warfare will be hard to avoid. Unless Americans come to recognize that they are not stronger in the world because they have the bomb, but weaker because of their vulnerability to atomic attack, they are not likely to conduct their policy at Lake Success or in their relations with Russia in a spirit that furthers the arrival at an understanding.

But I do not suggest that the American failure to outlaw the use of the bomb except in retaliation is the only cause of the absence of an agreement with the Soviet Union over atomic control. The Russians have made it clear that they will do everything in their power to prevent a supranational regime from coming into existence. They not only reject it in the range of atomic energy: they reject it sharply on principle, and thus have spurned in advance any overture to join a limited world government.

Mr. Gromyko has rightly said that the essence of the American atomic proposal is that national sovereignty is not compatible with the atomic era. He declares that the Soviet Union cannot accept this thesis. The reasons he gives are obscure, for they quite obviously are pretexts. But what seems to be true is that the Soviet leaders believe they cannot preserve the social structure of the Soviet state in a supranational regime. The Soviet government is determined to maintain its present social structure, and the leaders of Russia, who hold their great power through the nature of that structure, will spare no effort to prevent a supranational regime from coming into existence, to control atomic energy or anything else.

The Russians may be partly right about the difficulty of retaining their present social structure in a supranational regime, though in time they may be brought to see that this is a far lesser loss than remaining isolated from a world of law. But at present they appear to be guided by their fears, and one must admit that the United States has made ample contributions to these fears, not only as to atomic energy but in many other respects. Indeed this country has conducted its Russian policy as though it were convinced that fear is the greatest of all diplomatic instruments.

That the Russians are striving to prevent the formation of a supranational security system is no reason why the rest of the world should not work to create one. It has been pointed out that the Russians have a way of resisting with all their arts what they do not wish to have happen; but once it happens, they can be flexible and accommodate themselves to it. So it would be well for the United States and other powers not to permit the Russians to veto an attempt to create supranational security. They can proceed with some hope that once the Russians see they cannot prevent such a regime they may join it.

So far the United States has shown no interest in preserving the security of the Soviet Union. It has been interested in its own security, which is characteristic of the competition which marks the conflict for power between sovereign states. But one cannot know in advance what would be the effect on Russian fears if the American people forced their leaders to pursue a policy of substituting law for the present anarchy of international relations. In a world of law, Russian security would be equal to our own, and for the American people to espouse this wholeheartedly – something that should be possible under the workings of democracy – might work a kind of miracle in Russian thinking.

At present the Russians have no evidence to convince them that the American people are not contentedly supporting a policy of military preparedness which they regard as a policy of deliberate intimidation. If they had evidences of a passionate desire by Americans to preserve peace in the one way it can be maintained, by a supranational regime of law, this would upset Russian calculations about the peril to Russian security in current trends of American thought. Not until a genuine, convincing offer is made to the Soviet Union, backed by an aroused American public, will one be entitled to say what the Russian response would be.

IT MAY be that the first response would be to reject the world of law. But if from that moment it began to be clear to the Russians that such a world was coming into existence without them, and that their own security was being increased, their ideas necessarily would change.

I am in favor of inviting the Russians to join a world government authorized to provide security, and if they are unwilling to join, to proceed to establish supranational security without them. Let me admit quickly that I see great peril in such a course. If it is adopted it must be done in a way to make it utterly clear that the new regime is not a combination of power against Russia. It must be a combination that by its composite nature will greatly reduce the chances of war. It will be more diverse in its interests than any single state, thus less likely to resort to aggressive or preventive war. It will be larger, hence stronger, than any single nation. It will be geographically much more extensive, and thus more difficult to defeat by military means. It will be dedicated to supranational security, and thus escape the emphasis on national supremacy which is so strong a factor in war.

If a supranational regime is set up without Russia, its service to peace will depend on the skill and sincerity with which it is done. Emphasis should always be apparent on the desire to have Russia take part. It must be clear to Russia, and no less so to the nations comprising the organization, that no penalty is incurred or implied because a nation declines to join. If the Russians do not join at the outset, they must be sure of a welcome when they do decide to join. Those who create the organization must understand that they are building with the final objective of obtaining Russian adherence.

THESE are abstractions, and it is not easy to outline the specific lines a partial world government must follow to induce the Russians to join. But two conditions are clear to me: the new organization must have no military secrets; and the Russians must be free to have observers at every session of the organization, where its new laws are drafted, discussed, and adopted, and where its policies are decided. That would destroy the great factory of secrecy where so many of the world's suspicions are manufactured.

It may affront the military-minded person to suggest a regime that does not maintain any military secrets. He has been taught to believe that secrets thus divulged would enable a war-minded nation to seek to conquer the earth. (As to the so-called secret of the atomic bomb, I am assuming the Russians will have this through their own efforts within a short time.) I grant there is a risk in not maintaining military secrets. If a sufficient number of nations have pooled their strength they can take this risk, for their security will be greatly increased. And it can be done with greater assurance because of the decrease of fear, suspicion, and distrust that will result. The tensions of the increasing likelihood of war in a world based on sovereignty would be replaced by the relaxation of the growing confidence in peace. In time this might so allure the Russian people that their leaders would mellow in their attitude toward the West.

MEMBERSHIP in a supranational security system should not, in my opinion, be based on any arbitrary democratic standards. The one requirement from all should be that the representatives to supranational organization—assembly and council—must be elected by the people in each member country through a secret ballot. These representatives must represent the people rather than any government—which would enhance the pacific nature of the organization.

To require that other democratic criteria be met is, I believe, inadvisable. Democratic institutions and standards are the result of historic developments to an extent not always appreciated in the lands which enjoy them. Setting arbitrary standards sharpens the ideological differences between the Western and Soviet systems.

But it is not the ideological differences which now are pushing the world in the direction of war. Indeed, if all the Western nations were to adopt socialism, while maintaining their national sovereignty, it is quite likely that the conflict for power between East and West would continue. The passion expressed over the economic systems of the present seems to me quite irrational. Whether the economic life of America should be dominated by relatively few individuals, as it is, or these individuals should be controlled by the state, may be important, but it is not important enough to justify all the feelings that are stirred up over it.

I should wish to see all the nations forming the supranational state pool all their military forces, keeping for themselves only local police. Then I should like to see these forces commingled and distributed as were the regiments of the former Austro-Hungarian Empire. There it was appreciated that the men and the officers of one region would serve the purposes of empire better by not being stationed exclusively in their own provinces, subject to local and racial pulls.

I should like to see the authority of the supranational regime restricted altogether to the field of security. Whether this would be possible I am not sure. Experience may point to the desirability of adding some authority over economic matters, since under modern conditions these are capable of causing national upsets that have in them the seeds of violent conflict. But I should prefer to see the function of the organization altogether limited to the tasks of security. I also should like to see this regime established through the strengthening of the United Nations, so as not to sacrifice continuity in the search for peace.

I do not hide from myself the great difficulties of establishing a world government, either a beginning without Russia or one with Russia. I am aware of the risks. Since I should not wish it to be permissible for any country that has joined the supranational organization to secede, one of these risks is a possible civil war. But I also believe that world government is certain to come in time, and that the question is how much it is to be permitted to cost. It will come, I believe, even if there is another world war, though after such a war, if it is won, it would be world government established by the victor, resting on the victor's military power, and thus to be maintained permanently only through the permanent militarization of the human race.

But I also believe it can come through agreement and through the force of persuasion alone, hence at low cost. But if it is to come in this way it will not be enough to appeal to reason. One strength of the communist system of the East is that it has some of the character of a religion and inspires the emotions of a religion. Unless the cause of peace based on law gathers behind it the force and zeal of a religion, it hardly can hope to succeed. Those to whom the moral teaching of the human race is entrusted surely have a great duty and a great opportunity. The atomic scientists, I think, have become convinced that they cannot arouse the American people to the truths of the atomic era by logic alone. There must be added that deep power of emotion which is a basic ingredient of religion. It is to be hoped that not only the churches but the schools, the colleges, and the leading organs of opinion will acquit themselves well of their unique responsibility in this regard.

EMERGENCY COMMITTEE OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS

INCORPORATED

The Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists was organized informally in May, 1946 by a small group of atomic scientists headed by Albert Einstein and Harold C. Urey; the Committee was incorporated in August, 1946. The atomic scientists recognized, because of their unique knowledge, the tremendous new problems which faced mankind through the release of atomic energy. Their purpose in coming together was to arouse the American people to an understanding of the unprecedented crisis in national and international affairs precipitated by the atomic discoveries.

The part they had borne in these discoveries had aroused in scientists a deep sense of responsibility for the immediate and eventual uses to which this great new power might be put. As scientists, working in the interests of their country at a time of national peril, they had released overwhelming new forces. As citizens, they saw that the people were wholly unaware of the supreme implications of this new power, mainly because of the necessity of military security. They believed that the connotations of secrecy, national rivalry, and mass destruction that unavoidably attached to the atomic discoveries from their inception must be removed, that men might determine the future use and control of atomic energy in an atmosphere of free and democratic discussion.

During the year that has passed, every member of the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists has done his utmost to bring home to the people of the United States the simple facts of atomic energy and their tremendous implications for world peace or world destruction. By conference and letter this small group of men have reached directly over a quarter of a million key citizens. To reach a wider audience, they have the willing cooperation of hundreds of younger scientists who, forming themselves into the Association of Scientists for Atomic Education, have sent out teams of speakers to bring to large cities and small towns in simple concrete terms the facts of atomic energy. Their work is complemented by the nationwide educational effort of the National Committee on Atomic Information, likewise formed at the urgent behest of leading atomic scientists.

Also financed by the Committee is the uniquely valuable Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, which month by month presents and appraises every important proposal for international control, whether emanating from government or private sources. The Bulletin is perhaps the most valuable existing medium for disseminating information and opinion on atomic energy control. It reaches those who are responsible for governmental policy both in the United States and abroad, carrying to them the thoughtful conclusions of the world's leading atomic scientists.

To date over 11,000 private individuals have subscribed nearly $400,000 to this educational effort in the interest of national and world understanding of the momentous issues at stake. Fully to implement its educational campaign the Committee seeks a minimum of $1,000,000.

It is the unanimous belief of the members of the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists that such a nation-wide educational campaign provides the only assurance that public attention will be focused on the paramount necessity of securing effective international control to safeguard our civilization.

ALBERT EINSTEIN, Chairman
EMERGENCY COMMITTEE OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS, Incorporated
90 Nassau Street, Princeton, N. J.

I want to help in your campaign of education to ensure that atomic energy will be used for the benefit of mankind and not for humanity's destruction. I enclose my gift of $ ..... toward your $1,000,000 Fund.

Name .....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

The Treasury Department has ruled that gifts to the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists, Incorporated, are deductible as contributions for federal income tax purposes.

98

We are grateful to the many friends who have offered us mailing lists. If you have received a copy of this appeal, you can help us by passing on the duplicate to a friend.

A STATEMENT
by the
EMERGENCY COMMITTEE OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS

These few facts are accepted by all atomic scientists:

1. Atomic bombs can now be made cheaply and in large number. They will become more destructive.
2. There is no military defense against atomic bombs, and none is to be expected.
3. Other nations can rediscover our secret processes by themselves.
4. Preparedness against atomic war is futile and, if attempted, will ruin the structure of our social order.
5. If war breaks out, atomic bombs will be used, and they will surely destroy our civilization.
6. There is no solution to this problem except international control of atomic energy and, ultimately, the elimination of war.

The program of the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists is to see that these simple facts become known to the public. To accomplish this purpose, it will work through all appropriate educational organizations, including the National Committee on Atomic Information, the Association of Scientists for Atomic Education, and the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists.

The Committee does not propose to make governmental policy, either on the national or international level. Its purpose is to make available an understanding of the Atomic Era on which such policy must depend.

ALBERT EINSTEIN, Chairman
EMERGENCY COMMITTEE OF ATOMIC SCIENTISTS, Incorporated
90 Nassau Street, Princeton, N. J.

I want to help in your campaign of education to ensure that atomic energy will be used for the benefit of mankind and not for humanity's destruction. I enclose my gift of $..... toward your $1,000,000 Fund.

Name .....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone..... State.....

The Treasury Department has ruled that gifts to the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists, Incorporated, are deductible as contributions for federal income tax purposes.

H

Out to John Pecoul

Green cc

School Desegregation

1966

11-15-66

John Pescoul file

THE PERSECUTION AND ASSASINATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS BY THE INMATES OF THE SOUTHERN EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF THE U. S. CONGRESS ACCORDING TO THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION 1966: THE SLOW UNDOING

The United States Supreme Court declared the operation of dual public school systems separated by race to be unconstitutional in 1954. All deliberate speed was ordered in ending racial discrimination in public schools. Twelve years later, presuming deliberation and speed, one would expect this decision to be full in effect defining the context for lawful operation of every public school. It does not of course.

Instead, the school year 1966-67 arrives amid clamorous controversy over the implementation of school desegregation guidelines and amid successful avoidance of an end to racially separated schools as ordered by the Supreme Court in 1954. It appears that southern educators and legislators have persuaded the Congress, much of the press, and apparently even the White House that the United States Office of Education has "gone beyond the law" in enforcing Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. What does Title VI require. Its section 601. states:

> No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

This study assesses the present controversy over school desegregation. It finds that the thorough and effective combination of half-truth with political pressure has created a widespread impression that federal officials went "too far" in the enforcement of Title VI. That impression may lead to piecemeal dismantling of Title VI by amendments to appropriation bills. (See below. Fountain Amendment.) The current debate has wrongly but successfully been focused both on possible excesses of administrative zeal and on the intent of Congress in the Civil Rights Act of 1964. These foci of discussion, however undesirable, will be examined here in the interest of providing more balance and enlightenment than our public discourse on this issues has had up to now.

THE GENUINE ISSUE

Administrative zeal and congressional intent are only the apparent centers of the present controversy, however. What is really at stake, although effectively hidden so far, is the constitutional guarantees of equal protection of the law as applied to public schools by the U. S. Supreme Court in 1954 and in a great body of subsequent decisions. Constitutional intent, not congressional intent, is the issue.

Given the language of Title VI and the weight of the nation's highest judicial opinion on equal protection under the Constitution, it can be asked whether in fact the U.S.O.E. has gone far enough in carrying out the mandate given in Section 602 of Title VI "to effectuate the provisions of section 601 [cited above].....by issuing rules, regulations, or orders of general applicability..."

No amount of qualification of intent by Congress could stand the test of constitutionality if its effect was to deny equal protection of the law by allowing dual school systems to continue subsidized by federal funds. Only an attempt at a fundamental change of the nation's democratic political culture through a constitutional amendment could legally achieve what Southern schoolmen and legislators are audaciously attempting to seize through amendments to annual appropriations and through complaints about the "unreasonableness" of federal examiners.

Perhaps the very audacity of this show of effort is what has camouflaged the unconstitutional end being sought. Whatever truth there is in the idea that increasing the scope of a lie increases its credibility has never been lost on southern politicians. The only effective response is equal audacity about increasing the scope of the facts available to public opinion formation and decision making. The study which follows attempts to provide more facts. The premise on which it does so is that the body politic needs to be confronted with a clearer choice about itself on the desegregation issue. Will it allow the prime facie intent of Title VI and the Supreme Court decision of 1954 to be circumvented? Will it, despite John Kennedy's words, both witness and permit "the slow undoing of those human rights to which this nation has always been committed?"

John Record

II. THE 1966 GUIDELINES: THE END OF INNOCENCE

In 1965, the United States Office of Education assumed good faith on the part of Southern school officials in complying with desegregation guidelines. In view of the long history of attempted evasion of court orders since 1954 on the part of many of these same officials and on the part of governors and other public officeholders, this assumption of good faith was attacked by many interested in obedience to the law. A special report of the Southern Regional Council stated at that ;time:

> The most rigid checks are needed----and have been from the beginning---to be sure at every step of the administrative process ~~th~~ that plans for "voluntary" action comply with all requirements of the law, and that the plans are carried out so as to meet all requirements of the law. Any other course in the South in this matter risks criticism as naive and encourages the kind of winking at the law that has been for too long a serious fault of southern society.

4

John Pecoul

Apparently, the U. S. Office of Education was responsive to its many critics. Late in January 1966, Harold Howe, II, the new U. S. Commissioner of Education requested suggestions for changing the 1965 guidelines for 1966. Wall Street Journal columnist Jonathan Spivak commiserated with the federal agency's "almost impossible assignment: Strengthening the standards sufficiently to satisy its civil rights critics and yet not so much as to provoke explosive Southern resistance, sacrificing the integration gains /6.01%/ in 1965/ already achieved. In this business, any decision is wrong; that's why no one wants to make them,' frets one school desegregation specialist." /7/ Acknowledging Negro parents' reluctance to subject their children to possible violence, the reporter questioned "what is to constitute sufficient evidence of intimidation--mere complaints or documented incidents? Would the government guidelines accept some 'minimum' amount of violence as unavoidable?"

The day after Howe's request, representatives of eight civil rights and human relations organizations attacked the Office of Education's school desegregation program for 1965 as "too weakly drawn and too timidly enforced." They planned meetings in five southern states to try to persuade the federal government to carry out a "massive school desegregation program."

The Civil Rights Commission advocated a "federal law to protect Negro students who attend white schools---from intimidation and harassment." It also declared freedom of choice plans "should not be permitted as a device for perpetuation of dual school systems...The Commission recommended that the Office of Education adopt policies and procedures which "will assure adequate evaluation and monitoring of desegregation plans for the 5,000 school districts in the southern and border states. This would require on-the-spot inspection of some school districts and the Office of Education should, "according to the Commission,""seek more funds if needed for personnel to do such investigation." The Commission also suggested that "freedom of choice" plans should not be permitted as a "device for perpetuating dual school systems in local districts." The commission said its study showed that states which made the most use of freedom of choice plans had the lowest percentage of Negroes going to school with whites. Also recommended was a law to authorize the Attorney General "or victims to bring civil action to enjoin persons against intimidation or harassment against Negroes who choose to attend white schools." The Commission also articulated a wish long held by civil rights organizations; that school districts operating under court order be required to file plans complying with federal guidelines.

"Informed Sources" later indicated that President Lyndon Johnson planned to "ask Congress to put new teeth into federal laws aimed at desegregating public schools.... a bill being drafted would give the Attorney General greater authority to initiate court action toward desegregation of schools instead of awaiting complaints and taking part in suits brought by Negroes." The proposed legislation would have been aimed at blocking intimidation of Negroes seeking to attend white schools. A provision making it a federal offense to interfere with the attempts of persons to exercise their civil rights was later included in the new defunct 1966 Civil Rights bill. Even so, there was candid admission at the Office of Education that something stronger than new guidelines will be needed to break segregation patterns in school systems outside the South.

THE NEW GUIDELINES ACCEPTANCE & REJECTION

On March 7 the new guidelines were issued. They included many revisions recommended by the U. S. Civil Rights Commission. In ten tightly written pages, the beginning of faculty desegregation in every school where it had not occurred in the south commissioner Howe noted that further plans would be needed to move against de facto segregation in the North. At a press conference Howe declared that "this year the emphasis will shift from negotiation to performance." Substantial achievement was stressed in directives outlining requirements. Howe indicated the following measures of substantial achievement would be used by his office. 1. If a system transferred 8 to 9 percent of its Negro pupils from a segregated school in 1965, at least twice that number would "normally be expected" in September of 1966. 2. In the cases where 4 to 5 per cent transferred, the number would be expected to triple next term. 3. Where the transfer percentage was lower than 4 per cent, which would include Alabama, 43%; Georgia, 2.66%; Louisiana, 0.69%; Mississippi, 0.59%; and S.C., 1.46%, a minimum of 10% would be expected.

Two weeks after the guidelines were issued, the Southern Education Reporting Service noted that there had been "little immediate reaction from most southern states, except an indication of reluctant acceptance." The Nashville-based organization indicated that strongest opposition had come from Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi." Georgia Governor Carl Sanders termed the guides "another illustration of government by bureau," and Congressman Phil Landrum (D-Ga.) said the Office of Education was "pushing too hard, too fast."

In response, Attorney General Nicholas DeB. Katzenbach, speaking at the University of SouthCArolina, called the guidelines "moderate, perhaps even tardy benchmarks....They contain no sudden surprises nor do they in themselves break new ground." Nevertheless, southern schoolmen habitually express shock at the "suddenness" of any desegregation ordered by federal courts or suggested by federal agencies. Even with the passage of twelve yearsdsince the Supreme Court decision, they still claimed to be surprised.

~~Xxxx

initally compliant school officials. Apparently, the officials were slow to realize that what the Office of Education had in mind, whether or not its methods were realistic or even desirable, was the end of dual school systems--not token desegregation.

In marked contrast to the South's growing assumption that the U.S.O.E. would require real change, Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, spoke in the language of caution and doubt that civil rights organizations sometime use when contrasting glowing policy with actual perfomance by the federal administration. Guidelines' effectiveness in desegregating public schools will depend fundamentally on whether the Administration is willing to make a powerful political commitment on manpower and funds to achieve desegregation. We have had no encouragement in this area. Enforcing the guidelines, even with a great commitment of appropriations and manpower, will nevertheless be difficult because of their complexity, permissiveness in many areas, and wide scope of exceptions."

Meanwhile, after the initial period of reluctant acceptance of the new guidelines, substantive southern resistance began to emerge. South Carolina and Virginia killed efforts to pass compulsory school attendance laws. Similar laws had been repealed during the South's "massive resistance" to school desegregation. This was an indication that at least two states preferred not to force students to attend integrated schools even if it meant no schools at all for some.

COMPLIANCE DEADLINE NOVEMBER 1

On April 4, Howe announced that all systems which had not filed plans for desegregation compliance (441-B) by the April 15 deadline would be notified that they faced loss of all federal aid. It was also made clear that these forms would be subject to future tests of performance and were not sufficient evidence of actual compliance. Compliance forms trickled in slowly. Georgia's state superintendent Jack Nix reported that only 20 of the state's 196 systems had complied. Alabama superintendents voted 76 to 4 to adopt a resolution urging their congressional delegation to seek a modification of the guidelines, adding, "We cannot follow directives." At a statewide meeting held by O.E, staffers in Birmingham, one school official became somewhat upset and asked "Where'ddyou leave your carpetbags, you dirty Commies?" Another asked, "Whateif I can't find a Negro teacher qualified to teach in a white school?" The Office of Education representative, Wallace McBain, a Marquette University professor, responded "If she isn't qualified, what is she doing in your system?....The 'separate but equal' ruling was made in 1894....You aren't even willing to go that far." The battlelines were forming.

Ironically, no funds had yet been cut off under the previous year's guidelines. According to Jack Nelson, Los Angeles Times-Washington Post correspondent, "To date, no funds have been withdrawn from school systems that have defied the 1965-66 guidelines. But the time is close when a final decision may be made in a number of cases."

Examiners had held hearings on 65 such systems and handed down 41 decisions, all recommending termination of aid. The commissioner has passed on 27 of the cases and upheld the examiners' recommendations in each instance. Secretary of H.E.W. John Gardner, the final authority, must keep each case a minimum of 20 days before issuing a ruling.

Nelson reported also that a Georgia school board attorney commented, "We are going to tell them we intend to comply. Then we are going to tell them, 'Make us.'"

On April 11 Secretary Gardner sent letters to governors, congressmen and state school officials in response to growing opposition in the South to the new guidelines. He assured them that his department was not trying to impose a formula of racial balance in schools or "instantaneous desegregation" of every teaching staff. HEW officials insisted this was not a softening of the guidelines, but it was in fact an attempt to head off the possibility of a full-scale revolt by southern school districts. Gardner answered criticism that racial percentages in the guides amounted to imposing "racial balance" by pointing out that percentages were an "administrative guide" for measuring progress toward the end in pupil assignment based on race under "free choice" plans.

Resistance continued however. Boycotts were in some school districts where the guidelines were considered too severe. By the 10th of April only one Louisiana school system had filed a compliance form; four in Alabama had complied. By the end of April only 1193 of the approximately 5000 districts in southern and border states had filed statements of compliance. The United States Office of Education extended its deadline to May 6.

COMPLIANCE DEADLINE NUMBER 2

On May 5 the Office of Education ordered a halt in federal funds for new school projects in districts which did not file compliance forms on May 6. As of May 7, 255 districts had failed to comply. At the same time the House of Representatives "dealt a real blow to HEW's plans for compliance," according to Gardner. The House cut a budget request for compliance programs from $4,132,000 to $927,000. The budget had proposed 348 staff members and the House reduced this to_____.

By mid-May 1475 of the 1893 school districts required to submit form 441-B had done so. At the same time directors of 8 State Councils on Human Relations in a letter to Commissioner Howe urged withholding funds from school districts that "flagrantly disobey" the guidelines. A few such actions in each state would open the opportunity for real headway this year toward the final goal," the directors declared. "Besides being Southerners, we are human...We refuse to believe we have lost the war so long as you leave to us the reconstruction." They added that they were "heartened" by the guidelines, having made clear that dual school systems must be eliminated.

In late May Howe II spoke with about two-dozen southern congressmen, who declared the guidelines illegal. Alabama congressman and gubernatorial candidate James Martin said that Howe had been "shaken" by the encounter. Martin quoted Howe as saying that, if the federal agency did not pursue the guidelines, civil rights groups might "take to the streets again." Martin added that he was disappointed that southern governors had not notified the President "in no uncertain terms that they're not going to stand for" the guidelines.

As of June 4, twenty-one school districts, all of them in Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, had flatly refused to comply with the guidelines. While not refusing to comply, many others had not filed forms.

Eighteen southern senators sent a letter, dated May 2 but released to the press May 13, to President Johnson. The letter, written by Georgia's Richard Russell and distributed for signatures by Mississippi's John Stennis was labeled a "Most Solemn Petition" and said in part: "We come to you as Chief Executive of the nation to protest vigorously the abuse of power involved in the bureaucratic imposition of the guidelines and we earnestly beseech your personal intervention to right this wrong and have this order revoked....In our efforts to protect our schools and the children who will direct the destinies of our states tomorrow, we earnestly appeal to you to intervene and prevent illegal, unfair, and unrealistic action by the Office of Education."

The letter was signed by Alabama's Hister Hill and John Sparkman; Arkansas' J. William Fulbright, and John K. McCellan; Florida's Spessard Holland and George A. Smathers; Georgia's Richard Russell and Herman Talmadge; Louisiana's Allen Ellender and Russell B. Long; Mississippi's John C. Stennis and James O. Eastland; N.C.'s B. Everett Jordan and Sam J. Ervin, Jr.; S.C.'s Donald Russell and J. Strom Thurmond (republican); Virginia's Harry Flood Byrd, Jr. and A. Willis Robertson.

[The Southern Manifesto, signed only ten years and two months before and said, "The unwarranted decision of the Supreme Court in the public school cases is now bearing the fruit always produced when men substitute naked power for established law....We pledge ourselves to use all lawful means to bring about a reversal of this decision which is contrary to the Constitution and to prevent the use of force in its implementation."

The Manifesto was signed by Georgia's Russell and Walter F. George; Ark's McClellan and Fulbright; Fla.'s Smathers and Holland; Ala.'s Hill and Sparkman; La.'s Long and Ellender; Miss.'s Eastland and Stennis; N.C.'s W. Keer Scott and Sam J. Ervin; S.C.'s Olin D. Johnston and Thurmond (Democrat) Texas' Price Daniel; Virginia's Robertson and Byrd, Sr.

Although the letter itself was not made public, informed sources revealed that President Johnson had responded to the senators. In a single letter to old friend Richard Russell, who drafted the "Most Solemn Petition," Johnson replied that he considered the guidelines "fair". He pointed out that the regulations permitted continuation of "freedom of choice" plan and did not racial balance. Russell's office acknowledged the reply, while other signers said they had not seen the letter.

13

John Pecoul

Could

SUMMER MANEUVERS:

RETRENCHMENT AND RETREAT

Despite the President's letter giving verbal support to the Office of Education, it was becoming apparent that numerous concessions which weakened the guidelines were being won from the U.S.O.E. by local school officials. As early as March 31, Commissioner Howe had told a meeting of Georgia's Congressmen and school administrators that the desegregation of the faculty would not have to begin in every school as the guidelines said. The pressures from lack of staff and funds for adequate enforcement of the guidelines prompted David S. Seeley, Assistant Commissioner of Education to indicate that the U.S.O.E. was "shifting its attach from the center to the edges of school segregation." In a report in the Birmingham News on June 12, Seeley admitted that his agency's enforcement of the 1964 Civil Rights Act "probably will not have sufficient impact to deal with large problems" of school desegregation in either the North or the South. Above all, many school districts were discovering that complaints to Washington backed by pressure from southern legislators were effective in by-passing the stringent demands of local U.S.O.E. compliance officers. A case in point is Commissioner Howe's over-ruling and subsequent transferral of Kruger, compliance officer for South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia.

THE KRUGER CASE

The first clear indication that Kruger intended to require adherence to accepted plans for compliance came in a telegram to DeKalb County, Georgia Superintendent James Cherry on May 4. Kruger requested an immediate explantion of why DeKalb County was not following the plan approved by federal officials. Superintendent Cherry ignored the telegram. [pat: Cherry quote: Maggie Long?]

On April 7, Kruger said that the original DeKalb plan called for assignment of all students to schools by attendance zones. Transfers might then be considered. Still not responding to Kruger's telegram but speaking to the press, DeKalb school officials maintained that they intended this plan to have two phases. The first phase, they said, was the assignment of students by zone, which has occurred. The second phase was the freedom of choice plan being implemented. Kruger insisted that the county had not indicated that it planned a two-phase plan and that, at any rate, the zone assignment previously carried out covered only two grades. In effect, a racially segregated dual system still existed for all other grades. Allowing the alleged second phase to begin without first assigning zones for grades not previously covered was indeed free choice, which is legal, but free choice between racailly determined dual school systems receiving federal funds, which is not legal under Title VI.

DeKalb County would not concede the battle, however. Pleading that it never promised to do more than it was in fact doing, that it was acting in good faith, and that its plan had been misunderstood by Kruger, school officials arranged a meeting with Commissioner Howe through its district Congressman James Mackay. W. Stanley Kruger was not present.

The result of the meeting was a complete victory for DeKalb. Superintendent Cherry emerged with a letter from Howe which stated that the dispute was indeed due to a misunderstanding, that zonal assignment and free choice were required, and that Cherry would do both according to the plan. It will be recalled that the initial zone assignment plan covered only two grades. The handling of this case called forth a searing memorandum to Secretary of H.E.W Gardner from H.E.W.Atlanta regional director William Page. Not intended for publication but somehow released to the press, the memorandum warned against the undermining of regional enforcement efforts by Washington officials. Said Page:in a reference to Supt. Cherry of DeKalb: "If any of the 2000 school superintendents can negotiate his case with Commissioner Howe, why should 10,000 hospital administrators not have direct access to the attorney-general?"

In late July and early August, Kruger had another well publicized confrontation with school officials, this time in Fulton County, Georgia. Suggesting a possible cut-off of funds, Kruger questioned whether the county was soing enough to discourage intimidation of Negroes who might transfer under the freedom of choice plan. Angry Georgia school officials protested this action to Commissioner Howe. No funds were withheld.

These officials and others representing Georgia and South Carolina met in Washington with Howe on August 4. They demanded that Howe transfer Kruger. Congressman and other ~~xxxxxx~~ political figures echoed the demand. The irate educators called Kruger the "hatchet man" for the Office of Education, charging that he had been "disruptive." Kruger had been enforcing the 1966 guidelines to the extend that only five of S.C.'s 108 school districts had had their plans approved. Howe assured the Georgia delegation of school administrators representing Georgia and South Carolina dissidents that "he"would review the Kruger situation."

On September 9, the Atlanta Constitution reported that W. Stanley Kruger had been transferred. Commissioner Howe announced the move as part of a change to locating compliance personnel in regional offices. Kruger had worked out of Washington.

THE COMING OF FALL

Over the summer, defiance had burgeoned. At the annual meeting of the Southern Regional Education Board in Miami Beach, Governor George C. Wallace of Alabama sought to line up unified opposition to the guidelines. Governors and educators rejected open defiance, but agreed with Wallace that the guidelines go too far. In South Carolina, Atty. Gen. Daniel R. McLeod met with HEW officials to determine "how they justify the requirements of the guidelines." He was accompanied by Robert Alexander, federal coordinator for the governor's office. S.C. governor Robert McNair had said earlier that the attorney general's office would make its service available to any school district bringing court action against the guidelines in the event of loss of federal funds.

[OMIT?? Further evidence that integration was far from realized accumulated. On July 1, the Office of Education had issued a preliminary report on the progress of school desegregation required by the 1964 Civil Rights Act. The Office estimated that almost 80% of all white pupils attend schools that are from 90-100% white, and at least 97% go to schools that are more than 50% white. The report also stated that more than 65% of all Negro pupils in the first grade attend schools that are between 90 and 100% Negro. Furthermore, 87% of Negro pupils at grade one and 66% at grade 12 attend schools that are 50% or more Negro. In the South, the report added, "most students attend schools that are 100 per cent white or Negro." A complete 400 page report was to be issued later.]

As fall arrived and schools opened, the Wall Street Journal of September 12 reported that many school districts had decided to forego federal funds rather than desegregate. The largest increases in desegregation were coming in large cities which have been under court orders to integrate. For example, in New Orleans where frenzied cadres of mothers howled at the birth of desegregation in two schools in 1960, the number of Negro students attending schools with whites increased from 2800 to 5100. Faculty desegregation also began. Disturbance over desegregation in nearby St. Bernard Parish suggest that the mothers may have left the city. In Atlanta where desegregation began peacefully in 1961, the number was expected to increase substantially over the 6000 mark of the previous year but precise numbers could not be obtained. In these cities and others, however, there is evidence that officials include in desegregation counts students from pre-dominantly Negro schools which have only token white attendance.

OPTION:

[

Include section of state statistics here if we have some that are reliable enough.]

THE COMPLIANCE SITUATION CURRENTLY

As of mid-September, 2669 of the 4600 school districts in the 17 Southern and border states have desegregated satisfactorily according to HEW. Another 168 districts are desegregating under court order. 1800 other districts operating dual school systems have been told to submit plans of compliance with USOE guidelines. 1400 have done so and have been judged acceptable.

Of the remaining 400, 250 have proposed plans that are still being reviewed for acceptability. 150 have not turned in acceptable guarantees of compliance. Federal funds have been stopped for 39 of these. Action to cut off funds to 64 others has begun, and may begin shortly for 47 more.

THE SOUTHERN OFFENSIVE IN CONGRESS

As if the very limited effect of H.E.W. TITLE VI enforcement were not harmful enough, the South's men in Congress seem intent upon pouring salt in wounds just deepened by something called white backlash. Interpretive stories favorable to their cause have been distributed by usually unsympathetic sources such as the news services of the NEW YORK TIMES and the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. Achievements assigned to under Title VI enforcement have come quickly.

First, on September 26, the Senate Appropriations Committee attacked a report to this year's H.E.W. appropriation bill saying that the 1966 guidelines may be illegal and asking Secretary Gardner to re-examine them. The report noted that a transcript of debate on the 1964 Civil Rights Act quotes the then Senator Hubert Humphrey as saying that Title IV of the bill precluded the Office of Education's using Title VI to require an end to racial imbalance. The report also said the committee members had received many complaints about "harrassment" of school officials by compliance officers. The fall debate has never really gone beyond these two points of inept administration and exceeding congressional intent to the constitutional issue of racial discrimination.

Second, on October 10, Democratic floor leaders in both houses struck from the $6.4 billion school aid bill a provision giving special aid to schools desiring to correct racial imbalance.

Third, the same day, the House voted a Southern sponsored amendment to the school aid bill which requires a full hearing before the U.S.O.E. can defer funds from a school district found to be in violation of the guidelines. While this amendment has since been amended in conference with the Senate to say that funds may be suspended provided a hearing is held within 60 days and a decision reached within another 30 days, the initial adoption of the amendment reflected the climate of opinion in the House.

Fourth, on October 7, even President Johnson acknowledged instances of harassment, mistakes, and enthusiasm by U.S.O.E. staff.

While the ultimate success of the southern offensive is by no means assured, so far it has been devastating to the constitutional goal of ending dual school systems. The 1966 guidelines may have marked the end of innocence for U.S.O.E., but they did not mark the end of school segregation for the South.

III. Congressional Intent, Administrative Guidelines, and the Constitution

Evaluation of the effectiveness of both the guidelines and their application by U.S.O.E. can take place only after the intent of Congress in Title VI and the requirements of the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court have been considered. The end sought must be clarified before the method can be analyzed properly.

Congressional Intent

The Senate Appropriations Committee with 8 Southern=members with great seniority and influence out of a total membership of 23, officially raised the argument that U.S.O.E. enforcement was exceeding congressional intent in the report it attached to the H. E. W. appropriation bill. This argument had been repeatedly advanced by conservative newspaper columnists such as David Lawrence long before the Committee Report. The Negro noted then Senator Humphrey's linking of Title IV's prohibition of forced racial balances to application of Title VI. It therefore concluded that U.S.O.E.'s use of percentages to measure progress toward ending discriminatory dual school systems was a violation of Title IV.

This argument, though clear and subtle, is nevertheless a deliberate distortion of the prima facie intent of Title IV. It has gone unchallenged by many who know better; it has misled many more who should know better. Even the usually perceptive Tom Wicker of the New York Times uses the argument as a rhetorical question to conclude his column in the October 11 NEW YORK TIMES. Without analyzing Title IV as a whole, Wicker asks: "In enforcing desegregation as clearly required by Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, is the O. E. going to far as to violate the equally clear provision of Title IV that desegregation shall not mean the assignment of students to public shcools to overcome racial imbalance?"

The issue then is the interpretation of Title IV in relation to Title VI. Title VI as quoted earlier in this paper, clearly prohibits any discrimination subsidized by Federal Funds. Wicker admits this and so do the most vehement southern opponents of Title VI. The real question is the meaning of Title IV of the Civil Rights Acts of 1964.d

When the definition of desegregation in Title IV is considered as a whole rather than in part, its meaning can no longer be in question.

Title IV, Section 401, (b):

> "Desegregation" means the assignment of students to public schools and within such schools without regard to their race, color, religion, or national origin, but "desegregation" shall not mean the assignment of students to public schools in order to overcome racial imbalance.

Rightly or wrongly, this definition is aimed at dejure segregation in the South and the imbalance provision was an obvious attempt to win legislative support among Northern congressmen by proscribing one form of federal pressure against de facto segregation in northern cities. The forced bussing is the measure being prevented here is made explicit in Section 407 (a) of Title IV.

Thus, the intent of Congress is clear. The appeal of southern officials to Title IV is really only an appeal to a relatively minor qualification of the whole thrust of Title IV. That thrust is toward complete and total "assignment of students to public schools and within such schools with regard to their race", i.e. the complete and total end of segregated dual school systems. This thrust presupposes de jure discrimination. To be achieve it requires the reorganization and reconstitution of school patterns in the South which have not just arisen de facto but have been established by intent, state law, and educational policy. The same officials who established this pattern now ask that it be legitimized under "free choice plans" without their making structural changes in those patterns. What was called separate but equal is now called free choice in a daring display of doubl think.

U.S.O.E. guidelines, by enforcing Title VI, attempted to prevent this kind of evasion of the intent of Title IV. They insisted that gradualllsteps be taken to eliminate assignment of pupils on the basis of race. They tried to guard against many reported instances of intimidation and riolence against Negroes who exercised their right to an education free from racial discrimination. The guidelines are, in short, consistent with theobvious intent of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Moreover, they require only token and preliminary steps toward fulfilling that intent.

CONSTITUTTIONAL PROTECTION AGAINST RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

That the intend of Congress rightly understood is in harmony with judicial interpretations of constitutional protections since 1954 is equally clear. There has been no direct judgement on the guidelines but recent court comments indicate their consistency with the Constitution and judicial opinion. These are also "the law" and the guidelines hardly go beyond them. In fact, they lag behind many court orders.

In april, the Office of Education requested federal courts to change school desegregation orders to conform with the new guidelines. The fact that the bulk of city school districts in the South, including Atlanta, New Orleans, Miami, Jackson, Montgomery, Birmingham, Nashville, Charleston, Little Rock, and Richmond, were operating under court-approved desegregation plans made the request important.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune reported on April 27 that the Justice Department has made a formal proposal for a uniform school desegregation order for federal courts and asked the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to adopt it as a model in its many Negional cases. The proposed order generally followed the guidelines, calling for desegregation of all public school grades by the fall of 1967 under genuine "freedom-of-choice" plans. John Dear, head of the civil rights wing of the Justice Department, sub itted the proposal to the South's highest federal court. In emphasizing the need for a uniform plan, the Department cited 99 plans approved by district courts in the past 10 years that fell below federal requirements in the guidelines.

On May 31, the Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal by Jackson, Mississippi school officials, whose plea before the Fifth Circuit Court had prompted Appeals Judge John Minor Wisdom to comment that such cases "tax the patience of the court." In their appeal, school officials lamented that, if the Circuit Court decision were left standing, "it will result in a finding that there are no conditions or circumstances under whihh educators and administrators may ever take into consideration the racial characteristics and aptitudes regardless of the effect that such may have upon the education of the children or upon the educational system as a whole." Before the Circuit Court acted, U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize had ruled in favor of Negro plaintiffs, although he said that to desegregate schools "would substantially destroy the present levels of academic achievement in the school district." Mize said he was bound by superior court decision on the issue of racial disparities and differences. (The Fifth Circuit in reversing a Georgia federal district court ruling in the famous Stell v. Savannah-Chatham County Board of Education, held that: "We do not read the major premise of the decision of the Supreme Court in the first Brown case as being limited to the facts of the cases there presented. We read it as proscribing segregation in the public education process on the stated ground that separate but equal schools for the races were inherently unequal. This being our interpretation of the teaching of that decision, it follows that it would be entirely inappropriate for it to be rejected or obviated by this court.) (RRLR II (1966) p. 178)

But Mize called for "a reappraisal and complete reconsideration" by the Supreme Court of its 1954 decision against racial segregation in public schools."

On August 16, the Fifth Circuit Court ruled that Mobile County, Alabama's school desegregation plan must be revised so that complete desegregation would beaccomplished by the fall of 1967. In so doing the Court held that the plan approved by federal district court to be "far short of the requirements of the law....Even as to those grades which, under the plan, have actually become desegregated, there is no true substance in the alleged desegregation. Less than two-tenths of 1 per cent of the Negro children in the system are attending white schools." In the decision the court called attention to the guidelines, adding, "This appeal....points up, among other things, the utter impracticability of a continued exercise by the courts of the responsibility for supervising the manner in which segregated school systems break out of the policy of complete segregation into gradual stepxsof compliance....During the past 18 months pronouncements of this court have interpreted the Supreme Court's interim decisions as requiring considerably greater measures of desegregation. Thus a decision by a trial court 18 months ago is not likely to reflect the current law on the subject."

In the light of these court actions and others since 1954, the consistency of the guidelines with constitutional protection cannot be questioned.

THE GUIDELINES AND THEIR APPLICATION: AN EVALUATION

Do we need this section?

Glenda, Bob, or whoever

(Parts in Glenda's material marked - may be useful)

Re-capitulate comments about goal of guidelines; i.e. and of dual schools; evaluate relative to their being admittedly only a first step toward goals.

Elements that shoudd be discussed: lack of enforcement funds and staff, intimidation, free choiced reports of over-zealousness, use of % to measure change

IV. CONCLUSIONS

1. Southern educational and political establishment has successfully avoided desegregation in 1966 by diverting attention from their failure to end segregated dual systems to fears of forced racial balance.
2. Congress intended to end the discrimination inherent in dual school systems (see above) in Title IV & VI Civil Rights Acts of 1964 despite a prohibition of imposed racial balances. This prohibition presupposed de facto not de jure segregation. Hence it is not relevant in the South until de jure segregation ends.
3. The guidelines would not have ended dual schools even if perfectly applied and accepted; they were intended only as instruments for a significant beginning toward the goal of no racial discrimination. They would have made such a beginning if implemented. Desegregation only increased to_____this year. The guidelines were not fully implemented.
4. Political pressure on administrators, fear of white backlash, and confusion about the intent of Congress in Title IV have all weakened pressures for strong enforcement. Lack of enthusiasm for the guidelines by civil rights groups who though them too weak must also be considered.
5. The administration of the actual compliance process was_____. It was hampered by lack of staff and funds.
6. Above all, attention was returned to the proper focus, the end of discriminatory dual schoolssystems and the establishment of genuine freedom of choice - free from reprisal.

More than two decades ago, the civil rights movement set equality in education as a basic ~~xxxxx~~ goal. More than one decade ago, the U. S. Supreme Court held that dual public school systems discriminating by race were unconstitutional on their face. After as long a time, it may be asked whether the persistence of segregation is not an important factor in the frustration of which civil strife is born. Are the anomic outbursts which the press calls riots essentially angry lamentations?

The fate of the 1966 guidelines is lamentable. "The slow undoing" of human rights cannot be observed with complete dispassion by anyone.

File Projects John Pecoul

John Pecoul

Table 1

FEDERAL PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Fiscal Year Ended June 30, 1965

EXPENDITURES (In Thousands)

PROGRAM	TOTAL U.S.	SOUTH	% OF TOTAL U.S.
TOTAL FEDERAL FUNDS	$ 2,885,320	$ 867,325	30%
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE
Old-age assistance	1,323,352	538,079	40.7%
Medical assistance to aged	271,288	15,331*	5.7%
Aid to blind	46,872	18,598	39.7%
Aid to permanently and totally disabled	287,338	94,552	32.9%
Aid to families with dependent children	956,470	165,719	17.3%

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTING PROGRAM

SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE	100%	100%
Old age	45.9%	62.0%
Medical Assistance to aged	9.4%	1.8% *
Aid to Blind	1.6%	2.1%
Aid to permanent and totally disabled	10.0%	10.9%
Aid to families with dependent children	33.1%	19.1%

* No program: Georgia, Mississippi, Texas

Table 2

EXPENDITURE FOR PUBLIC ASSISTANCE FROM STATE FUNDS

(Amounts in Thousands)

	ALL 50 STATES	SOUTH	% OF ALL OTHERS
TOTAL FROM STATE FUNDS	$ 1,782,992	$ 251,941	7.1
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE	1,578,963	244,933	15.5
Old-age assistance	632,653	168,106	26.6
Medical assistance for the aged	159,994	4,885	3.1
Aid to the blind	45,539	6,159	13.5
Aid to the permanently and totally disabled	177,295	28,314	16.0
Aid to families with dependent children	563,483	37,468	6.6
GENERAL ASSISTANCE	204,028	6,910	3.4

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION

TOTAL ~~STATE FUNDS~~)	100%	100%
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE	88.6	97.3
Old-age assistance	35.5	66.8
Medical assistance for the aged	9.0	1.9
Aid to the blind	2.6	2.4
Aid to the permanently and totally disabled	9.9	11.2
Aid to families with dependent children	31.6	14.9
GENERAL ASSISTANCE	11.4	2.7

AGGREGATE EXPENDITURES FOR PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

(Federal, State, Local)

(In thousands)

	50 STATES & D.C.	SOUTH	% OF 50 STATES
TOTAL	$ 5,285,321	$ 1,150,925	21.8
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE	4,903,394	1,133,481	23.1
Old-age assistance	2,042,572	748,886	36.7
Medical assistance to aged	523,694	20,979	4.1
Aid to blind	98,898	25,527	25.8
Aid to permanent and totally disabled	513,346	127,161	24.8
Aid to families with dependent children	1,724,883	209,801	12.2
GENERAL ASSISTANCE (Cases)	381,927	18,573	4.9

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTING PROGRAM

TOTAL	100.0%	100.0%
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE	92.8	98.4
Old-age assistance	38.6	65.1
Medical assistance to aged	9.9	1.8
Aid to blind	1.9	2.2
Aid to permanent and totally disabled	9.7	11.1
Aid to families with dependent children	32.6	18.2
GENERAL ASSISTANCE	7.2	1.6

Table 3b

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION BY SOURCE OF FUNDS

100%	FEDERAL		STATE		LOCAL
	U.S.	SOUTH	U.S.	SOUTH	U.S.	SOUTH
TOTAL	54.6	75.4	33.7	21.9	11.7	2.7
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASSISTANCE	58.8	76.5	32.2	21.6	9.0	1.9
Old age assistance	64.8	71.9	31.0	22.4	4.2	5.7
Medical assistance to aged	51.8	73.1	30.6	23.3	17.6	3.6
Aid to blind	47.4	72.9	46.0	24.1	6.6	3.0
Aid to permanent and totally disabled	56.0	74.4	34.5	22.3	9.5	3.3
Aid to families with dependent children	55.5	79.0	32.7	17.9	11.9	3.1
GENERAL ASSISTANCE	....	....	53.4	37.2	46.6	62.8

Table 4

TOTAL WELFARE EXPENDITURES IN SOUTH BY STATE (In Thousands)

PROGRAM	ALL SO. STATES..	TEXAS	LA.	ALA.	GA.	FLA.	N.CAR.	KEN.	TENN.	ARK.	MISS.	VA.	S.CAR.
TOTAL:	$1,150,925	$227,590	$184,633	$112,910	$103,731	$100,803	$91,345	$82,866	$62,982	$61,990	$55,477	$34,399	$32,200
% OF SOUTH	100%	19.8%	16.1%	9.8%	9.0%	8.8%	7.9%	7.2%	5.5%	5.4%	4.8%	3.0%	2.8%
SPECIAL TYPES OF PUBLIC ASST.	1,133,481	224,216	179,440	112,899	102,849	97,856	89,418	82,289	62,427	61,579	55,245	32,579	31,555
OLD-AGE	748,886	193,450	133,255	91,178	62,759	58,108	31,610	42,650	29,566	45,139	34,641	10,198	16,332
MED. ASST. TO AGED	20,979	.....	1,078	892	.....	2,881	2,020	3,791	3,445	1,977	.....	2,319	2,576
AID TO BLIND	25,527	3,956	2,713	1,488	2,280	2,106	4,069	2,098	1,382	1,649	1,446	958	1,382
AID TO PERM. TOT. DISABLED	127,161	6,656	13,555	8,302	19,242	14,511	19,236	9,527	8,345	6,838	9,580	5,624	5,745
AID TO FAM. W DEP. CHILD.	209,801	20,153	28,839	11,039	18,568	20,250	32,482	24,224	19,690	5,977	9,579	13,480	5,520
GENERAL ASSISTANCE	18,573	3,374	5,193	11	882	2,946	1,927	576	556	411	232	1,820	645

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION BY PROGRAM

TOTAL	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%
SPEC. TYPES ASST.	98.4	98.5	97.2	99.9	99.1	97.1	97.9	99.3	99.1	99.3	99.6	94.7	98.0
OLD AGE	65.1	85.0	72.2	80.7	60.5	57.7	34.6	51.5	46.9	72.8	62.4	29.6	50.7
MED. AID AGED	1.8	.0	.6	.8	.0	2.9	2.2	4.6	5.5	3.2	....	6.7	8.0
BLIND	2.2	1.7	1.5	1.3	2.2	2.1	4.4	2.5	2.2	2.7	2.6	2.8	4.3
AID PERM. DISABLED	11.1	2.9	7.3	7.3	18.5	14.4	21.1	11.5	13.2	11.0	17.8	16.4	17.8
AID FAM W/DEPEND. CHILDREN	18.2	8.9	15.6	9.8	17.9	2.0	35.6	29.2	31.3	9.6	17.3	39.2	17.2
GENERAL ASSISTANCE	1.6	1.5	2.8	.1	.9	2.9	2.1	.7	.9	.7	.4	5.3	2.0

Table 5

FAMILES (%) BELOW $3000 (1960 CENSUS)

		PERCENTAGE	WHITE	NEGRO
U.S.	.4	21.4	18.6	47.9
SOUTH
ALABAMA		39.1	29.6	67.8
ARKANSAS		47.7	41.0	79.5
FLORIDA		28.4	24.1	54.5
GEORGIA		35.6	25.7	67.7
KENTUCKY		38.8	36.7	57.7
LOUISIANA		35.6	24.2	65.8
MISSISSIPPI		51.6	34.4	82.9
N. CAROLINA		37.1	28.8	70.1
S. CAROLINA		39.5	24.5	77.0
TENNESSEE		38.3	34.2	63.8
TEXAS		28.7	25.2	57.6
VIRGINIA		27.9	13.7	54.1

file cc

Rough Draft for Comment and Revision

John Pecoul

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE IN THE SOUTH

Make file
John Pecoul

THE FACT OF NEED.

More of the poor live in the South than in other regions of the United States. Approximately half live in the South.

The proportion of households trapped by poverty is larger in the South than in other regions. Almost one of every four is poor.

Within the South, the proportion of black households in poverty is more than twice that of the white households. 17.9% of 12 million white families is ppor as opposed to 58.3% of 2.3 million black families by the Orshansky index. 97 of the 100 poorest counties in the United States are in the South.

These economic facts must underg~~ind~~ any intelligent assessment of the scope and adequacy of present public assistance programs in the region. These facts are the unanimous conclusions of analysts of American poverty who use differing economic categories and differing statistical sources. Whether the Conference on Economic Program, the Social Security Administration, the President's Council of Economic Advisers, or the Bureau of Labor Statistics is the source for data and analysis, the conclusions are the same. Whether the poverty-line is defined as $300 or $400 or as a dependent variable of family size, age, and farm residence after Mollie Orshansky or Alan Haber, the conclusions are the same. The South has more poverty overall, a higher rate of its occurrence, and the highest rate among its black people. (See also Table 8 and 9)

THE PLACE OF PUBLICE ASSISTANCE.

Public assistance in the South must be considered against this background. It is not the purpose of the present study to jointthe controversy over welfare policies. It is rather to provide an information for all participants in the debate and for whatever consensus finally emerges.

The perspective proposed here is that public assistance* --direct cash subsidy to those outside the work force in its present or emergent form as negative income tax or guaranteed annual income--provides a crucial floor for bare or hopefully comfortable subsistence without which any talk of self-help is a mockery. This perspective is important from two points of view. First, the current sophistication about poverty as a broad socio-cultural phenomenon has caused some to ignore the economic component. While it is clearly true that for many of the poor cash payments alone will not end poverty, it is equally true that better schools, health service, consumer education, housing and so forth will not buy food, clothing, or the simplest amenities on which joy, hope, self-pride and iniative thrive.

Second, while cash payments alone will not suffice for some of the poor, they will be sufficient to end poverty among those for whom deprivation is primarily or solely monetary. S. M. Miller argues persuasively that the majority of the poor are "stable", i.e. free from family or social pathologies and employed at steady but very low pay, low skill jobs. Many of these stable poor need nothing more than direct cash aid for their children or their own old age - plus job re-training for themselves and good education for their children. The boost from this support should be enough to break the poverty cycle permanently for about half the American poor according to Miller.

Thus, both the need for a minimum subsistence and the possibility of ending poverty for so many "stable" poor require attention to the facts about cash payments now. What follows is primarily an examination of the status quo in public assistance. It initially leaves aside the more basic question of the adequacy of present programs in the South in order to discover precisely what the South is doing vis a vis its degree of need and its receipt of national resources.

WHAT IS SPENT IN THE SOUTH FOR PUBLIC ASSISTANCE.

21.8 % of all expenditures for public assistance payments in the U. S. in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1965 occurred in the South. (Table 1) While this reflects the South's having 25.9% of the U. S. population in 1960, it does not reflect adequate consideration of the concentration of the nation's poverty in the South and the high incidence of poverty within the region.

Among individual states Texas and Louisiana spend significantly more than all the others. The size of the Texas expenditure can be attributed to the size of the state. It is less impressive when considered on a per inhabitant basis (Table 3) or a rate per 1000 basis (Table 4).

The Louisiana expenditure is even more striking when either the size of the state, the number of recipients, the rate per 1000 population and the average payment per recipient or all of these is considered. (Tables 2-4) Prima facie, this state's program cannot be judged to be adequate simply because it is large relative to national as well as southern standards. That conclusion would require more investigation. That it is a questionable conclusion will be seen when the specific programs to which states allot their resources are considered. Nevertheless, the case of Louisiana is atypical of the South in the public assistance field. The roots can be traced to the atypical southern politics of the regime of Huey Long in which desirable social welfare programs served the political welfare of Mr. Long to the chagrin of both the more innocent liberals and the conservative business elite. The political function served by welfare in Louisiana today is another issue that would have to be investigated before conclusions could be drawn.

At the other end of the scale stand Virginia and South Carolina. (Tables 2-4) They are low by all the standards by which Louisiana is high. Total expenditures, degree of coverage, payment per recipient, and number covered are generally near or at the bottom of the region and the nation. Two notable exceptions occur in Virginia and thereby differentiate it from South Carolina. First, Virginia expends nore than twice as much overall for aid to dependent children than does South Carolina. It pays more per recipient to more families although its rate of coverage per 1000 is almost the same. (Table 4) Second, while Virginia assists those aged covered with higher payments, the degree of coverage per 1000 over age 65 is one-fourth that of South Carolina. (Table 4)

The other states fall in irregular patterns between the extremes of Louisiana and South Carolina. Alabama and Mississippi attract special comment because of their positions in total spending and their way of distributing funds. Mississippi's per inhabitant effort is relatively high although total spending ranks near the bottom just aheah of Virginia and South Carolina. (Tables 2 and 3) Mississippi is unique, however, in that its degree of coverage per 1000 children is highest in the south. Its coverage per 1000 over 65 ranks third, just below Louisiana and Alabama. At the same time, the average payments to the aged and to dependent children are the lowest in the region. Mississippi spreads its resources to give a little to many. Alabama acts similarly in aiding dependent children but aids the aged with highpayments and a degree of coverage per 1000 over 65 second only to Louisiana. The scope of aid to the aged in Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi suggests the political utility of aid to the voting aged when contrasted with the meager aid to non-voting dependent children.

HOW THE SOUTH ALLOCATES PUBLIC ASSISTANCE RESOURCES

The contrast between aid to the aged and aid to dependent children is not limited to Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi. It is a regional pattern which is more pronounced in these states. (Table 1)

The percentage distribution by program reveals that both in the South and in the nation these two programs account for the great bulk of public assistance expenditures. (Table 1) With this, the similarity ends. Whereas in the nation as a whole, assistance to the aged uses 38.6% of all funds and aid to dependent children uses 32.6%, in the South the respective percentages are 65.1 and 18.2. The only southern states which approximate the national proportional distribution are North Carolina and Virginia, (Table 2) but their coverage per 1000 is very limited. (Table 4). The proportion given to the aged is above the regional average in Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, and Arkansas. The proportion given to dependent children is below the regional average in Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, rkansas, Mississippi and South Carolina. (Table 2)

The relative proportions allotted to the aged and to dependent children are a point of controversy. Most critics attack the national proportions as severly discriminatory against the needs of children and barely sufficient for the aged poor. If the national proportions can be called inequitable, those in the South can be called iniquitous. Remembering that the South includes two times as many poor as any other region, Burton Weisbrod's analysis of Social Security Administration statistics indicates the degree of need among children. In this country, there are 15 million poor under age. 18 in contrast to 1.5 million poor over age 65 according to the Orshansky indes. When it is considered that the number of recipients of public assistance to the aged was 2.1 million while the number of children aided was only 3.3 million,* it can be concluded that public assistance does not begin to cover the vast 15 million child poor. Even those covered receive average monthly payments of only $33.83 in the nation as a whole. For the South, dependent children receive no higher than $25.55 in Kentucky and as low as $9.13 in Mississippi. (Table 4(That racial discrimination makes the burden of Negro children even more onerous than it is on white children is suggested by the findings of a study by the Georgia Council on Human Relations in cooperation with the Columbia University School of Social Work.

Clearly, the present system of aid to dependent children does not begin to deal with the scope of poverty in nation or region. While the aged poor may not be receiving sufficiently large payments, it does appear that most if not all of them are being aided. Most of the 15 million child poor go largely unhelped by public assistance. A bare 3.3 million of them are aided negligibly as "dependent" and deserve more systematic and substantial aid if the developmental roots of poverty are to be severed. They are "dependent" upon a society which shuns them as illegitimate for being poor while refusing to acknowledge the illicit socio-economic intercourse which sired them.

The children-aged assistance proportions are not the only ones deserving comment, although they are the largest programs. Equally symptomatic they are the largest programs. Equally symptomatic of problems in the region's public assistance policies are the low allocations for medical assistance to the aged and general assistance. (Table 1) The South accounts for only 4.1% of the total national expenditures for medical aid to the aged under public assistance programs. It spends only 4.9% of the funds for general assistance, i.e. individual cases of special need determined by case-workers. Whereas in the nation a a whole, medical assistance to the aged receives 9.9% of all public assistance funds and general assistance receives 7.2%, in the south medical aid accounts for only 1.8% of all public assistance funds spent in the region and general assistance accounts for only 1.6%.

The implication ~~xhxx~~ here is twofold. First, Southern states have not availed themselves of available federal resources for medical aid probably because of non-discrimination conditions for full participation and because state funds are also required. Mississippi, and Texas had no programs at all. Others were very limited. (Table 2) Second, since there are no federal funds for general assistance to special cases, most southern states have made no effort to fulfill their own responsibility. Only Louisiana makes a significan effort relative to its size. Texas spends less for a population three times as large. Both states have important revenue sources in their extensive petroleum deposits. The other states either do not have or have not allocated adequate or even minimal resources for casework. (Table 2)

SOURCES OF FUNDS

The discussion of resources for general assistance raises the question of source of funds. In general, the South is much more dependent on federal funds than is the nation as a whole. (Table 5) Further, local governments give proportions of aid in the South much smaller than in the nation except on general assistance. On this program, southern local governments compensate for deficiency of state government efforts. Also worthy of note is the extent to which federal funds subsidize the southern preference for aid to the aged over aid to dependent children. Consequently, 45.9% of all federal public assistance funds go for old age assistance. (Table 6) Also, the South accounts for 43.3% of all federal oldage assistance funds as opposed to 30% of all federal funds and only 21.8% of all public assistance funds--local, state, and federal. Once again a question occurs as to whether this would be so if children were voters like the aged. Finally, when state funds alone are considered, southern states spend considerably less than both their population and their degree of poverty require. (Table 7)

CONCLUSION

1. As a whole and in almost all the individual states, public assistance expenditures in the south are below the national average in terms of total funds, amounts per inhabitant, average payment per recipient, and coverage per 1000 population in the given category for special assistance. Louisiana is an exceptiontto this regional pattern.

2. Expenditure of both federal and all public assistance funds in the south is not commensurate with the degree of need indicated by comparative statistics on poverty in region and nation. It appears to be more commensurate with population and hence voting strength and congressional representation.

3. The per recipient payments and number covered under aid to dependent children is woefully inadequate to the number of child poor in region and nation.

4. Southern states give a larger proportion of assistance to the aged than does the nation as a whole; they give a smaller proportion to aid dependent children.

5. Southern states avoided pre-medicare programms of aged-medical aid.

6. Southern states except Louisiana make little effort to aid cases of special need when compared with the nation.

7. Southern states depend much more on federal funds for public assistance programs than the nation as a whole.

* "Public assistance" as used here does not include Old Age Survivors, and Disability Insurance, unemployment compensation, job-retraining, and anti-poverty programs. It is primarily direct cash payments to individuals in special need under the federally subsidized state programs noted in Table 1 and under general assistance programs supported solely by states. General assistance is aid to the poor beyond what is covered by the special assistance program. They depend wholly upon the individual states and thus vary widely with the available resources and the commitments of the states.

 S. M. Miller, "The American Lower Classes: A Typological Approach", New Perspective On Poverty (ed. X/ Shostate and W. Gamberg (Englewood Cliffs, J. J.: Prentice-Hall, Inc., 1965) p. 27.

 Burton Weisbrod, "The Economics of Poverty". (Englewood Cliffs, J.J.: Prentice-Hall, Inc., 1965)

*Division of Research, Bureau of Family Services, Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare: Statistics for June, 1965.

It should be noted that this analysis is based on the most recently available data i.e. the fiscal year ended June 30, 1965. Thus, it does not consider the effect of Medicare which began July 1, 1966.

Richard Dalks Report

See Research + Info (special file)

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE - TO WHAT END?

Introduction

Much criticism of public welfare stems from the need for a basic change, a redefinition -- a restructuring of the premises upon which the present basic welfare programs were built. This report originated from the belief that such a restructuring is necessary and holds the basic hypotheses that, first, the poorest and most needy persons of the United States are not receiving and would not receive, even with the fair administration of welfare regulations, aid commensurate with their need and, second, the relatively and absolutely small amount of expenditures for public assistance is due not to the lack of need but rather to harsh welfare qualifications and a lack of sincere concern for the needy.

In order to test these hypotheses, the 100 poorest counties[1] of the United States were chosen for investigation. These were felt to be areas in which public assistance would be most needed and in which both the faults and the assets of assistance would be most pronounced. Ninety-seven of the 100 counties were in the southern states[2]: one in both

---

[1] The median family income of the counties is used as a measure of poverty in selecting these counties, since it seemed to indicate better the central characteristic of the population than did other possible measures.

[2] The three non-southern counties were: Wade Hampton, Alaska; Bethel, Alaska; and Adair, Oklahoma, with respective rankings from poorest to least poor of 12, 46, and 89.

Louisiana and Virginia; three in North Carolina; four in South Carolina; six in Texas, eight in both Arkansas and Alabama; nine in Georgia; 11 in Tennessee; 22 in Kentucky; and 24 in Mississippi. The welfare programs decided upon for use were primarily Old Age Assistance; Aid to the Blind; Aid to Families with Dependent Children; and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled; and secondarily Medical Assistance to the Aged, and General Relief. Individual states' variations of these programs, such as Aid to the Aged for Old Age Assistance, Aid to Dependent Children for Aid to Families with Dependent Children, and General Assistance for General Relief, differ mainly in detail from those named as basic and are therefore included here in the basic programs. Since these programs for the major part of public assistance efforts and are fairly widespread, they obviously should cover most cases of need. Most basic data was drawn from the U. S. Census of population: 1960. There are so substantial reasons for questioning the relative validity of the figures obtained, though the concrete numbers used have undoubtedly changed. Information concerning the amount and distribution of public assistance was drawn from individual states' annual welfare reports and from regional offices of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW). Information concerning welfare regulations was drawn primarily from the latest (1964) edition of Public Assistance Report number 50, "Characteristics of State Public Assistance Plans Under the Social Security Act."

The investigation led to four major conclusions:

1. Need in the 100 poorest counties of the United States is extreme.
2. Public Assistance in the 100 poorest counties is totally inadequate to relieve existing need.
3. Not only is the total amount of public assistance expended inadequate for need, but the public assistance standards of living are also inadequate.
4. The qualifications necessary for the receipt of welfare work to restrict the number of recipients rather than to reach those in need.

Let us examine these conclusions one by one.

THE NEED IS EXTREME

Need in the 100 poorest counties of the United States is extreme. -- The median family incomes per year among the 100[3] counties ranged from a low of $1,260 in Tunica County, Mississippi ($1,740 below the generally accepted poverty level of $3,000[4] and $4,400 below the U. S. median family income), to a high of $1,956 in Atkinson County, Georgia ($1,044 below poverty level and $3,704 below the U. S. median family income). The percentage of unemployment of the civilian labor force in these counties ranged from 1.8 per cent in Robertson, Kentucky, to 21.3 per cent in Magoffin, Kentucky, with an overall median percentage of 4.9 per cent. Median unemployment for the entire nation was 5.1 per cent.[5]

(The U. S. Department of Commerce defines persons as employed if they are either (a) 'at work' -- those who did any work for pay or profit, or worked without pay for 15 hours or more on a family farm or in a family business; or (b) were 'with a job but not at work' -- those who did not

---

3 While this report actually deals with only 97 of the 100 poorest counties, none of those omitted from comparison fall at the extreme rankings of either the poorest or the least poor. Because of the position of these counties, generalizations made concerning the 100 poorest were not felt to be prejudiced.

4 This $3,000 level of income seems still to be the basic and generally accepted definition of poverty though it is being constantly limited and expanded, and qualified and broadened.

5 Hereafter, all statistics concerning median family income will be noted merely as family income. Statistics identified as medians will generally refer to overall medians.

work and were not looking for work but had a job or business from which they were temporarily absent because of bad weather, industrial dispute, vacation, illness, or other personal reasons" [emphasis added].[6] By this definition, all sharecroppers, tenant farmers, many kinds of piece laborers, and unskilled workers in various services as well as industrial or other workers who have been on strike for several months or years, regardless of the amount of income earned or the constancy of the work done, may be counted as employed. While unemployment statistics are given in this report, it can be seen by the comparison of the median unemployment percentages of the 100 poorest counties and the United States that underemployment and not unemployment is the real problem.)

LOUISIANA AND VIRGINIA

Louisiana had one parish (county) among the 100 poorest; Tensas Parish ranked 32nd from the poorest in the nation in family income, $1,683. Seventy and nine-tenths per cent (1,836) of its families had an income of less than $3,000 per year, and unemployment stood at 4.9 per cent of the civilian labor force. Thirty-nine and one-tenths per cent (4.612 persons) of Tensas' population lived on farms.[7] Virginia also had one county in the poorest 100,

---

[6] U. S. Census of the Population: 1960 Final Report, PC (1)-1C, p. xxviii.

[7] The U. S. Department of Commerce defines rural farm residents as "rural residents living on farms" -- "places of 10 or more acres from which sales of farm products amounted to $50 or more in 1959 or on places of less than 10 acres from which sales of farm products amounted to $250 or more in 1959." (U. S. Census of the Population: 1960 Final Report, PC (1)-1C, p. vii.)

Lee. Here the family income was $1,856 and unemployment was 10.0 per cent (634 persons). Sixty-nine and one-tenths per cent of Lee's families had an income of less than $3,000; 35.0 per cent lived on rural farms.

NORTH CAROLINA

North Carolina had three of the 100 poorest counties: Greene, Clay, and Tyrell, ranking 9, 90, and 92, respectively, with respective incomes of $1,451, $1,921, and $1,927. Unemployment rates were 5.0 per cent (237 persons), 9.8 per cent (154 persons), and 7.1 per cent (103 persons), respectively. The percentage of rural farm population varied from 31.9 per cent in Tyrell County to 61.9 per cent in Greene. Clay had 41.2 per cent. The families with incomes below $3,000 per year varied greatly in absolute numbers while staying fairly constant relatively, Greene having 2,444 families or 70.3 per cent, Clay having 971 families or 70.9 per cent, and Tyrell having 752 families, or 71.8 per cent.

SOUTH CAROLINA

South Carolina had four counties among the poorest: Williamsburg, ranking 24; Lee ranking 31; Calhoun ranking 49; and Clarendon, 98. Respective family incomes were $1,631; $1,680; $1,766, and $1,945. Unemployment ranged from 2.3 per cent (145 persons) to 7.5 per cent (701 persons).

The percentage of rural farm families ranged from 42.1 per cent (5,160) to 52.8 per cent (11,527). In these counties, the percentage of the families with an annual income of less than $3,000 had a median of 68.3 per cent; the range was 1.9 per cent.

TEXAS

Texas had six of the 100 poorest counties. These counties with these respective rankings were: Starr, 34; San Jacinto, 44; Zappata, 48; Kenedy, 63; Houston, 80; and Leon, 99. Family income ranged from $1,700 in Starr to $1,946 in Leon with a median of $1,803. The percentages of families with incomes below $3,000 had a low range of 5.9 per cent with a median of 67.6 per cent. The percentage of rural farm residents ranged from 5.0 per cent to 53.2 per cent with a median of 22.2 per cent. The greatest number of rural farm residents (3,836) were found in Houston County, where they comprised 19.8 per cent of the population.

ALABAMA

Eight Alabama Counties ranked in the nation's 100 poorest. They were: Lowndes, Greene, Wilcox, Bullock, Sumter, Perry, Hale, and Crenshaw, ranking 5, 6, 18, 19, 20, 29, 35, and 87, respectively, in descending order of poverty. The median family income of these families was $1,561. The median unemployment percentage was 4.6; the rural farm population, 36.3 per cent. Of these counties' families, a median of 71.0 per cent had an annual income of less than $3,000.

ARKANSAS

Eight counties in Arkansas were among the poorest: Newton, Lee, Stone, Fulton, Sharp, Woodruff, Lincoln, and Madison, ranking 28, 39, 45, 76, 81, 82, 85, and 93, respectively. The family incomes in these counties ranged from $1,666 in Newton County, to $1,928 in Madison. The median family income was $1,894. Per cent unemployment ranged from 2.1 per cent to 6.1 per cent with a median of 4.2 per cent. Rural farm families composed 31.9 per cent of the families in Lincoln County to 55.9 per cent in Lee, with a median at 43.7 per cent. The per cent of families below a $3,000 income had a rather narrow range of 13.5 and a median of 69.6 per cent. The total number of families below this $3,000 standard was 13,953.

GEORGIA

The state of Georgia had nine of the 100 poorest counties. These, with their respective rankings, were: Webster, 23; Baker, 27; Early, 36; Taliaferro, 56; Burke, 67; Union, 75; Calhoun, 86; Dooly, 97; and Atkinson, 100. These counties had a better-than-average median family income of $1,855 per annum but a still high unemployment median of 4.8 per cent. The median rural farm population was 34.5 per cent and the percentage of families making less than $3,000 per annum was 68.5 per cent.

TENNESSEE

Eleven of the poorest 100 counties of the United States were in Tennessee. These counties with their respective rankings were: Fayette, 3; Hancock, 8; Jackson, 33; Clay, 37; Haywood, 52; Johnson, 54; Lauderdale, 64; Claiborne, 73; Hardeman, 84; Lake, 88; and Fentress, 96. The median family incomes ranged from $1,363 in Fayette County to $1,942 in Fentress with a median of $1,784. The median percentage unemployment was 3.8. Unemployment percentages ranged from 2.5 to 8.4. The percentage of families living in rural farm locations had a wide range of 52.2 per cent with a median of 54.8 per cent. In these poorer counties, the percentage of families with incomes of less than $3,000 had a range of only 12.1 per cent and a median of 69.2 per cent.

KENTUCKY

Kentucky had 22 counties included in the 100 poorest. Family incomes ranged from $1,324 in Owsley County to $1,939 in Adair County. The overall median was $1,818. Unemployment ranged from 1.8 per cent in Robertson County to 21.3 per cent in Magoffin County with a median of 6.5 per cent. Kentucky contained both unemployment percentage extremes for the poorest counties. The percentage of families living on rural farms ranged from 8.9 per cent in McCreary to 70.8 per cent in Metcalf with a median of 52.1 per cent. The range of percentage of families with an income of less than $3,000 was narrow, 17.7 per cent, with a median of 72.1 per cent.

MISSISSIPPI

The state of Mississippi had the largest number of poorest counties -- 24. The median income of these counties was $1,760. One was under $1,300 per year, five were under $1,500, and 17 under $1,800. Unemployment ranged from 2.7 per cent in Kemper County to 8.5 per cent in Bolivar. The median unemployment percentage was 4.9. The percentage of persons living and working on farms, rural farm residents, had a surprising range for an agricultural areas of from 20.8 per cent in Claiborne County to 64.8 per cent in Benton. The percentage of families with an income of less than $3,000 had a small range of 13.5 per cent with a very high median of 69.9 per cent. The highest percentage was 77.8 per cent (2,700 families) found in Tunica, Mississippi.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE IS INADEQUATE

Public assistance in the 100 poorest counties is totally inadequate to relieve existing need. --Whether or not assistance is adequate for the existent need depends largely upon the definitions of the terms "adequate" and "need". In the context of this report, each of these terms has two possible meanings. "Need" may refer to a family's having an annual income of less than $3,000, or it may refer to a family's having less than a particular state's definition of need. (That which is adequate may be that which fulfills the need or that which fulfills a majority of the need.) When the poorest counties are spoken of, the choice of definitions is of little importance. These 100 counties have a median of 70.4 per cent of their families with income of less than $3,000. Of the standards which each state sets for its welfare programs, levels of income below which the individual or family is considered needy, only North Carolina was able to pay 100 per cent in all of its programs.

A LOOK AT THE STATES' EFFORTS

Louisiana made the fourth greatest effort in the nation in public assistance according to 1965 HEW figures. (See Table 1.) Even with this effort, however, in January, 1965, the state was able to provide only $82 of the $123 standard it set for the aged woman on Old Age Assistance, 66.7 per cent of the standard. For a typical family on Aid to Families with Dependent Children, a woman, a boy aged 14, a girl aged 9, and a girl aged 4, who were living in rented quarters, the state could pay only $108.00 of a $164.75 standard which it set, 65.5 per cent of the standard.[8]

For the fiscal year of 1965, Virginia made the smallest effort of any state of the nation for public assistance. (See Table 1.) Although figures for the actual number of welfare recipients are not available, the Virginia welfare program is able to provide 100 per cent of what it defines as a minimum standard of living in its Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled, and General Relief programs. It provided 90 per cent or 100 per cent, depending upon the funds of the local agencies, of what it considered a minimum standard for its Aid to Families with Dependent Children program. For the two member assistance group, two related persons who are both eligible for assistance, basic needs are set at $74 for APTD and OAA. For a four-member assistance group under AFDC, a mother and three children ages 15, 11, and 5, basic needs are $108 at 90 per cent of need and $120 at 100 per cent of need. A

---

8 Although the states of HEW Region IV, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, have now discontinued the practice of allowing differential amounts of aid for AFDC recipients depending upon whether the children are under 2 years of age, between 2 and 7, between 8 and 13, or between 13 and 18, Louisiana continues the practice. Whether or not this practice is continued in Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky, Virginia, and North Carolina was not determined.

maximum of $75 is allowed for shelter and utilities. Basic needs for two blind adults are set at $93, with the additional $75 for shelter and utilities. These are standards, amounts allowed those qualifying as completely needy. Virginia's actual state average for Old Age Assistance recipients last year was $73.39. For Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients, it was $111.94 per family. For General Relief recipients, it was $53.95.

Adequate assistance is not available in the three poorest counties of North Carolina. The state is able to pay the full standard of living it sets in the various programs, but these standards are very low. A family of four receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children is entitled to $84 for basic needs, and a maximum of $60 for shelter and utilities. A single aged or disabled adult is allowed $34 for basic needs; an aged or disabled couple is allowed $57; a blind couple is allowed $81. The amount allowed for shelter and utilities in each of these cases is $60. The median amount spent per case per month in the North Carolina Old Age Assistance program for these three counties was $47.19. In the AFDC program, it was $84.07.[9]

South Carolina sets a standard for an elderly adult living alone under the Old Age Assistance program at $77.55 per month. Of this standard, funds permit the payment of a maximum of $75 per recipient. For an elderly couple, the standard is $102.80. A maximum exists of $150. Here the $77.55 and the $102.80 are for basic needs. The additional money of the maximum is allowed for nursing care, custodial care, and housekeeping services when these are required. For blind adults and couples, assistance is available at about the same rate as it is for the aged. For the mother and three children in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, South Carolina sets a standard of $155.80. Of this it is able to pay $77. The maximum amount payable for any case, regardless of the number of children or the need of the family, is $99.00.

---

9 In North Carolina the Aid to the Blind program is headed by an agency separate from Public Welfare. The state average payment per recipient per month last year was $27.97 in the AB program.

According to January, 1965, HEW figures on Texas welfare, Texas set a standard of living - that level of income below which the individual was felt to be in need - of $82 for an average Old Age Assistance case, an elderly woman keeping house alone in rented quarters. The state was able to provide 100 per cent of this amount. Of a standard of living of $153.95 for the average case on Aid to Families with Dependent Children, a woman and three children, ages 14, 9, and 4, respectively, the state was able to provide $98, in effect, 63.7 per cent. The median amount per case per month of the actual expenditures in the OAA program for the past year in the poorest counties was $59.77. For the AFDC program, it was $87.85.

The latest HEW figures from Revion IV indicate that the Alabama standard of living for a single adult living alone under the Old Age Assistance program is $124.85. Of this standard, Alabama pays a maximum of $82. For an elderly couple, the state sets the standard of $199.30. Of this standard, it is able to pay a maximum of $164. For a typical case on Aid to Families with Dependent Children, consisting of a mother and three children, the state sets a standard of $177.00. For this family, the state can pay a maximum of $81. The maximum for a family of any size and need is $127. In percentages, Alabama is able to provide 66 per cent of what is declared minimal for the aged individual. For the aged couple, it is able to provide 82 per cent, and for the dependent family, less than 46 per cent of the need.[10] In actual expenditures, the median expenditure per case per month for the OAA program of Alabama in the poorer counties was $65.93. For the AFDC program, the median expenditure was $51.84.

According to the Arkansas Department of Public Welfare Manual, updated December 15, 1966, each eligible person for Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled, AABD, can get a maximum of $81 per person for food, clothing, personal supplies, and medical supplies. Each eligible case for Aid to Families with Dependent Children can receive a maximum of $45 per adult

---

10 While figures for Aid to the Blind and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled were not available, payments for the programs generally run the same as Old Age Assistance payments or a few dollars, $3, to $8, higher each month.

per case and $25 per child per case. The maximum payment for Aid to the Aged, Blind, and Disabled and Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients' basic and other needs is $174.

HEW figures indicate that as of January, 1965, Arkansas was able to pay 88 per cent of the Old Age Assistance standard which it set and only 57.3 per cent of the standard which it set for Aid to Families with Dependent Children. A median expenditure for OAA per case per month of $66.93 was made in the poorer counties of Arkansas during the past year.

For the state of Georgia, the standard for the single elderly adult living alone is $87.25. Of this amount, the state is able to pay $80, 92 per cent of the standard. For an elderly couple, living alone, the state standard is $141.30. Of this amount the state has a maximum of $100, 71.0 per cent of the standard. Aid to the Blind and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled standards and payable amounts, which were unavailable, run about the same as Old Age Assistance. The Georgia Aid to Families with Dependent Children standard for a woman with three children is $197.60. Of this amount, the state is able to pay a maximum of $125.63 per cent of the standard. The state is able to pay an overall AFDC maximum of $154.00. This amount is for any number of children. Georgia's actual payments in the OAA program per case per month for the past year had an average of $60.69.

The Aid to Families with Dependent Children program averaged $89.66.

For the single aged adult living alone under Tennessee's Old Age Assistance program, a standard of $92 is set. Tennessee is able to pay 98 per cent of its standard, $90, which is the highest absolute amount actually paid in Region IV. For the OAA case of an elderly couple living alone with both eligible, a standard is set by the state of $129. The state maximum payment for this case is $180. For a family of four, the standard is set at $198. Of this, the state of Tennessee is able to pay $120. A maximum, regardless of family size and need, is set at $150. In both the specific cases given and in the overall maximum, Tennessee provides more welfare than does Alabama, Mississippi, or South Carolina. In the past year, the median average amount actually paid in the poor counties per case per month to OAA recipients was $61.01. For Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients, the median average was $98.40.

According to the latest HEW data, Kentucky sets a standard of $79 for an elderly woman living alone in rented rural quarters and $94 for the same recipient when living in urban quarters under Aid to the Aged, Blind and Disabled. For a woman living alone with three children ages 15, 11, and 5, respectively, in rented rural quarters, Aid to Families with Dependent Children sets a standard of $173. The same case in urban quarters has a standard of $189. Of these standards, the AFDC program is able to provide $150 and $162, respectively.

For the single adult living alone, Mississippi sets the standard of living at $101.32. Of this standard, the state is able to provide $50. This is approximately 49%. The situation for the elderly couple is a little better. Mississippi sets the standard at $151.35. Of this, it is able to provide a maximum of $100 or 66 per cent of the standard. For the mother and three children in the Mississippi Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, the state set the standard of living at $194.09, and of this standard, it is able to pay a maximum of $50 -- 26 per cent of the standard. The state maximum for any family on AFDC is $90.

THE TWIN FAILURE: LITTLE HELP, LOW STANDARDS

Not only is the total amount of public assistance expended inadequate for need, but the public assistance standards of living are also inadequate. -- The standards for an aged adult living alone in rented urban quarters range from South Carolina's,$77.55, to Alabama's $124.85. Texas sets a standard of $82.00; Arkansas, $83.00; Georgia, $87.25; Tennessee, $92.00; North Carolina, $94.00; Kentucky, $94.00; Mississippi, $101.32; Virginia, $115.00; and Louisiana, $123.00. This amounts to a range of annual income for the single aged adult of from $930 to $1,476.

According to the latest available figures, for the elderly couple living alone in rented quarters with both eligible, the range is from that of South Carolina, $102 to that of Alabama, $199.30. North Carolina sets a standard of $117; Tennessee, $129; Kentucky, $134; Texas, $138; Georgia, $141; Arkansas, $144; Virginia, $149; Mississippi, $151.35; and Louisiana, $191. These standards amount to a range of annual income of from $1,224 to $2,391.60.

Data on the specific states' standards for Aid to the Blind and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled recipients' was unavailable. These standards are usually, however, only $5 to $10 higher than the standards of the Old Age Assistance recipients.

For the Aid to Families with Dependent Children case of a woman with three children, one between the ages of 2 and 6, one between the ages of 7 and 12, and one between the ages of 13 and 18, standards of living range from that of Arkansas at $124 to that of Tennessee at $198. North Carolina sets a standard of $144; Texas, $153.95; South Carolina, $155.80; Louisiana, $164.75; Alabama, $177; Kentucky, $189; Mississippi, $194.09; Virginia, $195; and Georgia, $197.60. These standards amount to a range of annual income from $1,488 to $2,376.

State welfare standards of living are the states' judgments as to what constitutes poverty. These are standards up to which each state attempts to bring all of its residents. Insofar as the standards are levels to which all persons will hopefully rise, they are ideals. Of great significance is that no state seen here has established $3,000 as the level of poverty - the level set by the federal government - and many have established it much lower.

EIGHT WAYS TO EXCLUDE THE NEEDY AND KEEP WELFARE ROLLS LEAN

The qualifications necessary for the receipt of welfare work to restrict the number of recipients rathern than to reach those in need. -- An examination of various qualifications necessary for the receipt of welfare by category by states shows this structured self-restrictipn:

a. Age limitations - While generally set up to prevent the overlapping of welfare programs, the age limitations placed upon recipients in some of the states deny aid to the needy. All of the states investigated require a minimum age of 65 years to qualify for Old Age Assistance. Recipients of Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled must be over 18 and under 65. Kentucky, which places all of its adult programs in one category, Aid to the Aged, Blind and Disabled, has no upper limit. It must be assumed that at the age of 65, Kentucky recipients are reclassified with no change to their benefits. The state of Tennessee changes the upper limit from 65 to 66, i.e., recipients are eligible through their 65th year. Six of the states investigated (Kentucky, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia) make no provisionsfor the age of Aid to the Blind recipients. Three states, Alabama, Arkansas, and Georgia, limit recipients to those who are 16 or over. Mississippi makes no provisions for age but requires that recipients under the age of 18 be attending either a school for the blind or a public school if the child is capable of attendance. Texas limits its Aid to the Blind recipients to 21 years of age or older. The 16 and 18 year age limitation seems at first to be of little importance since these might be thought to qualify for Aid to Families with Dependent Children. The blind do not, however, qualify for AFDC. Children under the ages of 16 and 18 must be cared for entirely by their parents and/or family. The states apparently feel that a blinddchild is no more trouble to care for than is a perfectly normal one. Children are assumed only to become problems when they turn 17 or 19. Texas' limitation of Aid to the Blind recipients to 21 years of age or over is one of the most stringent of all of the welfare qualifications.

Six states; Alabama, Arkansas, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee, limited recipients to under 16 years or if in school under 18 years. Georgia and Texas limited their recipients to those under 16 years of age. It would seem from the example of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Virginia, that the 18 year requirement is set to correspond with graduation from high school. After this time presumably the child is prepared for independence from parental supervision. If this age limit is made to correspond with the completion of high school, Georgia and Texas effectively discourage individuals from completing high school.

b. Citizenship limitations - Of the 11 states' 44 programs investigated, five programs require a welfare recipient to be a citizen of the United States. South Carolina requires its Old Age Assistance recipients to be citizens. Texas requires citizenship of its Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Blind, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled recipients. The southern areas of Texas use vast numbers of seasonal agricultural laborers. Many of these laborers are Mexican-Americans. Without the welfare citizenship requirement, Texas apparently assumes that needy laborers, the majority of them, would flood the assistance rolls. Texas overlooks the fact that only a small number of these workers would have to receive assistance if adequately paid for their labor.

c. Residency limitations - Residency requirements effect, in all likelihood, the most severe restriction of the needy from aid. Only five of the 44 programs have no residency requirements. South Carolina makes no provision for residency for Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled recipients. Kentucky requires merely that welfare recipients in the Aid to the Aged, Blind and Disabled and Aid to Families with Dependent Children programs be living in the state at the time of application. Six states, Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee, require that the recipient have spent continuously one year immediately preceding application in the state. This is commonly known as the one-year durational residency requirement. Georgia requires durational residency of one year. This year may, however, have been spent up to one year before the application was made. Old Age Assistance recipients in Arkansas must meet the one year durational residency requirement as well as the requirement of having lived for three of the last five or five of the last nine years preceding application in the state. Texas and Louisiana allow the recipient no choice. For Old Age Assistance, the recipient must have lived the duration of the year immediately preceding application in the state as well as a total of five of the last nine years immediately preceding the application.

Residency requirements for the Aid to the Blind programs are a little less stringent. (Kentucky and Mississippi merely require the recipient to be in the state at the time of application. Alabama, North Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee have the one-year durational requirement. South Carolina requires the one-year durational residency or the recipient must have been made blind while in the state and must have been in the state when the bill concerning residency was passed. Arkansas' requirement concerning AB residency is similar to its Old Age Assistance requirement, i.e., the recipient must have spent in the state either three or the last five years, or five of the last nine years, as well as continuously the year immediately preceding application. The AB recipient may also meet the requirement if he lost his sight while in the state. Louisiana also has the stipulation that an individual who lost his eyesight while in the state may be considered as meeting the residency requirement. Otherwise, the Louisiana recipient has to have spent five of the last nine years in the state as well as having continuously spent the year immediately preceding application in the state.

Texas makes no stipulation about having lost eyesight in the state. In order to receive Aid to the Blind in Texas, the recipient must have lived for five or the last nine years in the state as well as continuously the year preceding application. None of the residency requirements reveal more clearly attempts to exclude the needy than in the residency requirements for AB.

Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana almost say that they will take care of their own or those who happen to become blind in the state, but that any other needy blind are not welcome and will not receive aid. South Carolina's Aid to the Blind residency requirement borders on the absurd. The AB recipient must have met the one-year durational requirement or he must have lost his sight while in the state and have been in the state at the time the bill was passed. Apparently South Carolina feels that individuals would go to the extreme of putting out their eyes in order to receive AB, which in South Carolina is approximately $75 per month.

Residency requirements for the Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled program do little to weaken the feeling that the needy are unwelcome. While South Carolina has no residency provision for the disabled, Kentucky requires that the applicant only be in the state at the time of application. Five states, Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia, have the one-year durational requirement immediately preceding application. Georgia has the one-year durational residency not necessarily immediately preceding application. Arkansas has its three of the last five, or five of the last nine years requirement as well as the one-year durational requirement.

Most states' Aid to Families with Dependent Children programs require that either the child or the parent of the dependent child meet the one-year durational residency. Many allow this requirement to be fulfilled by a near relative with whom the child is living if the parent is not living with the child. Alabama and Louisiana allow payments to mothers of unborn children if the mother meets the one-year durational residency requirement. Two other states, Georgia and Kentucky, make no durational residency requirement upon AFDC applicants. AFDC residency requirements are fairly uniform.

d. Definitional limitations - Limitation of the number of qualified applicants for welfare is extremely varied, ranging from tight to extremely stringent. Limitation by definition does not occur in Old Age Assistance, since all persons 65 and over are eligible. More than minimal limitation does not occur in Aid to the Blind. Most states define blindness as having visual acuity of no better than 20/200 in the better eye with correcting glasses. A field defect in which the widest diameter of visual field subtends at an angular distance no greater than 20 degrees may also meet the definition of blindness in a few states.

The limitation of recipients of Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled by definitions is in several states extreme. Mississippi's limitation is not so much in definition as in the proof of the disability. HEW Public Assistance Report #50 says that Mississippi defines a disability as, "Physical or mental impairment, or a combination of impairment, which is expected to continue and which subsequently prevents [the recipient] from engaging in useful work that is within his competency and that exists in community in which he lives. Permanent and total disability must both exist and must be determined by substantiated medical findings together with complete and specific social information on the patient." (~~Italics~~ Emphasis added).[11] Mississippi is the only state investigated which requires "complete and specific social information" on a patient with a physical disability. Texas does not require the social information but sets the definition of the actual disability so tightly that only those who should have the type of care found only in a nursing home can qualify. Report #50 shows Texas' definition of a permanent and total disability as being a "physical or mental impairment, disease, or loss which is irreversible or progressive and not amenable to ordinary treatment; renders the person completely invalid so that he is helpless or is bedfast, chairfast, or requires considerable help in locomotion from others; and impairment renders him unfeasible for vocational rehabilitation."[12] Limitation by definition in Aid to Families with Dependent Children is also varied. One of the areas of limitation is in determining when a child is deprived of parental support. Most states merely require continued absence from the home. Apparently this is not for any specified number of days. In Louisiana, however, the parent must be away for at least 90 days before the child can be considered as non-supported. In Mississippi, "absence due to desertion or non-support must have existed for six months unless under specified conditions affecting the absent parent."[13] In these states, the family must manage to survive for three or six months before the departments will consider their need.

---

[11] Characteristics of State Public Assistance Plans Under the Social Security Act," Public Assistance Report No. 50, U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D. C., 1964 edition, p. 58.

Individual states' definitions of non-support are varied. Many states say that not only must the father have deserted the family, but that there must be no individual who can act as a substitute for the father, particularly in regard to support. This stipulation, known as the "man-in-the-house ruling," is often extended locally to cover almost any male acquaintance of the mother. Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia, all require that the child be living in a suitable home. That which is suitable is that which meets state standards of care and health. This requirement seems, unfortunately, to also be characteristic of the South's concept of public welfare. It sets up a state standard of what constitutes suitable health and care and ignores the fact that it is precisely those who are most extremely deprived whose home will be the most likely not to measure up to the standard. Theoretically, then, such regulations could produce a situation in which a child or family with some financial ability is eligible for aid, but make ineligible for aid a family who is totally destitute.

---

12 Ibid., p. 98.

13 Ibid., p. 58.

e. Need limitations - No state allows the highest possible amount exempt from personal income as allowed in the Social Security Act by Amendments of 1965. Many allow little more than that which is mandatory. The Social Security Act allows states to disregard as much as $5 of any income and of the first $80 additional earned income no more than $20, plus one-half of the remainder, in determining need for Old Age Assistance recipients. Of the states investigated, Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas, disregard no income for OAA recipients. Virginia disregards a flat $10 per month of earned income. Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, and Louisiana disregard, of the first $50 of earned income, the first $10 plus one-half of the remainder. (Public Assistance Report #50 is dated 1964. Since this time, state allowances may have been changed.) Of the total amount which the states may disregard for Aid to the Blind recipients in all of thesstates investigated, only that amount which was mandatory is disregarded, i.e., the first $85 of earned income plus one-half of the earned income in excess of the first $85. Income which may be disregarded is that which the individual may need for a plan for achieving self support approved by the state agency. In the Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled programs, states may disregard no more than $20 of the first $80 or earned income and up to one-half of the remainder of the first $80 earned income. States may also disregard income during the time in which the individual is undergoing vocational rehabilitation. Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia allow no disregard of income. Texas states that, "consideration must be given to income from legally responsible relatives who are financially able to support."[14] No state actually disregards any income of the APTD recipients. The Social Security Act also allows the state to disregard up to $50 of earned income for each child under 18 years of age in Aid to Families with Dependent Children up to $150 per household and no more than $5 of any other income. Only North Carolina and South Carolina allow any income to be disregarded in AFDC.

f. Property and income limitations - Property and

---

14 Ibid., p. 98.

income limitations on recipients vary greatly throughout the states investigated. The items limited and the strictness of limitations vary. Generally, however, recipients of all programs in all states are limited severely as to the amount of property they are allowed to have in order to qualify for assistance. Louisiana limits Old Age Assistance and Aid to the Blind recipients to a total value of property of $1,500 for an individual and $2,500 for a couple. Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled and Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients' property value, excluding that used as a home, is limited to $400 if the recipient has no dependents, $600 if he has one dependent, and $800 if he has two or more dependents. Virginia's limitations in this area are restrictive. HEW Report #50 states the following as being Virginia's regulations concerning this limitation. "There are no statutory limits on the value of real property owned and occupied as home. Other real property, if non-productive, must be liquidated if possible. Sale value of income-producing personal property, if non-productive, is considered a resource. Cash assets may not exceed $300 for each assistance unit, including cash surrender value on insurance with face value in excess of $1,000. Recipients may own household equipment and furniture, but the ownership of non-essential automobile disqualifies. The recipient cannot have signed or transferred property within five years immediately preceding application in order to qualify.[15]

---

[15] Ibid., p. 106.

(Emphasis added.) This same requirement is held for applicants of Aid to the Blind. The provision concerning transfer or assignment of property prior to application is excluded in APTD and AFDC.

Discouragement from applying is clearly seen in Old Age Assistance, for income-producing but non-productive property includes tools and machinery acquired by the skilled worker or artisan who is unable temporarily to use them. The provision concerning the assignment or transferral of property aimed directly at eliminating those persons with significant financial resources can also easily eliminate persons who have owned property which they were unable to use but which disqualified them for assistance.

North Carolina includes in its limitations "savings, cash value of insurance, bonds, and other cash reserves, or real property not used as a home."[16] All of this is limited to $500. Included are machinery and buildings which the individual or family might own, such as a sewing machine, wheelbarrow, shed, or washing machine. Poverty must be extensive to be even considered for aid in this Old Age Assistance program. In the Aid to the Blind program, the home and income producing property may be kept. All other real property that is not income producing, however, must be liquidated within a year or "proved to be unsaleable."[17]

---

16 Ibid., p. 76.

17 Ibid., p. 76.

The $500 limit for the individual is still applicable though real property other than the home is not included in the figuring of the reserves.

South Carolina's property limitations are also rather strict. Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Blind, and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled recipients may own a home. "Other real property is considered in determining eligibility in each individual case. Personal property is limited to $500 for an individual plus $300 for the spouse. If neither has savings, the other may retain savings up to $800 for use by both as a burial fund, which may not be used for current living expenses. Each dependent group may retain insurance with face value of $1,000 regardless of loan or surrender value. If insurance is more than $1,000 face value, loan or surrender value may not exceed $750. A combination of insurance loan value and cash savings may not exceed the amount allowed for savings. Applicants may not have transferred property in order to qualify." Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients have the same property limitations except that the applicant is limited to a total savings for dependent group of $800 which may not be used for living expenses.

Texas' Old Age Assistance recipients may own a homestead, defined as both a home and a small amount of land, and have less than $1,500 (for a couple, $2,500) of non-income producing property. No individual may have transferred property to become eligible for welfare. These requirements also apply to Aid to the Blind recipients. Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled and Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients are limited to 50 acres in their homestead; the homestead must also provide shelter.

The tone of Alabama welfare is evident in its Old Age Assistance program property limitations. A single recipient or couple is limited to a home value of $2,500 or less, and may retain a reserve of other property, real or personal, worth up to $1,000. The recipient or recipients may not in the past year have disposed of a homestead valued at more than $2,500 in order to become eligible for welfare. If the applicant is found to have disposed of a homestead within this time and is denied welfare because of this, he is ineligible for consideration for welfare for one year from the date of refusal of welfare unless "destitute and a community problem."[18] (Emphasis Added.) Similar limitations are placed upon Aid to the Blind recipients although they have home property disregarded and may have other real property valued at up to $5,000 and other reserves up to $1,200. Alabama's Aid to Families with Dependent Children property limitations are the same as the OAA ones.

Arkansas' major limitation placed upon property is that the home property is "limited to a market value of from

---

18 Ibid., p. 8.

$4,500 to $6,500 depending upon location."[19] When the price per acre of land and the price of even the most simple houses, particularly in urban areas, are taken into consideration, this requirement is not as lenient as it may seem. Georgia recipients of Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Blind, and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled have the value of home property disregarded. Other real and personal property is limited to $800. An automobile of a value over $1,000 disqualifies the applicant. If the applicant has transferred property within the past two years, he is considered ineligible for the period of time which the property income would have taken care of his need. Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipients have the same limitations except that property transferral limitation is lifted. Tennessee's property limitations are similar to those discussed although recipients are allowed a home property of a value of $5,000, if the property is unencumbered, and $7,000 if the property is encumbered. The owner's equity may not exceed $5,000. Kentucky disregards home property value and limits other income to $500 and a burial fund of not more than $1,000 or a cash surrender of a life insurance policy of not more than $1,000. Mississippi limits property to a home valued at $2,500 if owned by an individual, or $5,000 if owned by a group, less encumbrances. Other real property and personal property is limited to $500 for the individual and $800 for a person with dependents. Essentially, the same limitations exist for AFDC recipients.

---

19 Ibid., p. 14.

g. Other limitations - Other restrictions which are placed on the recipients of welfare are generally few but are among the most onerous of those existing in welfare. Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Texas all have some requirement which forces parents or relatives responsible for a child or children to accept "suitable work" if the work is available. "Work" in the various states differs. No state, however, draws distinct lines between what is and is not suitable. Mississippi states that the parent must accept employment if physically able and work is available, under certain specified conditions. While these conditions usually pertain to the care of children while the parent is at work, the work which the parent must accept is not specified. Here a tremendous amount of ambiguity exists and in the past has been a point of much discriminatory treatment. What white welfare workers regard as "suitable" work for Negroes may well be regarded as unsuitable for whites, for example, chopping cotton, twelve hours a day at the accepted pay rate of $3.00 a day. Work which the parent is able to do may be more expensive in terms of energy and time than it can be possibly worth to his family. The expense is often not taken into account.

One curious limitation which is placed on North Carolina Aid to the Blind recipients is that the applicant may not be soliciting alms at the time of his application for aid. If he is, he is declared ineligible.

Restriction of the number of welfare recipients does not come entirely from welfare regulations. Some states have laws which are less easy to uncover, but often more effective restrictions. Mississippi, for example, now requires the fine or imprisonment of up to 90 days of the parent of a second illegitimate child. Subsequent conviction carries a fine of up to $500 and imprisonment of up to six months. A similar Louisiana law sets the fine at up to $1,000, and imprisonment at up to one year, (Miss. Code Ann., Title II, §2018.6; La. Code Ann. 14:81, §79.2.) The relation here to welfare, of course, is indirect, but nonetheless real. A mother seeking aid for her dependent child must state the father's name. Where the child is illegitimate, she is making herself liable for imprisonment by telling the truth, as required by law.

h. Recoveries, liens, and assignment limitations - The recovery of aid, while existing in only four of the states investigated, in three of these states are so set up as to discourage any needy person from applying for welfare. Tennessee states that "payments made to an abandoned or deserted wife or dependent child shall be recoverable against the husband or parent as a debt due the state."[20] While a provision such as this is defensible on the grounds that a family is the responsibility of parents, the much more extensive provisions of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia are not. North Carolina makes a provision for the recovery after death of all assistance given through Old Age Assistance. HEW Report #50 states that "receipt of assistance after October 1, 1951, creates a general lien on real property owned by recipient and a claim against him and his estate. May not be satisfied while property is occupied as homesite by recipient, surviving spouse, minor dependent child, or dependent adult child, if such person is incapable of self-support because of total mental or physical disability. Recoveries are mandatory."[21] (Emphasis added.) South Carolina also makes a provision for the recovery of OAA. Recovery is, however, not mandatory. Report #50 states that the "total amount of assistance paid subsequent to July 1, 1956, (is) allowed as unsecured claim against estate on death of recipient. No recovery is made on real property used by dependent relatives nor when gross market value of estate is less than $500."[22] Virginia, while making no provisions for the recovery of aid given through Aid to Families with Dependent Children, makes strong provisions for Old Age Assistance and Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled. Report #50 states that "total assistance paid constitutes claim against estate upon death of recipient prior to all other claims except prior liens, funeral expenses not in excess of $200 and hospital bills, doctors' bills, and medical expenses not in excess of $150. Not enforced against real estate occupied by the surviving spouse, if remains unmarried, or dependent child. Provisions for requiring deed of trust or for filing notice or receipt of assistance creating lien against real property of recipient but no deed of trust or lien enforced while recipient is eligible for assistance unless the real property is disposed of."[23] Provisions for aid given through Aid to the Blind are the same except that no deed of trust is required.

---

20 Ibid., p. 97.

---

21 Ibid., p. 77

22 Ibid., p. 93.

---

[23] Ibid., p. 107.

CONCLUSION

Public assistance is lacking in areas in which it is most desperately needed. It is lacking, in large part,[24] because it is so structured as to be self-restricting, to expend exactly enough to sooth the consciences of those with comfortable standards of living and no more.

This self-restricting nature of public welfare is not due to discriminatory administration which is widespread in many states. Discriminatory administration only redoubles the faults of an already impotent structure. What produced such a structure is a concept of welfare at once sentimental and condescending. The poor must be taken care of, that concept says, but they must never be allowed to forget that they are poor and that they exist entirely on public sufferance. Exponents of welfare reform argue that a comprehensive program must include, in addition to adequate monetary payments, a rethinking of approach to the problems of people who make up our welfare rolls. In any such a rethinking the place of the aged, for example, in a modern technical society would have to be examined and evaluated and, in all likelihood, the modern technical society would have to loosen its joints a little to accommodate humanity. The blind and the disabled would have many more and much more comprehensive training and rehabilitation centers, and society would have to strike its prejudices and admit that the blind and disabled are often less blind and more able than the physically normal person. Desertion and illegitimacy would have to be recognized as facts of life and adequate provisions made for the care of the dependent.

---

24 While it is true that some states are unable to provide the funds necessary for the public assistance standards which they set, this lack is by no means the cause of inadequate welfare payments, since the majority of the states' welfare aid is of federal origin. (See Table 3.)

Most important, men would have to realize, emotionally as well as intellectually, that no individual is ever or can be completely responsible for his social situation.

10:24-67
KM

TABLE 3

FEDERAL SHARE OF TOTAL STATE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE EXPENDITURES

July 1, 1963 through June 30, 1965

State	Federal Medical Percentage	Federal Percentage
Alabama	78.29	65.00
Arkansas	80.00	65.00
Georgia	73.69	65.00
Kentucky	75.27	65.00
Louisiana	73.46	65.00
Mississippi	80.00	65.00
North Carolina	74.99	65.00
South Carolina	80.00	65.00
Tennessee	75.53	65.00
Texas	61.45	61.45
Virginia	65.05	65.00

In brief, these percentages are used as follows in determining the Federal share of assistance:

1. OAA: The Federal Government pays $29 of the first $35 of the average monthly grant per recipient. Of the amount in the average grant above $35 and up to $70 the Federal Government pays the "Federal percentage". Of the amount in the average grant above $70 and up to $85--assuming this amount equals or is less than the average vendor payment for medical care--the Federal Government pays the "Federal medical percentage"; as an alternative to this last provision, however, the State may receive from the Federal Government 15 percent of the average vendor payment for medical care up to $15.
2. AB: The Federal Government pays $29 of the first $35 of the average monthly grant per recipient. Of the amount in the average grant above $35 and up to $70 the Federal Government pays the "Federal percentage".
3. APTD: Same as for AB.
4. AABD: If State has chosen the 2-category pattern of administration (Aid to the Aged, Blind, or Disabled and AFDC), the provisions outlined for OAA above apply to AABD.
5. MAA: The Federal Government pays the "Federal medical percentage" of total expenditures under the program, which is limited to vendor payments for medical care.
6. AFDC: The Federal Government pays 14/17ths of the average monthly grant per recipient up to $17. Of the amount in the average grant above $17 and up to $30 the Federal Government pays the "Federal percentage".

TABLE 3

FEDERAL SHARE OF TOTAL STATE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE EXPENDITURES

July 1, 1963 through June 30, 1965

State	Federal Medical Percentage	Federal Percentage
Alabama	78.29	65.00
Arkansas	80.00	65.00
Georgia	73.69	65.00
Kentucky	75.27	65.00
Louisiana	73.46	65.00
Mississippi	80.00	65.00
North Carolina	74.99	65.00
South Carolina	80.00	65.00
Tennessee	75.53	65.00
Texas	61.45	61.45
Virginia	65.05	65.00

In brief, these percentages are used as follows in determining the Federal share of assistance:

1. OAA: The Federal Government pays $29 of the first $35 of the average monthly grant per recipient. Of the amount in the average grant above $35 and up to $70 the Federal Government pays the "Federal percentage". Of the amount in the average grant above $70 and up to $85--assuming this amount equals or is less than the average vendor payment for medical care--the Federal Government pays the "Federal medical percentage"; as an alternative to this last provision, however, the State may receive from the Federal Government 15 percent of the average vendor payment for medical care up to $15.
2. AB: The Federal Government pays $29 of the first $35 of the average monthly grant per recipient. Of the amount in the average grant above $35 and up to $70 the Federal Government pays the "Federal percentage".
3. APTD: Same as for AB.
4. AABD: If State has chosen the 2-category pattern of administration (Aid to the Aged, Blind, or Disabled and AFDC), the provisions outlined for OAA above apply to AABD.
5. MAA: The Federal Government pays the "Federal medical percentage" of total expenditures under the program, which is limited to vendor payments for medical care.
6. AFDC: The Federal Government pays 14/17ths of the average monthly grant per recipient up to $17. Of the amount in the average grant above $17 and up to $30 the Federal Government pays the "Federal percentage".

Research & Info (Watters, Dir Info, Adams, Miles)

April 4, 1966

File Research + Info.

M E M O R A N D U M

TO: Paul Anthony

FROM: ~~Pat Watters~~ Pat Watters

RE: Report on work from January 1 through March 31, 1966

1. Voter Book - Most of ~~my~~ time has been spent in the major part of researching and the writing in collaboration with Reese Cleghorn of the Atlanta Journal of the book on current political effects and the long-range implications of the entrance of Negro voters in full into the South's democracy. This is the book which SRC contracted with Harcourt, Brace and World to produce. It had originally been scheduled for publication in October, 1966. A recent decision has been to postpone this until February or March, 1967, in order to include a final chapter on the outcome of the fall elections this year. While not a history of VEP as such, the book draws heavily on the first VEP research, as well as other research materials of SRC. A table of contents is attached.

2. New South - The first issue of New South in its new quarterly format was issued, and the second is in the works. Its contents will include an extensive study of current Negro movement strategy, including political strategy, by August Meier; a study of Negro family structure in Birmingham by Dr. Beryle McCloskey of Miles College; an article on intermarriage by Charlayne Stovall; Attorney General Katzenbach's speech; a study of white volunteers in SCOPE last summer, and other material. Some 3,400 of the first issue were sent out as samples, and subsequently a larger mailing was made of an advertising brochure.

3. Other publications have included a warning on the pitfalls of co-ops and credit unions by Al Ulmer, addressing himself to grass roots leaders looking for cure-alls; "Neighborhood Stabilization: A Program," by Moreland Smith, setting out how community organization can save a neighborhood from block-busting and develop racial balance; another study by Mr. Ulmer, a pioneering how-to approach on the all-important subject of community organization in southern Negro slums, based on his experience in Vine City. A press release was issued urging compliance with new school desegregation guidelines.

Bob Anderson processed the above reports editorially. He also contributed to the editing of the first new New South and development of the second, as did Margaret Long.

Insert I

js

Attachment: "Contents of VEP Book"

Insert I

Margaret Long has written an article to appear in a spring issue of Progressive. She has also spent considerable time with Josephine Rider, an author from San Fransisco, who's under con ract to do a book on Negro women. She is working with Ray G. Mack and other sociologists on an HEW sponsored study of school desegregation and is doing a chapter of a book for that project on Atlanta school desegregation and its effect on education. She is working with Mrs. Adolphine Terry of Little Rock on a book length manuscript which Mrs. Terry hopes to have published.

We saw 29 visitors during the quarter including 23 European teachers and three Ivory Coast leaders who were with us fof four days.

II

Sam Adams has completed an extensive study of Atlanta housing for the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing. We may publish a portion of this study.

Considerable time has been spent on a study of recent intimidat on and violence in the region. This information coupled with our exression of concern over the growing likelihood of exlosions within urban slums and rural areas will be published in May in cooperation with the American Jewish Committee.

Attachment II

ATTACHMENT 2

CONTENTS OF VEP BOOK

I. A Definitive Crisis in American History. -- Setting out the historical background and current situation to support the idea that the entry of a full Negro vote into southern politics will be a changing point in the nation's history, its long struggle with the Negro problem, comparable to the changes when the fronteir closed and corporations were curbed.

II. An Analysis and Interpretation of Southern Politics Since 1960.--Emphasizing the increased influence of the Negro vote.

III. The Movement and the Vote.--Tracing the brief, forceful history of the Negro movement, and the little known role of voter registration in this history. This includes the history and accomplishments of VEP.

IV. The Struggle. -- Describing in detail how Negroes organized themselves and carried out the 1962-64 voter registration effort, and how in its different parts and varying degrees of resistance, the South responded.

V. Crisis of the Courts and in the Uses of Federal Power. -- Setting out the failure of the courts to achieve access to the ballot, or to protect the voter registration effort, and seeking reasons for these failures. One suggestion is that ignorance and naivete about southern reality was a large part of it.

VI. Victory? -- Describing the Selma breakthrough to a voter rights law, enforcement and effect of the new law, and the related development of reform of that other needed bedrock for real democracy, southern justice. The analysis here is to show that the South is at a turning point -- but that the next few years are crucial in whether the full-turn to an equal society is made. So far, as in the voter registration figures themselves, it is all potential.

Contents of VEP Book - 2.

VII. The Future of the Movement. -- Setting out problems, from alienation to black nationalism, from floundering to lack of money, and hopeful developments, including the new voter effort and the merging of movement structures into community organization and political-action units. This suggests the possibilities of at least part of the movement developing as a radical left voice in southern politics, something never before in history heard in the South.

VIII. Negro Political Power. -- Discussing and analyzing past, present, and possible future uses of the power of the vote, including failures and pitfalls and the need for a general forcing of southern government to confront the real problems of the region. This includes implications for national politics, social welfare, etc.

IX. Politics in the Cities. -- Discussing the places where the Negro vote has been effective and where it has not, including some northern cities, and an analysis of what makes the difference. This suggests the importance of the development of effective Negro politicians.

X. The First Returns. -- To be written after next fall's elections, and analysis of the outcomes, and an updating of movement developments.

XI. Conclusions.-- A brief recapitulation, suggesting that the crisis period is now; the change is not guaranteed; the need is for effective Negro voting and politics and real reform of justice.

file Info. & Research

July 25, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO: Paul Anthony

FROM: Pat Watters, Information and Research

~~RE: Report on work from January 1 through June 31, 1966~~ -

1. Voter Book - Most of ~~my~~ the time of the Dir of Info. has been spent in the major part of researching and ~~the~~ writing in collaboration with Reese Cleghorn of the Atlanta Journal on current political effects and the long-range implications of the entrance of Negro voters in full into the South's democracy. This is the book which SRC contracted with Harcourt, Brace, and World to produce. It had originally been scheduled for publication in October, 1966. A recent decision has been to postpone this until February or March, 1967, in order to include a final chapter on the outcome of the fall elections this year. While not a history of VEP as such, the book draws heavily on the first VEP research, as well as other research materials of SRC.

2. New South - The revamping of New South in its new quarterly format has been a major concern. The first two issues contained articles of substance by such writers as Leslie Dunbar, James Silver, Margeret Long, Robert Coles, August Meier, Finley Campbell, Vincent Harding. A news round-up section contains summaries of developments in each of the eleven states, a compilation not available elsewhere, and a permanent record of value to research. Efforts are made to find for each issue material close to the reality of what is happening in the South. A proposal for radical innovations in community planning in Mississippi and a report of a day in the life of a southern city ghetto resident are examples. The need for research grounded yet pertinent articles is great; several, including a report on a study of the Negro family in Birmingham, are in the works. The summer issue, in preparation, will include coverage of the Meredith Mississippi march and discussion of black power. Many of the Council's information & research interests are reflected in the articles published & commissioned

3. Other publications have included a warning on the pitfalls of co-ops and credit unions by Al Ulmer, addressing himself to grass roots leaders looking for cure-alls; "Neighborhood Stabilization: A Program," by Moreland Smith, setting out how community organization can save a neighborhood from block-busting and develop racial balance; another study by Mr. Ulmer, a pioneering how-to approach on the all-important subject of community organization in southern Negro slums, based on his experience in Vine City; "The Continuing Crisis," a joint publication with the American Jewish Committee describing the range of racial and poverty problems in the South, and warning of the possibility of disruptions in the South similar to those in the northern ghettos; a handbook on appropriate actions to improve southern justice ~~particularly court room procs~~ developed by Mrs. M. E. Tilly for use with ~~church~~ women's groups throughout the South ~~and the like.~~ and special distribution is given to issues of the magazine or to reprints from it.

A press release has been issued urging compliance with new school desegregation guidelines. The Voter Education Project has issued press releases on the election results in Alabama and South Carolina, ~~and~~, on voting effort violence as a commentary on the shooting of James Meredith and an analysis of the effectiveness of federal registrars.

~~Bob Anderson~~ processed the above reports editorially. Mgn Editor B-A — He also contributed to the editing of the first new New South and development of the second, as did Margaret Long.

4. In preparation: Dr. Robert Coles will develop a report on conditions in Negro communities where past major civil rights demonstrations have occurred. Wilson Minor is preparing a report on the Citizens Council, past and present, and Robert Sherrill is developing a report on other white hate groups, including the Klan. These are a part of a study, again jointly with the AJC, of forces competing for the attention of the South. Also part of this study is a survey by Anthony Whitfield, an SRC summer intern, of intergroup relations organizations regarding their efforts to influence white Southerners. Dean B. R. Brazeal of Morehouse College is developing a series of studies on voter registration in selected Georgia counties, contrasting the situation today with that of 1956 when he did a similar survey. Other projects include a study of the South's portion of the 100 poorest counties in the nation (which is most of them); a study of welfare expenditures in the South; a plan for state government action in the various social problems of the South; a study of the mechanics of housing desegregation in Atlanta ~~by Sam Adams of SRC,~~ a set of instructions for low income families on how to buy a house or rent an apartment ~~by Moreland Smith of the SRC staff~~; a study of 1966 (including fall) school desegregation developments, and various other projects.

~~Discussions~~ are being

Sam Adams, Dir of Res
Pat Waters, Dir of Info.

PW:js

- : -

Memo to : Pat Watters

From: Al Ulmer

In good fashion, as I promised, here are the two ideas you, Glenda, and I talked about at lunch the other day.

1. In South Carolina and in Mississippi there appears to be a growing trend in making certain offices that have in the past been elective, appointive. There is, for instance, in Lee County, S.C. the example of the county school board being appointed rather than elected. The county has been divided into precincts in such a way as to make it difficult for a Negro majority to be elected to the county commission, but the county school board could be dominated by Negroes. I don't know how many counties in S.C. have such appointive systems. Glenda has clippings showing that in Mississippi two or three counties have, in the past year, opted for appointive school boards, town marshals and town clerks. The question is, of course, how many counties have this appointing business already and how many are changing to it with increases of Negro voters imminent.

2. We spoke of the possibility of our doing a piece on public accomodations, stressing the lack of compliance in the South other than the big cities, and the main highways. I think that this non-compliance could be shown to be almost complete in many small towns and rural areas and a piece written about it could show some of the problems of passing laws and "hoping" for the good will of men to seep out.

3. Also, though we didn't talk about it yesterday, I hope we are still planning to do something on economic retaliation across the South. And if we do this I wonder if it would be possible to somehow show the dilema of trying to solve any problem in the South without somehow improving the situation of Negroes in regard to income, land, jobs etc.

File Sub Projects & Research & Info

I. Urban planning. Sam's study? Carry through with Atlanta, Richmond, Houston, Little Rock: the inner workings of segregated housing, ghettoization.

II. Fair employment and anti-poverty. Select 100 poorest counties in South and do rundown on what they've gotten from poverty program, and why they have not received more. Profiles of rural and urban poverty, white and Negro.

A summary survey of the employment situation in the South: estimate of amount of equal hiring; kinds of concerns doing it; a thorough discussion of the myth of unavailable Negroes; efficacy of Title VI enforcement; how to get such jobs.

A survey of state employment office practices . . . large sample of large city, small city, small town situation. Possibly with aid of Urban League and NAACP across South.

III. School Integration. Tape record Winifred and Connie on their efforts to encourage Negro parents to integrate schools and results.

Guidelines tightening: southern political and educational reaction; practical effect next fall. SERS statistics—

Nov

Collection of student descriptions, Negro and white, all grades, of desegregation in action, good and bad.

IV. Welfare Programs. As a start, a rundown on the amounts spent each state, the per person, per family maximums and averages on the various kinds of aid, ADC, etc.

The case against ACD to fatherless children only; relation to Monyhan Report.

Technological unemployment.

Who, how many, what circumstances unemployment?

VI. Community organization and technical assistance. Check out SSOC's efforts with poor whites.

Al's information on efforts to get adequate, decently financed houses.

VII. Other:

1. Higher education in the South. Amount of desegregation; number of faculty ph.d's comparative, now and say 1950; number of graduate students, same comparison; amount federal research grants, same comparison, with explanation of why short-deal, i.e., lack of requests.

2. Whatever became of the southern school of fiction? Assessment of writing generally, including contributions of civil rights writers.

3. Economics. Basics of it: what are the major industries, agricultural products, state of mining, transportation, etc.? Latest per capita, per family income; unemployment, underemployment; birth rate. Assessment of trends, major shifts in above. New industry -- how much and what kind? Prevalence and effect of subsidizations of industry.

4. In terms of above, and other factors, outline a realistic political campaign platform -- in terms of the South's real needs. Offer it to both parties, for state and localuse, and for a southern plank in the national convention platform. Moving southern politics, that is, away from race into reality.

5. What is the financial basis of Negro politics in the South? Who is paying the bills of Negro candidates? Are costs comparable with white candidate campaigns? Are these sources entirely different, the same, or merely the black counterpart (business, special interests) of the white power structure? Is there anything in this picture which encourages low-cost campaigning, i.e., a freer political agent?

6. The radicals in the movement. We need to come to grips with this; all-black rationales in staffing and politics, etc. Viet Nam stances. Ask the hard questions.

7. The plight of the Negro teacher. How whites have effectively emasculated the logical leaders of Negro Southerners, the educators. Grade school, high school, college, teachers, administrators -- these have been the most intimidated of all the South's Negroes. And, having been blocked from normal pursuits, they are far more than white counterparts, the elite of Negro society. Is this changing to any extent? Importance on such things as anti-intellectualism in the movement . . . (See civil rights commission hearings, Prothro and Matthews, etc.)

8. In the Black Belt. A good reporter's tour of the Black Belt, its tent cities, cooperatives, political movements, demonstrations, poverty, small towns, changing agriculture, etc. A New South travel piece. Color story.

9. Who speaks to the white South? A survey, perhaps state by state, of what, if any, effective work is being done toward reaching the average white Southerner with the hard truths, the moral truths about desegregation, poverty, etc. The thesis to be proved or disproved would be that, by and large, the field has been vacated to the Birchers.

10. After the run-offs and assuming some victories, a story on a day with the new Negro sheriff of Killnigger County, Alabama.

11. Coalition. What has developed in the way of practical alignment of the forces that logically should be together in the South, politically and otherwise? With attention to the splits, as in Alabama, Tennessee, of labor and Negro politics; assessment of which has delivered most -- i. e., Negro vote more so than labor in Alabama. Implications of inability, ability to join forces.

12. Playing down South. From culture boom, to Atlanta Braves, auto racing and cock-fighting, how does the South re-create itself? Seeking anthropolitical significance.

13. The Continuing Crisis: A hard run-down on economic coercion, intimidation, reprisal. Methods, history, extent, results, efforts to counter. Case histories, lists of incidents.

The battlefields re-visited. Re-visit Albany, Birmingham, Selma, St. Augustine, Bogalusa -- to see the effect on Negro and white communities of the gains made by the sacrifices in each.

14. Survey of the extent of use of prison labor as a resource or source of resource of state governments. . . i.e., convict road gangs, etc. Relation of this to entrenched power of sheriffs, their ability to block needed county consolidations.

15. Labor's role in southern civil rights movement. What has organized labor done? Summary. Where could it do more? Forces working as a brake on further action. Management's lack of leadership as a contributing factor. Political action. Figures on organization.

16. Capital punishment. Why South retains it and why the move for elimination of makes little headway? Use of as a form of racial intimidation. Hard figures & racial breakdown on executions — examples of cases where guilt may be doubtful.

17. Textbooks and Negro history. Southern history as presented to school children.

18. Prisons. How is North Carolina plan working? Is theory still retaliation, punitive? How much progress toward rehabilitation? State level and federal.

19. The many Souths. (Reflections following state by state research for round-ups.) In Alabama, for instance, the primitive is still much in evidence. Slightly less so in Mississippi and Louisiana. Concern is still for voting rights. In Virginia and Tennessee it moves to more sophisticated plane. Tennessee primary in which both candidates are described as "acceptable" to Negro leadership. Yet across the state lines are Alabama and Mississippi. What are the forces that produced the differences -- political leadership, economics, industry, federal government, northern capital, Negro votes. Dramatic changes in recent years -- Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina. The outlook for the future.

20. Human Relations Councils and militant action groups. Definitions. Is there any basic differences in what they try to achieve or is the difference in means only? The white liberal in the councils, the "respectable" civil rights group. The Negro in the councils.

21. Federal subsidization in the South . . . who gets what, which states get most (include industrial). What has it meant in desegregation or lack of it in highway construction, etc.?

22. Political methods and laws limiting involvement of the poor and the uneducated.

23. Survey of cities where the action was -- how have they changed? A look at former movement figures, e.g., Bob Moses. Contrast their progress or lack of it with political party workers, etc.

24. The use of grand juries and other mechanism for/against racism.

25. The decline in Negro land-holding. Hard figures. Why. How can trend be reversed (Bob Thompson, a good resource).

26. Negro churches -- a new look at their function. Contrast those that accept and those that reject racial status quo. Their leaders.

27. Courts and judges (federal and state) whose decisions generally undercut Supreme Court in racial area. Who are the liberal southern judges. What is right or wrong with system for their election or appointment.

28. The racial "undecideds" -- why they don't take positions . . . the kinds of people they are. Who and what position their lack of decision aids.

29. Occupational distribution -- changing trends, e.g., white replacements for tradional Negro bellboys.

30. The press and race.

31. The return of racism in Florida gubernatorial campaign.

32. Bussing in the South -- how its used to maintain segregation. Contrast with desire to use it for "racial balance."

ADDENDA:

Two suggestions from Al Ulmer:

1. The amount of outright defiance of the public accommodations section of the Civil Rights Law across the South. Restaurants, motels, bathrooms. Documentable. Negroes still have to plan their trips in terms of places they know will accept them.

2. The ominous beginnings in South Carolina and Mississippi of a revival of post-construction statutes allowing local officials to be appointed rather than elected. Will correlate with Negro registration where such has been enacted.

INFORMATION AND RESEARCH

The publications and information work of the Southern Regional Council during the first six months of 1967 have reflected the organization's expanded program and the strange mixture of progress and failure and uncertainty that characterizes the region at this time.

Reports.--The work has included assistance with the editorial processing of such reports of the various projects as Labor's pamphlet on the minimum wage; Urban Planning's series on integrated neighborhoods, slum ghettos, and buying a home. Other reports have included "Hungry Children," the telling of the medical effects of starvation on children in Mississippi; "In Their Own Words," the accounts of Negro students in Alabama of their good and bad experiences in desegregated schools; "Public Assistance in the South," the statistics on how the South spends federal welfare funds. Response to the reports this year -- despite a national drop-off of interest in civil rights -- has been if anything better than usual.

New South.--The quarterly publication and format have continued to absorb material that in previous years would have been issued in report form. Articles this year have included an excerpt from Robert Coles' new book, Children of Crisis; analysis of Atlanta housing; a highly realistic account of prison life by Ronald Sturrup, a former inmate of a federal penitentiary; a hard look at U. S. Agricultural and Stabilization and Conservation Service discrimination in the South. "New South Notes" and the state-by-state roundup of new events continue to provide probably the most comprehensive coverage of the region available in the nation. Articles of importance and high quality are being submitted for publication now in more quantity almost than we can handle. Among those planned for the summer and fall issues are an extraordinary account of southern labor history by Vera Rony; an article by Bayard Rustin, probably on southern political strategy; an excerpt from Fred Powledge's excellent new book contrasting northern and southern racism.

In the Works.--Future publications, most of them special reports, will include: the joint publication with the American Jewish Committee of a study of the Klan by Robert Sherrill, of the Citizens Council by Wilson Minor, and on political developments, probably by Reese Cleghorn and Pat Watters. A joint publication with the Anti-Defamation League of an analysis of southern college admission discrimination. A study by Mark Chesler (who did "In Their Own Words") of racial attitudes in Alabama. A thorough study of the continuing severe poverty among white and Negro people, rural and urban, over the South -- pointing up failures of federal and local programs and making clear that children and adults are starving not only in Mississippi but across the region. Work on this is underway by Paul Good, a writer particularly sensitive to this subject, and Al Clayton, whose photography of an Atlanta slum was one of the outstanding features of last year's NEW SOUTH. The combination of the talent of these two men, and the skilled use of photography, the strongest way of telling this story, should have considerable effect. Work by Dean B. R. Brazeal on counties he visited ten years ago and recently, describing changes. A study being developed under the prisons project of disparity in southern court sentences. A study by Emory University law students working in research this summer of the recent Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals school desegregation decision -- which will probably be part of the annual school desegregation report. The study of southern literature and writers that Mr. Dabbs is working on; possibly, a follow-up on the "Hungry Children" with fuller medical research and information; writing by Bill Beardsley, intern with the Voter Education Project, on people he has worked with across the South during the past three summers.

Miscellaneous. The book based on Voter Education Project research, Climbing Jacob's Ladder, by Pat Watters and Reese Cleghorn, and the property of the Southern Regional Council, will be published in November by Harcourt, Brace and World, Inc. People at Harcourt are expecting it to sell well; various promotion plans for it are planned.

Relations with the national and local press continue excellent. The confidence and trust they have in us is among our greatest assets. It can be maintained by the simple procedure of continuing to concentrate our efforts on facts, and dealing completely honestly with them.

The research department in the past six months has answered requests for information from many sources. About half of the projects handled by the staff come from outside SRC; college students and professors; lawyers; various federal agencies, such as the Office of Education, the Office of Economic Opportunity, and the Civil Rights Commission. Requests for information from the news media continue. Generally the requests we receive are more complex than they were as recently as two years ago.

The expansion of SRC's programs has directly affected the research department. Specifically, we have had to enlarge our collection of materials to cover a much broader range of subjects. We rely more and more on specialized publications of government departments such as Agriculture, Labor; HEW, etc., and of those government agencies mentioned above. We continue to clip approximately twenty newspapers per day, about that many magazines a week, and to catalogue and file publications of other private agencies.

As well as handling SRC staff queries, we also provide supplementary data to those involved in special SRC projects. The research department provided background information to people preparing the Fifth Circuit school decision and the public assistance in poorest counties reports now in progress; and to the doctors who visited Mississippi.

RECEIVED
DEC 26 1946
Southern Regional Council

BULLETIN

of

The Institute of Arab American Affairs

160 Broadway, New York 7, N. Y.

VOL. II DECEMBER 15, 1946 NO. 6

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

WE WISH our readers, supporters and friends a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. We join with you in the hope that peace, good will and justice will prevail among small as well as big nations all over the world. We trust that God may so guide the delegates to the United Nations Assembly as to hasten the peace which is so sorely needed by all mankind.

WHAT ARAB LEADERS ARE THINKING

The dinner given by the Institute of Arab American Affairs in honor of the heads of the Arab delegations to the United Nations Assembly on the eve of November 29th at the Waldorf-Astoria was more than a social occasion. It was a vivid manifestation of Arab solidarity and Arab unanimity on the fundamental issues of national policy.

There were seven official speakers—the five heads of the Arab states and Mr. George Wadsworth, newly appointed ambassador to Iraq, and Miss Virginia Gildersleeve, Dean of Barnard College and member of the Institute's Advisory Board. Three other speakers represented the family of the Institute—Dr. Philip Hitti, who acted as toastmaster, Dr. John Hazam of the Institute, and Dr. Khalil Totah, Director.

Throughout the speeches there were two thoughts which saliently wove out their pattern and left a lasting impression

M. Price

RECEIVED
JUN 20 1947
Southern Regional Council

BULLETIN

of

The Institute of Arab American Affairs
160 Broadway, New York 7, N. Y.

VOL. II MAY 15, 1947 No. 11

PALESTINE IN THE U. N.

In compliance with a request from the British Government a special session of the General Assembly of the United Nations convened at Flushing Meadows on the 28th of April to discuss the problem of Palestine. The purpose of the British Government in taking this action was to appoint an investigating or inquiry committee to study the whole question and report to the regular session of the Assembly which will meet on the first of September.

The special session of the United Nations brought new Arab faces to our midst, some of whom have attained world reputation. In addition to such statesmen and diplomats as Prince Faisal of Saudi Arabia, Faris Bey al-Khoury of Syria, Mahmoud Hassan Pasha of Egypt, Dr. Charles Malik of Lebanon, Ali Jawdat Bey of Iraq and Dr. Constantine Zurayk of Syria, there were others who are not as well known to our American public. These include Fadil Jamali, foreign minister of Iraq, Naim Antaki, former foreign minister of Syria, Mahmoud Fauzi Bey, Egyptian minister in Washington, Victor Khoury, Charge d'Affaires of the Lebanese ministry in London, Dr. Fareed Zain Din, Syrian Minister to Moscow, Rajai Husseini, Emile Ghory, Henry Cattan and Esa Nakhlah, Palestine Arab delegation.

WHAT HAPPENED AT UNITED NATIONS:

From the start the dice were loaded against the Arabs in the United Nations special session. And from the start,

RECEIVED
AUG 5 1947

ARAB NEWS BULLETIN

(A Bulletin issued by the Arab Office, Washington, D. C.)

Volume II | August 2, 1947 | Number 9

PROBLEM OF THE SUDAN

IS CONSIDERED TO BE A MATTER OF LIFE AND DEATH TO EGYPT

The following letter by His Excellency Mahmoud Hassan Pasha was published in the N. Y. Times on July 18th. It is reprinted by the kind permission of the author and the N. Y. Times.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE N. Y. TIMES:

My attention has been called to an editorial in the July 14 issue of the Times under the title "Egypt and the Sudan." While in no way wishing to discuss the merits of the article or to question the policy of your newspaper, may I be permitted to elucidate a few points concerning a matter most vital to Egypt?

The appeal to the Security Council of the United Nations is taken in the name of the people of Egypt and in the best of faith under the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Charter, developed at the San Francisco sessions of the United Nations Organization, at which I was privileged to be a delegate, makes definite provision that obligations not in consonance with the Charter shall not prevail.

As to your reference that the "evacution . . . . of Egypt is nearly complete . . . . with only a few British troops scattered along the Suez Canal," may I say that you have oversimplified the problem. As a point of fact, the withdrawal of these important forces was only to a point seventy miles distant from our capital, Cairo. Their complete withdrawal today from Egypt is conditioned upon the satisfaction of British imperial claims.

You say that the question of the Sudan is complex. It may be too complex to be explained completely by me within the confines of this brief letter or, for that matter, to be settled definitely by your editorial in the compass of a half-column article.

Suffice it to say that the mass of people of Egypt and the Sudan, alike as to race, religion and interests, desire a firm and friendly union between themselves, without the intervention of any alien power with its own axes to grind. The one big problem that we hope shall have a decision from the Security Council is whether any of the so-called larger powers may, with abandon, exploit their concept of imperialism at the expense of smaller countries.

British blood, as you say, has been shed in the Sudan, but may I remind you that valiant Egyptian blood, too, has drenched many a Sudanese redoubt. If we consult official records of the Dongola expedition in the reconquest of the Sudan, we find the military force composed of 16,682 Egyptians and Sudanese, with 870 English soldiers. At the Battle of Omdurman, under Kitchener, four-fifths of the total force employed were Egyptians.

In addition the records show that the warfare in question cost 2,354,000 Egyptian pounds, of which the British Treasury bore 800,000 pounds and the Egyption Treasury the balance.

Let us make it plain that the Sudan is not tied to Egypt by "conquest". The racial and cultural bond between the two, stretches back into the dim vistas of antiquity, as the inscriptions on the tombs of the Pharaohs will testify.

And while we are at it let us quote the well-known British statesman and author, Winston Churchill, when he writes in his book "The River War": "Among and about the headstreams and tributaries of the mighty river lie the wide and fertile provinces of the Egyptian Sudan. The Sudan is joined to Egypt by the Nile, as a diver is connected with the surface by his airpipe. Without it there is only suffocation. 'Aut Nilus, Aut Nihil.'"

You speak of certain dissident elements in the Sudan. Contrary to your statement, it is a well-known fact that the large majority of the Sudanese are in favor of unity with Egypt, and when the real spirit of the Egyptian point of view becomes known to the dissidents they too will fall in line.

To sum up the situation, the problem of the Sudan is a matter of life and death to Egypt. But to Britain it is just another Jewel in the imperial crown.

Certain that the justice of the Egyptian case will appeal to the Security Council, Egypt has faith that the United Nations will live up to the letter and the spirit of the Charter.

MAHMOUD HASSAN,

Ambassador of Egypt to the United States,
New York, July 15, 1947.

ARAB NEWS BULLETIN

(A Bulletin issued by the Arab Office, Washington, D. C.)

Volume II | September 1, 1947 | Number 11

POPULATION INCREASES IN PALESTINE AND OTHER ARAB COUNTRIES

One of the most common, and most fallacious, arguments brought forward by Zionists to justify their policy in Palestine is that their presence has greatly benefited the Arabs economically. To quote one typcal statement: "We maintain unanimously that the economic position of the Palestinian Arabs, under the Jewish colonization and owing to the Jewish colonization, has become the object of envy in all the Arab countries." (1) According to the Zionists one of the most striking indices of this prosperity is the spectacular growth of the non-Jewish population, from 661,000 in 1922 to 1,197,000 in 1944, or by 81%. This growth (estimated by some Zionists at "hundreds of thousands") is, according to many Zionists, too great to be accounted for by natural increase, and must be attributed to a heavy immigration of Arabs from neighboring countries. Others, while prepared to admit that practically all the increase is due to natural growth, regard it as indicating an exceptional degree of prosperity, unmatched in any other Arab country.

In order to refute these claims, we shall first of all show that Arab immigration into Palestine is insignificant. We shall then show that the rate of increase of the Arab population in Palestine is no greater than in other Arab countries, and is, in fact, smaller than in Syria and Lebanon. Finally, we shall prove that the Arab rate of increase is generally greatest in those areas which have been least affected by Jewish colonization.

ARAB IMMIGRATION

It is difficult to get an exact figure for Arab immigration into Palestine since, until 1935, immigrants were classified by religion, not "race". In addition, there is a certain amount of "illegal" immigration of neighboring Arabs into Palestine and of Palestinian Arabs into neighboring countries. "For example, a crop failure in the Hauran may lead to a movement into Palestine, almost entirely masculine in character, so that the immigrants may acquire funds with which to recoup their losses and, on their return to their own villages, invest in their normal agricultural pursuits. Conversely, if grazing conditions in Sinai (Egypt) are more favorable than in Palestine, there will be an outward movement of the Beersheba Beduins." (2)

But it is certain that the total figure for Arab immigration is so small as to be hardly perceptible. The survey quoted above, after a review of the evidence ,declares, "The conclusion is that Arab illegal immigration for the purposes of permanent settlement is insignificant."

The total Arab immigration, legal and illegal, is estimated, in the same survey, to account for only 4% of the total increase in the Arab population. (3) This figure is corroborated by the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry of 1946, which states in its report that "of this Moslem growth by 472,000 (i.e. between 1922 and 1944), only 19,00 was accounted for by immigration." (4)

We may therefore categorically deny that immigration has had any appreciable effect in swelling the numbers of the Arab population of Palestine.

GROWTH OF POPULATION IN NEIGHBORING ARAB COUNTRIES

Statistics for Iraq, Transjordan, Yemen and Saudi Arabia are not sufficiently accurate to provide any exact basis for comparison. The figures for Syria, Lebanon, and Egypt are, however, significant. In 1921-22, the population of Syria was put at 1,511,000. By 1944, it had risen to 2,901,000, an increase of 92% in 22 years. Between 1941-2 and 1946, the population of Lebanon similarly rose from 629,000 to 1,150,000, an increase of 83%. The 1946 total for Lebanon would have been much higher had it not been for the considerable amount of emigration to South America and West Africa that went on during that period.

In Egypt, the population figures can be traced back well into the 19th century. The total population rose from about 3,000,000 in 1830 to 6,800,000 in 1882. By 1917 it had risen to 12,750,000 and in 1947 had reached the total of 19,090,000, a sixfold increase in a hundred years.

The same rapid growth took place in many other countries, notably India (whose population is increasing by about 5,000,000 per annum) and Indo-

(Continued on Page 2)

(1) V. Jabotinsky—Evidence submitted to the Palestine Royal Commission, 1937. (Italics not in original.)

(2) A Survey of Palestine—submitted by the Government of Palestine to the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry—Vol. 1, page 211.

(3) Volume 1, Page 142.

(4) Report—Page 23.

RECEIVED
SEP 19 1947
Southern Regional Council

ARAB NEWS BULLETIN

(A Bulletin issued by the Arab Office, Washington, D. C.)

Volume II | September 13, 1947 | Number 12

PARTITION OF PALESTINE

In recommending partition as a solution for the "Palestine Problem," the United Nations Special Committee was doubtless inspired by King Solomon's decision to cut up the contested child and divide it between the rival mothers.

King Solomon was, of course, the wisest man of his age and his device was completely successful in achieving the desired result, namely identifying the real mother of the child. But UNSCOP need not have proceeded in such a roundabout way. The real mother of the Palestinian child is known to everyone. The rival claimant is merely a self-appointed stepmother who has forced herself into the house with the intention of supplanting the rightful mother.

There is another important difference between King Solomon and UNSCOP. Solomon was not trying to effect a "compromise acceptable to both parties". Living in a less subtle age than ours, he knew that where one party had claims and the other none the only just solution is the one that accords to each his rights—in that particular case to one party the whole child and to the other no child at all. Today, however, no international body seems capable of examining any problem in the light of right and wrong. Instead, these problems are studied as "conflicts of interests", "rival pressures", "incompatible desires", etc. Hence no case can be decided on its own merits but only in the light of a hundred irrelevant considerations, most of which only serve to obscure the issue.

This comes out particularly clearly in UNSCOP's recommendation of partition. Had the Committee attempted to base its judgment on principles of morality and law it would have argued somewhat as follows:

"The only title to ownership recognized in public and private, international and local, law is long uninterrupted possession. The Arabs have occupied Palestine, without contest, for at least 1300 years. Hence their title to the land is unimpeachable. The Jewish settlers who entered Palestine during the last 30 years have done so against the will of the Arabs. Hence, the utmost they can expect, is to enjoy the ordinary rights accorded by the Arab state to its own citizens. Squatting on someone's land does not give one a title to it when the owner is continually protesting against the intrusion of the squatters.

The first Arab objection to partition, then, is one of principle. If the Arabs' presentation of their case during the last thirty years has seemed to some to be somewhat monotonous and repetitive it is merely because they have always sought to base their case on a general principle of law and morality.

But there are other objections to the scheme concocted by UNSCOP. In order to avoid having a Jewish minority of 31% owning less than 10% of the land within an independent Arab Palestine, it cuts up the country in such a way as to avoid indeed having any but a few thousand Jews living under Arab rule; but it does this only by placing 510,000 Arabs under Jewish rule. The proposed Jewish state will be a curious combination: a state 51% of whose subjects owning about 80% of the land detest and reject the very basis on which it is built.(1)

Nor is the proposed Arab state in a much better position. A congested land of rocks and barren soil, most of which defies cultivation; a state which does not contain a single acre of first grade agricultural land; a state whose water supplies run off into the Jewish-held plains; a state which has been stripped of all its seaports; a state many of whose biggest towns and centers of culture have been placed under the rule of an alien and hostile power; such a state would be the first—and probably the last—of its kind in history.

Finally there are the purely practical objections. Partition. as a solution, was not first discovered by UNSCOP, but was recommended as early as 1937. But the careful investigations of the Woodhead Commission, sent out to study the ways and means of implementing partition, showed that it was technically not feasible. This was also recognized at the time by such Zionists as Lord Samuel, a former High Commissioner of Palestine.

The Report of UNSCOP does indeed stress that "the preservation of the economic unity of Palestine is indispensable to the life and development of the country and its peoples." But, by a logic which is hard to follow, it thinks to ensure that unity by breaking up the country into two units which, by the very nature of the settlement, cannot ever be expected to cooperate, much less to unite.

King Solomon was truly wise—he knew that if one cut up a child one could not expect the severed parts to live. He, at any rate, would not have tried to console the rightful mother by saying "half a child is better than none at all."

---

(1) The summary of UNSCOP's report put the number of Arabs in the proposed Jewish state at 416,000. The full text however states that that state will have "a slight majority." The figure of 510 000 is an estimate made by the Palestine government.

BULLETIN

of

The Institute of Arab American Affairs

160 Broadway, New York 7, N. Y.

VOL. III SEPTEMBER 15, 1947 No. 3

ANOTHER PALESTINE REPORT

A summary of recommendations by the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine (UNSCOP) was published September 1st and the full report eight days later. Of the eleven members of the committee seven supported the majority report, three members submitted a minority report. The eleventh member, Australia, abstained from voting on either proposal.

Majority Report

The majority report recommends partition giving 62 per cent of the country—including the fertile coastal plains, Tel Aviv, Haifa and Jaffa (the latter port of 70,000 almost wholly Arab)—to the proposed Jewish state; a district including Jerusalem and Bethlehem to make up an international zone; the remainder of the country to become an Arab State. A transition period of two years is suggested during which 150,000 Jews would be permitted to immigrate at a uniform monthly rate. An economic union is suggested as prerequisite to the granting of independence. Administration during the interim period would be under the British subject to United Nations direction.

Minority Report

The minority report recommends the creation of a federal union made up of two states, one Arab and one Jewish, with Jerusalem as the capital. A federal legislative body dealing with all matters of common concern would be made up of an equal number of representatives of Arabs and Jews regardless of population differences. Immigration would be controlled by a commission composed of an equal number of

ARAB NEWS BULLETIN

(A Bulletin issued by the Arab Office, Washington, D. C.)

Volume II | October 11, 1947 | Number 14

TEMPLE AT JERASH, TRANS-JORDAN

RECEIVED
OCT 20 1947
Southern Baptist Convention

Jerash, the Gerasa of the New Testament, is probably, after Pompei, the best preserved Roman City at present known. One of the principal caravan cities of antiquity, it has always been inhabited by the same stock which, at successive periods has been known under the name of Aramean, Moabite, Nabatean and Arab. The ruins date mainly from the first two centuries of the Christian Era.

ZIONIST ECONOMY FACES A CRISIS:

While it is certain that man does not live by bread alone, it is equally true that man cannot live without bread. No state can hope to survive in the difficult conditions of today unless it rests on a solid economic basis, and one of the main objections to the proposed Jewish state in Palestine is that its economy is fundamentally unsound.

Before the last war, Jewish agriculture in Palestine was in a sorry plight. Jewish produce was twice as expensive as that of Palestine Arabs or that of Syria and Lebanon. Jewish citrus groves carried twice as heavy an indebtedness per acre as Arab groves, which were equally productive. Finally the Jewish collective farms showed substantial losses in their balance sheets, although they received their land free of rent and paid insignificant amortization on the large capital sums (about $45,000,000) advanced to them by the Jewish National Funds.

Nor was industry in a better position. Between 1936 and 1939 Jewish industry was in a chronically depressed condition with all the familiar aspects of slumps: numerous bankruptcies, a heavy fall in capital investments, a sharp drop of nearly 30% in real wages, severe unemployment and so forth. Moreover, in spite of the most strenuous efforts, exports of manufactured goods never exceeded the trifling sum of $2,500,000.

This weakness of the Jewish economy was reflected in the foreign trade of Palestine. In no year between

ARAB NEWS BULLETIN

(A Bulletin issued by the Arab Office, Washington, D. C.)

VOLUME II | DECEMBER 31, 1947 | No. 19

RECEIVED
12 1948
Regional Council

Mohamed Ali Square, Alexandria, Egypt

With a population of nearly 1,000,000, Alexandria is not only the second largest town in the Arab world and its greatest port but also the busiest port of the Eastern Mediterranean.

The Arab Office was opened some two and a half years ago with the object of giving information upon the affairs of the Arab world to the American public, and of cultivating better relations between the Arab and American peoples. Since the support which the Zionist movement received from the United States was the biggest obstacle in the way of Arab-American friendship, it was natural that a large proportion of the efforts of the Arab Office should have been devoted to explaining the true facts of the situation in Palestine, in the hope that in time an enlightened public opinion might arise to counterbalance the pressure of Zionist groups and their utilization of internal American politics to push their plans in Palestine.

It was the constant theme of the Arab Office in all its publications on the subject of Palestine that Zionism, the movement to build a Jewish State in Palestine at the expense of the Arabs, constituted the only obstacle to full and free collaboration between the Arab world and the United States: but also that the obstacle which Zionism constituted was not a slight or secondary matter which the Arabs might be persuaded

BULLETIN

of

The Institute of Arab American Affairs

160 Broadway, New York 7, N. Y.

Vol. III FEBRUARY 15, 1948 No. 8

FORCE OR LAW?

If one's sources of knowledge concerning the Palestine problem were limited to the American press, he would get the impression that peace in the Holy Land can be established only through an international army equipped and trained by the United States but waving the crusading banner of the United Nations. Is there no way out of the Arab-Jewish dilemma except by the use of instruments that kill innocent peoples and cause useless destruction of property? Haven't we had enough of war as a means to impose unfair settlements?

Miss Virginia C. Gildersleeve, former dean of Barnard College who helped frame the United Nations Charter at San Francisco and who was named a delegate to U. N. Assembly by President Truman but was unable to serve because of illness, cites the sensible, decent course that man should follow to solve the vexatious problem which has taken a toll of more than 1100 lives since the U. N. recommended partition on Nov. 29, 1947.

In a letter to the NEW YORK TIMES on Jan. 22, 1948, Miss Gildersleeve suggested that: "In considering any dispute which endangers international peace and security, the Security Council under the Charter must first of all call upon the parties concerned to 'seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means of their own choice.' (Article 33)."

Miss Gildersleeve also cited Article 36 which says that "The Security Council must also 'take into consideration that

Building Unity Within A Community

MARION EDMAN[1]

"Civil War Breaks Out in Detroit." This was the kind of headline which was flashed by newspapers all over the country on June 20 and 21 of last summer to inform their readers that in one community, at least, even the semblance of unity among its people had been destroyed. As the year wore on, from various other communities in different parts of the United States, the same kind of news again and again startled the citizens of a country engaged in a war to guarantee basic human rights to all men everywhere.

It is not intended here to trace the causes of race riots nor to argue whether or not such open conflict may be evidence of the birth pangs of social change which may in itself be desirable in many respects. Agreement is general that all violent action is contrary to the tenets and practices of democracy and that social change should rather come about through the legitimate channels of democratic processes. The various avenues for such democratic action through which desirable social change can be effected are too numerous and too complex for the compass of a single paper. It is the purpose of this discussion to indicate only the program of the public schools of Detroit in aiding the community in its desire to bring about greater understanding and unity among the diverse populations of the city.

That Detroit's problem of assimilation has been great is evidenced by the fact that from 1910 on through 1930, roughly one person in three was foreign born. In 1940, the foreign-born still numbered one-fifth of the total population. The total number of these foreign-born is not only large, but is comprised of very many diverse groups. A certain amount of friction has always been attendant upon the acculturation of these groups, but these frictions were largely psychological and personal rather than physical and of mass proportion.

World War I brought Detroit its first large immigration of Negroes. By 1920 this group constituted 4 per cent of the total population; by 1940 it had reached 9 per cent. Since the outbreak of World War II, the increase in Negro population has gone on apace, with no definite figures available as to the exact number of increase.

The types of conflict between races is more acute than the conflict among nationality groups. In Detroit, as elsewhere, unrest among Negroes has centered on four major areas: (1) lack of adequate housing; (2) discrimination in employment; (3) a feeling of uncertainty concerning the meaning of the war for their own group; (4) dissatisfaction caused by discriminations in eating places, in recreation, in travel, in the newspapers, in the courts, and many other specific areas of everyday activity.

Not only the community, but the public schools have long been aware of these four major manifestations of tension which cause disunity and misunderstanding among the peoples who must live together in the close proximity which urban life imposes upon its population. The schools have not been unmindful of their responsibility in the years past, but since the outbreak of open conflict have sharpened and intensified their program in intercultural education to meet the present challenge of the community's concern for the rights of all its citizens.

[1]Supervisor of Language Education in the Detroit Public Schools.

The present program of the Detroit Public Schools in intercultural education attacks the problem of building greater unity in the community on four major points: (1) administrative policy and direction; (2) teacher education, both pre-service and in-service; (3) school experiences for pupils, both curricular and so-called extracurricular; (4) community cooperation. School experiences for children will be described in some detail in this paper; only brief mention can be made of the other three ways in which the schools hope to realize their objectives of aiding the people of Detroit to understand all groups better.

The Superintendent of Schools has set up an Administrative Committee whose function it is to propose matters of policy to the Superintendent and his staff and to serve as a clearing house for various types of activities in the schools. Within the past several months this Committee has studied the number and positions of Negro personnel employed by the Board of Education; has stimulated the setting up of individual school committees in each school building of the city to study closely the particular problems in intercultural education in that school; has conducted a city-wide institute for the chairmen of these school committees; has presented at teachers' meetings a series of speakers on intercultural education; has studied teacher selection and placement techniques and policies as they have bearing on matters pertaining to prejudices concerning race and nationality; has sponsored the preparation of a bulletin on intercultural education which will shortly be distributed to all teachers of the city; has accepted the services of a field worker supplied by the Julius Rosenwald Foundation to study race relations in the school and in the community. These are only a representative listing of the many activities which engage the efforts of the Administrative Committee. Briefly, its chief value is to give status and impetus to the program in intercultural education; to act as a coordinating agency for the various developments which are worked out by the individual schools and teachers of the city; and to study general school policies as they have relationship to the problem of intercultural understanding in the total school program.

Effective teacher education is, without doubt, one of the most vital concerns in the over-all program of eliminating prejudice and building good will among children. In this respect, Detroit is fortunate, for it draws heavily upon Wayne University for the training of its teachers and the University is itself a unit in the public school system. At the present time required courses introduce all student teachers to basic social problems. In addition, many of the students elect courses in anthropology, race relations, and others of similar content which are offered in the College of Liberal Arts. Before entrance to the College of Education, teaching majors are required to complete one hundred clock hours of service in some community agency where they have contacts with a wide sampling of the city's population. Directed teaching is carried on in schools with heterogeneous populations which again helps acquaint student teachers with children from various national backgrounds and racial groups.

For in-service teachers, Wayne University has recently inaugurated two new courses: "Problems of Intercultural Education" and "Inter-Americanism in the Elementary and Secondary Schools." In addition to these courses, reference has already been made to committees, to institutes, to teachers' meetings, to a lecture series, to bulletins—all of which help to educate in-service teachers in the materials and techniques of intercultural education. Demonstration lessons have been presented in various fields to which groups of teachers have been invited. The lessons have further acquainted teachers with materials and techniques.

The need for close cooperation with various community groups if real progress is to be made in this area of education is definitely recognized. During the past month, the Board of Education acted as one of the sponsors of a two-day conference on intercultural education which was attended by over two thousand persons, all representatives of a broad cross section of the total population in the community. More than seventy organizations in the city and from nearby cities were likewise sponsors of this effort. Included were labor groups, religious organizations, racial and national organizations, civic clubs, professional groups, and many others. The conference was, by common consent, of great value to the community, both for the fine material which was presented by the eminent speakers who participated in it, but more particularly, perhaps, for the splendid opportunity it afforded for representatives of these many varied groups to work together in planning and managing such an undertaking. The contacts which were thus made possible for the representatives in the school system were particularly helpful.

The Board of Education and Wayne University each maintain a Speakers' Bureau which has on its roster trained speakers in the various phases of intercultural education who are sent to those organizations in the community which request their services. Thus another point of contact is constantly maintained between school and community.

A standing committee, composed of representatives from many organizations of the type named in connection with the sponsorship of the conference, meets regularly to gain information concerning developments in the schools' program of intercultural education and to make recommendations for the further development of that program. This committee has a chairman appointed by the Superintendent of Schools and an official representative from the Board of Education. The committee is an effective channel for interpreting the schools' program to the community and likewise serves as a clearing house of information concerning the desires and interests of various groups in the community as these refer to the schools' program.

With such organizations as the Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the Round Table of Christians and Jews, the schools work closely, using special facilities and resources which these organizations may provide which are suitable for school use.

The school program itself is concerned with two areas of education in this field: (1) the curriculum proper and (2) those opportunities for education which come from classroom living, from extra-curricular activities, and from teacher-pupil and pupil-pupil relationships. Up to the present time, no curricular materials have been prepared which have been sent out on a city-wide basis. Rather, teachers have been left to their own initiative to develop significant programs which fit their unique situations. Visual aids, recordings, books, unit outlines, and other similar helps have been made available to them. A suggested outline for the observance of Negro History Week was sent out to all teachers during the current year.

The program as it is being developed in the schools stresses four different types of approach: (1) contactual; (2) appreciational; (3) factual; (4) ethical and patriotic. None of these is stressed to the exclusion of the others. The degree to which any one is stressed depends upon the groups represented in the school population and upon the age level of the children.

The contactual approach attempts to build up understandng and unity among diverse groups by promoting satisfying face-to-face contacts and happy group living among children of differing races and nationalities. In schools of widely heterogeneous populations, the challenge of providing for happy person-to-person experiences for all the children within the school is one of the greatest facing the teacher. Most teachers find ways to help children minimize their differences as ingeniously as did Miss X. Mary, a Negro child, was chosen by her class to be the mother in the play the children were about to present. She in turn chose two daughters; one a white child, one a Negro child. The big smart boy in the back row immediately piped up concerning the incongruity of such a situation. For a moment the children seemed uncertain as to how to proceed until the teacher reassured them by saying, "I think it's perfectly all right for Mary to choose Alice and Sue for her daughters, if she wants them. After all, Mary who is the mother is only ten years old, and Alice and Sue are ten and twelve. It's even more impossible, you know, for a mother to have a daughter older than herself than for her to have one of a little different color." The class immediately saw that no dilemma had been created by Mary's choice—for what did age matter? And therefore, what did color matter? The play went on to the satisfaction of all.

Schools with mixed populations offer endless opportunity for children's learning to live together on a democratic basis, to respect one another's customs and traditions. Recently I listened to third graders, representing some fifteen nationalities and all three of the major religious groups, discussing the ways in which their families celebrate Easter. No one's way was considered "queer"; each was interesting because it was different. Jewish children felt comfortable in describing some of the ceremony of the Passover, all because the teacher had built up a social climate in that classroom where every individual was respected, and everyone's particular way of life was accepted as an interesting contribution to a total pattern of living.

In those schools where such opportunities are not present because all the children are of a relatively homogeneous population, schools plan two types of programs: (1) they invite adults from the community who represent various culture groups to speak to the children or (2) they exchange programs with schools where the children come from different background than the children know first hand. In both types of program, care is taken to orient the pupils for their experiences with the groups or individuals with whom they are to make contact. The children of the Higginbotham School in Detroit have prepared an excellent original program around the life of George Washington Carver which has been presented to a number of schools where there are no Negro children. On such occasions, provision has been made for the children to have face-to-face contact with one another through lunch periods, tours of the school building, and informal conversation.

One of the finest outcomes of this type of activity has been the inter-school planning which has gone on between the faculties of various schools. In many instances it has given white teachers their first opportunity to work closely with Negro teachers and the contact has been of mutual help in building better understanding and respect for each group.

Many organizations in the city are glad to furnish speakers for school programs and through this type of contact, children have come to know fine persons representing Negro, Chinese, Jewish, and many nationality groups.

Since face-to-face contacts with minority groups are necessarily limited for many children, this means of education must be supplemented by vicarious experience. A library of visual aids, both moving pictures and still films which develop a feeling of one-ness, with people, is available for school use. Greatest dependence for worthwhile vicarious experience is placed, however, upon those fine portrayals of personal and group living which modern children's books make so readily accessible to teachers and children. Such books as Tobe, The Blue Willow, Up the Hill, Steppin and Family, and All American, to mention only a few of the hundreds of good titles available, all present children of differing racial, religious, national, and socio-economic background so convincingly as individual human beings with hopes, aspirations, and interests very similar to those which all children know, that it is impossible not to feel kinship with them. These books offer splendid opportunity to measure the way of life the children know first hand with that of these book friends and to make comparisons and contrasts which do not point out any evidence of superiority or inferiority in cultures, but which point up differences which should be accepted as welcome enrichment to the American way of life.

Books of this sort are supplied to teachers and children in the school libraries and in classroom collections for literature and reading classes. Lists of titles have been prepared which guide children in making choices of such books from the public library.

The second type of approach is appreciational. This involves an understanding of the contributions made to world civilization and particularly to American life by the outstanding representatives of the many cultures represented in the American scene. It involves knowing the facts concerning the great names of both contemporary life and generations past; it involves also knowing the folk contributions made by various peoples. Children learn that Marian Anderson is a great Negro singer; they also learn that Negroes have made a great contribution to American music through the spirituals they have developed. In addition, they sing spirituals and by this means understand better their true beauty and meaning. They study biography to understand who the outstanding representatives of the various nationalities and races are and what their contributions have been; similarly they examine exhibits of art and handicraft developed by these peoples, they dance their dances, they wear their costumes, they eat their food, they learn something about their language and their way of life. All of this activity is pointed toward one consideration: differences do not constitute inferiority or superiority—they are merely facets of an intricate and interesting pattern of living.

The third approach is the presentation and analysis of factual data. This approach is perhaps the backbone of all the others. It may be that a class is studying housing. So far as possible, facts concerning housing in Detroit, particularly as it affects certain of the less favored groups in the city, are presented. Analyses are made of the effect of the type of living conditions available to these people, both upon them and upon the city in general. In a class studying propaganda, such myths and clichés as the one that Jews control the money of the country are refuted by presentation of the facts in the matter. In practically every subject matter field in the curriculum are opportunities given to present facts which will further understanding of diverse groups of people and destroy old myths and clichés. In some schools, the boys and girls have made special studies of the facts of race and their social significance. These pupils consider the implications for such data as these: While white soldiers surpassed Negro soldiers in intelligence tests during World War I, Northern Negroes surpassed Southern whites.

The Detroit Board of Education has been fortunate in securing from the Cranbrook Institute of Science its unique and splendid exhibit "The Races of Mankind." This exhibit portrays in graphic form the chief anthropological concepts which are presented in Benedict and Weltfish's pamphlet bearing the same title. This exhibit will travel from one high school to another, where it will be on display for the benefit of the students in each school and will also be available to pupils in the elementary and intermediate schools of the surrounding district. Teachers will be supplied with classroom sets of the pamphlet, Races of Mankind. These will be used in preparing their pupils to see the exhibit and in carrying on follow-up work after they have seen it. This exhibit doubtlessly will clear up, both for teachers and pupils, many of the common misconceptions concerning race differences.

The fourth approach is the ethical and patriotic one. Many teachers are evolving with their boys and girls statements of what it means, in terms of concrete community living, to carry out the ideals of the Declaration of Independence or the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. They are helping pupils to see that our country and our community is really faced with what Myrdal has termed "the American dilemma" in that there is extreme discrepancy between what we declare in the "American Creed" and what we practice in our treatment of minority groups. Boys and girls are being made to realize that the ideals of democracy must be realized on the home front if they are to be made effective in any large scale plan for a better post-war world.

As was stated earlier in this article, no city-wide "plan" for injecting these approaches into the school programs has been put into operation. Rather, teachers have been encouraged to use these approaches according to the peculiar needs of the community and the unique character of the school. Furthermore, teachers have not been specifically instructed as to how these materials should be organized for incorporation into the regular curriculum of the school. A number of ways are possible, and observation bears out that all are in operation in the Detroit Schools. First is the observance of special days and weeks such as Negro History Week, Good Will Day, Pan-American Day, and many others. Likewise, special assemblies as pageants prepared by pupils or by speakers from the community are planned. This method of organization has certain points in its favor, but it lacks continuity and continued emphasis on the problem and therefore can be used only to a limited extent.

The second method of organization is the all-school project. The entire school spends a period of time in studying the culture of a group of people or of several groups of people. Each subject matter field contributes to the general development and enrichment of the general theme. Not long ago the Cadillac School in Detroit made a detailed and enriched study of the culture of Latin America.

The third plan of organization is to present a special unit in a subject matter field. The eighth-grade English class of the Harding School recently spent eight weeks in studying the question, "What has the Negro contributed to American life from the day of slavery to the present time?" An original program in the auditorium culminated the study, in which the historical and cultural development of the Negro was presented as an integral part of the country's history and development.

The final form of organization—the best, perhaps, and most difficult to achieve—is the completely integrated curriculum. Thus, when the Revolutionary War is being studied, incidental mention is made of the fact that Crispus Attacks, the first man to give his life in the battle for freedom, was a Negro; that Haym Salomon, who managed the finances of the country at that period, was a Jew; that Kosciusko, who ventured much for freedom in this country during that period, was a Pole; and so on for the special contribution of all groups. At the present time, supervisors in the various subject-matter fields are checking on ways in which topics which give a more complete picture of the contributions made to the life of this country by all its peoples may be pointed up in the various subject-matter fields of the curriculum. They are encouraging teachers to use supplementary aids to supply materials that present textbooks now fail to include.

No program is complete without some attempt at the evaluation of its effectiveness. The Department of Research is at the present time engaged in building two types of tests: one to use as stimulation and motivation for teaching; the second to use as a means of diagnosis for measuring existing prejudices.

Detroit is attempting to meet the challenge inherent in Lewis Mumford's observation that in the time between 1930 and 1940 passed not a decade but a thousand years. Perhaps the decade through which we are now passing will bring about even more rapid and more far reaching change. The challenge to society is to keep the human spirit and social organization abreast of technological and physical change in community living. The schools of Detroit are attempting to do their part in meeting their present responsibility and in being organized to make provision for whatever challenge the future years may bring.

Reprinted From

THE ELEMENTARY ENGLISH REVIEW

MAY 1944

Available from

BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

1697 BROADWAY NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

Intercultural Educ.

Vol. II, No. 3, June 1945
For Colleges, Schools, Agencies
Church and Civic Groups

Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Paul Hatt, Associate Director
Wayne University, Detroit 1

THE COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN

*
***
*****

The College Study in Intergroup Relations
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education

RECEIVED
SEP 23 1946
Southern Regional Council

WHAT THIS ISSUE IS ABOUT

1. A Note on Our Workshop
2. Current Staff Activities
3. Once Again, A Bibliography
4. Fiction, An Interest Getter
5. Autobiography, Biography
6. Drama, Poetry, Folklore
7. Ethnic Peoples--A Profile
8. Basic Sociological Views
9. Child Acculturation, A Theory
10. School Problems and Programs
11. Intergroup Study Technics
12. Group Management Tactics
13. Uses of Audio-Visual Aids
14. National Resource Agencies

*****

I. A NOTE ON OUR WORKSHOP

In spite of heat, in spite of heavy enrollments, our Workshop in Intergroup Relations got off to a promising start. In all, 35 graduate students enrolled, and others will enter for short periods as we move along. Participants come from a variety of places, as far apart as Birmingham and Albany, St. Louis and Chisholm, Minn. Several are college committee chairmen here, as we had hoped, to plan an intergroup program for their school.

> JOHN DONNE'S FAMOUS BELL
>
> No man is an Iland, intire of it selfe; every man is a Peece of the continent, a Parte of the Maine. If a Clod be washed away by the Sea, Europe is the lesse.. as if a Mannor or thy friend's or thin owne were. Any man's death diminishes me, for I am involved in all Mankinde; and therefore, never send to me to ask for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for thee.
>
> John Donne, 16th Century poet.

Although we shall never blame anyone, certainly no person in our own teaching business, who spends the summer in fishing, or in humoring any kind of bug that may have bitten him, yet we do want to invite visitors. If you come from out of town and plan to stay overnight in Detroit, be very sure to make a hotel reservation, or write or wire us so that we can do so! Our workshop closes on August 2nd.

TO VISITORS, WELCOME!

Day in and day out, through the year, we have been pleased, greatly pleased, by an increasing flow of visitors. Having set atop a cracker barrel as a youth, or warmed my shins on a winter day around a red-bellied stove, swapping yarns with the countryside, I find in these casual interchanges of news and ideas a stimulating experience, an inward satisfaction. Drop in on the workshop if you can; if not, and you are passing through town, stop in any time for a quick hello. Detroit is a curious community, a friendly town, an exciting one.

Our College Study office is 5272 Second Ave., two blocks west of Woodward, the city's main boulevard north from downtown, and it takes about 15 minutes to reach us by bus or streetcar from say the Statler Hotel. Our phone is TEmple 1-1450, Ext. 387, and there is no service after 5:15 PM or before 8:00 AM.

II. STAFF ACTIVITIES

Paul Hatt, our new associate director, has moved in, settled down, and gone to work. Workshoppers find him especially helpful on any kind of study form, notably attitude scales and projective tests. In passing, we would add that the next issue of the BULLETIN will be devoted to the folio of tests the staff is at work in developing. These instruments are much needed by our colleges in their intergroup programs, in fact by any person concerned with the need for, and effects of, intergroup education. Our study forms will not be ready for distribution before September. We would like to make our office a center for the collection of all sorts of intergroup study instruments--questionnaires, scales, inventories, etc., about which we shall write from time to time. For a copy of whatever instrument you have developed, we'll send in return anything we have that will be of use to you!

A FOLIO OF TESTS

Workshop or no, our colleges keep moving right on so that, if we are not to lose step with them for the summer, we must make such hurried trips as are possible. In addition to committee planning for the coming year, several colleges are holding their first intergroup education workshop. It has been helpful to them to hear what our experimental institutions have been doing, their "suffering and undergoing" in a year of difficult work. Nothing has been of as much concern as technics, strategy, procedures, in group study and management, i.e. the age-old question of how to do a better teaching job.

UTILIZING THE LOCAL ENVIRONMENT
A 62 p. booklet by Margaret Koopman. Community study in theory &practice. Hinds, Hayden & Eldridge, 105-5th Ave., New York.

TEACHING TEACHERS CO-OPERATIVE ACTION
A report on our first year's work in College Study. To appear in 25th Yrbk, Amer. Assn. Teach. Coll., Oneonta, N.Y. Reprings (from us) on request after about Aug. 1.

We are now at work completing our selection of colleges for next year's program. With a budget several times its initial size, with a well working headquarter's setup at Wayne University, with the growing good will of the educational profession, we will be able to increase the number of colleges in our program from eight to perhaps twenty. While teacher educating institutions anywhere in the nation are invited to make application, our greatest need at this writing is for colleges in the South, white and Negro, and for Catholic institutions. Our aim is, as it was last year, to secure a small but representative sample of teacher education in the nation, to improve the sample for each of the three years the College Study is to run. We take some pride in stating that all our old colleges, our eight original schools, have applied to the executive committee of the COUNCIL COOPERATION IN TEACHER EDUCATION and been accepted for 1946. Two are on a limited service basis, due to unusually heavy enrollments, while the others will work as they did last year.

WANTED--A FEW MORE COLLEGES TO COMPLETE OUR 1946 SAMPLE

MASS MURDER OF 6,000,000 JEWS
Of the 9½ million Jews in Europe at the outbreak of the war, 6 million have been killed by the Nazis. In it all, German scholarship men of great reputation, have played an active, cooperative part. See Max Weinreich's HITLER'S PROFESSORS, Yiddish Scientific Institute, 535 W. 123rd, N.Y. 291pp. $3.50.

During the month, we have addressed three national meetings, one state meeting and several local groups, a service we want to extend as time permits. The further ahead dates can be made, the better it is for us. All that is wanted are expenses.

III. ONCE AGAIN, A BIBLIOGRAPHY

Of bibliographies on intergroup relations there is at present no end, a situation in contrast to what we found a year ago when our first bibliography (BULLETIN No. 4, July 1945) was issued. This is, we believe, a good indication of the growing interest of educators in what we now view with some confidence as a big and vital field. Writings range from substantial works as Conant's thoughtful inquiry to a lot of throbbing trash of which no serious minded educator can be at all proud. Likewise, bibliographies show variety--some good some better, and some, well, pretty bad.

A READING "MUST", NOW!
James Bryant Conant's Public Education and the Structure of American Society, Bureau of Publications, Teachers College, Columbia Univ., 1946.

All bibliographers face problems of space limitation, selection and annotation. We have tried to select readings that are reliable, useful, and up-to-date. In so far as possible, we have followed the general line of thinking developed in BULLETIN No. 3, May 1946. Writings do not fall readily into certain of these categories so that listings are rather thin. Where we were unable to complete a reference, mostly as to pages and price, we have had to let it go. Only major titles are annotated and that, perhaps, all too briefly for reader needs.

> ONE WORLD IN SCHOOL
> An excellent, up-to-date bibliography on race, prejudice, anti-Semitism, the Negro, Orientals, Mexicans and Indians. American Teachers Assoc., P.O. Box 1, Montgomery, Ala. 53 Pp. 1946.

In addition to this general bibliography, we shall publish a series of special bibliographies, more inclusive and technical in nature. We would appreciate criticism of the present listing, plus readings not included that have been helpful.

IV. FICTION, AN INTEREST GETTER

Fiction is an "interest getter," an arouser rather than an informer. It deals, in the main, with very personal problems, the hates and hopes and loves and fears of people. Its formula is pretty constant: get somebody in trouble, get them out, get them in again, etc. Thus fiction tends to define interpersonal problems, rather than to solve them, to make our rather ordinary life exciting.

> FROM AN OLD MASTER
> "I recall that, in concluding his lectures, Knapp (Strassburg) referred us, not to a treatise, but to a novel, which I bought and read. It suggested an idea from which I have greatly profited, the value of fiction in giving a student a more realistic view of life."
> ....Robert E. Park

Aside from personalizing issues, fiction has the function in intergroup relations of providing an array of characters which students use throughout a course to illustrate a point, to advance an argument. They project themselves, their conflicts and solutions, ambitions and aspirations, into the doings of Sammy, Aunt Cissy, Marc Reiser, and the rest. Happy is the classroom where the teacher is a fiction addict, a skilled user of people to teach about people!

OLD AMERICAN

Here are books about native whites of native parentage, socalled "Old Americans." Listings deal with many themes--old family, class backgrounds, our drive to get ahead, child acculturation, prejudices toward out group members. In general, we see life as symbolical majority-group members find it, a display of their basic values. We have kept the list short and sharply pointed.

Allen, Elizabeth, Not Hers Alone
Bellaman, Henry, Kings Row
Browne, Louis, See What I Mean
Davenport, Marcia, Valley of Decision
Flavin, Martin, Journey in the Dark
Lewis, Sinclair, Main Street
Marquand, J. P., H. M. Pulham, Esq.
Morley, Christopher, Kitty Foyle
Nash, Eleanor, Footnote to Life
Passos, John Dos, Number One, The Big Money
Randall, Lois, Roughly Speaking
Smith, Betty, Tree Grows in Brooklyn
Thane, Elswythe, Yankee Stranger
Tunis, John, A City for Lincoln

IMMIGRANTS, 2ND GENERATION

In these volumes, we glimpse immi- life histories--the migrant's high aspirations, bewilderment, gradual adjustment, in sum how he has become an American. One must read with some insight into Old world backgrounds, some feel for second generation culture conflicts, some abiding concern for people as people. Even then, unless he has lived abroad, he will miss much, for example the social role of Hersey's "bell" in the life of Adano.

Cather, Willa, My Antonia
De Jong, David, With A Dutch Accent
Driscoll, Paul, My Felicia
Farrell, John, A World I Never Made
Freeman, Jos., Never Call Retreat
Hershey, John, A Bell for Adano
Maltz, Albert, Cross and the Arrow
Papashvily, G., Anything Can Happen
Ravage, M., An American in Making
Steinbeck, J., The Moon Is Down
Vardoulakis, Mary, Gold in Streets

NEGRO AMERICANS

Writers about Negro Americans tell a number of stories. Favorite themes are intermarriage, the Negro's struggle to achieve status, his reactions to discrimination, the street life of children, a stress on simple human vices and virtues.

Carter, Hugh, Winds of Fear
Cook, F., Mrs. Palmer's Honey
Fast, Howard, Freedom Road
Fauset, J., Chinnaberry Tree
Hughes, L.Not Without Laughter
Jackson, J., Call Me Charlie
Means, F., Shuttered Windows
Moon, Bucklin, Darker Brother
Cvigton, Mary, Zeke
Petry, Ann, The Street
Smith, Lillian, Strange Fruit
Thompson, E. American Daughter
Tunis, John R., All American
Van Vechten, C. Nigger Heaven
Wright, Richard, Native Son

ANGLO-AMERICANS, ASIATICS

Under this title, we want to include books on Spanish-American peoples, Mexicans, Japanese, Chinese, and Indians. It must be remembered many are citizens, full-fledged citizens by right of birth, hence not to be viewed as "birds of passage." Some of their problems involve prejudice, others the culture conflicts common to any 2nd or 3rd generation.

Crichton, K., Proud People
Glick, C. Three Times I Bow
LaFarge, O., Laughing Boy
Means, Florence, Teresita of the Valley, Mover Cuters
Roberts, Martha, Tumble Weeds
Sanchez, G. Forgotten People
Steinbeck, J. Tortilla Flats
Sze, M-M, Echo of a Cry

A TEST FOR YOU

Agree__Disagree__Uncertain__

"All available means should be used to clear away the cobwebs of prejudice and open the eyes of people to the fact that historic background is the determinant of social behavior and that behavior changes with one's social status." ...Franz Boas

INTERPRETATION OF FICTION

***

"No teacher," writes Luella Miles, "should dare to neglect the job of orienting his students to the U. S. A. as it is in FACT, not in fiction." The same, we might add, should hold for drama, poetry and the like.

For the role of reading in child acculturation, see K.N. Lind, "The Social Psychology of Children's Reading," Amer. Jour. Soc., 41, '36, 454-69.

For anlytical studies, S. Brown, "Negro Character as Seen by White Authors," Jr. Negro Ed., 2, '33, 179-203; D. L. Hobman, "The Jew in Gentile Fiction," Contemp. Rev., 157 '40, 97-103.

JEWISH AMERICAN

Literate, vocal, imaginative, Jewish writers have for centuries produced outstanding works of fiction,drama,poetry, in truth excelled in all the arts. Many volumes deal with Old World migrant adjustments--the decision to fare forth, first impressions of America, making a living, Jewish-Gentile culture clashes via children. Other themes are evident.

Antin, Mary, Promised Land
Asch, Sholom, Uncle Moses
Graham, Gwenthalyn, Earth and High Heaven
Levin, Meier, The Old Bunch
Miller, Arthur, Focus
Schulberg, Budd, What Makes Sammy Run?
Sinclair, Jo, Wasteland
Singer, I. Brothers Askenazi

CREEDAL VALUES

Brennan, F. God Got One Vote
Cronin, A. J. Keys of the Kingdom
MacLennan, Two Solitudes

RURAL-URBAN

Time was when fiction writers made much of rural and urban problems, often stereotyping character in the Mortimer Snerd and Charlie McCarthy frames.

Now, curiously, there is little of this writing, that little being dispersive, not centered as to core, poorly done. And yet, all things considered, the urbanization of our common life is among the nation's most critical intergroup problems. It is of great importance in several of our college communities.

The historic situation is well known--the pull of the city, the push out of the country, the shuttling back and forth of many young men and women with all that this implies. Of all that has been written, no book surpasses in beauty Mary Webb's Precious Bane, Dutton, 1924, $2.00.

Davis, Robert, Gid Granger
Rawlings, Margaret K., Yearling, Crosscreek
Rolvaag, Ole, Giants in the Earth
Steinbeck, John, Grapes of Wrath
Stuart, Jessie, Men of the Mountains
Sykes, Hope, Second Hoeing
Webb, Mary, Precious Bane
Wolf, Thomas, The Web and the Rock

Americans share the same grave who, in our country, could not share the same hotel.
...Walter Winchel (more or less).

V. AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND BIOGRAPHY

"In our work so far," writes one college committee member, "there has been twice as much reading of fiction and autobiography as of heavier works on intergroup relations." In this school, a library of fifty of these books will be set up, every effort made to further their reading, and evidence collected as to effects. Here are a few very readable "life experience" volumes.

Benjamin, Robert S., I Am An American
Bontemps, Arma, We Have Tomorrow
DuBois, W. E. B., Dusk of Dawn
Embree, Raymond, Thirteen Against the Odds
Hellman, Geo. S., Benjamin S. Cardozo
Holt, R., George Washington Carver
Hughes, Langston, The Big Sea
Johnson, James Weldon, Along This Way
Lewisohn, Ludwig, Up Stream, Mid Channel, Island Within, The Haven
Lin u Tang, Laughter and Tears
Miller, Margarery, Joe Lewis, American
Moton, Robert R., Finding A Way Out
Papashvily, George, Anything Can Happen
Ravage, M. E., An American in the Making
Rizk, Salom, Syrian Yankee
Wright, Richard, Black Boy
White, Walter, Rising Wind

SHE'LL NOT BE SURE AGAIN OR WILL SHE?

Marc Reiser, a young Jewish lawyer in love with Eric Drake, of the "Montreal Drakes," is talking with her sister.

"Eric was born on top. She's been on top all her life. She's part of a complicated social system where she has a place, where she can go anywhere, do anything, on a basis of complete equality; it's simply up to her. If she marries me, she will lose that overnight.. Where there was certainty, there'll be doubt--nothing definite, just doubt. She will lose some of her friends who simply won't take to the idea of having to invite a Jew along with Eric; she'll be able to keep others. Maybe, she'll keep most of them, but SHE'LL NEVER BE SURE AGAIN."

Earth and High Heaven, p. 167

VI. DRAMA, POETRY, FOLKLORE

Benet, William R. and Norman Cousins, Poems of Freedom. Random House, New York, 1945
Poems from every land, with English speaking nations filling two-thirds of the pages with their hopes and aspirations.

Boyd, James (ed.), The Free Company Presents. Dodd, Mead, New York, 1941. $2
A series of radio plays, depicting our basic freedoms. Short, tense, pointed.

Botkin, B. A. (ed.), A Treasury of American Folklore. Crown Press, N. Y., '44, $3

Brown, Sterling (ed.), The Negro Caravan. Dryden Press, New York, 1941
A significant display of Negro contributions in every literary field.

D'usseau, A., and James Gow, Deep Are the Roots (Scribner's, 1946) and Tomorrow the World (Scribner's, 1943). Current Broadway plays.

Galsworthy, John, Strife. Found in Galsworthy's Plays, Scribner's, 1934.

Kingsley, Sidney, Dead End. In B. Cerf, et al., Sixteen American Plays, 1941.

Odets, Clifford, Awake and Sing. In H. Hatcher, Modern American Dramas, 1944.

Sklar, Geo. and Paul Peters, Stevedore. Covici, Friede, New York, 1934.

Wood, Maxine, On Whitman Avenue. Dramatic play based on housing.

VII. ETHNIC PEOPLES, A PROFILE

Once interest is aroused in ethnic peoples, what they are like, how they live and feel and think, one's desire to know more about them may lead him into current problems, either of a concrete sort such as race prejudice, or else he may feel the need for an inclusive, systematic point of view, a scheme for interpreting the daily flow of incidents and happenings.

Readings here bear on the first interest. They include several examples of concrete studies, a few standard textbooks, and a number of up-to-date bibliographies.

YOU'SE FREE, SON, FREE AS A BIRD

So this was Washington... the place where you boarded a bus for New York City, where Uncle Jake lived and everything was wonderful. Benny moved, as usual, toward the last row of seats in the bus when his mother caught him by the arm. "Son, we don' do dat, heah, not heah or anywhurs, no mor'. Ain't no No'th, ain't no Sou'h. We's free, son, free as a bird!"

...Bucklin Moon in Darker Brother.

Adamic, Louis, From Many Lands. Harper & Bros., New York, 1940. $3.50
Alpenfels, Ethel J., Sense and Nonsense about Race. Friendship Press, New York, 1946. Pamphlet, 25¢
Benedict, Ruth and Gene Weltfish, Races of Mankind. Public Affairs, 30 Rockefeller Center, New York, 1943. Pamphlet, 10¢
Brown, Frances and Joseph Roucek, One America. Prentice-Hall, New York, 1945
Caliver, Amrbose, Sources of Instructional Materials on Negroes. U. S. Office of Education, Washington, 1944. 19 pp.
For all instructional levels. 159 books, pamphlets, periodicals, films, slides, scripts, plays and exhibits. Excellent.
Cayton, H. R. and St. Claire Drake, Black Metropolis. Harcourt, Brace, 1945, $5.00
Cohen, A. E., All God's Children. Macmillan, New York, 1945. Jewish viewpoints
Davis, Allison, B. B. and M.R. Gardner, Deep South. Univ. Chic. Press, New Haven, '41 $4.50
Dollard, John, Caste and Class In A Southern Town. Yale Univ. Press, New Haven, '37
------- Education and Intergroup Relations. U. S. Office of Education, Wash., 1945
Embree, John F., The Japanese. Smithsonian Institution, Washington, 1943.
Finkelstein, Louis, et al., Religions of Democracy. Devin Adair, New York, 1941
Protestantism, Catholicism, Judaism. Common elements, respect and good will.
Graebner, I. and S. H. Britt, Jews in A Gentile World. Macmillan, New York, 1942
Jewish life, culture and personality. Factual, theoretical, unsurpassed.
Heimers, Lili and Margaret Cook, Peoples of America. New Jersey State Teachers College, Montclair, 1945. Ten page bibliography. 25¢
Intergroup Education Workshop, Guidance, Community, Intergroup Life, Social Studies, Evaluation. Short bibliographies by staff members. 437 W. 59th St., N.Y.
Johnson, Charles S., To Stem This Tide. Pilgrim Press, New York, 1943. $1. Survey.
Koeninger, Rupert, A Bibliography on Minority Groups. Central Michigan College of Education, Mt. Pleasant, 1946. 36 pp., books and articles.
Lee, Alfred M. Lee and Norman D. Humphrey, Race Riot, Dryden Press, New York, $1.50
MacGregory, G., Warriors Without Weapons. Univ. Chic. Press, 1945, $3.50.
Second of five projected volumes, each a study of an Indian tribe. Excellent.
McWilliams, Cary, Prejudice. Little, New York, 1944, $4.00 West Coast Japanese.
------- Mexicans in the U. S., Division of Labor and Social Information, Pan American Union, Washington, 1942. 10¢
Michigan Secondary Curriculum Study, Literature of Democracy. Michigan State Library, Lansing, 1944. A bibliography. Free.
Powdermaker, Hortense, After Freedom, A Cultural Study in the Deep South. Viking Press, New York, 1939
Sanchez, George I., A Forgotten People. Univ. New Mexico Press, Albuquerque, 1940
The Spanish speaking people of Taos, New Mexico.
Steinberg, Milton, The Making of the Modern Jew, Behrman, New York, 1943; A Partisan Guide to the Jewish Problem, Bobbs-Merrill, New York, 1944.
Trager, Helen G., A Bibliography for Teachers. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York, 1945. 5¢
Waxman, Julia, Race Relations. Julius Rosenwald Fund, 4901 Ellis Ave., Chicago, 1945. A bibliography.

WE'S TWO PEOPLE!

Mary was an aged and respected colored servant in a white southern home. One day, a washtub disappeared and she was accused of stealing it. On that evening, she quit her job, never to return. Finding the tub some weeks later and meeting Mary uptown, Mrs. S was most apologetic, inviting Mary to come back. "Well, now, Miz Smith, you is white and ah is black, but we is boff people. But frum now on, Miz Smith, we is two people!"

...Contri. by Dr. Margaret Hayes

VIII. SOME BASIC POINTS OF VIEW

A scientist is, by nature, an interpreter, a synthesizer. He wants to generalize as broadly, as accurately, as he can, to figure out how a great many things fit together into a repetitive pattern. It takes creative imagination to do this, as well as intimate knowledge of facts. It takes sharp, careful reading to understand scientific "thought patterns," once they have been written down. Here are the best, the most discussed, systematic interpretations of intergroup relations in this country.

Child, Irvin L., Italian or American, Yale Univ. Press, New Haven, 1943, $2.75
A revealing study of second generation culture conflict. General theory is not intended to cover nonwhite native-born ethnics.

Dollard, John, Caste and Class in A Southern Town. Yale Un. Press, New Haven, '37
A theory of gains and losses, frustration and aggression. See also Neal Miller and Dollard, Social Learning and Imitation, for a process viewpoint.

Kardiner, Abram, The Psychological Frontiers of Society. Columbia Univ. Press, '43
A psychiatric theory of personality development in relation to culture. Applicable to all kinds of intergroup relations but does not deal directly with them.

ABOUT US AMERICANS
"They know, and are content that all the world should know, the worst about them as well as the best. THEY HAVE A BOUNDLESS FAITH IN FREE INQUIRY AND FULL DISCUSSION. They admit the possibility of any number of temporary errors and delusions."
...Bryce, American Commonwealth, II, 1893, p.371

Klineberg, Otto, Characteristics of the American Negro. Harper, New York, 1944, $4.00
A psychological viewpoint. Should be read in connection with Hadley Cantril The Psychology of Social Movements.

Lasker, Bruno, Race Attitudes in Children. Henry Holt, New York, 1929
Older, looser ancedotal reasoning as to how children got that way and what to do about it. Incidents, cases, teacher opinions.

Linton, Ralph, Science of Man in the World Crisis. Columbia Univ. Press, 1945.
Anthropology applied to race relations and world problems. See also his Cultural Backgrounds of Personality for a theory of child development.

Myrdal, Gunnar, An American Dilemma. 2 vols. Harper, New York, 1944. $7.50 the set.
An interpretation in terms of democratic rights and privileges. The most popular of all viewpoints with educators, i.e. most in line with their thinking.

Thompson, Edgar (ed.), Race Relations and the Race Problem. Univ. North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 1942. Duke Univ Press!
Best in print, perhaps, of an older "social process" viewpoint, especially the chapter by Robt. E. Park. See also Park and Burgess, Intro. to Sci. of Sociol.

Warner, W. Lloyd, et al., Social Life of A Modern Community (1941, $4), Status Systems of A Modern Community (1942, $4), and Social Systems of American Ethnic Groups (1945, $4). Yankee City Series. Yale Univ. Press, New Haven.
The most complete "system" in print, a caste-class interpretation with every individual put into his status position in the social structure of community life and his behaviors so interpreted. The first volume above, and the third, are of most value, most informative. One might, as a starter, read Yankee City "family profiles," Social Life, pp. 127-201, and then turn back to the first part of the book for theory and method. Tough going but worth it.

AND SO, WHAT DO YOU THINK?
"For ten years, in bars and offices and wherever sociologists have gathered, discussion of "Warner's Newburyport study" has gone on. It has built high hopes and and reinforced gloomy ones until the published account, no matter how brilliant or how bad, could not possibly fulfil the supercharged expectations. The second volume, original and thorough as a masterpiece, yet more defective than some lesser works, will long puzzle the wise prognosticators... It has an awkward originality and driving concentration that more than counterbalances its faults."
...Kingsley Davis

IX. CHILD ACCULTURATION

Of particular concern to educators is the upbringing of children, the way a social order gets woven into the fabric of habitual, personal living. We know that young people are not born human; they must, somehow, internalize culture, the concrete culture to which they fall heir. The exact nature of the acculturation process, in contrast to formal schooling, is still a puzzle to researchers in the field. Here are a variety of viewpoints, each well worth study.

*****

Barker, Roger G., et al., Child Behavior and Development. McGraw-Hill, New York, '43
The story of child growth and development from reflexive action through learning to group behavior in adolescence. Chapters by distinguished authorities.

Child, Irvin L., Italian or American: Second Generation in Conflict. Yale Univ. Press, New Haven, 1943. $2.75
Social situation facing the 2nd generation; rebel, in-group, apathetic reactions.
Cook, Lloyd Allen, Community Backgrounds of Education. McGraw-Hill, New York, 1939.
Community life and personality development. Social influences shaping children.
---- "How Society Processes Children," in H. H. Remmers (ed.), Proceedings of the Ninth Annual Guidance Conference, Purdue University, November 1943, 46-54.
Davis, Allison, "Status Systems and Child Socialization," Amer. Soc. Rev., 8, 1941, 345-55. See also Children of Bondage.
Davis, Allison and John Dollard, Children of Bondage. American Council on Education, Washington, 1940. $2.25
A series of class-typed life histories. Most basic work in print.
Davis, Kingsley, "The Child and the Social Structure," Jour. Educ. Soc., 14, 1940, 217-29.
A theoretical analysis of child socialization. Very instructive.
Frazier, E. F., Negro Youth at the Crossroads. American Council on Education, Washington, 1940. $2.25
Johnson, Charles S., Growing Up in the Black Belt. American Council on Education, Washington, 1941. $2.25 A study of Negro youth in the rural South.

DAN PRESCOTT SAYS--

"Normal, wholesome personality development demands that the child expand the scope of his activities into wider social groupings.. His functioning must be of the affective sort which will give him the feeling of 'belonging' to these groups. He must feel that he is important in these groups, that he is valued and well thought of.... Without this sense of belonging, the 'security' of the individual is greatly menanced and his valuation of himself suffers to the point of involving him in very serious and continuing unpleasant emotions."
Emotions and the Educative Process, 114

Koshuk, Ruth P., Social Influences Affecting the Behavior of Young Children, Monograph Vol. VI, No. 2. Society for Research in Child Development, National Research Council, Washington, 1942. Critical examination of the literature. Bibliography.
Landis, Paul H., Adolescence and Youth: The Process of Maturing. McGraw-Hill, New York, 1945. Largely factual, within a broad sociological frame.
Linton, Ralph, Cultural Backgrounds of Personality. Appleton-Century, New York, '45
Mathews, M. T., Experience Worlds of Mountain Children. Teachers College Contri. to Educ., No. 700, 1937. A study of isolated mountain children.
Miller, Neal and John Dollard, Social Learning and Imitation. Yale Univ. Press, '41
A theory of learning--want something, see something, do something, get something.
Prescott, Daniel A., Emotion and the Educative Process. Amer. Council on Ed., 1939
Sherif, Muzafer, The Psychology of Social Norms. Harper, 1936. Norms, needs, values.
Stonequist, Everett, The Marginal Man. Scribner's, New York, 1937.
Racial and cultural "hybrids." Types, life histories, personality characteristics.
Warner, W. Lloyd, et al., Color and Human Nature. Amer. Council on Educ., 1941.
Negro personality types in the city. Color as a factor in status ratings.
Warner, W. Lloyd, R. J. Havighurst and M. B. Loeb, Who Shall Be Educated? Harper, '44
Application of caste-class hypothesis to personality development. Cases, theory, meanings for education. Best single reading with which we are acquainted.
Young, Pauline, Pilgrims of Russian Town. University of Chicago Press, 1932.
Russian Molokan community in Los Angeles. Excellent life history materials.

X. SCHOOL PROBLEMS AND PROGRAMS

With the decline of the family, the school has become the community's chief agency of acculturation. What are schools doing in intergroup relations, talking about doing, urged to do? Writings bulk large in number, thin in content; they are increasing rapidly and, withal, improving in descriptive worth and value. We have grouped our selection of titles under four familiar headings, each heading an area of prime concern to all institutions in the College Study.

GROWING UP!

"Is yo' foh or is yo' five," asked a little Negro boy of his companion. "Ah don' kno', came the puzzled reply. "Yo don' kno' is yo' foh or is yo' five... Wal, now, is yo hankerin' 'bout gals, is yo'? "Naw," with indignation. "Yo is foh! Just foh!"

X-1. A PHILOSOPHY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Adamic, Louis, A Nation of Many Nations. Harper, 1945. Cultural pluralism, unity.
Agar, Herbert, Time for Greatness. Little, Boston, '42. Aggressive citizenship.
Alinsky, Saul, Revielle for Radicals. University of Chicago Press, 1945
A political action theory of community organization. Most provocative book to read.
Bates, Ernest S., American Faith. Norton, 1940. Nation's mind and background.
Boas, Franz, Race and Democratic Society. J. J. Augustin, New York, 1945
Commission on Teacher Education, Teachers for Our Times. American Council on Education, Washington, 1944. Especially Chapter II Our Country, Our People.
Conant, James Bryant, Public Education and the Structure of American Society. Bureau of Publ., Teachers College, Columbia Univ., 1946. A basic appraisal.
Dewey, John, The Public and Its Problems. Little read, provocative examination of our loss of national unity, where we seem to be headed.
DuBois, W.E.B., Color and Democratic Society. Harcourt, Brace, New York, 1945. An old master of sharp logic at his aggressive best.
Educational Policies Commission, Education of Free Men in American Democracy (1941). For the "essentials" of this volume and others, see Policies for Education in American Democracy (1946). National Education Association, Washington, D. C.
-------Essential Human Rights. The Annals, Amer. Acad. Pol. and Soc. Sci., Vol. 243, January 1946, entire issue. $2.00 Human rights at the international level.
Fineberg, Solomon A., Overcoming Anti-Semitism. Harper, '43. Viewpoints and tactics.
Herrick, Arnold and Herbert Askwith, This Way to Unity. Oxford Book Co., New York, 1945, 462p. Excellent collection of writings bearing on intergroup relations--fiction, news, essays, studies. Published for the National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York.
Johnson, James Weldon, Negro Americans, What Now? Viking Press, New York, 1934.
Kilpatrick, William H., Group Education for Democracy. Harper, New York, 1945. Applications of a well known philosophy to intergroup relations and schooling.
Locke, Alain, George B. Ford, et al., Diversity Within Unity. National Council for the Social Studies, Nat. Educ. Assoc., Washington, 1945. 32 pp. 10¢
Logan, Rayford (ed.), What the Negro Wants. Univ. N. Car. Press, Chapel Hill, 1944. What a number of distinguished Negro intellectuals feel, want and think. Ideas differ widely. Exciting to read.
Lynd, Robert S., Knowledge for What?, Princeton Univ. Press, 1940. Lynd argues for a functional, adaptive science, focused on problems of the age. Much the same viewpoint is held by Myrdal, An American Dilemma. Vol. II, Appendix 2, 1035-65.
MacIver, Robert M., et al., Group Relations and Group Antagonisms (1944) and Civilization and Group Relations (1945). Harper, New York.
Odum, Howard, Race and Rumors of Race. Univ. North Car. Press, Chapel Hill, 1943. Wartime crises in the south; an appeal to leadership regardless of color.
Powdermaker, Hortense, Probing Our Prejudices. Harper, New York, 1944. 73p. $1.00 Best of the pamphlets. Short enough to be read, long enough to be effective.
-------The Public School and Spiritual Values. Harper, New York, 1944. Critical examination of a much debated question.
Warner, W. Lloyd, et al., Who Shall Be Educated? Harper, New York, 1944. Rejection of caste-class system as against democracy.

ASKED TO DEFINE PHILOSOPHY

"It is strange that it is hard for me to give a definition of a subject which I have been teaching for fifty years... Philosophy is a criticism of our cultural heritage.. a love of wisdom. It is concerned with questions of what men should do, how they should act."

....John Dewey

CAN A SCIENTIST HAVE A PHILOSOPHY?

Why do we work so hard? What is our science for? By what criteria do we select problems for study? On what basis, or for what uses, do we expect our society to tolerate us, to pay us board and keep?

STRESS FACTORS THAT UNITE

"I have noticed in dealing with college students that, while their differences in political, social and economic matters are presupposed, these are not so divisive as those found in religion... A high wall of separation divides us.. yet there are many factors common to all religions.. a Supreme Being, faith in prayer, public worship, the ten commandments... Oneness on essentials must be our supreme concern."

...Father George B. Ford

X-2. SCHOOL ADMINISTRATION

Brameld, Theodore, Minority Problems in Public Schools. Harper, 1946. 264 Pp. $1.50
A study of school systems in seven American cities with emphasis on administrative policies and practices. Visits and survey. Factual, comparative, good.

Chatto, C. I. and Alice Hallegan, Story of the Springfield Plan. Barnes and Noble, New York, 1945. $2.75
Much discussed "Springfield Plan." Effectiveness would seem to lie more in school "atmosphere," a tradition of equal rights and fair play, plus supporting institutions such as parks and playgrounds, rather than in classroom teaching.

Counts, George S., Education and the Promise of America. Macmillan, 1945. 157 Pp.
Most outstanding spokesman for liberal, functional, socialized education, without regard to color, creed or class.

--------- Education for All American Youth. Educational Policies Commission. National Education Association, Washington, 1944. 400 Pp.

Mayor's Committee on Unity, Report on Inequalities of Opportunities in Higher Education. Dan W. Dodson, Exec Dir., New York Univ., Washington Square, New York, 1946. Enough evidence to lead the committee to request a statewide investigation of the alleged "quota system" in higher education. In so far as such a system exists in New York, or in any state, it must be charged very largely to administrative policy.

HOW RIGHT IS HE?
"...the fact is that an educational offensive against racial intolerance going deeper than 'glittering generalities' in the nation's creed, has never been seriously attemped in America."
...Gunnar Myrdal

X-3. COURSE OF STUDY, THE CLASSROOM

------- Americans All. Dept. Superv. and Curr. Dev., Nat. Educ. Assoc., 1942, $2.00

------- We're All Americans. Teachers Manual No. 2, 1941. Council Against Intolerance in America, 60 E. 42nd St., New York.

------- Reading Ladders. Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools, 437 W. 59th St., N.Y. Seven page biblio., graded, free.

Cook, Lloyd Allen, "An Experimental Study of A Stratified Tenth Grade Class," Amer. Soc. Rev., 10, 1945, 250-61. A few reprints, free. Sociographic charting of a 10th grade class over a two year period. Introduction of an experimental program of individual guidance and group management, noting results.

Duncan, Ethel M., Democracy's Children. Hinds Hayden and Eldridge, Phila., '45. One teacher's program in intergroup relations.

Educational Policies Commission, Learning the Ways of Democracy. Nat. Ed. Assoc., 1940. A case book in civic action.

Edwards, Newton (ed.), Education in A Democracy. Univ. Chic. Press, 1941. 160 Pp. $1.25

Jacobson, Paul (ed.), General Education in the American High School. Scott, Foresman, Chicago, 1942.

Mahoney, John J., For Us the Living, An Approach to Civic Education. Harpers, 1945. Excellent.

Prescott, Dan, et al., Helping Teachers Understand Children. Amer. Council on Educ., 1945.

Taba, Hilda and William Van Til (eds.), Democratic Human Relations. 1946 Yrbk., Nat. Coun. for Social Studies. Nat. Educ. Assoc., 1946.

Traeger, Helen, "Intercultural Books for Children," Child. Educ., November 1945. Reprint from Nat. Conf. Chr. and Jews, New York.

Vickery, William and Stewart Cole, Intercultural Education in American Schools. Harper, New York, 1942. Paper, $1.00

Warner, W. Lloyd, et al., Who Shall Be Educated?, Harper, New York, 1944.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

"Getting the Study Started," 24th Yrbk., Amer. Assoc. Teach. Colleges, Chas. Hunt, Secy, State Teachers College, Oneonta, N. Y.

***

"Current Approaches to Intergroup Education in Public Schools," New York State Educ., 33, 1945, 207-9.

***

"A Project Director's Role," Ohio Valley Sociol., 12, 1946, 1-4.

***

"Teaching Teachers Cooperative Action," 25th Yrbk., Amer. Assoc. Teach Coll., Oneonta, New York.

***

"(With Elaine Forsyth), "Working with Groups in Classrooms," Jour. Educ. Soc., September issue.

***

"(With Paul Harnley, et al.), Improving Intergroup Relations in School and Community Life. North Central Assoc. Sec. Schools and Colleges. 50 Pp., 25¢

***

"The College Study in Intergroup Relations: Progress Report 1945-1946," Educational Record, forthcoming.

***

The College Study Bulletin. Monthly, free on request. Supplementary Sheets on special topics.

X-4. SCHOOL ACTIVITIES, GROUPINGS

Baxter B. and R. Cassidy, Group Experience. Harper, New York, 1943. $2.50

Brown, Spencer, They See for Themselves. Harper, New York, 1945. $2.00
A community study made by students of eleven New York City highschools, with findings presented in the form of short, documentary plays. Well done.

DuBois, Rachael Davis, Get Together Americans. Harper, 1943, $1.75. Assembly programs, clubs.

Eakin, Mildred, Getting Acquainted with Jewish Neighbors. Macmillan, 1945. $1.00. Jewish symbols, festivals, and sacred days. Excellent.

Duncan, Ethel M., Democracy's Children. Hinds, Hayden and Eldredge, New York, 1945. $2.00. Group work with small children--songs, games, holidays, stories and customs.

QUESTIONS CHILDREN ASK

1. Why are there so many religions?
2. Why can't kids from our part of town get elected to class office?
3. Why don't we invite Negro classmates to our school parties?
4. How can I get along better with children I don't really like?

...From W. W. D. Sones

Fitch, Florence M., One God. Lothrop, Lee and Shepard, New York, 1944. 143 pages. For upper grades and high school. Well written, profusely illustrated. Good.

Sickels, Alice L., Around the World in St. Paul. Univ. Minn. Press, 1945. The famous St. Paul festival of all nations. Folk arts, pageantry, backgrounds.

Waller, Willard, The Sociology of Teaching. Wiley, New York, 1932. A pioneering effort to visualize the school as a pattern of interacting groups.

X-5. COMMUNITY STUDY, RELATIONS, SERVICES

Barzun, Jacques, The Teacher in America. Little, Brown, New York, 1946. 321 Pp.

Brown, Spencer, They See For Themselves. Harper, New York, 1945. $2.00
Students of eleven New York City high schools study their respective areas.

------- A Guide to Community Coordination. Coordinating Councils, 145 W. 12th St., Los Angeles, Cal. 1941. 28 Pp., 25¢. For communities under 25,000 population.

Brunner, Edmund deS., Community Organization and Adult Education. Univ. North Car. Press, Chapel Hill, 1942. 121 Pp. $2.00. Five year experiment at Greenville County, South Carolina, in helping people help themselves via community action.

Cook, Lloyd Allen, Community Backgrounds of Education. McGraw-Hill, 1938.
Community Action and the School. Ohio State Univ. Press, 1941
"Methods of Community Study," in W. C. Reavis (ed.), The School and the Urban Community, 201-15. Univ. Chic. Press, 1942. $2.00
(Editor), The War, Education and Society, Rev. Educ. Res., 13, February 1943. Chapters by Hoffer, Carr, Remmers, Havighurst, Everett and Cook.

Greenhoe, Florence, The Community Contact and Participation of Teachers. American Council on Public Affairs, Washington, 1941.

SPEAK UP, ACT UP, THINK
For good will in intergroup relations. A 61-page pamphlet just publisted by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 4th Av., New York. Edited by Ellis Jensen.

Leonard O. and C. P. Loomis, Culture of A Contemporary Rural Community: El Cerrito, New Mexico. Rural Life Studies:1, November 1941. U. S. Dept. Agri., Wash. Also in same series, Earl H. Bell, Sublette, Kansas. Excellent examples of objective community study.

Loomis, Clarence B., An Experience in Community Development. Rabun Press, Clayton Ga., 1944. An account of the Greenville (S.C) project by its director. Critical.

Lynd, Robt. S. and Helen M., Middletown in Transition. Harcourt, Brace, 1937.

McMillen, Wayne, Community Organization for Social Welfare. Univ. Chic. Press, 1945. Written for social workers but invaluable for teachers. Exhaustive, informative.

Olsen, Edw. G., School and Community. Prentice-Hall, 1945. Up to date, practical.

-------- The Story of Holtville. Holtville High School Faculty, Holtville, Ala., 1944. A Southern Association Study. Meeting human needs in a rural area.

Terry, Paul W. and Verner M. Sims, They Live on the Land. Bureau of Educational Research, University of Alabama, University, Ala. 1940.

Smith, Lillian, These Are Things to Do. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York. Importance of "little things" in intergroup relations. 5¢

Thorndike, E. L., Your City. Harcourt, Brace, 1939. $2.00. Comparative study of cities

MAY WE SUGGEST A BULLETIN FILE

It is with deep regret that we must decline requests for additional copies of the College Study Bulletin, nor can we as a rule supply copies for committee study or for class use. There is no charge for the Bulletin; simply ask that your name be put on our mailing list. The Bulletin is issued monthly at the office of the College Study in Intergroup Relations, 5272 Second Ave., Detroit 1.

XI. INDIVIDUAL AND GROUP STUDY TECHNICS

Allport, Gordon W., Use of Personal Documents in Psychological Science. Bull. No. 49, 1942. Social Science Research Council, 230 Park Ave., New York. Critical examination of life histories, diaries, projective "tests" and other forms of uncontrolled reaction patterns. Directly applicable to intergroup studies.

-------- Adolescence. 43rd Yrbk., National Society for the Study of Education. Univ. Chic. Press, 1944. 357 Pp. A psychological orientation, little about groups.

Angell, Robt. C., The Integration of American Society.

Bassett, R. E., "Cliques in A Student Body of Stable Membership," Sociometry, 3, 1944, 290-302.

Boney, M. E., "A Study of Social Status at the Second Grade Level," Jour. Genetic Psych., 60, 1942, 271-05.

Blos, Peter, The Adolescent Personality. Published by Appleton-Century, 1941. 517 Pp.

Cook, Lloyd Allen, "An Experimental Study of A Stratified Tenth Grade Class," Amer. Soc. Rev., 10, 1945, 250-61.

---- ----- ----- and Rupert C. Koeninger, "Measuring Learning Outcomes in Introductory Sociology Classes," Jour. Educ. Soc., 13, 1939, 233-47.

Dollard, John, "The Life History in Community Study," Amer. Soc. Rev., 3, '38, 724-37.

Driscoll, Gertrude, How to Study the Behavior of Children. Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, 1941. Study of individuals; good bibliography.

Frank, Lawrence K., "Projective Methods for A Study of Personality," Jour. Psych., 8, 1939, 389-413. Some technic but mostly theory. Very good.

Jennings, Helen Hall, Leadership and Isolation. Longmans, Green, 1943. Most recent, and most thorough, application of Moreno sociographic technic.

Lippitt, Ronald and Ralph K. White, "The Social Climate of Children's Groups," in R. G. Barker, et al., Child Behavior and Development, 485-508. McGraw-Hill, 1943.

Loomis, Charles P., "Informal Groupings in A Spanish-American Village, Sociometry, 4, 1941, 36-51.

Lundberg, George, Social Research. Longmans, Green, 1942. Still the basic work in sociological research methods.

Prescott, Daniel, et al., Helping Teachers Understand Children. Amer. Council on Ed., Wash., 1945. Chief reliance on anecodtal and observational data. Case studies.

Sanderson, D., "Group Description," Social Forces, 16, 1938, 309-19. A study outline.

Raths, Louis, Culture Conflict Index, Social Acceptance Scale, Social Sensitivity Index, Social Problems Analysis. Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University, Columbus, 1945-46. Paper-and-pencil tests; at present, elementary level.

Redl, Fritz, "Diagnostic Group Work," Amer. Jour. Orthopsych., 14, 1944, 53-67.

Roethlisberger, F. J., Management and Morale. Harvard Univ. Press, 1941. Especially Chap. VI Of Words and Men. Interviewing as a research technic.

Warner, W. Lloyd, et al., Color and Human Nature. Amer. Council on Educ., Wash. '41

Troyer, Maurice E. and C. Robert Pace, Evaluation in Teacher Education. Commission on Teacher Education, American Council on Education, Washington, 1944.

Whyte, William F., Street Corner Society. Univ. Chic. Press, 1943. Study of "street corner" groupings in an urban (Italian) area. Observation, positional mapping, talk.

Zeleny, Leslie Day, "Status: Its Measurement and Control in Education," Sociometry, 4, May 1941, 193-204.

E PLURIBUS UNUM

"In general, the picture is one of a differentiated society whose parts have become so disconnected that few groups speak in terms of the whole."
...Robert C. Angell

ANXIETY AND INSECURITY

Asked to make a choice between having a quarter now, 50¢ in a week, $1 in a month, most Negro children wanted the 25¢ now. Whites, on the contrary, ask for the greater sum, a response viewed as showing a greater trust in the future.
...Commission on Community Interrelations, Amer. Jew. Con.

XII. GROUP MANAGEMENT TACTICS

Alinsky, Saul, Revielle for Radicals. Univ. Chic. Press, 1945. Back-of-the-yards movement to organize a community council. Pressure-group tactics, radical philosophy.

Bogardus, Emory S., Democracy by Discussion. Amer. Council on Public Affairs, Wash., 1942. 59 Pp. Various types of discussion technics Cantril, Hadley, The Psychology of Social Movements. Wiley, 1941; also Invasion from Mars. Princeton Univ. Press, 1940. A theory of group action.

Carr, Lowell J., Delinquency Control. Harper, 1941. Organizing community action for delinquency control. Good analysis of leadership roles.

Chase, Stuart, Democracy Under Pressure. 20th Century Fund, New York, 1945.

SMALL, VITAL AUTONOMOUS GROUPINGS are the "grassroot seedbeds" of democracy. Central thesis of the Journal of Educational Sociology, May 1946. 35¢ the copy. New York Univ., N. Y.

Cartwright, M. A. and Glen Burch, Adult Adjustment. Institute for Adult Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, 1945. 84 Pp.

Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Educating for Community Unity and Action," Rev. Educ. Res., 13, February 1943, 48-59; also School and Community in Greater Chicago Heights Area. A "Community Action" Field Course and Survey. Board of Educ., Chicago Heights, Ill., 1942. $1.00 46 Pp.

YOU AND YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD
A booklet of pictures and text designed to orient a citizen or school study of urban areas, plus community action for their improvement. Revere Copper and Brass Co., 230 Park Av., N. Y.

DuBois, Davis Rachel, Get Together Americans, Harper, 1943; Build Together Americans, Hinds, Hayden and Eldredge, New York, 1945. School group programs.

Gosnell, H. F., Negro Politicians. Univ. Chic. Press, 1935. Negro politics in Chicago. Leader types.

Heiden, Konrad, Der Fueher. Houghten Mifflin, 1944. Hitler's rise and tactics. Anti-Semitism.

Gaer, Joseph, The First Round. Duel, Sloan and Pierce, New York, 1944. $2.50 The C.I.O Political Action Committee. Issues, tactics; gains, losses, plans.

Huszar, George B. de, Practical Applications of Democracy. Harper, 1945, 140 Pp., $2 A philosophy and psychology of group action. Well illustrated. Bibliography.

Kilpatrick, William H., Group Education for Democracy. Association Press, 347 Madison Ave., New York, 1940. Mostly a conception of the nature of democracy.

Langley, Adria Locke, A Lion in the Street. Sun Dial Press, Garden City, New York, 1940. $1.49. Rise of a dictator. Compare John Dos Passos, Number One.

Leighton, Alexander H., The Government of Men. Intergroup tensions in Japanese relocation center. A psychiatric point of view. Principles of group management.

MacIver, Robt. M., Group Relations and Group Antagonisms. Harper, New York, 1944, $2 A collection of papers of quite unequal value. Mostly a philosophical viewpoint.

Merriam, Chas. E., The Role of Politics in Social Change. New York Univ. Press, 1936.

Miller, Clyde, The Process of Persuasion. Crowell, New York, 1946.

Murphy, Albert J., "A Study of the Leadership Process," Amer. Soc. Rev., 6, 1941, 674-87.

Northup, Herbert, Organized Labor and the Negro. Harper, New York, 1944.

TEACHERS INITIATE ACTION
"Superior Michigan teachers have initiated many activities in their communities.. 31% have started at least one activity, 54% of the highschool teachers two activities... including religious, political, professional, welfare, and youth activities..."
...David M. Trout, The Education of Teachers, p. 82. 1943.

Perry, Jennings, Democracy Begins at Home. Lippincott, New York, 1944. Seven year fight by a courageous newpaper to remove the poll tax. Concrete, descriptive, exciting.

Pigors, P., Leadership or Domination. Houghton Mifflin, 1935. An old classic.

Roethlisberger, F. J., Management and Morale. Harvard Univ. Press, Cambridge, 1941. A very valuable book for insights and technics. Principles of group managemnet.

Slavson, S. R., An Introduction to Group Therapy. Commonwealth Fund, New York, 1943. Consider, too, the approaches of Allen, Redl, and Rogers. Nondirective, more or less.

Steinbeck, John, In Dubious Battle. Fictionized account of I.W.W. organizer. Unexcelled for tactics and strategy in group management.

Schell, Erwin H., The Technique of Executive Control. McGraw-Hill, 1946. Sixth edition of a "success story" for business executives. Analyse for role, slogans, etc.

Walser, Frank, The Art of Conference. Harper, 1933. A topic much in need of study.

Weinreich, Max, Hitler's Professors. Yiddish Scientific Institute, 535 W. 123rd St., New York. 291 Pp. $3.50. A sorry lesson for us all.

XIII. AUDIO-VISUAL AIDS

Alland, Alexander, American Counterpoint. John Day, New York, 1943. A book of well conceived photos showing the nation's diverse ethnic origins. As exciting as news.

ONE SEEING IS WORTH?

Boyd, James (ed.), The Free Company Presents. Dodd, Mead, 1941. A series of short, dramatic radio plays.

-------- The Races of Mankind. Race Relations Division, American Missionary Society, 287 4th Ave., New York. $5 the set.

-------- The Negro in American Life. A Photographic Exhibit. Council Against Intolerance in America, 17 E. 42nd St., New York. 24 large cards, with 8x10 photos.

-------- Directory of U. S. Government Films. U.S. Office of Educ., Wash. Free.

-------- Educational Film Catalogue. H. W. Wilson Co., New York. $4.00 per year.

-------- Educational Screen. 64 E. Lake St., Chicago. Educational films.

-------- Free and Inexpensive Learning Materials. Field Study No. 9, 1944. Division of Surveys and Field Study, George Peabody College, Nashville, Tenn. 25¢

Fowlkes, John G. and Donald Morgan, Elementary Teachers Guide to Free Current Material. Educators' Progress League, Randolph, Wisc., 1945. $3.50

--------- Races of Mankind. Wall chart, 4 ft. by six ft. C. S. Hammond Co., New York.

Horkheimer, Mary F. and John Differ, Educators' Guide to Free Films. Educators' Progress League, Randolph, Wisc., 1945.

Levenson, William R., Teaching Through Radio. Farrar and Rinehart, New York, 1945.

Modley, Rudolph, How to Use Pictorial Statistics. Harper, 1937. 170 Pp. $3.00

P. E. A. Human Relations Films, Teaching Films Custodians, 25 w. 43rd St., New York.

*****

Films dealing with intergroup relations are notably few in number and of little worth for any kind (high school, college) of critical audience. Outstanding exceptions, and well worth recommending for use, are as follows:

The House I Live In, Warner Brothers
The World We Want to Live In, National Conf. Chr. and Jews, 381 4th Av., NY
It Happened in Springfield, Warner Bros.
The Negro Soldier, War Dept., Wash.
Henry Brown Farmer, U.S. Dept. Agri.
Negro Colleges in War, Office War Information, Washington

THE HOUSE I LIVE IN
The Highland Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., has just received $6,000 from the proceeds of the Frank Sinatra film, one of the two best shorts now current. The movie is well showing, especially if followed by discussion.

XIV. NATIONAL RESOURCE AGENCIES

At best estimate, there are 150 some agencies, committees, etc., at work in the field of intergroup relations, and of these, the top 15 are said to spend a budget of 7.5 million dollars per year. Some of these agencies are old, well known and highly respected the nation over. Others, perhaps the majority, are of very recent origin. All are of potential aid to classroom teachers, although their contributions will differ in kind and in quality. Here is a careful, up-to-date listing. Write to them for information, asking if you wish to be put on their mailing list.

****

1. American Association for Adult Education, 60 E. 42nd St., New York
2. American Association on Indian Affairs, 381 4th Av., New York 16
3. American Missionary Association, Race Relations Division, 287 4th Av., New York 10
4. American Civil Liberties Union, 170 5th Ave., New York
5. American Council on Race Relations, 32 W. Randolph St., Chicago
6. American Jewish Committee, 386 4th Ave., New York 16
7. Anti-Defamation League, B'nai Brith, 212 5th Ave., New York; Chicago office, 100 N. LaSalle St., Chicago 2
8. Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, 1538 9th St., N.W., Wash.D.C.
9. Civic Education Service, 1733 K. St., Washington, D. C.
10. College Study in Intergroup Relations, Lloyd Allen Cook, Director, Wayne University, 5272 2nd Ave., Detroit 1, Michigan
11. Commission on Community Interrelations, American Jewish Congress, 212 w. 50th St., New York 19
12. Commission on Interracial Cooperation, 710 Standard Building, Atlanta, Ga.
13. Common Council for American Unity, 222 4th Ave., New York 3
14. Council Against Intolerance in America, 17 E. 42nd St., New York 17
15. Council for Democracy, 11 W. 42nd St., New York
16. East and West Association, 40 E. 49th St., New York 17
17. Department of Race Relations, Federal Council of Churches of Christ, 297 4th Ave., New York
18. Foreign Policy Association, 22 E. 38th St., New York
19. Institute of Ethnic Affairs, 1719 K. St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.
20. Intercultural Education Workshop, 204 E. 18th St., New York
21. Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools, Hilda Taba, Director, 437 W. 59th St., New York
22. International Film Bureau, 34 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.
23. Japanese American Committee, 72 W. 52nd St., New York 19
24. National Association for Advancement of Colored People, 69 5th Ave., New York 11
25. National Catholic Welfare Conference, Social Action Dept., Washington, D. C.
26. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 4th Ave., New York 16
27. National Institute of Immigrant Welfare, 2 W. 45th St., New York
28. National Urban League, 1133 Broadway, New York
29. Office of Inter-American Affairs, 444 Madison Ave., New York
30. Southern Regional Council, 63 Auburn Ave., N.E., Atlanta, Ga.
31. U. S. Office of Education, Washington, D. C.

17-Intercultural Educ.

Bulletin No. 4, July 1945
To Colleges, Schools, Agencies

Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Ohio State Univ., Columbus

Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education
COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

See p. 8

IV. A WORKING BIBLIOGRAPHY

There is a story about an aged illiterate in a WPA adult education class. Asked how he was getting along, the man replied: "fine, suh, almighty fine. Does I cum now to a road sign, ah can tell how fur 'tis but not rightly where at de road goes."

In previous bulletins (a few can still be had), we have marked out "de road" our nine colleges are traveling, their objectives and progress to date. The last thing we did at the Pitt U workshop was to study these programs for their common denominators, smoking out ways of furthering our work and, by implication, the efforts of others engaged in intergroup education. Number One need was for a bibliography, brief, selective, and adaptive to our purposes.

In this bulletin, we have tried to select the best readings available, the best audiovisual aids, the best agencies at work in intercultural education. Like a much advertised bookcase, a bibliography should be "always complete but never finished," hence we expect to supplement our listings. Please write us the titles of books, films, scripts, etc., that have meant most to you, made a difference in your thinking. Until Aug. 10, our address is Teachers College, Box 134, Columbia University, after which it is Ohio State, Columbus 10, Ohio.

We have starred the minimal titles that a college library might well contain.

A. Current General Bibliographies

1. *Caliver, Ambrose, Sources of Instructional Material on Negroes. U. S. Office of Education, Washington, 1944. 19 pp.
   For all school levels. 159 annotated books, pamphlets, periodicals, films, slides, scripts, plays and exhibits. Well done; informative.
2. ----------, Let Them Face It-The World in Books. Rev. ed. 1945. Child Study Association of America, 221 W. 57th St., New York. 20 p. 20¢
   Fact and fiction for all youth age-levels. Not too discriminating.
3. ----------, Jews in America. American Jewish Committee, 1943. Can be ordered from Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York, 11 pp. Single copy free; 10 or more, 10¢ each.
4. *Heimers, Lili and Cook, Margaret G., The Peoples of America. New Jersey State Teachers College, Montclair, 1945. 10 pp. 25¢
   Charts, maps, exhibits, films, slides, scripts, publications, recordings, and intergroup agencies. Up-to-date, broad coverage.
5. *Trager, Helen G., A Bibliography for Teachers. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York, 1945. 5¢

B. Basic Frames of Reference

A frame of reference is, in part, a point of view, an orientation, from which to study intergroup relations. It is found in some form or other, explicit or assumed, in all books, and its function is to give character to a work, give it point and pattern. Here is a sampling of prevailing points of view.

6. *Brown, Francis J. and Roucek, J. S., One America. Rev. ed. 1945. Prentice-Hall, New York. $3.75
   All ethnic peoples. Chapters by various authors. Stress on national unity and cultural pluralism. Up-to-date, readable, informative.

7. *Graebner, I. and Britt, S. H., Jews in A Gentile World. Rev. 1942. Macmillan, New York.
   Jewish life and culture, present and past. Chapters by different authors. Anti-semitism, biculturality, a concrete community study. Both factual and theoretical, and unsurpassed.
8. Finkelstein, Louis, W. A. Brown and J. E. Ross, Religions of Democracy. Devin Adair, New York, 1941.
   Protestantism, Catholicism and Judaism. Common elements, good will.
9. *Linton, Ralph (ed.), Science of Man in the World Crisis. Columbia University Press, 1945.
   Anthropology applied to race and world problems. Basic conceptions of races, race differences, culture, change, personality, acculturation and control. Tough reading but worth it.
10. *Logan, Rayford (ed.), What the Negro Wants. University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 1944.
   What America's most eminent Negro intellectuals feel and want and think. Range is from conservatism to radicalism. Exciting to read.
11. *Myrdal, Gunnar, An American Dilemma. 2 vols. Harper and Bros., New York, 1944.
   Invaluable as synthesis of what is known about the American Negro, a basic application of democratic philosophy, and reliance on education and mass action for ameloriation. A telling criticism of the do-nothing, "scientific" approach to race relations.
12. Thompson, Edgar, et al., Race Relations and the Race Problem. University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 1942.
   Broad "social process" approach. Chapters by different authors, including Robt. E. Park. Speculative and theoretical.
13. *Warner, W. Lloyd, et al., Social Life of A Modern Community (1941), Status System of A Modern Community (1942), and Social Systems of American Ethnic Groups (1945). Yankee City Series. Yale University Press, New Haven.
   The much debated caste-class point of view based on a study of Newburyport, Mass. Volumes I and III especially valuable.
14. Wittke, Carl, We Who Built America. Prentice-Hall, New York, 1939.
   History of immigration by nationality groupings. Adjustment problems.

C. Fiction and Autobiography

One's great teachers, really great, are few. From Robert E. Park, I learned the value of fiction in the study of social problems, much as he learned it from another. He writes: "I recall that, in concluding his lectures, Knapp (Strassburg) referred us, not to a treatise, but to a novel, which I bought and read. It suggested an idea from which I have greatly profited, the value of fiction in giving the student a more realistic view of life." Fiction does not solve problems; it makes them real and exciting. Its characters jump in and out of discussion like Disney animations. So with "real life," i.e. autobiography and biography. Here are 32 tested titles.

Anglo-American

*Bellaman, Henry, Kings Row
Davenport, Marcia, Valley of Decision
*Flavin, Martin, Journey in the Dark
Lewis, Sinclair, Main Street
*MacLennan, Two Solitudes
*Marquand, J. P., H. M. Pulham, Esq.

Foreign born, 2nd Generation

Cather, Willa, My Antonio
de Jong, David C., With A Dutch Accent
*Farrell, John, A World I Never Made
Freeman J., Never Call Retreat
Lin u Tang, Laughter and Tears

Jewish-Americans

Antin, Mary, The Promised Land
Asch, Sholom, Uncle Moses
*Graham, G., Earth and High Heaven
Halsey, M., Some of My Best Friends Are Soldiers
Lewisohn, L., Up Stream, Mid Channel

Negro Americans

Carter, H., Winds of Fear
*DuBois, W.E.B., Dusk of Dawn
Handy, W. C., Father of the Blues
*Holt, R., George Washington Carver
Hughes, L., Not Without Laughter
*Johnson, James W., Along This Way

*Malz, Albert, Cross and the Arrow
Morley, Christopher, Kitty Foyle
Papashively, G., Anything Can Happen
*Ravage, M., An American in the Making
*Smith, Betty, Tree Grows in Brooklyn
*Moon, Bucklin, Darker Brother
Smith, Lillian, Strange Fruit
Tunis, John R., All-American
Wright, R., Native Son, Black Boy

47. *Benet, William Rose and Norman Cousins, The Poetry of Freedom. Random House, New York, 1945
A most interesting collection of poems from every country, with English speaking nations filling over two-thirds of the space with their hopes, aspirations and struggles for freedom.

48. Brown, Sterling (ed.), The Negro Caravan. Dryden Press, New York, 1941
Significant collection and judicious appraisal of Negro contributions in every artistic field, especially fiction, drama and poetry.

D. Acculturation of Young People

Young people are not born human; they must, somehow, internalize the culture to which they fall heir. While novelists seem to know how this takes place, the acculturation process, in contrast to schooling, is still a great puzzle to social scientists at work in this field. One must, however, hold some theory as to the relation of personality to culture, the only question being how good it is. Our interest is, as usual, in race, class, creed, etc., with viewpoints ranging from the commonsense to the highly abstract.

49. *Child, Irwin S., Italian or American: Second Generation Culture Conflict. Yale University Press, New Haven, 1943.
A provocative study via concrete cases of the acculturation of 2nd generation Italian youth. Concepts and viewpoints broadly applicable to all immigrant groups.

50. *Davis, Allison and John Dollard, Children of Bondage. American Council on Education, Washington, 1940.
Application of the caste-class point of view to Negro personality development through a series of low class, middle and upper class cases. Only book of its kind and invaluable.

51. *Kardiner, Abram, The Psychological Frontiers of Society. Columbia University Press, 1945.
Written in collaboration with Ralph Linton, Cora Du Bois and James West. Elaborates a psychiatric theory of personality development in relation to culture. Parts of the "Plainville, U.S.A." community study particularly revealing.

52. Lasker, Bruno, Race Attitudes in Children. Henry Holt, New York, 1929
Older loose and easy reasoning about how children got that way. Cases, anecdotes, teacher opinions. Readable and, withall, informative.

53. Linton, Ralph, Cultural Backgrounds of Personality. Appleton-Century, New York, 1945.
A social theory of child growth and development as an athropologist sees the total process. Applicable to intergroup relations.

54. Miller, Neal and Dollard, John, Social Learning and Imitation. Yale University Press, New Haven, 1941.
A social psychological approach to learning based on comparative cultures. Want something, see something, do something, get something.

55. *Prescott, Daniel, et al., Helping Teachers Understand Children. American Council on Education, Washington, 1945. 540 pp. $3.50
Work of the Child Growth and Development Center, University of Chicago, of the Commission on Teacher Education. Announced for publication in 1945. A systematic theory of personality development.

56. Stonequist, Everett, The Marginal Man. Scribner's Sons, New York, 1937.
An earlier effort to understand acculturation. Includes both biological and cultural deviants, reaction types and adjustive processes.

57. Sutherland, Robert L., Color, Class and Personality. American Council on Education, Washington, 1942.
Findings and recommendations by the chairman of the American Youth Commission. More stress on ameliorative measures than on causation.

58. *Warner, W. Lloyd, Robert J. Havighurst and Martin B. Loeb, Who Shall Be Educated. Harper and Bros., New York, 1944.
Interpretation and application of caste-class orientation to child growth and development. Written especially for educators.

59. *Young, Pauline, Pilgrims of Russian Town. University of Chicago Press, 1932.
Older-type study of second generation assimilation but a very good one. Cases are illuminating of culture conflict, school and social agency pressures. Reintegration of old and new heritages.

E. The Public School: Viewpoints and Programs

Schools are one, and only one, of society's agencies of acculturation. What are they doing in intergroup education, talking of doing, urged to do? One thinks of four large possible areas of activity: in class, extracurricular, in the community, and in staff attitudes. Readings by no means cover these areas with equal insight but they are, fortunately, improving, a mark of increasing school concern.

60. *----------, The Study of Intergroup Relations. 24th Yearbook, 1945, American Association of Teachers Colleges. Charles W. Hunt, Secretary, State Teachers College, Oneonta, New York. First 51 pages. $1
Papers by Bigelow, Alpenfels, Davis, Havighurst, Baker, Warren, Cook.

61. ----------, The Public School and Spiritual Values. 7th Yearbook, John Dewey Society. Harper and Bros., New York, 1944.

62. ----------, Understanding Our Neighbors. Rev. 1945. Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga. 32 pp. 10¢

63. ----------, We're All Americans. Teachers' Manual No. 2., 1941. Council Against Intolerance in America, 60 East 42nd Street, New York.

64. Benedict, Ruth and Gene Weltfish, The Races of Mankind. Public Affairs Committee, New York, 1943. 31 pp.

65. *Brameld, Theodore, Study of School Administrative Practices and Policies Affecting Intercultural Relations. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York, 1945.
Scheduled for publication in late fall. Survey of seven school systems. Stresses basic role of school management in democratizing all manner of in-school and school-community relations. A much needed emphasis.

66. *Chatto, C. I. and Alice L. Hallegan, Story of the Springfield Plan. Barnes and Noble, New York, 1945. $2.75
Much discussed Springfield (Mass.) "plan" of intergroup education. Effectiveness lies more in the atmosphere of the school, the tradition of fair play and equal rights, than in anything else, hence depends in lastanalysis on school management. Authors not too clear on this point.

67. *Cole, Stewart and W. E. Vickery, Intercultural Education in American Schools. Harper and Bros., 1943. 215 pp. Paper $1; Cloth $2.

68. *Davis, Rachel Du Bois, Build Together Americans. Hinds, Hayden and Eldredge, New York, 1945. $2
Description of school programs. Emphasis on festivals, dramatics, etc.
69. *Duncan, Ethel M., Democracy's Children. Hinds, Hayden and Eldredge, New York, 1945. $2
Work with small children. Songs, games, holidays, stories, customs.
70. Fitch, Florence Mary, One God. Lothrop, Lee and Shepard, New York 1944. 143 p.
Upper grades and high school. Profusely illustrated, well written.
71. Heizer, George, Practical Applications of Democracy. Harper and Bros., 1945.
Democratic processes in many aspects of social life and group action. Practical implications for school programs.
72. Kilpatrick, Wm. H., Group Education for Democracy. Association Press, 347 Madison Avenue, New York, 1940.
Expansions of a well known philosophy. A trifle fuzzy and sentimental.
73. *Powdermaker, Hortense, Probing Our Prejudices. Harper and Bros., New York, 1944. 73 pp. Paper. 65¢, Cloth $1.
The best known of current pamphlets. Short enough to be read, long enough to be effective. Liked by high school and college students.
74. *Smith, Lillian, These Are Things to Do. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York, 1943. 16 pp. 5¢
A careful listing of traffic rules in white-Negro relations by an extremely sensitive person. Suggests the importance of the "little things," the common decencies, in race relations.

F. Newer Research Technics

In simple definition, a "scientist" is anyone who makes a guess about the nature of things, behaviors and operations, then seeks to collect evidence. He is scientific, mainly, to the extent that he leaves a trail which others can follow. Obviously, to move ahead in intergroup education, we must first ask ourselves new and different questions, the right kind of questions, and then devise the best ways we can to get answers. Here are adventures that seem very promising.

75. Baruch, Dorothy, "Doll Play in Preschool Children," Mental Hygiene, 24, 1940, 566-77.
76. *Brown, Spencer, They See For Themselves. Harper and Bros., New York, 1944. $2.
Exploring community and dramatizing findings. Three original plays.
77. Baxter, B. and Cassidy, R., Group Experience. Harper, New York, 1943. $2.50
78. *Briggs, Thomas H., et al., The Emotionalized Attitudes. Bureau of Publications, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, 1940. 107 pp. 70¢
Critical study of attitudes, nature, changes, reconditioning. A carefully selected bibliography of 224 titles.
79. Cook, Lloyd Allen and R. C. Koeninger, "Measuring Learning Outcomes in Introductory Sociology," Jour. Educ., Soc., 13, 1939, 233-47.
80. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Field Experience in Teacher Education," in John D. Russell (ed), New Frontiers in Collegiate Instruction, 147-60. Univ. Chic. Press, '41.
81. ----------, "Methods of Community Study," in W. C. Reavis (ed), The School and the Urban Community, 201-14. Univ. Chic. Press, 1943.
82. *----------, "An Experimental Sociographic Study of A Stratified 10th Grade Class," American Sociological Review, 10, 1945, 250-61.
Effort to stratify a high school group and then determine friendship patterns, with emphasis on isolates, pairs, cliques, and all-group leaders. Experimental work over one year to democratize interpersonal relations via, first, individual guidance, then group management.
83. Davis, Allison, "Status Systems and Child Socialization," American Sociological Review, 8, 1941, 345-55.
84. Davis, Kingsley, "The Child and the Social Structure," Journal of Educational Sociology, 14, 1940, 217-29.

85. Davis, Rachel DuBois, Get Together Americans, Harper and Bros., 1943; Build Together Americans, Hinds, Hayden and Eldrege, New York, 1945.
Practical group-action programs, especially at the high school level, by one of the nation's most able and best known workers in the field.

86. Dix, Lester, The Montclair Conference on Workshop Planning. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York, 1945. 55 pp.
A penetrating study of the workshop as a method of furthering intergroup understandings and suggestions for conducting an intercultural workshop. Ideas applicable to much of our classroom and agency work.

87. Dollard, John, "The Life History in Community Study," American Sociological Review, 3, 1938, 724-37.

88. Havighurst, Robt. J. and Allison Davis, "Child Socialization," Review of Educational Research, 13, 1943, 29-37

89. *Hendry, Charles E., "Role Practice Brings the Community into the Classroom," Sociometry, 7, 1944, 196-204.
A most useful technic for releasing the real gripes, concerns, tensions and aspirations of young people. Readily learned, easily done.

90. Jennings, Helen Hall, Leadership and Isolation. Longmans, Green, 1943.
Most comprehensive work to date using the J. L. Moreno (Who Shall Survive) sociographic technic. Particularly informative in respect to personality patterns such as isolates and leaders.

91. Kluckholn, Florence, "Participant Observer Technic in Community Study," American Journal of Sociology, 46, 1940, 331-43

92. *Slavson, S. R., An Introduction to Group Therapy. Commonwealth Fund, New York, 1943.
Differs somewhat from approach of Allen, Rogers and Redl; highly suggestive and applicable in part to school classroom and guidance problems.

93. *Lundberg, George, Social Research. Rev. ed. 1942. Longmans, Green, 1942.
Best in the field from a sociological standpoint. Highly relevant are Chap. 7 The Questionnaire and 8 Sociometric Methods.

94. Lundberg, George and Lawsing, M., "Sociography of Some Community Relations," American Sociological Review, 2, 1937, 318-25.

95. Mooney, Ross, "Community Differences in Problems of High School Students," Educational and Psychological Measurement, 3, 1943, 127-42.

96. *Prescott, Daniel, et al., Helping Teachers Understand Children. American Council on Education, Washington, 1945. 540 pp $3.50
Announced for publication in 1945. Use of various new type methods in child study. A work of major importance.

97. *Raths, Louis, The Wishing Well, The Culture Conflict Index, The Social Sensitivity Index, Social Problems Analysis, Ohio Social Acceptance Scale. Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University, Columbus 10, Ohio.
New type paper-and-pencil tests designed as indicators of intergroup attitudes and relations. Easily given, quickly scored. Can be had at cost by addressing Dr. Raths. At present, elementary level only.

98. Redl, Fritz, "Diagnostic Group Work," American Journal of Orthopsychiatry, 14, 1944, 53-67.

99. Roethlisberger, F. J., Management and Morale. Harvard University Press, 1941.
Especially Chap. VI Of Words and Men. Our oldest, all but discarded, research technic, "talking it over," revived, expertly analysed, and recommended. The basis of the present "informant technic."

100. Sanderson, Dwight, "Group Description," Social Forces, 16, 1938, 309-19.
A simple commonsense plan for the study of any group, youth or adult.

101. *Troyer, Maurice E. and C. Robert Pace, Evaluation in Teacher Education. Commission on Teacher Education, American Council on Education, Wash., 1944.
No one can teach unless someone learns, hence evaluation technics are still basic. Here is the latest book in this field, one of the two or three best.

102. Whyte, William Foote, "Corner Boys: Clique Behavior," American Journal of Sociology, 46, 1941, 647-64.
Positional mapping, role analysis and clique behaviors. For further study, see author's book Street Corner Society, Univ. Chic. Press, 1944.

103. Zander, Alvin and Ronald Lippitt, "Reality Practice as Educational Method," Sociometry, 7, 1944, 129-51.
Technics come and technics go but good discussion remains forever the basic educational method. Here is a novel plan of "role taking," a projective technic with the teacher as the group manager.

G. Audiovisual Aids

"Phew, that was an experience!" No scientist today, believe it or not, is in a position to say exactly what the learner means by this common expression. To set the conditions for such reactions, to involve the student in the learning process, we have come to depend to an extent on audiovisual aids. In intergroup relations, materials worth recommending are few, although the number is increasing.

The best poster sets we have found are The Races of Mankind, published by the Race Relations Division, American Missionary Society, 287 4th Avenue, New York 10, at $5.00 per set. C. S. Hammond Co., New York, publish a wall chart (4x6) on same title.

Lists of transcriptions made from taking radio programs off the air can be had by writing to the Transcription Exchange, U. S. Office of Education, Washington, or to the Recordings Division, New York University Film Library, New York City. A useful catalogue of recordings, plus a discussion of their nature, values and uses, is J. Robert Miles, Recordings for School 1942, World Book Co., Yonkers, N. Y. The Teaching Aids Laboratory, Ohio State University, Columbus, has published a pamphlet (free) School Recording Techniques.

The following films have been studied by the OSU Teaching Aids Laboratory and are recommended for school use. For further information, address Dr. Edgar Dale.

109. *The World We Want to Live In. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 4th Avenue, New York.
Dramatic plea for intergroup tolerance. Brief speeches by such men as Thomas E. Dewey, Charles E. Hughes, Eddie Cantor, Wendell Wilkie. High school and college.

110. *It Happened in Springfield. Warner Brothers.
Cigar store owner, a foreign-born citizen, bolts party machine and youngsters, urged on by hate mongers, break up his store. Owner's soldier son finds father in hospital. Despairing that anything can be done, he is taken to Springfield schools where a plan has been worked out to teach democracy. Shots in school do not give anything like an adequate picture of what is actually going on.

111. The Negro Soldier. War Department, Washington, D. C.
Negro soldiers from the Revolution to present war. Very well done.

112. Let My People Live. National Tuberculosis Association, New York City.
Family tubercular, mother dies, daughter diseased, treatment.

113. *Henry Browne, Farmer. U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.
Farm family's daily routines: Fine narration. H.S. or college level.

114. Negro Colleges in War. Office of War Information, Washington, D. C.
Tuskeegee, Prairie View, Howard and Hampton. College level.

Most of the P.E.A. "human relations" films, developed by the Commission under Dr. Alice V. Keliher, can still be obtained. Address Teaching Films Custodians, 25 W. 43rd Street, New York City. List supplied on request. Inter-American films can be obtained from Office of Inter-American Affairs, 444 Madison Ave. New York City.

H. Agencies at Work in Intergroup Relations

A most hopeful sign of the nation's growing concern for its minority peoples, their life, contributions and integration, is the rather sudden rise of a score or more of voluntary civic organizations devoted to these matters. Some few are old and well known, most of them, however, are very recent. While their interests differ, all circulate literature. Write them for information, asking if you wish to be put on their mailing list.

115. American Association for Adult Education, 60 East 42nd St., New York
116. American Civil Liberties Union, 31 Union Square, New York
117. American Council on Race Relations, % Rosenwald Fund, 4901 Ellis Avenue, Chicago
118. American Jewish Committee, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York
119. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York
120. College Project in Intergroup Relations, Lloyd Allen Cook, Director, Ohio State University, Columbus 10, Ohio
121. Commission on Interracial Cooperation, 710 Standard Bldg., Atlanta, Georgia
122. Common Council for American Unity, 222 Fourth Avenue, New York
123. Council Against Intolerance in America, 60 East 42nd Street, New York
124. Council for Democracy, 11 West 42nd Street, New York
125. East and West Association, 40 East 49th Street, New York
126. Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, Department of Race Relations, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York
127. Foreign Policy Association, 22 East 38th Street, New York
128. Intercultural Education Workshop, 204 East 18th Street, New York
129. Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools, Hilda Taba, Director, 381 4th Ave., New York 16, N. Y.
130. National Association for Advancement of Colored People, 69 5th Ave., New York
131. National Catholic Welfare Conference, Social Action Dept., Washington, D. C.
132. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York
133. National Urban League, 1133 Broadway, New York
134. Office of Inter-American Affairs, 444 Madison Avenue, New York.
135. Southern Regional Council, Room 432, 63 Auburn Avenue, NE., Atlanta 3, Georgia
136. U. S. Office of Education, Washington, D. C.

The Public School —

LABORATORY for DEMOCRACY

H. H. Giles

Some school systems practice segregation. Some do not. Some do and do not! In which category does your school system belong?

Reprinted from

The Woman's Press

THE NATIONAL MAGAZINE FOR YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS

October 1945

17 - Intercultural Educ.

The Public School —

LABORATORY for DEMOCRACY

H. H. Giles

A CHILD came running to his teacher. He was dirty and bleeding, racked with sobs. He panted out a story of how he had been set upon by three other boys, beaten and cut.

The child's companions heard the story. His parents heard the story. Soon it was all over town.

The child was white. He named his assailants as Negroes.

Unbelievable as it may seem, investigation several days later brought out the truth—that the child had made his story up out of whole cloth. He had even cut himself.

All this happened not many weeks ago in a city which has been fearing that white and Negro groups might attack each other with violence. It is a perfect example of the way in which a social group can build up fear, until, in the individual person, the tension becomes too great to bear. Then—an hysterical act. The rumors which build upon themselves. Worse to come.

But perhaps not worse to come.

It happened that the city in which the child was living had just begun to organize its schools to work on the American Dilemma of democratic ideals not realized in practice. Since the child had made his first report at the school, the news had spread like wildfire, and white teachers and children were refusing to go to a meeting in a Negro school district. Administrative officers not only investigated the facts of the case, but they reached every person in the school system who had heard the story, both teachers and children. They cleared up the rumors with the real facts. Best of all, they were able to get quiet, thoughtful discussion of the incident and its causes. Thus, both staff members and pupils saw with understanding rather than with partisan eyes. They saw, also, how necessary it is to guard against rumors and the human tendency to accelerate tension by bearing startling news.

WHAT THE SCHOOLS ARE DOING

If the maltreatment had actually occurred it would have required the same prompt action; the clearing up of facts, the understanding of why it had occurred, the realization that violence need not be met with more violence, but can be dealt with by methods which will cure rather than spread the social sickness which leads to violence.

Because they are supported by all the people and are in the service of the people, the schools occupy a particularly central position in our nation's current struggle to make democracy work better in more places. With our armies, we have fought against hate-mongering fascism. But we find the same hate-mongering in our own country. One poll has shown that about 13 per cent of us believe that differences of race, religion and national origin mark off superior from inferior people; that a slightly smaller per cent do not so believe, and that the majority are indifferent or undecided. Which way will they turn?

The schools now have an opportunity to play a great role in that decision. And the evidence is that the schools are ready to undertake their role to just the extent that their communities support, or even demand, their doing so.

Schools are operated by human beings. There are all kinds and degrees of enlightenment among teachers and administrators. There are wide variations in practice. For example, a survey made by Dr. Theodore Brameld, in seven school systems from coast to coast last fall, shows that systems practice the segregation of Negroes, some do not, and some do and do not! In some schools, Catholics, Jews and Protestants are accepted for responsible positions without discrimination of any kind. In others there is something like a quota system. In still others, there is traditional and very effective discrimination of an extreme kind. In some places, it is regarded as a punishment for older teachers or an initiation for younger teachers to be assigned to schools where minority groups, usually of the lower economic classes, send or are forced to send their children. In others, the ablest teachers and administrators choose or are assigned to such schools. In some schools, members of minority groups are not to be found in political offices, clubs, dramatics, musical organizations. In others there is no thought of such shutting off of opportunities.

The conclusion can be drawn that there is confusion and wide variation in school practice. It is not too much to say that the schools mirror the confusion and variation in attitude of the citizens of their communities. It is also worth repeating that, if the communities will trust the schools to exercise the vast potential of intelligent leadership which they possess, much can be done through them.

THE COMMUNITY'S RESPONSIBILITY

This will require that communities, through Mayor's Committees or other representative councils, give a mandate to the schools to bend their best efforts to solve the community problems in prejudice, race hate, scapegoating and discrimination. It will require that the community make the long step of recognizing that education is more than a matter of reading and reciting from a text. There are at least three broad fields in which the school will be able to work at this problem with the community.

First, is the field of fact. Here the job is two-fold: to locate and define the places where the shoe pinches, locally. Then, to bring to bear all the information from the fields of history, biology, anthropology and psychology which is pertinent to these examples.

Second, is the field of practice. The school can itself become a working model of democratic practice. It is a community of children and adults, living in a highly controlled association, working, playing, eating together for a few hours a day. Most of the problems of any close-knit community occur in the school. What a laboratory for working out good human relations and the techniques for achieving them!

Finally, since the school is only one social institution, it must needs plan and work in cooperation, not only with the parents of its children, but with other community organizations which are equally concerned with the job. The relationship of class study to Boy Scout, YWCA and other serious social enterprises is obvious. There is also possible a relation of school study and activity to the basic attack, by community, government and social organization, for adults, on the problems of employment, housing, health, recreation, delinquency and police matters. In so far as the school, the city government, the social work organizations and the home combine their brains and their activities to deal with human living, there will be a twenty-four-hour-a-day, intelligent, growing success in making that living rich and good.

In South Bend, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Milwaukee, the school systems have, this year, entered into a two-year program of study and work along these lines. They have called upon the technical help which can be supplied to them by the American Council on Education through Dr. Hilda Taba. In scores of other cities there is a demand for such technical help to achieve well-knit programs. In Springfield, Massachusetts, the famous "Plan" is still developing, after five or six years of careful nurturing.

In Detroit and Gary, long-time programs of experimentation and study have been set up. In Philadelphia, an intensive experimentation in five primary schools has been organized. In Buffalo, the Mayor's Committee is seeking ways to help the schools organize a program. In Trenton, a powerful group of citizens counsels with the Board of Education and superintendent. In Westchester County, over a period of several years, teachers with their children have analyzed community needs and accomplished amazing results. A report of eleven of these projects is to be found in the recently published They See For Themselves,* by Spencer Brown. The Adult Education Department of New York State has assigned LeRoy Bowman to the task of developing pilot plant demonstrations of community effort to bring understanding and education to bear on the problems of group hostilities. His work has resulted in three different community-council operations in Albany, Gloversville and East Harlem. Commissioner Warren of Massachusetts has been indefatigable in stimulating school and community.

HOW ONE SCHOOL SYSTEM DOES IT

From one of the largest and most difficult problem areas of all those named, it is possible to list twelve steps taken by the school system in tackling this huge job. Such a list will illustrate the means which are employed and the scope of the work.

1. An enabling resolution by the Board of Education instructing the schools to undertake large efforts in intercultural education.

* Harper Brothers, New York.

2. The creation of one or more advisory committees to the superintendent to give administrative counsel. The first such committee is made up of administrators and teachers. The second, of representatives of powerful community groups.

3. The creation of regional and local school committees, elected by teachers.

4. The creation of a central steering committee which is the over-all planning and executive body.

5. The survey of present practices—good and bad—in classrooms and playgrounds.

6. A similar survey of administrative practices.

7. The securing of technical assistance from an agency like the Bureau for Intercultural Education—specialists in administrative problems, classroom teaching, counseling, group projects, materials of learning, evaluation.

8. Conferences, institutes and individual study for administrators and teachers. Key personnel trained in summer workshops.

9. Organizing material and projects.

10. Formation of pupil and parent committees.

11. Integration of university research and that conducted by such organizations as the Urban League and the Council on Community Interrelationships.

12. Records and analysis of every significant step in the process; of the social and education situation before and during the study. The continual refinement of methods and focussing of direction to fruitful results.

These steps are illustrative. They do not tell the story of endless hours of effort invested by selfless teachers and citizens, but they indicate it. They also point in the direction of common council to meet common problems—something which one, then a handful of persons can bring about. It is the way of democracy to do this, a way which city political machines and factory-method school systems have neglected, but which every human being feels in his heart is good.

These steps indicate that there is no pancea, no cure-all, no blueprint which will solve our problems in living together. They point to the need for common purpose—to make democracy work better in more places. They point to the need for a flexible, growing plan to meet local needs through local resources of brain and skill.

These steps indicate a development of school curriculum and methods, through their relevance to the problems of today—the problems which pupils face now.

Reprinted by:

BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

1697 BROADWAY • NEW YORK 19, N.Y.

RECEIVED
DEC 12 1945
Southern Regional Council

17 - Intercultural Education

By HELEN TRAGER

Intercultural Books for Children

Mrs. Trager, director of special services, Bureau for Intercultural Education, New York City, evaluates some well-known children's books that have implications for intercultural relations and presents a recommended list for children from preschool through junior high school ages. This article developed as a result of Mrs. Trager's recent survey of twenty-two lists of books for children published by some of the most responsible agencies in the field, and of the need for more critical evaluation of books that develop children's intercultural understandings[1].

IN THE PAST FEW YEARS several educational agencies have published children's book lists devoted to the democratic ideal. Casual examination of these lists reveals the fact that many of the same titles appear on a majority of the lists. Variations in bibliography occur chiefly through rearrangement based on themes such as "intercultural," "interracial," "immigrant groups," addressed to particular audiences. The question which stimulated this study is: What kind of books are we recommending to children to further better, wiser, more understanding, more democratic human relations?

Twenty-two lists have been examined from an intercultural point of view. The lists had been compiled by some of the most responsible agencies in the field: American Library Association, Bureau for Intercultural Education, Child Study Association, Common Ground, Council on Books in Wartime.[2] It seemed wise to limit the scope of the survey to books written for children, from picture books for the preschool child to stories, biographies, and titles devoted to comparative culture and religion for the junior high school group. Text and reference books, as well as those about people of countries other than the United States, have been excluded.

According to the annotations of these twenty-two lists, two hundred fifty-three titles fitted the categories just described. However, reading these books soon proved that the annotations were inadequate or inaccurate. Seventy-one books had to be excluded for the following reasons: Twenty-nine were listed for children but were not suitable for them; thirty-one were text or reference books yet were not listed as such; and eleven were written from so parochial a point of view as to warrant exclusion. In addition, fifty-seven books were not available at any public or other library source in New York City. Forty-five of these titles were not in either the Children's or Standard Catalog, listings that are based on nationally gathered opinions of children, librarians, and specialists.

The casualties, thus, ran high. Of the original two hundred fifty-three, there remained but one hundred twenty-five. Each of these one hundred twenty-five books was then re-examined in order to determine whether the reader would come away with a favorable attitude toward or at least a better understanding of persons of other culture groups; or, whether the reader's presumed prejudices would be deepened or perpetuated in spite of the author's good intentions.

Only sixty-one of the hundred twenty-five withstood this test. Sixty-four were rejected when the following specific criteria were applied:

[1] Mrs. Trager was assisted by Roberta Everitt in research for background material. Miss Everitt is a teacher-librarian in Gloversville, N. Y.

[2] For a full list see the appendix on page 145.

Is the literary quality good?
Is the material dated?
Is the material suitable for the age level?
Are the people real or are they types?
Are all groups treated fairly?
If dialect is used, is it excessive, unfair, stereotype?
Are differences overemphasized?
Are unscientific ideas and misconceptions perpetuated?
Is a particular way of life, a custom or tradition explained, or is it described with bias?
Can the reader like, understand or identify with the person or group in the story?
Do the illustrations help one to like the people in the story, or are they stereotype, queer, or ugly?
Is the book significant from an intercultural point of view?

Space does not permit a discussion of the above criteria nor more than a few brief comments and illustrations from titles frequently recommended but here rejected. Rejected, not as poor books necessarily, although some are, but because they are inadequate as bridges to greater understanding of the many American culture groups. Let us begin with a book written by a man who has several outstanding intercultural juveniles to his credit. In this one, however, although he tells of an Italo-American boy vividly and with real sympathy, other minor characters are stereotypes and merely perpetuate prejudices (e. g., the Indian, the German, the Chinese). For instance, the Chinese is described thus:

Ha Young looked sleepy and tired. In his hand he held a long pipe from which a strong strange pungent odor came.

and is made to say:

"Me no catchee muchee fishee. Me no makee muchee money. Me sickee man. By'n'by me kickee bucket. Go back China way to die."

The German sounds like a comic strip Katzenjammer. He speaks:

"Vell, vell. You like this country vunce you get used mitt de people."

Other examples of pat stereotypes can be found in a story about a southern Negro boy. Here we see the all too familiar characterization of the Negro—gaudy taste; the devoted domestic with kerchiefed head, crude manners, startled-fear reaction patterns a la Hollywood.

Aunt Cindy wore a black silk skirt, a red shirt with short sleeves, short white gloves, and a hat with orange and blue and purple flowers and feathers.
She looked very much like the big black woman whose picture you sometimes see on a package of pancake flour.
Shine Boy turned his big white plate up in front of his face and licked it clean that way.
They rolled their big white eyes.

Until we get rid of our prejudices and to help us get rid of our prejudices surely we need stories about the Negro that give us a more representative picture.

A recent Junior Literary Award book tells about a migratory Mexican family in the American Southwest. In Mexico, we read, the family "lived like rabbits." The children ask for work at the house of Anglo-Americans.

"She could water the grass," said the man.
"She might get a little water on herself by accident," said his wife.
"That would do her good."

In this story the author over and over again has the Mexican children behave as if Anglo standards were native to them. In few instances does she help the Anglo child to understand Mexican cultural patterns. The effect is unreal and very unconvincing.

Some dialogue from a juvenile which is on three recommended lists is a fairly typical illustration of inconsistent and

"phony" dialect. This is a story of an Italo-American family.

The mother speaks: "Thatsa way I dance when I was a leetle beeta girl in Sunny Italy."

The same mother: "Good morning, that must be Cinders, and won't Tony and Carlotta be glad to see them."

Papa: "Thatsa da way to dance! Watcha your step. It must maka the good time."

The same Papa: "Theresa is with them. They are at the tracks now. I'm a telling you how it looka lika biga faira."

Implications that are unscientific can be illustrated by the following quotes from a book about Hawaii:

Hawaiian blood mixtures made able teachers.
As firm as a Portuguese.
As generous as a Hawaiian.
She was Portuguese and easily excited.

This author presents Hawaiian school children sympathetically but unfortunately expresses prejudice against Europeans. Among the culture groups of the story, only the Europeans speak with accents.

Perhaps more extended comment is in order on a juvenile that has been popular for over thirty-five years, Little Black Sambo. It is often the only story with a Negro character used in our public schools, yet it is excluded on the list that follows. Although a story that white children want to hear over and over again, it is in our opinion an undesirable book. In this case it is not the story that errs but the illustrations—they are pure caricature. These drawings create a distorted and ugly picture that becomes fixed in the white child's imagination. They have probably contributed to the sting and smirk that go with mention of the name "Sambo." At the present time to dismiss these stories as harmless because they are liked by white children is to ignore the requirements for better group relations.

Other recommended titles were omitted from the list below in the light of one or more of the twelve criteria or because they were inconsequential from an intercultural point of view. A surprisingly large number were of such poor literary quality as to rule them out. Often the poorly written book was also confused as to age level interests or was too young in format for the intended reader.

Until now we have put our endorsement on all these books—good, bad and indifferent. We have often ignored the need to apply artistry and skill in the process of affecting attitudes and values. Doctrines of hate can be put forward crudely or with sledge hammer blows, but understanding, respect, and love take root less easily and require gentle cultivation and our best talents.

Intercultural Books for Children
A Revised List [3]

Titles on this list are arranged approximately according to the age level interests of the reader, rather than the vocabulary and reading skill. The age designation will not be helpful if interpreted too literally. Titles with asterisks (*) appear here for the first time.

For Preschool and Primary Children

ABEITA, LOUISE. I Am A Pueblo Indian Girl. Morrow, 1939. $1.50. Brief, descriptive text about the food, home, clothes, and customs of the Indian; told by an Indian. Simple, eloquent language with full-page colored illustrations painted by Indian artists. 8-12.

*ADAMS, VEOTTA McKINLEY. Captain Joe and the Eskimo. William R. Scott, 1943. $1.25. A picture book that presents an Eskimo in delightfully humorous situations. 4-8.

*BEIM, LORRAINE AND JERROLD, and CRICHLOW, ERNEST. Two Is A Team. Harcourt, Brace, Sept., 1945. $1.75. Two boys learn that cooperation works more satisfactorily than rugged individualism. Splendid colored illustrations show that one boy is Negro and the other white. 4-7.

[3] Edited from twenty-two bibliographies with new annotations.

BERRY, ERICK. Penny-Whistle. Macmillan, 1930. $1. A fanciful and humorous tale about a little Negro boy who whistles a tune that the reader can whistle too. Bright colored illustrations. 4-6.

CLARK, A. N. In My Mother's House. Viking, 1941. $2. Indian children helped to write this story of the Indian child of the Southwest. Originally intended for use in Indian schools but meaningful to other children as well. Beautifully illustrated. 8-12.

CLARK, A. N. Little Navajo Bluebird. Viking, 1943. $2. Present-day Navajo Indians seen through the eyes of a six-year-old. Fine illustrations. 8-11.

CREDLE, ELLIS. The Flop-Eared Hound. Oxford, 1938. $2. The adventures of Boot-Jack and his dog. The dialogue is rhythmic and rich in local color without resorting to dialect. Fine photographs of this Negro family and their life in the country. 5-8.

DE ANGELI, MARGUERITE. Up the Hill. Doubleday, 1942. $2. Daily life of two Polish children in a mining town in Pennsylvania. Beautifully illustrated. 8-12.

DE ANGELI, MARGUERITE. Yonie Wondernose. Doubleday, 1944. $2. Jonathan is curious about everything so they call him Yonie Wondernose. The everyday life in an Amish household told with humor. Beautiful colored illustrations. 7-9.

DUBOIS, WILLIAM PENE. The Three Policemen. Viking, 1938. $2. A humorous and ingenious fantasy about a young Negro boy on an imaginary island inhabited by Frenchmen. Illustrated with humor, in color and black and white. 5-9.

DUPLAIX, LILY. Pedro, Nina, and Perrito. Harper, 1939. $1.50. The story of Nina and Pedro in a New Mexican village. 6-8.

ESTES, ELEANOR. The Hundred Dresses. Harcourt, 1944. $2.50. Wanda has no friends in school. After too many unkind slights she and her brother move away. They happen to be Polish-American children—they might be any "minority." The element of "pity" is unfortunate, but the story is good in spite of that. Illustrated. 8-10.

EVANS, EVA KNOX. Araminta. Minton Balch, 1935. $2. Amusing adventures of a city child on a farm. Araminta might be any child—she happens to be Negro. Charming illustrations. 6-8.

EVANS, E. K. Araminta's Goat. Putnam, 1938. $2. Araminta visits her grandmother in the country again. Illustrated. 6-8.

EVANS, E. K. Jerome Anthony. Putnam, 1936. $2. Amusing adventures of a country boy visiting his city aunt. He might be any boy—he happens to be Negro. Araminta is in this story, too. Illustrations in black and white. 6-8.

*FAULKNER, GEORGENE, and BECKER, JOHN. Melindy's Medal. Messner, 1945. $2. Melindy's family moves to a big new city housing project. A story full of humor, honesty, and imagination. This is a Negro family. 8-10.

*JOHNSON, SIDDIE JOE. Debby. Longmans Green, 1940. $2.25. Debby, a city child, spends the summer in a trailer on the Gulf coast of Texas. She makes friends with a Mexican-American family and a German-American family. 8-10.

JONES, E. O. Maminka's Children. Macmillan, 1940. $2. Three children live happily together in a setting warmly colored by Bohemian folkways. Lovely colored illustrations. 6-8.

JORDAN, MILDRED. The Shoo-Fly Pie. Knopf, 1944. $2. The story tells about present-day farm life of this Pennsylvania Dutch family. Fine colored illustrations. 8-10.

LATTIMORE, E. F. Junior. Harcourt, 1938. $2. How a little Negro boy of Charleston, South Carolina, earns money for his family by learning the shrimp man's song. Illustrated. 6-8.

LEDERER, CHARLOTTE. Yanko in America. Crowell, 1943. $2. The story of a Slovene family who comes to America in the late 1930's—told through the eyes of a ten-year-old boy. 8-11.

LOCKWOOD, MYNA. Macaroni: An American Tune. Oxford, 1939. $1. A little boy of seven is ridiculed and rejected by the neighborhood boys because he is Italian. A delightful story of how he won acceptance. Illustrated. 7-10.

*REY, MARGARET. Spotty. Harper and Brothers, Sept., 1945. $1.75. The story of a spotted rabbit who was made to feel unhappy because he was "different," until one day—. Amusing illustrations by H. A. Rey. 5-7.

SHACKELFORD, JANE DABNEY. My Happy Days. Association Publishers, 1944. $2.15. The everyday life of an attractive boy in a middle-class Negro family. The text here and there is a little Pollyanna-ish. Excellent photographs. 6-9.

SHARPE, STELLA GENTRY. Tobe. University of North Carolina Press, 1939. $2. The story of the everyday life of a Negro family in the South who lives and works on the farm, told with photographs and simple text. 6-10.

TARRY, ELLEN. Hezekiah Horton. Viking, 1942. $1. A real life story about a little boy in Harlem who loved automobiles. Illustrated. 5-8.

For Upper Elementary School Children

ANGELO, VALENTI. Paradise Valley. Viking, 1940. $2. An attractive story of boys of Mexican descent living in the southwestern part of the United States. Good illustrations. 10-12.

ARMER, L. A. Waterless Mountain. Longmans Green, 1931. $2.50. A beautiful story of the life of the Navajo Indian as seen through the eyes of an eight-year-old. Illustrations not particularly suited to children. 11-14.

*ASSOCIATION FOR CHILDHOOD EDUCATION. Told Under the Stars and Stripes. Macmillan, Nov., 1945. $2. Twenty-six stories (some old, some new) about American children of different culture groups. Illustrated. For younger and older children.

BONTEMPS, ARNA. Sad-Faced Boy. Houghton, 1937. $2. Three brothers ride the freight trains to New York City from Alabama. Harlem is their destination. The book describes their experiences. Realistic, humorous, colorful. Illustrated. 10-12.

*BROOMELL, A. P. Children's Story Caravan. Lippincott, 1935. $2. Excellent collection of stories of real people and places, allegories, folklore, fairy tales, everyday people. Human values are important in all of the stories. Introduction by Dorothy Canfield Fisher. For younger and older children.

BUFF, CONRAD AND MARY. Dancing Cloud; The Navajo Boy. Viking, 1937. $2. A story about the everyday life of the Navajo Indians told with dignity and beauty. The reader can find experiences on his level, yet will learn many things that are new to him. Fine colored full-page illustrations. 9-11.

DE ANGELI, MARGUERITE. Thee, Hannah. Doubleday, 1940. $2. This is the tale of Hannah and her Quaker family in Philadelphia just before the Civil War and how she finally accepted the Quaker bonnet. Beautiful illustrations. 9-11.

DE ANGELI, MARGUERITE. Henner's Lydia. Doubleday, 1936. $2. A picture story book of Pennsylvania Dutch setting about Lydia whose people are Amish. Told with the usual skill of the author and her lovely illustrations. 9-11.

DE ANGELI, MARGUERITE. Skippack School. Doubleday, 1939. $2. Although a story of long ago (1750) it tells of events interesting to children of today. Eli is a Mennonite boy. His first meeting with an Indian is told with great skill. Colored illustrations of great beauty and charm. 9-12.

DEUTSCH, BABETTE. The Welcome. Harper, 1942. $2. One of the new boys at school finds it tough sledding. He is a refugee from Nazi Germany. 11-12.

EVANS, E. K. Key Corner. Putnam, 1938. $2. A good story of Negro children in the rural South. Told with humor and charm. A realistic story rarely told to white children in the North. 9-12.

FAHS, S. L. and SPOERL, DOROTHY. Beginnings of Life and Death. Beacon Press, 1937. $1.50. The myths and folk tales of African Bushmen, Ancient Egyptians, Aztecs, California Indians, Ancient Greeks, Ancient Hebrews, and Early Christians. A simple presentation of comparative religion and culture. 9-14.

FITCH, F. M. One God: The Ways We Worship Him. Lothrop, 1944. $2. An informational approach to better religious understanding. Attractive format. Excellent photographs. 10-14.

GATES, DORIS. Blue Willow. Viking, 1940. $2. The story of a migratory family, originally from northern Texas, forced to go anywhere it can find work. Deep insights gained of different regions and people of the United States through the eyes of a ten-year-old who dreams of a real and permanent home. 9-13.

HAYES, FLORENCE. Hosh-ki the Navajo. Random, 1943. $2. The story of a modern Navajo boy's adjustment at school where new traditions challenge tribal customs. 10-14.

*JACKSON, JESSE. Call Me Charley. Harper and Brothers, 1945. $2. The story of Charley, the only Negro boy in a white neighborhood and in the local school. His friendships and problems. Illustrations are not so good as the text. 10-13.

LANG, DON. On the Dark of the Moon. Oxford, 1943. $2. A story of a young Negro boy and his adventures hunting raccoons. 9-12.

MARSHALL, HELEN. A New Mexican Boy. Holiday, 1940. $2. Festivals, holidays, and everyday life in a Spanish village of New Mexico told with charm and simplicity. Extraordinary colored illustrations. 10-12.

MEANS, F. C. Rainbow Bridge. Friendship Press, 1934. $1.50. The Miyato family of Japan decides to come to America. Their problems and adjustment to life in Colorado are well told. (The author unfortunately implies here and there that the Christian religion is superior). 10-12.

NEWELL, HOPE. Steppin and Family. Oxford, 1942. $2. A boy in Harlem who wanted to become a professional dancer. Handled well. A story that is within reason. A good picture of happy home life. Illustrated. 10-12.

SAWYER, RUTH. Roller Skates. Viking, 1936. $2. Charming story set in 1890-1905 in New York City. The friendships cross all group cleavages—social, economic, ethnic. The true life experiences of the author as a ten-year-old. 11-14.

SHAPIRO, IRWIN. John Henry and the Double-Jointed Steam Drill. Messner, 1945. $1.50. A good collection of stories about this Negro folk hero. Vigor and humor are expressed in the illustrations, too. 10-13.

SPERRY, ARMSTRONG. Little Eagle—A Navajo Boy. Winston, 1938. $2. A dramatic modern adventure story of a fourteen-year-old Navajo boy in the setting of the Arizona canyons. The story interprets the conflict of cultures that the Indian faces. Brilliantly colored illustrations. 9-11.

STERNE, EMMA GELDERS. Incident in Yorkville. Farrar, 1943. $1.75. A story of an American boy educated in Nazi Germany who had to learn the American way of life and American values. A good picture of life on a city street (New York City) where many backgrounds mingle. 11-14.

STONE, C. R. Inga of Porcupine Mine. Holiday, 1942. $2. This story, set in northern Michigan, tells of Inga whose father is Cornish and whose mother is Finnish. The first and second generation adjustment is presented. 10-12.

SWIFT, H. H. Railroad to Freedom: A Story of the Civil War. Harcourt, 1932. $2.50. Historical fiction presenting a vital characterization of Harriet Tubman. The use of dialect seems unfortunate and unnecessary. 11-14.

For Junior High School

ALLEN, ADAM. New Broome Experiment. Lippincott, 1944. $2. Two city boys come to a modern dairy farm to help out in the labor shortage. They become involved in an important scientific experiment. Religious and cultural conflicts are woven into the main theme. 12-14.

ANGELO, VALENTI. Hill of Little Miracles. Viking, 1942. $2. A story of Italian and Irish families who live on Telegraph Hill in San Francisco. Normal, wholesome family atmosphere. 12-13.

ANTIN, MARY. The Promised Land. Houghton, 1912. $3. Although of a period fifty years ago, this book is still valid because it is warmly human and analyzes emotions and reactions which are not dated. It is the author's account of her own childhood and girlhood, first in Russia and then in the United States. 13-15.

DALGLIESH, ALICE. Silver Pencil. Scribner, 1944. $2.50. The making of an American. A real life story that begins in early childhood in Trinidad. People of many culture groups are presented. 12-13.

FAST, HOWARD. Haym Salomon, Son of Liberty. Messner, 1941. $2.50. An excellent biography of one of the supporters of the American Revolution. 12-15.

GRAHAM, SHIRLEY, and LIPSCOMB, GEORGE D. Dr. George Washington Carver, Scientist. Messner, 1944. $2.50. A very human biography. 12-15.

MACGREGOR, F. C. Twentieth Century Indians. Putnam, 1941. $3. Through photographs and text the author attempts to clarify and correct some erroneous concepts about the American Indian. A true picture of Indian life as it exists today. The first picture is a poor intercultural choice. 12 and up.

MEANS, F. C. Shuttered Windows. Houghton, 1938. $2. A realistic story of a Negro girl who has been brought up in the North and then moves to the South, encountering southern restrictions for the first time.

MEANS, F. C. Teresita of the Valley. Houghton, 1943. $2. A story that faces squarely problems of Spanish-Americans in an Anglo culture. Broken English is used but explained in the text by the author. 12 and up.

MEANS, F. C. The Moved-Outers. Houghton, 1945. $2. The Ohara family in their friendly home town community before Pearl Harbor and then their life in the Japanese Relocation Camp. A documentary story. 12 and up.

MOON, GRACE P. Singing Sands. Doubleday, 1936. $2. A Pueblo Indian girl returns to her home on the mesa after five years at a government school. The story is perhaps a little glorified but should help readers to understand Indian culture better and to see why the "progress" of the white man must not be forced upon the Indian. 13-15.

OVINGTON, M. W. Zeke. Harcourt, 1931. $2. Zeke Lee, from a small rural community in the South, attends Tolliver Institute, a Negro school in Alabama. 12-13.

PESSIN, DEBORAH. Giants on the Earth. Behrman, 1940. $2. Biographical sketches of interesting Jewish personalities of various centuries and countries. An attractive, well-written book addressed obviously to Jewish young people, but useful for all groups. 12-15.

SCACHERI, M. AND M. Indians Today. Harcourt, 1936. $2. A book of photographs with text that tells about the life of the southwest Indians today. Unfortunately the photographs of Indian men in the first half of the book are stereotypes.

*SMITH, RUTH (editor). The Tree Of Life. Viking, 1942. $3.50. A comprehensive yet simple book on comparative religion—American-Indian, Norse, Hindu, Buddhist, Confucian, Taoist, Egyptian, Babylonian, Greek, Zoroastrian, Hebrew and Christian, Mohammedan. 13 and up.

TAYLOR, EVA. Men Are Brothers. Viking, 1937. $1. Simple presentation of ideas and scientific information with emphasis on those things all people share in common in every age, everywhere. 12 and up.

TUNIS, JOHN R. All-American. Harcourt, 1942. $2. A high school sports story in which discrimination issues are faced in a realistic manner and brought to a democratic solution. 12-15.

TUNIS, JOHN R. Yea! Wildcats! Harcourt, 1944. $2. A coach fights for decency in school sports and against unethical community pressures. An exciting sports story. 12-15.

WILSON, WILLIAM E. Shooting Star, the Story of Tecumseh. Farrar, 1942. $2. A well-written biography of Tecumseh, famous American Indian chief. Attractive style and format. Notable because it presents an Indian leader as an understandable human being striving for human rights. 12-14.

Appendix

AMERICAN EDUCATION FELLOWSHIP, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. People of the U. S. A., The. By Lucy Sprague Mitchell and others. (Booklet) Pp. 136. $1.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Jews in America, The. Prepared by the Library of Jewish Information. (Pamphlet) 1943. Pp. 11. Free.

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION, 520 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, 11, Ill. Ours to Keep. (Pamphlet) 1943. Single copy, twenty-five cents.

BAPTIST BOOK STORE, Nashville 3, Tennessee. World in Books, The. (Pamphlet) 1944-45. Pp. 60. Free.

BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION, 1697 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. American Slavs. Prepared by Joseph S. Roucek. (Pamphlet) 1944. Pp. 49. Thirty-five cents. Immigrant in Fiction and Biography, The. By Joseph S. Roucek and others. (Pamphlet) 1945. Pp. 32. Twenty cents. Spanish-Speaking Americans and Mexican-Americans in the United States. Compiled by Lyle Saunders. (Pamphlet) 1945. Pp. 12. Twenty cents.

CHILD STUDY ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, 221 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York, N. Y. American Scene—Past and Present. (Pamphlet) (Out of print). Books of the Year for Children. (Pamphlet) 1944. Pp. 22. Twenty cents. Let Them Face It. (Mimeographed release) Pp. 6. Twenty cents. Two editions: 1944-1945.

COMMON GROUND, 222 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Recommended Reading—List III. (Leaflet) 1942. Pp. 4. Three cents.

COUNCIL ON BOOKS IN WARTIME, INC., 400 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. Americans All: Children's Books, List 5. (Leaflet) 1945. Pp. 7. Free.

EVANSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY, Evanston, Illinois. With Liberty and Justice for All. (Pamphlet) 1944. No price given.

JULIUS ROSENWALD FUND, 4901 Ellis Avenue, Chicago 15, Ill. Race Relations. By Julia Waxman. (Pamphlet) 1945. Pp. 44, Single copy, free.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS, 203 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Ill. Reading for Democracy. (Pamphlet) 1945. Pp. 6. Free. Reading for Democracy: Books for Young Americans. (Leaflet) 1945. Free. Religious Book Week. (Pamphlet) 1944. Pp. 27. Single copy, free.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF TEACHERS OF ENGLISH, 211 West Sixty-eighth Street, Chicago, Ill. Children's Books on the Negro. By Charlemae Rollins. (Pamphlet) 1943. Pp. 46. (Out of print).

NEW YORK STATE EDUCATION DEPARTMENT, Albany, N. Y. Books on American Minorities. (Pamphlet) 1943. Pp. 4. Free.

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY, Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street, New York, N. Y. Books About the Negro for Children. The James Weldon Johnson Collection. (Pamphlet) 1944. Pp. 7. Ten cents.

TENNESSEE STATE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, Nashville, Tennessee. Negro, The. Compiled by the Division of School Libraries. (Pamphlet) 1941. Pp. 48. Single copy, free.

DISTRIBUTED BY
Bureau for Intercultural Education
1697 BROADWAY
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

Reprinted from the November, 1945, issue of CHILDHOOD EDUCATION published by the Association for Childhood Education, 1201 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

4-46

Intercultural Understanding For The Democratic Life

by RAYNELL GOODMAN
Robert Fulton School, Richmond

BECAUSE in our classroom we all have a share in thinking, planning, judging, carrying on the affairs in which we are involved, it was only natural at the beginning of the school year to discuss the possible approaches to the sixth grade social studies course. Were we to follow the development of cultures chronologically (our course of study called for a study of ancient history) or were we to start here and trace causes? This was a critical question: it would influence the procedure of our social studies program throughout the year. Discussions extended through several days. Then, finally, we selected the latter alternative, because we felt it to be more exciting, more fun.

It was necessary next to establish criteria for selecting and guiding activities. We decided that, in order to understand each other, we must first understand ourselves. This, then, became our primary objective: What kinds of people make up our classroom, our school, our community, our nation, our world?

In answering this question we discovered a fundamental: Our ideas must be honest and convincing to our associates. This is, opinions must be based on reliable data. Therefore, developing a habit of open-mindedness and learning to listen critically became a second classroom objective, important as spelling and writing clearly and correctly.

Furthermore, the content of history, geography, science, English, music and art was found to be a rich source of raw material for ideas. And so it followed that our third objective pointed to the value of a broad and deep accumulation of information.

Activities

With the problem clearly in mind and goals set up, we began pertinent activities. Personal family trees were started in diagram form: Who am I? What is my past? What do I owe the past? We asked our parents. We traced our ancestry. A lively question attracted each student's attention: What nationality group shall I study? In which group do I belong?

Naturally, we attacked the big job of maps. We studied them and we made them. Studying maps in groups helped us to develop an understanding of man's many migrations. It also helped us to develop an historical as well as a geographical perspective. Our most delightful map experiences were with Malvina Hoffman's Races of the World and Where They Live; America, A Nation of One People From Many Countries, and World Around the United States (Air Map).

But we did not stop at reading published maps. We made personal maps and on them pasted or drew appropriate pictures. Research was hotly pursued and the mathematics of map measurement was assiduously practiced in order to draw the maps to scale. Printed outline maps, as well as charts, were discovered; they were filled in or completed as our needs required. Mountcastle Map Company's plastic map of the world lent itself easily to the filling in process. Locating places on an outline map stimulated heated discussions, and, as these geographical places appeared, "man's home on earth" grew into a warm idea out of happy experiences.

Other jobs included music. We listened to records of music by composers of many different nationalities. We also listened to music characteristic of some particular country or race. Singing songs of many lands brought to us a keener feeling of kinship to all people. On one occasion we were inspired by de Falla's Ritual Fire Dance to write individual interpretive poems! We became so fascinated with our own poetry that we illustrated the poems with original crayon pictures and, finally, bound the whole thing into a book, en-

Gerald Lisman Studio

Edward explains his national and racial background.

Gerald Lisman Studio

ONE AMERICA FROM MANY NATIONALITIES AND RACES. Racial backgrounds represented in this group are: Austrian, Chinese, Dutch, English, French, German, Greek, Irish, Italian, Negro, Portuguese, Russian and Scotch.

titled, "Ritual Fire Dance, Original Poems," to be bequeathed to the school library.

Dozens of letters were written and mailed. Some, seeking information, went to the various culture group organizations; some invited friends to our classroom to participate in our activities; and "thank you" notes went to people who assisted us with our program. Answers to our letters frequently contained interesting and valuable material. We were enthusiastic about the letters and eager for this more or less personal data, so that letter writing became a vital matter.

We came to know about bibliographies, because we needed to find out "What books can help me?" and then to do research work and record our findings. We took notes and kept book lists of the sources of all information.

Planning individual programs under careful teacher-guidance gave a continuity to our study. We listed questions to follow. This teacher help was informal and friendly, operating within a flexible schedule.

Social travel about Richmond included visits to churches of three major religious beliefs: Catholic, Jewish and Protestant. Personal contact with the ministers, we discovered, colored our attitudes desirably and enriched our understanding of the several racial and religious groups. Besides, such social experiences as using public transportation and eating out, when we were away from school all day, were valuable in helping us to acquire good social manners: poise, self-control and politeness.

We visited the museum in order to see an exhibit of Afro-American culture and contributions. The visit aroused in us a respect for personalities. Thus, by tying correct attitudes to pleasant emotions, we strengthened these activities and directed them easily toward desirable channels of behavior.

Panel Discussions

The idea of a panel had been suggested in our early discussions. At the beginning of the second semester we felt ready to attempt the project. Students from John Marshall High School, whose parents were foreign born, and a negro student from Virginia Union University, were invited to participate, and they accepted. Each guest member on the panel was "sponsored" and introduced by one of us. The topic, "What the country of my ancestral background has contributed to American life," was ably presented. Friends had been invited: the sixth grade of a neighboring school, citizens of our community, and local school officials.

One of the guests insisted that we present our panel discussion on the radio as a "Brotherhood Week" feature. This we did, experiencing the trials and tribulations of script writing and other educational activities involved in broadcasting.

(Continued on page 336)

Intercultural Understanding For The Democratic Life

(Continued from page 327)

Technique and behavior within the broadcasting studio was vividly imprinted upon our minds by this experience so highly charged with color and action.

Finally, some excellent motion pictures were secured, dealing with other countries, their customs and their culture. These movies were carefully selected and only those shown which accented the likenesses among nations and human beings, rather than those which emphasized quaint or outmoded dress and customs. One picture, The World We Want to Live In, supplemented nicely our study of religions. In brief, the democratic ideal, developing through the school year, was stimulated effectively by these audio-visual aids.

And, having been bitten deeply by the democratic "bug", we were impelled to preach our gospel. Therefore, we maintained a bulletin board in the school hall, where maps, posters and pictures were displayed. We incorporated the story of our visits to the three churches in a school chapel program. And, of course, other special programs, such as the panel and the radio broadcast were instrumental in propagandizing others both within and outside our school.

Evaluation

The accomplishments of our group may best be evaluated, I think, by being broken into three phases.

Social Understandings. We learned to organize ourselves into small groups for study. Attitudes toward members of different races were improved. We began to appreciate our neighbors, to view our environment critically, and to recognize the efforts of our forebears. The understanding of democracy was knitting itself into our characters.

Thinking and communication skills. We learned to speak through conferences and oral reports; to write and spell through reports, letters and outlines; to create art through drawing pictures, painting posters and making maps. And so our practical skills were perfected in the warm atmosphere of friendship and understanding toward all ethnic groups.

Information acquisitions. We accumulated a wealth of information: In history, the development and contributions of the countries of our world stood strongly beneath our present-day living. In geography, reading maps and locating places fixed in our minds the relation of the several peoples and nations to each other. And not neglected were the commercial, cultural and natural characteristics of nations as members of the "one world" family. In science we learned map measurements. In English we learned how to speak and express our thoughts before a group, to write clearly and correctly by basing our opinions on fact. In music we discovered a universal expression of peoples' thoughts and feelings. And through the medium of art we were able to communicate our growing feelings and ideas to others.

"Intercultural understandings" is merely a new way of saying "democratic understanding." And the practice of democracy in our classrooms is the finest way to approach its practice in our nation. Thus, intercultural understanding, earnestly and democratically studied, promises a richer, freer American life for tomorrow's citizens.

Correlated Classes Can Be Interesting

(Continued from page 331)

Turning to ways to make their play entertaining as well as informative, the students developed a keener perception in their thinking and more originality. They became aware of customs and mind sets, change and progress and the relative value of the old and new, for a group of girls who wrote the script had studied Puritan modes in a thorough fashion. In addition to the trial of a New England witch, there were court scenes in which a Puritan spinster is accused of "painting her cheeks in order that she might snare one of the noblemen of the community as a husband." In the same act a widow is tried for "crimping her hair" which is deemed a "very sinful and frivolous pastime." Also a gossiping wife is sentenced for berating her husband.

Each Plays His Part

To learn and realize that there is an interdependence of individuals and of groups in making a project successful, each student had been selected to participate, before the casting was over, in the various roles of the Puritan judge, the witch, the runaway servants, the gossiping mistress and austere members of the jury. The next problem was that of costuming and it was necessary for the class to study colonial dress. The enjoyment they found in dressing up in black stockings, wigs and buckled shoes did not outweigh the facts learned about religion and how its rigid discipline can be reflected in the costumes of a people. The stage properties, including the judge's bench, the rough hewn gavel and stall for the jury also presented a more vivid reminder to them of an earlier mode of living in which justice had been sterner and more prejudiced.

This correlation could be developed to a greater extent, not only in these two subjects but in others such as mathematics and science, Spanish and Latin American history, geometry and mechanical drawing and in a host of other cases. When a student leaves school, he is not judged on his ability to handle each little problem separately, but he must be able to integrate them all together into a bigger subject—Life! By having the subjects of our curriculum merge into one big whole, perhaps we can better prepare him for his future!

17- Intercultural Educ.

Vol. II, No. 2, April 1946
Colleges, Schools, Agencies

Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Wayne University, Detroit 1

THE COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN

RECEIVED
APR 15 1946
Southern Regional Council

*
***
*****

The College Study in Intergroup Relations
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education

WHAT THIS ISSUE IS ABOUT

1. Kind Words, and Our Thanks
2. Deadline, College Application
3. Summer Workshop--Register Now
4. Marshall College Program
5. Work at Milwaukee State
6. New Jersey's Four Projects
7. New York's Committees
8. Ohio State's Contributions
9. Pitt U Plans A Course
10. Studies at Wayne University
11. West Virginia's Researches
12. We Invite Your Reaction

I. KIND WORDS, AND THANKS A MILLION

Writing a bulletin is not unlike broadcasting a course from one's classroom. You step to the "mike," or take pen in hand as the case may be, and fire away, not knowing if anyone sees or hears or cares.

FROM THE MAIL BAG

It is, therefore, with genuine pleasure that we acknowledge reactions to our March bulletin. From the comments at hand, and mail is still coming in, we pick at random a few of the cards and letters.

"I read it with great interest.. It is encouraging to note that our problems do not seem as futile as on occasion one feels."
...Nathaniel Cantor, University of Buffalo

"I note, page 3, that (the colleges) 'have learned not to make a direct attack.' May I say 'we told you so' a year ago... It is splendid that the program is going so well and especially that we have increased funds to do an even better job this year."
...Walter E. Hager, President
Wilson Teachers College, Washington, D. C.

"I enjoyed reading your report.. In response to your request, if I can fill a spot in your summer workshop, I shall try to do so."
...David D. Henry, President
Wayne University, Detroit

"Thanks ever so much for the March 1 issue.. It reveals the same old realistic and patient approach.. an approach that will insure progress toward the unification of our people."
...Grant Rahn, Superintendent
Shorewood (Wisc.) Public Schools

"Thanks for including me on your mailing list.. The March issue is a splendid report.. If you come this way, stop over for a visit."
...Maurice F. Seay, Director School Service
University of Kentucky, Lexington

"It seems to me that you have the right slant.. It is intergroup attitudes that will determine future social relations.. But we must hurry.. One world or none!

...Leslie Zeleny, Professor
St. Cloud (Minn.) Teachers College

FROM OUR COLLEGES
6 RE-APPLICATIONS

Our program is a work program, a sensible but persistent effort to get something started, something done. On invitation to re-apply for the 1946 project, six of our 1945 colleges have requested full- or limited services, with action pending in the other two. And one, New Jersey State at Trenton, has already enrolled a representative in our summer workshop on intergroup relations. That kind of "participation" is surely, we believe, something to write about!

"I think our institution has profited a great deal by this study. It has been a good thing for the staff professionally.... The methods used were very valuable in developing an approach to social problems.. At our regular meeting on Tuesday, the faculty voted unanimously to authorize me to make application.. either individually.. or as part of the Wisconsin Unit..

...Frank E. Baker, President
Milwaukee State Teachers College

"We have a faculty meeting on April 11, our first opportunity to bring the full-scale program before the staff.. My guess is that we will not beat the deadline of April 15 by very many hours."

...Ross Mooney, Acting Dean, Education
Ohio State University

"I have recommended a sort of alumni membership for next year, a somewhat limited participation, because we are very likely to be considerably understaffed."

...W. W. D. Sones, Committee Chairman
University of Pittsburg.

"Our committee has been reorganized.. with Louis Jones and I off for sabbaticals. Margaret Hayes is the new chairman. New members, elected by the faculty, are Harvey Rice, Esther Stallman and William Hardy, all good people. When will you be able to come this way? Margaret thinks, and I concur, that a rather definite plan should be worked out before the end of this semester..

...Watt Stewart, Committee Chairman
Albany State College for Teachers

"I have been authorized by the faculty, the president and the executive council to submit our re-application for the College Study for 1946.. Our participation last year represented the sharpening of an interest already dominant in the College. The projects involved in working committees more than a third of the faculty, plus large number of students, public school people and lay citizens.. The Study itself has not only enriched our college program; it has served as a major integrating force on the campus.. I am sure we are better able to share in ameliorating group tensions in American life..

...Grace Woodson, Committee Chairman
West Virginia State College

"We definitely wish to continue our work in the Intergroup Project.. We feel that it would be very valuable to continue the study of student cooperation with Trenton social agencies. We should also like to do much more work in our demonstration school. Much more is to be done, too, in connection with student teacher experiences in the field.. We hope that this tentative list of projects will be sufficient until you meet with us to talk it over.

...Roscoe L. West, President
State Teachers College, Trenton, N. J.

II. DEADLINE, WORK SCHEDULE, AN APPLICATION

Due to the late issue of the March Bulletin setting a deadline of April 15 for applications from colleges interested in our 1946 project, we are now changing the deadline to May 15. Large universities must necessarily operate slowly; smaller colleges, if unfamiliar with our program, need time to turn over the idea of participating in a national study, to reach a decision and write a letter of application. Four weeks extension of time, while it will delay somewhat the work we had contemplated, will give more colleges an opportunity to apply, thus extend our services and increase the worth of our sample.

NEW DEADLINE FOR APPLICANT COLLEGES--MAY 1ST

Our thinking now is about like this. From now until May 15, we shall work on applications--answering letters of inquiry, contacting new colleges, visiting such colleges as we can, and assisting, where possible, in the continuing projects underway in 1945 Colleges. To these duties, we shall add as time permits oral reports to conferences and meetings, especially to our sponsoring bodies, and such writing as can be undertaken.

OUR WORK SCHEDULE

From May 15 until middle June, we shall visit colleges, offering for use whatever we have learned about organizing a general committee, the worth of project proposals, the setup of individual project studies, activities, experiences, etc. In line with our work last Spring, stress will again be placed on "things to do," rather than "ways of talking," for it is in the doing that we seem to get our best results. The idea is to get things ship-shape for the Autumn semester--plans well made, tests if used all ready to go, so that we can go into action during the first week of college. The better the college planning, the better the final end-results, a bit of truth we have learned the hard way.

Though summer is a rush time in teacher education, it may be that some colleges will want to run off, or experiment with, some of their intergroup projects, for example the evaluation of a workshop on intercultural education. We are prepared to help with this and to continue planning for the Autumn. In the main, however, we shall focus on the six weeks summer workshop at Wayne. It has been instituted, and it will be designed, to implement college programs.

To Editor G. H. Reavis
And the Cincinnati Public Schools, we bow three times for his BETTER TEACHING, the best edited school magazine on intergroup relations that has come our way.

Most letters of inquiry now coming in ask for specific directions in making application. There is, to repeat, no official form. After determining if the faculty as a whole sees values in college participation, write a letter to us telling something of college interest and work in intergroup relations and what now, with our assistance, staff members would like to do. By this we mean what projects, activities, studies and experiences they would care to plan and conduct for the improvement of teacher education.

THE FORM THE APPLICATION SHOULD TAKE

At the start of this process, a COMMITTEE ON APPLICATION may be needed. Its function would be to formulate the application, after which this group would dissolve. Thus its major tasks would be three; to stimulate college interest, to assist staff members, students, etc., in banding together about a common concern, for example a community survey, and to write up such concrete proposals for inclusion in the college application.

Assuming the application is accepted, the college will then want to organize a permanent COMMITTEE ON INTERGROUP RELATIONS. By this time, more thought will have been given to all of these matters. College needs will be more clearly defined, letters exchanged with our office, the campus visited, and a general representative committee set up. This group will function throughout the year, chiefly to coordinate the several separate project-group studies, activities, etc. On its chairman will fall major responsibilities for the college program and all our contacts will be channel via him. It is imperative that this person not be a dean or president, as might happen in smaller colleges, for either has too many administrative duties. The chairman must have time for intergroup work.

GENERAL COORDINATING INTERGROUP COMMITTEE

To Dr. Margaret Hayes
Of Albany State College, our first elected College Chairman for 1946.

III. SUMMER WORKSHOP--REGISTER NOW

With this issue of the Bulletin, we are mailing a booklet on the workshop in intergroup relations, June 24-August 2, at Detroit. In response to an announcement in the March bulletin, we have had seven inquiries--two from college teachers, three from high schools, one from a state department of education, and one from an intercultural agency.

The workshop booklet, available on request, asks that registration be completed by May 15. A limited number of $50 scholarships will be awarded, with priority going to the colleges in the 1946 project. The workshop will be devoted to current problems in intergroup relations, the kinds we have found and those brought in by participants, and it will carry graduate credit if this is wanted. Enrollment will be limited to 40, so that the group will be intimate and mobile, making trips in and about Detroit.

IV. MARSHALL COLLEGE PROGRAM

"But what did the colleges do, what did they find out?" Such questions are natural, and withal, encouraging. While we can tell some bits of the story, we must refer again to a book in preparation.

Marshall College is a liberal arts college, with a department of education. Located at Huntington, W. Va., old and respected, new and changing, Marshall is near the center of the industrial Kanawha River valley. It serves a border state where North and South meet and mingle, where race relations tend to show southern values.

After discussion, four major projects were developed. One was a faculty reading, group discussion and forum program, the chief purpose of which was interchange of ideas on Negro and white relations, anti-Semitism, religious unity, and labor-management problems. While attendance was voluntary, it reached at times half the faculty, and the books read ranged fro 1 to 6 volumes per staff member on each of the four problems. Discussion, "stimulating, vigorous," was not evaluated; faculty comments sho it to be of much value.

A FACULTY FORUM

Project No. 2 arose in a sociology course, the central aim being course reorientation about local community problems linked with "race, religion and labor." Stress was placed on small group meetings, committee work, community study, social agency and church visits, etc. Students kept weekly logs which, on analysis, "proved revealing of significant experiences." Factual learnings were increased. Attitude changes were both pro and con, from a liberal standpoint, with "self discovery" and insight into others basic outcomes. "Impact of personalities," one on the other, vs. the lecture method, was thought to be by far the more effective educational technic.

For A Sharp Discussion of Ethnic Conflict, Simon Marcson, Social Forces, 24, Dec. '45, 161-5

Number 3, an experimental laboratory-school study, involved twenty-two 12th graders in a modern drama course. With only four plays required, these students read 148, for example Green Pastures, Strife, Melting Pot, Winterset. They reported on them as they chose, for instance a panel. Pre- and end-tests, paper and pencil "what would you do" type (Ex: one's choice of seat on bus), showed no clear changes in behavioral tendencies. "It is doubtful if such vicarious experience guides action." There was no doubt as to its role "in stimulating interest in human problems." Pages of verbatim pupil discussion were given, much of which reflects value clashes.

DRAMA INCREASES INTEREST BUT DOES NOT GUIDE ACTION

Project 4, an overall curriculum survey, was by general consent Marshall's most ambitious undertaking. With no thought of appraising the total college contribution to intergroup relations, staff members were asked by letter to report what they did in course work, giving examples, cases, references, etc. In these pages of concrete reactions, over half the staff showed "a genuine concern" for human values of a democratic sort. Of these 67 college instructors, 30 claimed direct contributions to the solution of intergroup tensions, with the social science staff being most active. Somewhat less than half the staff did not reply after five letters, a reaction not subject to any one interpretation. Survey findings have been put before the faculty for its thought and action.

STAFF MEMBER CONTRIBUTION

V. AT MILWAUKEE STATE

Milwaukee, city of size and increasing ethnic diversity, is proud and rightly so, of its teachers college. What "goes on" there makes news headlines, a truth evidenced by continued, plentiful, favorable publicity on the intergroup program. Staff members are outspoken, though of course not irresponsible, thus creating a "high ceiling" for studies of human relational problems.

Milwaukee State worked on five projects. No. 1, like Marshall's No. 4, was a curriculum evaluation. Various study forms were made and tested, each prefaced by a careful delimitation of "intergroup relations" to problems of race, creed, ethnic cultures, class-level status. Pages of descriptive data are given on courses--number, aims, procedures, probable learning outcomes, with quantification not fully completed at this writing.

SOME CURRICULUM RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendations clearly foreshadowed include a new course on intergroup education, on comparative religions, more community experiences, more student contact with eminent ethnics, and student teaching in mixed public school classes.

Study No. 2 is a continuing effort to work with former graduates who are now teaching. To date, one all-day conference has been held, preceded by responses from these teachers as to the kinds of intergroup problems revealed in their classrooms. At this meeting, cases, situations, etc., were discussed, technics of ameloriation and positive action presented, and plans worked out for further informal exchanges of experience. Data supplied by these experienced teachers are being worked into the pre-service training program.

Project 3, for majors in nursery school education, was an observational study by these college students of youngsters in a mixed Negro and white Child Care Center. Student "logs" are illuminating. For example, "I found that these children do not have race prejudice," or "these children showed no color or preference in their choice of a teacher," or "On my third visit, I found that I was losing my awareness of color, reacting simply to children," or "why can't we have this type of contact with other ethnic groups?"

LITTLE CHILDREN DO NOT HAVE PREJUDICE

Number 4 in the Milwaukee series was a sociographic analysis by 23 training school and student teachers of 200 odd children in seven school grades. Data on "best friends" were secured, group and individual sociograms were drawn, projected on a screen and analyzed for relationships. Case studies were made of a number of children, for example-- isolates, rejects, cliques, leaders. Everyone, students most of all, writes with fine praise for the sociographic approach to "participation" problems. "We shall continue its use; it is an excellent teaching device."

No. 5, the final study, was an effort to expand field work for sociology majors, to root it more in ethnic realities, to improve its learning outcomes. Eighty teachers-to-be were given experience in ten major community agencies to illustrate, Urban League, the Jewish Center, Boys' Club, et al where they told stories, organized games, taught dancing, cared for toddlers, did club work, etc. Aside from freely written student reaction papers, each analyzed by the instructor, no evaluation was made.

Jo Sinclair's WASTELAND Harper Prize Winning novel, now current, no serious student can afford to miss. A Jew who didn't want to be a Jew, a well done therapeutic cure.

Students claim many values. For instance, "you are on your own in an agency..you get to meet and know people, you must act.."

VI. NEW JERSEY'S FOUR PROJECTS

Trenton, bustling city of races and creeds, and State Teachers College, a few miles outside, share the same ethnic pulls and counterpulls, but are unlike in some ways. On the campus--deeply wooded, country-like, serene, one feels the impact of group living, group doing and learning. One feels an "atmosphere" of shared concern for people, all people, a basic interest in making people, what makes them tick, the "textbook" of the school.

Project 1, a Junior-Senior pupil case study, practice teaching and community survey program, defies brief description. It ranges over two semesters, includes the laboratory school, a number of cooperating public schools, various New Jersey communities in which student-teachers live and teach, after having had a campus course on community study. It is a basic ongoing aspect of the college program, pointed for the year more sharply toward intergroup relations. The committee, and rightly, stressed in its progress report "the planning process," involving as it has at some time almost all the faculty. Learning outcomes have been assessed, limitations considered, further changes gotten under way.

PROVIDING STUDENTS WITH IN-COMMUNITY EXPERIENCE

Committee 2 made a sociographic study of nine sixth grades in Trenton city schools. Groups were found to differ widely in "friendship patterns," but ethnic isolates were few in number. Sex cleavages were evident, as were cliquish groupings by race, religion, and national origins. Efforts to integrate isolates, increase social participation, etc., by use of "activities," sociodrama and the like, were of limited effectiveness. However, college students who participated in the project, showed definite changes in group attitudes and skills.

To Herbert L. Seamans Educational Record, Jan.'46, for the policy of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the association financing the College Study, and the origins of this particular study.

New Jersey's No. 3 project, dealing with group leadership training for Sophomore education majors, was an attempt to improve another basic phase of the college educational program. In a campus course, conducted in part by social agency heads, and in these same agencies, volunteer students are taught the theory and practice of group work. About 60 students participated in the experiment this year in reorganizing course content and evaluating agency learnings. Stress was put on technics for determining child needs, identification of leaders, and group management processes. To date no final appraisal has been made.

GROUP WORK EXPERIENCE

Number 4 project was a study of children's attitudes toward ethnic peoples and heritages, plus classroom efforts to liberalize these points of view. Subjects were the 330 pupils of the Lanning Demonstration School, and test results are not yet analyzed. Scores by age, grade and sex will be obtained, and it is hoped that a general pattern of change will be revealed.

VII. NEW YORK STATE COLLEGE COMMITTEES

To many persons, New York is a key state in intercultural matters, with Albany its ever volatile center. State College for Teachers engaged in five sizable intergroup activities, the first a student led social action movement. This took the form of an "intergroup council," made up of Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Negroes, and recent immigrant stocks. Among IGC committees, were active working groups on campus contacts, community relations, social service, and a speakers' panel.

STUDENT SOCIAL ACTION PROGRAM

A recent service of the Council was a two-day statewide conference on intergroup relations. Student leaders from New York's ten state teachers' colleges attended, plus state department officials. At two public addresses, audiences ran to well over 5,000. Students made plans for work on their own campuses, including organization of intergroup councils. Three new councils have so far been reported.

> THIS WAY TO UNITY
> Oxford Press, '45, is a well chosen series of human interest readings, short, warming.

Project 2, a unit on intergroup relations in a college course for teachers, sought to aid students in looking at their own attitudes toward ethnics. Most learners felt they had no prejudices, all wanted to know more about the teacher's role in this field, all but one asked that the unit be expanded.

Study No. 3, a high level graduate seminar on intergroup problems, made a field survey of Albany's reactions to the then pending Ives-Quinn Act. Students were not lectured; on the contrary, a valid test was sought on the idea that attitude changes "are incidental products of direct individual experience," an hypothesis reasonably well supported by evidenc from a "tolerance indicator" developed for the study. Changes in pre- and end-test scores ranged from -3 to plus 61, with a median of 7.

PLAN AND ANALYZE EXPERIENCES
DON'T GIVE "ANOTHER LECTURE"

Albany's fourth project, use of folklore, is a novel way to approach intercultural relations. Old and stable, or new and in-migrant New York communities are rich in folk heritages. Can high school English teachers learn to collect, archive and interpret "folk say"? Can they teach this to their own students so that the latter will value ways of living which differ from common practices? This project is still going on, with results that are increasingly good.

The final project (5) was an experimental sociographic study with 209 tenth grade pupils in four sample schools, including equated control groups in each school. Pre-tests, i.e. an Ohio State "social problems analysis" and a "social acceptance scale," were given, followed by sociographic charting of group structures and by pupil case studies. After three weeks of experimental teaching, end-tests showed changes in group attitudes ranging from 1.8 to .4, with tes probably not sensitive enough to record the learnings that did occur. Less debatable results came from the participation of college students school and college teachers, in relating group structure to classroom attitudes and behaviors.

GROUP STRUCTURE, ATTITUDES AND CHANGES

VIII. OHIO STATE'S CONTRIBUTIONS

Ohio State University, large, cosmopolitan, democratic, has long been known for its stress on "doing something about" undemocratic intergroup practices. Entering the College Study late, its catch-as-catch can research and action contributions are already being spread widely in the profession. In the main, these projects are phases of a continuous program development.

One Ohio State contribution, distributed last June to all our colleges, was a 40 page booklet on HOW TO MAKE A RESOURCE UNIT. Another bulletin, issued later, dealt with PROBLEMS IN INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION. Both represent, via graduate seminars, the application of an original theory of resource unit construction.

A RESOURCE UNIT

Project 2 was a series of studies of children's literature. An initial work unit on selection of books for children led, in turn, to the idea that realistic fiction should be "an exploration of culture," rather than a stereotyping of people. At this point, each of the 89 class members, all prospective elementary teachers, made an intensive study of five books to see how minority peoples were treated. Further work units involved the telling of stories to children, including radio story-telling, from which was developed a schedule of stories for the university's 1946-7 broadcasts. All of these activities widened student cultural horizons.

> TRENTON STUDENTS SAY
> "..if the recent intergroup tests did nothing more than to stir up a boiling surge of opinion, they were very successful."
> State College Signal, 9-1-'45

For years the Bureau of Educational Research has issued reading lists. In preparing, Project 3, a special bibliography on prejudice, "a coherent selection of highly suggestive, usable material for teachers, group workers, ministers, counselors, citizens..and the much neglected, intelligent general reader," our colleges were given a big assist. Sections on "people say--" i.e., about Negroes, Jews, etc., are chuck full of information. "What we can do--" (city, school, church, citizen) shows a dearth of practical thinking, a valid criticism of current writings.

RACE PREJUDICE: THINGS SOME PEOPLE SAY, DO, AND CAN DO!

Another bulletin, Project 4, immediately useful to our experimental colleges, was THE USE OF MOTION PICTURES AND RECORDINGS IN INTERCULTURAL E UCATION. "In general," Edgar Dale writes, "it is difficult to find excellent films. I doubt if there is any area in which more good can be done..through use of pictures and recordings." To this, we can only add our affirmation.

> WHY GROUP PREJUDICE
> What is it, how does it arise, and, for the $64 question, can it ever be controlled? ANNALS, entire issue, 245 p., March'46

What can loosely be called Project 5 consisted of the use by our college of tests constructed by Dr. Louis Raths, a highly valued consultant on several of our programs. For example, "The Wishing Well," "Culture Conflict Index," and the "Social Sensitivity Ballot." We intend no basic criticism of these new-type instruments when we say that, judging from college reports, they should be fitted, if possible, more closely to intergroup problems in school-community living.

Project 6, the University School study, will be published shortly as a jointly financed College of Education and College Study booklet.

A UNIVERSITY SCHOOL CHARTS ITS COURSE IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Faculty and students state a positive philosophy of action in intergroup relations, one principle being that the person showing prejudice, rather than the one acted against, must be made to feel the weight of group disapproval. The booklet is filled with anecdotal accounts of group study and action in and about the school.

IX. PITT U PLANS A GRADUATE COURSE

Neither Pittsburg, nor its University School of Education, are at all strangers to ethnic conflicts. Focus through years of high-water tides in mass immigration, group-to-group and person-to-person adjustments come natural in the teachings of university staff members, especially in the general education curriculum.

Somewhere around the board, someone should begin to experiment with a graduate course in intergroup relations that centered on the teacher's professional role. Pitt U, fortunately, elected to work on this problem, and secured, forthwith, the cooperation of the Board of Education and city schools.

An advisory committee was organized, scholarships awarded, from funds provided by the American Service Institute and the National Conference of Christians and Jews, to 28 graduate students, all teachers, counselors, or school administrators.

DEVELOPING A PROFESSIONAL COURSE OF STUDY IN TERMS OF TEACHER ROLE AND NEEDS

In the informal workshop room, atop Pitt's towering "Cathedral of Learning," the group met to plan its course. To actual "on the job" experience was brought a philosophy of what schools should be and do, in a considered effort to determine teacher needs. Large study units, an inviting bibliography, were lined up, augmented by the services during the semester of ten or more consultant-specialists.

At this writing, the course is undergoing its second "shape up" trial, with refinements many and varied. The best thing to publish just now is, we believe, the unit outline.

Study Units in Intergroup Education

I. Teacher Needs in Group Education
II. We, The People--Make Up, Origins, Heritages
III. The Basic Structure of Group Life
IV. Underlying Dynamics of Social Change
V. The Process of Child Socialization
VI. School Roles in Intergroup Education
VII. Educating Teachers for Leadership

X. MAJOR STUDIES AT WAYNE U

"Rough but generous, violent but compassionate, self seeking yet contrite and critical--that," says Wayne U's college committee chairman, "is Detroit!" Midland metropolis of 2½ millions; Detroit is well known for its creeds and colors, in-moving, out-going, restless peoples.

Open freely to all students, ever expanding its service functions, Wayne University managed only by tour de force to limit its intergroup studies to five major projects.

Project 1, a study in directed student teaching, involved in all 79 majors in elementary education. Day by day, these students in training to be teachers recorded the flow and flavor of many classrooms--incidents related to race, religion, nationality cultures, class-typed behaviors; what took place, was said and done. And then, in regular meetings with their supervisors, they tried to figure out the score--what small children in mixed groupings are really like, what action was, and should have been taken. Moreover, at times, they taught the group, managing it in the interests of all its members. Data suggest many learnings--the inevitable starts, stops, and mood-swings of beginning teachers.

LOGS TELL A DAY-BY-DAY STORY, WHAT HAPPENED, WAS SAID, DONE

COSTS OF SUBORDINATION
a searching analysis, Dean Ernest O. Melby, Intercultural Education News, February 1946.

In the 100-hour community agency program, Wayne has pioneered in providing in-group service experience for first and second year college students. Using 8 pairs of two students each, one as leader, the other recorder, a plan was made to make this work more productive of the values implicit in it. Logs were kept and a "group observation form" developed, checked by test, revised, etc. While appraisal has been difficult, the committee feels that students saw more clearly "things without faces"--group action processes, structures, leader roles, etc. The experiment is being continued.

THE TRAVELING WORKSHOP
Detroit Public Schools, in cooperation with the Bureau for Intercultural Education, have held six Saturday A.M. "workshops" in as many city schools.

Project 3, an extracurricular study, comprised work done by the student Committee on Intergroup Relations. On a campus with over 100 social groupings, a live "C.I.R." can find much to do--exhibits, films, forums, and the like. Of special interest is an old Wayne institution, the annual Winter Mart carnival, in which this year 48 groups took part, including nationality, racial and religious organizations. To have fun, to join in and mix up, is good social education.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES PLANS AND SERVICES

Study No. 4, a cooperative venture in the arts, brought together eight departments as different as Art Ed and Industiral Ed, Home Making and the Children's Museum, Speech and Health, Music and Literature, all having a common bond in expressive, creative living. What do, and can, these related areas contribute to social learning, to the reduction of tension, approved outlets for aggression? On this idea ten faculty members and an unknown number of students did a heap of thinking, the chief product of which will be a most original 50 page booklet, with perhaps a score of photos and line drawings showing intergroup events and relations.

In Project 5, five required theory courses sought to make improvements in their offerings. In part, this took the form of self appraisal, each instructor studying his work for its implications for group living; in part, it resulted in the introduction of new materials, for instance current fiction, and of new procedures. In an overall evaluation, students indicated, so far as they could, the influences shaping their insights and attitudes.

XI. WEST VIRGINIA'S RESEARCHES

It is, a country-man might say, "a fur piece" between several of our eight colleges, but not so from Marshall, with which we began, to West Virginia State, with which we close. In making this trip, usually from the first named to the second, I have found just time enough to get the proper hunger-set to enjoy one (another one) of President John W. Davis' famous dinners!

State College, a leading school for Negroes, has three distinctions--the fewest number of projects, the most clean-cut and, with no exact comparison intended, among the best executed.

ATTITUDES, EXPERIENCES AND THEIR IMPLICATIONS

Project 1, a study of race awareness in children, sought to determine the meaning of "race" to Negro young people as expressed in their attitudes toward themselves and to whites, findings to be used in teacher training courses. After some review of the literature, three sample communities were selected, contacts made and anecdotal records collected from large numbers of children. On analysis, these materials gave evidence of fairly common feelings of isolation from white people, with emotional tones ranging from dislike to acute frustration. Next step was to give a projective test, an adaptation of the Ohio State "Wishing Well," to these children. In general, tabular data confirmed the findings already stated. Other tests have led the committee to study types of Negro child contacts and experiences with white persons. At present, committee findings are being inspected for curricular uses.

Project 2, the education of teachers for effective participation in community life, was in a sense a total college enterprise. Where were graduates now teaching? Of the 296 on whom data were secured, much was gleaned on their communities, their life and job. About half the number questionnaired said there had been "change toward improved relations" with whites, others saw the situation as static or worsening. Aside from teacher associations, relatively few reported membership in interracial groupings. Job needs, the struggle against segregation, better schools--were among the primary concerns, all of which, while not news to the college, carried implications for curricular change.

WE NEED YOUR HELP

W. Va. State will continue, we hope, to work with us, but we need in our sample one or more Negro schools in the deep South. Can you help us out?

STUDENT BACKGROUNDS AND LIFE EXPERIENCE

Another significant line of inquiry followed by this same committee was a questionnaire study of the backgrounds and experiences of students preparing for teaching. Home communities were strikingly different--industrial, farming, resort, mining. Hometowns were rated as "satisfactory" places to live yet choice was for a bigger city. Over half would invest $5000 a year, if they had it to spend, on a community recreational center. Only a few read the newspaper daily or listened to broadcasts. One fourth felt democracy meant complete individual freedom and two fifths, cooperative problem solving.

Of the fifty college staff members and others invited to rate a series of "competencies" that education should develop in students, 86.5 per cent gave first rank order to "respect for personality," next highest to "community mindedness." Asked to rank a series of general college aims, 82 per cent gave first position to "educating for effective community participation."

TO AN EVER YOUNG, ALWAYS BELOVED COLLEGE PROF

Our greetings. We quote: "your undertaking looks good..You'd arrived at it about the same time without me, but I can't help my feeling that I did give a push!"

...Herbert A. Miller
Black Mt. College, N. C.

AN AUDIOVISUAL AIDS PROJECT AND SERVICE

Project 3, a study in audiovisual aids of use in intergroup education, consisted first of making a list of materials available to Negro schools and colleges--films, slides exhibits, recordings, photo reproductions, etc. Next, a survey was made to determine the extent and nature of their current use. About two thirds of all secondary schools in the state returned replies, of which four fifths showed no use of audiovisual materials. At the opposite extreme, a number of schools said, in effect, that they used all such aids obtainable. A final activity was an attempt to evaluate the worth of various educational films by use of rating groups.

XII. WE INVITE YOUR REACTIONS

Hurried writing, brief pointed writing, is bound to show limitations. For any injustice done a college, for any error of fact or implication, the present writer assume full responsibility. In the many project-group reports in our files, the reporting is done with a becoming modesty for our limited data, our rough methods, our simple beginnings, our feeling of a team at work on something of importance. Yet, in spite of these shortcomings, we believe the efforts made are worth the serious thought of serious students.

NOW is the time when your suggestions can be used to shape the oncoming program. What is good about this work? What is no good, or doubtful, and why? What would you personally, like to see us try to do? We invite you to join the team, to play ball with us. What are your serious reactions?

FIRST ANNUAL WORKSHOP

on

Problems In Intergroup Relations in Teacher Education

★
★ ★
★

By Staff and Consultants
of
COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

at
Wayne University, Detroit
June 24 to August 2

Co-sponsored by the Council on Cooperation of the American Council on Education and College of Education, Wayne University

THE COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

WHAT WE KNOW FEEL, AND DO?

What do we know as educators about the problems of race, creed, national origins and social class, as these problems affect child growth and well-being, school and community life? What do we care? How skilled are we, as teachers of teachers, in providing our students with experiences related to these problems, with opportunities to study them and to move toward their solution?

EIGHT COLLEGES TACKLE THE JOB

Somewhere, an experiment along these lines was needed, a test run by a group of teacher educating institutions, as representative as possible of all teacher training institutions. A year ago, eight widely separated, very different, colleges and universities tackled this job, each seeking in its own way the improvement of its own educational program.

Our 1945 Colleges

Marshall College	Ohio State University
Milwaukee State	Pittsburg University
New Jersey State	Wayne University
New York State	West Virginia State

And so, for a year, we have been at work—exploring prejudices, deepening understandings, activating cooperation. We have made community surveys, charted classroom "attraction-repulsion" patterns, revised college courses, taught units on intergroup relations in public schools, tested out films, democratized student activities, worked with social agencies, organized community action, met with church and lay groups.

FIRST ANNUAL WORKSHOP

OUR LEARNINGS

We have learned much in the College Study, much of use as we expand it for '46-'47-'48. We have learned the kinds of issues and situations schools and communities face in race relations, in creedal viewpoints, culture conflicts and class-level behaviors. We have learned, too, some things that work to reduce intergroup hostilities, that lead to good will and united action.

COLLEGE WORKSHOP JUNE 24 - AUGUST 2

It would be shortsighted not to make these learnings the basis of an informal workshop. To the above learnings, we shall, to be sure, add the problems brought in by participants, and then tackle the lot by the best methods the group can devise.

WHO CAN ATTEND COSTS, CREDITS

We will want a small workshop, a group numbering about forty, so that around-the-table thinking is really possible. Preference will be given, in order, to staff members in our 1946 group of colleges, other college staff members, state department officials, school administrators and teachers, social agency workers, and church and lay leaders.

For either one or two representatives from each college in the 1946 Study, we have $50 scholarships. These will be granted to other applicants if not used by these colleges. The workshop will carry six hours of graduate credit at a tuition cost of about $41. If no credit is wanted, one will have to figure only on living costs, in all about $150 for the six weeks.

WORKSHOP STAFF

Our staff has been selected with care, not only for its teaching skill and general knowledge, but because each member is doing practical work in the intergroup field. Fulltime staff members are Miss Bertha Lawrence, New Jersey State College, Trenton; Dr. Grace Woodson, West Virginia State College, near Charleston; and Dr. Lloyd A. Cook, director of the College Study. Part-time staff will include several local specialists in intergroup relations, and outside consultants will be brought in as needed.

DETROIT AS LABORATORY

Detroit can be a most exciting place in which to live and to study intergroup relations. It has, apparently, "got everything—the mostest, worstest, bestest." Public schools abound in every sort of intergroup situation, and building "unity within diversity" is of vital concern. Areas change color, or creeds, or national origins, with a speed that is at times astounding, presenting all manner of social adjustment problems. Everywhere there is an interest in equalizing educational opportunities, in harmonizing conflicting values.

REGISTER NOW

With workshop enrollment limited, we want to urge that you register now, with all details completed by May 15. Please send for a special registration blank. Address:

Lloyd A. Cook, Director
College Intergroup Workshop
Wayne University, Detroit

COUNCIL ON COOPERATION IN TEACHERS EDUCATION
COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS
LLOYD ALLEN COOK, DIRECTOR
WAYNE UNIVERSITY
DETROIT 1, MICHIGAN

INTERRACIAL NOTES

R. B. Eleazer May 7, 1946

****

JAPANESE RELOCATION PROGRAM NEARS ITS END

Discriminatory Laws Still Await Repeal

RECEIVED
MAY 8 1946
Southern Regional Council

Dillon S. Myer, Director War Relocation Authority in Resettlement Bulletin

The War Relocation Authority is to be liquidated by June 30, 1946. Nine of the ten Relocation Centers were closed by November 30, 1945, and all the evacuee residents of those centers have resettled in their home states or elsewhere in the United States and Hawaii.

Only half of the evacuated people, approximately 55,000, have returned to California and to the evacuated portions of Arizona, Washington and Oregon. This means that a comparable number have explored a country new to them east of the military area from which they were excluded. All but 8,000 of these chose one of nine Rocky Mountain, Mid-west or East Coast states as their destination. These states are, in order of their popularity: Illinois, Colorado, Utah, Ohio, Idaho, Michigan, New York, New Jersey, and Minnesota. These figures do not take into account approximately 5,000 persons who, after relocating eastward, have requested assistance from War Relocation Authority for return to their home states since the lifting of the exclusion orders in January, 1945.

The vast majority of the evacuated people have adapted themselves satisfactorily to living again in normal American communities. A gratifying number have had unusually fine opportunities and experiences which might never have come their way if they had not been evacuated.

WRA, through its field offices, has been occupied with helping the resettlers solve their housing, employment, property and welfare problems. It has made an effort to prepare communities for new residents of Japanese descent. It is particularly in this phase of the relocation program that the church groups and other friendly and interested organizations have made an invaluable contribution. They have willingly helped individual evacuees and their families to feel at home in towns and cities strange to them. Church people have generally been the resettlers' first new friends, and in many ways have helped them reestablish themselves.

The Committee on Resettlement of Japanese Americans of the Home Missions Council has shown a very courageous and tireless spirit in this work. We appreciate the active, wholehearted support and practical assistance the Committee and other church and public spirited groups have given to the relocation program.

There are two important problems related to evacuation, but beyond the scope of WRA, which demand the attention of the American public. The first is the need for providing a means of compensation for real and personal property losses directly resulting from evacuation. At the present time, the only recourse an evacuee has is to persuade a Congressman to introduce into Congress a private claims bill. This is an uncertain and time-consuming procedure. If we admit-and I think all fairminded Americans will--that there is ample justification for such compensation, then a less cumbersome claims procedure should be worked out, specifically for evacuees, which will assure them prompt compensation for substantial claims.

(over)

Secondly, our naturalization laws, as they now stand, make it impossible for some aliens who are permitted to reside permanently in this country to obtain citizenship status. These special restrictions are based on racial origin and are directed against practically all Asiatics and peoples of the Pacific Islands. During the war, our naturalization laws were broadened to include Chinese under the quota system, but there are still some 185,000 persons resident in the United States and Hawaii who are not eligible to become naturalized citizens. Many of them have been in this country twenty years or more, are married to citizens and have citizen children, many of whom have fought with the United States Army during the war.

The racial discrimination in our naturalization laws is reflected in state legislation, particularly on the West Coast. Restrictions in the Alien Land Laws are aimed at "aliens ineligible for citizenship". Aliens in this status may not own land in some states, may not obtain some types of licenses or be eligible for certain welfare and social services. Yet generally speaking, these same aliens are law-abiding residents of the country and intend to reside here permanently. Our restrictive state legislation precludes the possibility of their having the equal economic opportunity which is their right as legal residents of this country. Legislation based on racial origin is inconsistent with our democratic principles as expressed in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. A further broadening of our immigration laws to include the Asiatic peoples on a quota basis, as was done in the case of the Chinese, would remove the last racial restrictions from these laws, and would contribute substantially to our avowed interest in establishing better international relations.

These two problems need the same kind of serious study and constructive effort from church groups as that given to the relocation program. During the fight to restore the civil rights of the people of Japanese descent in this country the ugly forces of racism and intolerance loudly proclaimed their undemocratic prejudices. Against relocation they fought a losing battle, but they have not been destroyed. We must continue to combat the forces of racial discrimination wherever they appear if we expect to achieve the true meaning of democracy and international harmony.

- 0 -

Department of General Church School Work
810 Broadway, Nashville (2), Tenn.
Division of the Local Church
General Board of Education of the Methodist Church

Vol. II, No. 3, May 1946
Colleges, Schools, Agencies

Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Wayne University, Detroit 1

THE COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN

RECEIVED
JUN 3 1946
Southern Regional Council

*
***
****
****

The College Study in Intergroup Relations
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education

WHAT THIS ISSUE IS ABOUT

1. Last Call for the Workshop
2. First Selection of 1946 Colleges
3. A Project Director's Role
4. Concrete Cases, An Analysis
5. The Viewpoint We Like Best
6. Organizing A College Program
7. Study Technics and Devices
8. Group Management Tactics
9. Recent Staff Activities

I. LAST CALL FOR THE WORKSHOP, JUNE 24-AUGUST 2

In the April Bulletin, we announced a rather special kind of workshop on intergroup relations, one dealing with the problems we have found this year in working with a number of colleges and schools. We set a top enrollment of 40 for this workshop, thus keeping it small, and had hoped to limit it pretty much to representatives of our 1945-46 Colleges, plus other college teachers.

While college teachers will still be given preference in granting our scholarships, we are now opening the workshop to school heads, high school teachers, agency officials, and others. We still want to keep the workshop small, to make it a meaningful experience, and the time to register is getting very short. If graduate credit is wanted (6 hours), tuition will cost about $41; otherwise there is no tuition charge. We are trying to get our group housed in a nearby residential hotel, at a cost of about $75. Figuring food at $2 per day, the total expense of the six weeks period would be about $191.00.

IF YOU ARE A GRADUATE STUDENT, YOU CAN ENROLL

For teacher educating institutions that want to develop work in intergroup education, we can think of no better preparation than the workshop. For a teacher who has a personal interest in these school and community problems, we have a great deal to offer. For a school head wanting to check over the total school program, or a representative of a mayor's committee or council on democracy seeking better insight on community conditions and cooperation with the schools, we will have grist for his mill.

In the above group, we would include especially officials of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the association making the financial grant to the American Council on Education by which the College Study operates. To our cooperating colleges, to those who may want to join with us another year, we particularly address this last call.

THE FIRST FORTY!

> IN TIMES LIKE THESE
>
> If democracy is to survive, it is the task of men of thought, as well as men of action, to put aside pride and prejudice; and with courage and devotion, and above all with humility, to find the truth and teach the truth that shall keep men free.
>
> ...Franklin D. Roosevelt

II. FIRST SELECTION OF 1946 COLLEGES

At an executive committee meeting of the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education, Chicago, May 3, the first choices of colleges for 1946 were made. Our committee was deeply pleased to know that all our 1945 Colleges, the original experimental group, were applying for another year. Each of these schools, working in its own way on its own concerns, has done a notable job, as indicated in the April Bulletin. After a discussion of concrete proposals for 1946, these institutions were voted in, two to have limited service as requested, due to staff shortages and expanded enrollments. The honor roll reads as follows:

OLD COLLEGES VOTED IN --WITH A HEARTY THANKS

College or University	President or Dean	Chairman Intergroup Committee
Marshall College, Huntington, W. Va.	John D. Williams	Lyell Douthat
New Jersey State, Trenton, N. J.	Roscoe L. West	Bertha Lawrence
New York State College, Albany	John M. Sayles	Margaret Hayes
Ohio State University, Columbus	Ross Mooney	Edgar Dale
University of Pittsburg, Pittsburg	S. P. Franklin	W. W. D. Sones
State Teachers College, Milwaukee	Frank E. Baker	Herman Weil
W. Virginia State College, Institute	John W. Davis	Grace Woodson
Wayne University, Detroit	W. L. Lessenger	Harold Soderquist

At this same meeting, the executive committee went over briefly forty odd now applications, many of which were not completed in sufficient detail for board action. Four of these applications were appraised and approved, pending in one case the final formulation of the projects, activities, studies, etc., on which the college wants to work. It is a great pleasure to welcome these schools into our growing family!

FOUR NEW COLLEGES ARE ACCEPTED, MORE AT A LATER MEETING

College or University	President or Dean	Chairman Intergroup Committee
Colorado State College, Greeley	George W. Frazier	Earle U. Rugg
Springfield College, Mass.	Paul M. Limbert	Alvin Zander
State Teachers College, Eau Claire, Wisconsin	W. R. Davies	John Snyder
University of Denver, Denver	Ben Cherrington	Arthur K. Loomis

Our budget for the year, and for each year in a three year period, is about twice that of last spring, so that we can service 15 to 20 colleges. We are at work now assisting colleges in completing their application, visiting campuses, helping in whatever way we can to get ready for a big fall program.

Here a word should be said about the sample we are seeking. What we are after is a sample that will be as representative as possible of the nation at large. We must find first, obviously, institutions "in a state of readiness" for intergroup education. Next, we must have colleges in the areas of America's great racial, creedal, cultural, economic and rural-urban differences. Thirdly, would come the several types of teacher educating institutions recognized in the U. S. Office of Education Educational Directory, Part III. This would include the kind of control--private, state, muncipal, or denominational, size and makeup of student body, white or Negro. And in all of this, we must be very watchful of a fourth set of factors, as Dr. Ernest V. Hollis has so kindly pointed out. He suggests some institutions that "will show the very rudimentary steps" that must be taken in getting underway what can in truth be called a college program in intergroup relations. Put otherwise, we want colleges at different stages 1700 TEACHER EDUCATING INSTITUTIONS--CAN ANY 15-20 BE VERY TYPICAL?

THE COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN
Is not copyrighted. It can be quoted or cited, reproduced in whole or part. A credit line will always be appreciated.

of interest and resourcefulness. Some eager to go, to do; others, well, needing stimulation, but with a marked growth potential.

III. A PROJECT DIRECTOR'S ROLE

The story of the College Study is that of a modest effort growing big, a little candle blazing. While each day is a new day, a new chance to run, we have the making of something important in education. We have the best of sponsorship and executive direction. We have expanding financial resources. We have colleges with a will to do--to think, to study and to act. We have the support of the profession at large, a fact attested by our mail. Our only apparent limitations are our own shortcomings, our unwitting errors.

> COMMUNITY LEADERSHIP
> Second Annual Institute, Syracuse University, N. Y., July 10-24. A unique and exciting program. Address Mrs. Rhea M. Eckels, Secy.

All of this may make one a bit conscious of a project director's role. Scanning the literature at random, I find little writing that probes at all deep. The Commission on Teacher Education (Prall, Cushman) has said some things well worth saying, so have a few others. But on the whole, no one has really taken a project director apart to see what makes him tick. Maybe he is not worth such an analysis.

WHAT MAKES THIS GUY REALLY TICK

In traveling from Fargo to Austin, Trenton to Denver and San Diego, one falls heir to many situations, is viewed in many guises, is called many names. He is a "racialist," a "radical," a "communist." He is a "reformer," a "missionary." He is an academician on a binge, a junket or crusade. He is, somehow, a suspicious character, a man to be watched. Viewed with such mixed feelings, one must time and again define his role, the things he seeks to do, what he is. Unless he can win respect on this basis, he has no reason for being, no use, no function.

Offhand reflection suggests that a project director has four major roles, four basic parts to play in activating intergroup education. He is first of all, a peddler of information, a trafficer in fact and theory, strange partners who, on union, are supposed to give birth to truth. He is, next, a student, one who studies things, how they work. He is a "technic man," who is presumed to have the "know how" of study making, high level and low. And then, lest I be flayed before admitting to the classic crime, a project director must be something of a philosopher. Deep down in his tool kit, he must have a point of view, a set of values, a conviction on which he will stand. If this is not so, if he has no care for people, all people, then he is indeed a dangerous man. For in his final role, the most significant of all, he is a manager of the group process. Unless this process is managed in the interest of ALL its members then we have the devil to pay, a Machiavelli on the make!

FOUR ROLES MAYBE MORE

> SOCIAL FOUNDATIONS OF EDUCATION, the current February issue of the Review of Educational Research, NEA, Wash., $1. Notable is the chapter on the community and the school, less so the writeup on intercultural education. Good buy.

Years at this game have convinced me that these four roles, while always present in project work, are never the same. Their content varies with time and place. Moreover, one's success or failure does not depend on how well he knows each part he is to play, a simple truth I have been overly long in learning. It depends on how well he can put them all together in a single, decisive action. Put otherwise, it is only for analysis that these roles are separated. In minerun life situations, they meet and mingle beyond ready identification. Thus one's success depends on some factor outside of role content. It depends on insight, imagination, judgment.

FOR INSIGHT, I KNOW NO READY SUBSTITUTE

I am inclined to think that this tale has several morals. For example, can anyone ever be found who, as project director, college committee chairman or the like, can play all four roles equally well? Or put more sharply, are not these roles per so in conflict? To illustrate, as a student one is taught NOT to identify with people, not to become a part of the process under study. Truth to tell, science is largely just that--a way of separating one's self from the data, a ritual for "objectifying" observation, leaving a trail that others can follow. In group management, by contrast, one must entered into the process. One must project himself into the roles of others, sweat through their worries and concerns, their insecuries, mood swings, status struggles. He must, somehow, absorb these manifold behaviors, absorb and retain them. He must release tensions and unite people.

> RELIGION AND EDUCATION
> An old, old issue restudied. Cf. N.E.A.'s current research Bulletin, Feb. '46, Wash., 25¢. Church and state relations--history, federal aid, current school practice state law and control.

Or again to take another angle, one can as a group leader, be mighty smart yet mighty dumb. He may know theory, know technic, know values, know strategy, each separately, a thing apart. But what he doesn't know is how, at some critical moment, to put them all together into a single successful operation. The right gesture, the right word, the right timing, the right chance to take, all of this is an art not taught in books. Maybe that is why one fails so often, the inescapable necessity of meshing his several roles.

ONE CAN KNOW ALL THE STROKES BUT NOT SWIM

IV. CONCRETE CASES, AN ANALYSIS

We did not write about the project director simply to suggest him as a fitting M.A. or Ph.D. thesis, though this is feasible. If he is, as we suspect, nursemaid to a complex process, a sharp "fix" on his roles should split this process open for further study. Before pursuing these four big leads, let us explore the habitat of the worker in intergroup education, the terrain where he is to be found.

> WELCOME TO FRANCIS BROWN
> Newly appointed American Council representative to our College Study, succeeding Howard Wilson.

What are the nation's schools really like from a group relations standpoint? What goes there, what makes? For a year, such data have been gathered by our schools and colleges. In their fullness, these cases are illuminating. To reduce them to a few lines, does damage to their meaning and reality, yet this is the best we can do. The sample we use is not selected as "good" or "bad", but simply as minerun. These things happened, and the like is repeated every day.

FROM 1000 CASES TAKE ANY TWENTY

Case 1. Substitute teacher, nursery school, mixed urban area.

> Mary Lou, white, hurried over to two little colored newcomers. She took off their hats, took them by the hand and led them to the sandbin. Other children paid no attention. They went on with whatever they were doing... Little children have no prejudices.

Case 2. Student teacher, kindergarten, middle class white area.

> Asked to select a poem from some book at home, or a poem "like mother tells you," one little girl recited Stevenson's famous lines:
>
> Little Indian, Sioux or Crow
> Little frosty Esquimo
> Little Turk or Japanee
> Oh, don't you wish that you were me!

Case 3. Playground supervisor, Grade 2A, mixed low-class urban area.

> Asked to choose sides, I have noticed that Polish and Italian children are last chosen. To change this, I asked leader from these groups to do the choosing. I found that they did not select their own kind until all native stock children were chosen. Why is this?

Case 4. Teacher, 3A, factory town, average residential area.

Our grade decorated the room for Christmas. A Jewish boy painted God, Virgin Mary and the Christ Child. Two Gentile girls, looking at the painting, ask Sammy if the Jews really did kill Christ. I took the period to explain this bit of history.

Case 5. Teacher, 3B, small midwestern town, native-white Protestant.

Leaving class for a moment, I found on returning that our preparation for an Easter party had stopped. Someone had said that Catholics do not celebrate Easter, or Christmas, or "any holiday, except Pope's Day." I told the children the truth of the matter.

Case 6. Principal, grade school, small eastern industrial city.

A nine year old Serbian girl told me, in tears, that she lay awake at night and cried because her playmates called her a "hunky." I feel ever so sorry for these children but we cannot encourage their participation in school activities as we would like to do. Our best parents simply wouldn't stand for it.

Case 7. Negro teacher, mixed school, white principal, large city.

On the way out, I came upon a scene that made me boil. Two little colored boys were jitterbugging in the hall, while the principal clapped his hands, with a tight little spectator group gathered about. I told the boys to stop and then told the principal just what I thought about this cheap show. His only reply was that he "liked jitterbugging," that "Negroes were so talented."

Case 8. Teacher, 4A, small farming center, native-born whites.

A child whose parents belonged to the Jehovah Witnesses, would stand and place his right hand over his heart but would not say the pledge to the flag. As sentiment against these people grew in the town, he was given the "silent cure" at school, then beaten up on the way home. While it was unfair, I wouldn't say that we did much to handle it.

Case 9. Visiting teacher, 6th grade, urban industrial area.

Several Greek-American boys formed outside of class a little club of their own. They not only kept non-Greeks from joining but acted superior at school. They won the hearty dislike of other children but this only seemed to throw them closer together.

Case 10. Homeroom teacher, 6B, mixed Jewish-Gentile urban area.

In discussing superstitions, the Number 13 came up. A Jewish boy said that was not bad luck but good luck for him. Non-Jewish classmates were surprised and asked why. I explained that, at age 13, a Jewish boy receives his Bar Mitzvak, or confirmation, passing into adulthood.

Case 11. Coach, physical education, Pacific mountain-states area.

A relocated Japanese-American boy showed up for basketball practice. The kids were all set to give him the brush off but I showed them pretty quick where I stood on that kind of stuff. We have had no trouble since, and the kids know better than to start anything.

Case 12. President. P-T A, small city, former teacher in the school.

What I am writing you about is the way these children from the West side are treated.. Have you ever been in their homes--mean, little dingy places. But that is no excuse for discriminating against them. These children have more character than many of the pampered brats who thumb their nose at them.

Case 13. Principal, high school, northern grain-growing area.

We have no serious problems here. There are no Negroes. Same for foreigners, except Swedes. A few Jews are coming in, but not many. We do have the rurals, the children brought in by bus. They cause us a little trouble since they do not mix very well with the town kids.

Case 14. Music teacher, small town, cattle grazing area.

Most of our children live here in town but many come from the cattle ranches and farms. These children are not accepted by the town pupils, though some come from well off homes. I set to work on this by organizing a "Hillbilly Band," where anyone could play, and we had members from both groups. We went on to other things--horseback rides, chuck wagon dinners, etc. What else should we try to do?

Case 15. Social studies teacher, high school, residential suburb.

Our worst intergroup problem are the fraternities and sororities, as snobbish as can be. While they are against the law, they flourish here like the green bay tree. They throw parties in a la grand college manner, exclude our most worthy students, disrupt the whole social life of the school. We do not know how to break them up; nothing seems to work. Can you help us out?

Case 16. Teacher, industrial education, small midwestern city.

When we checked up on the matter, we found that it was the Negro graduate who could not get the kind of job for which he had been trained. It was not a question of grades, or character, or recommendations. It is, we believe, a definite color bar to their employment, though employers do not admit this.

Case 17. Auditorium teacher, metropolitan city.

We cannot get our second generation children to take part in any kind of Old World folk fair or festival.. We have an even tougher problem in several mixed schools. In casting plays, white children will not take parts they feel should go to Negroes--butlers, maids, etc., but neither will Negroes. If we cast the latter in lead roles, the whites refuse to participate. What makes it still worse, is that parents on both sides have taken it up.

Case 18. Coach, language arts, small town.

Our most outstanding Senior is a Jewish boy. He has won everything there is to win in public speaking, debate, and original oration. In oration, he won the state contest, the inter-state, and will go on to the national. In all of this, he has been backed by the town. Luncheon clubs raised his expense money. He has spoken in all our churches, at P T A's and elsewhere. The school is extremely proud of him."

Case 19. Guidance worker, large urban high school.

> A gang of our boys came down the street, passing the B-- Synagogue, where a service was going on. They began to chant, in imitation of the cantor, then to toss pebbles at windows. Someone came out and asked them to leave. They might have gone on had not some Jewish boys came along. One word led to another and, pretty soon, a fight started. In an instance, the two groups were battling away, and bit by bit, the street joined in. Somebody broke it up by calling the cops.

Case 20. Principal, average size high school, heterogeneous urban area.

> We have all sorts of minority groups.. A month or so ago, with tension high and incidents happening, we brought our students together and, in this assembly, then in homerooms, we talked it over. A committee of students and faculty was appointed. They recommended a Fair Play Council. During the past month, the FPC has heard five cases, and its decisions have been accepted by all. It is, increasingly, doing preventive work, for example assembly programs.

Here, then, is the picture. We neither view with alarm nor point with pride. These little slides in a lengthy series are food for thought. What do they prove?

DIG DEEPER, THINK WELL
LEARN TO SEE MUCH MORE

Nothing, we would say, for one does not rest proof on such fragmentary data. But the cases do suggest a great deal. They suggest something like a state of chronic tension in the nation's schools, at times of overt conflict, mild as a rule, but pervasive, unhealthy and we think increasing. Some conflict is, of course, normal, much of it desirable, but the load many children carry is too great for our own peace of mind. We state this viewpoint with caution and admit of exceptions. But by and large, from the evidence at hand, the situation does not look good.

> WHO FITS THIS SHOE
>
> It is time that we awaken to our biggest danger. In practicising racism on our youngsters, we are poisoning the American future at its grass roots.
>
> ...Max Lerner

Most school heads, most teachers, most teachers of teachers, will deny the above impression. They will speak from a vantage point, their own schools, where every kid has a fair chance, where democracy works. Or else these critics, nowing much about many schools, will react to surface phenomena, not fully sensing the psychological hurts that flow along racial, creedal, socioeconomic and other "attraction-repulsion" lines. They do not know, perhaps, how easily souls are mangled, how aspirations pent up, starved out or pushed aside, cease at last to exist at all. These are forgotten, sure, but they do not disappear. They drop into a nether land where they drive behavior along strange pathways. They become the stuff of the subconscious.

From this "recco" survey, the chief conclusion we want to draw is this: the need for each of us, each worker with young people, to study his own situation.

THE NEED TO FOCUS ON GROUP DYNAMICS

While much good has come from recent analyses of group structure, an even more fruitful approach would be to focus squarely on group dynamics. Focus on the kid gangs in and about the school, street corner crowds, any less formal grouping within reach. Focus on faculty cliques, factional scraps, the gossipy chatter of the rest room. What holds these groups together? What, why and how? And in it all, what part, if any, is played by race, by creed, by socioeconomic status? Get a firm grip on your scapel and dig down!

> WORKSHOP PROBLEMS
>
> These are the kinds of situations and issues we want to deal with in our workshop, Wayne U, June 24 to August 2. Can you make it?

V. THE VIEWPOINTS WE LIKE BEST

Were the mind set sharply on the cases just cited, it would be seen that incidents are confusing, often contradictory. Life is like that. To understand the flow of events, one needs to lift his sights, to take stock of himself, to say by golly what he believes and will do. To pass a basic point of view from one mind to another is not like heaving a pigskin. If it is possible, it is very questionable, for the recipient may lack a life experience that makes the viewpoint meaningful. But it is wholly desirable, it is imperative, that anyone in intergroup work discover what he is like on the inside, what he will stand for with the blue chips down.

> ON WHITMAN AVENUE
> For an evening at the teater, if, as and when, this new play. Better than Strange Fruit or Deep Are The Roots. On housing, of all things, and its moral, Negroes are people.

Among current sociological theories of group hostility, and I have at times tried to present them all, teachers, and prospective teachers, like best of all the ideas of Myrdal and Warner. Myrdal's[1] appeal is instantaneous and very strong. What this scholarly Swedish economist seems to say about America is like this: We are a democracy but we do not, especially in racio-creedal matters, practice anything like as much as we preach, so that en masse we have a bad conscience. Now a bad conscience is an uneasy bedmate, so that one seeks to put it out of mind, in a literal sense to cleanse the soul. We throw a defense around set habit patterns (rationalize) by saying, first of all, that there is "no race problem," thus covering up the belittling behaviors, the frustrating mistreatments, that go on. The obvious need is to re-align mass practices with good-will values which, for Myrdal, means grassroot democratic action. It may mean, too, a realistic education that will prepare for that action.

MYRDAL, WARNER

Warner[2] cuts deeper and will, no doubt, as his theory unfolds, correct what may look to be some limitations. In general, he presents a "caste-class" point of view, analyzing behaviors in those terms. What the caste-class system is, or how Warner determines its nature, are still matters of conjecture. In some ways, it is like any barnyard peck order. People rate people and then look up, or look down, at them, and so the whole community becomes organized, with the non-white always in our culture the man lowest down, the man toward whom the upper caste group feels the greatest "distance." Social classes, for example upper, middle and lower, exist on either side of the casteline, though cross-line statuses, and whatever they imply for participation in a common community life, are not equal.

> DEMOCRATIC
> HUMAN RELATIONS
> 16th Yrbk, Nat. Council for the Social Studies, NEA, Wash., '46, $2.30. Sprawls and spills and is not so good in the clinches, yet gives the best account we know on intergroup education. Lively, readable, practical.

One is born into his caste and, for that matter, into his class position, but the latter can be changed a little. Individual mobility, up or down, is discussed by Warner but never with the thoroughness that its importance would seem to merit. That is because, perhaps, his focus so far has been on structure, not on dynamics. Likewise, educators would profit by a more penetrating analysis of values--what motivates peoples, what sets them in motion.

What is good about these viewpoints is that each, in its own way, shifts attention from any easy thinking about prejudice. Whatever prejudice is, it is a very inclusive concept. It is, most simply, a synonym for prejudgment, usually hostile,

---

[1] Gunnar Myrdal, The American Dilemma. 2 vol. Harper, New York, 1944. $7.50

[2] W. Lloyd Warner and Paul Lunt, Social Life Of A Modern Community. Yale Univ. Press, New Haven, 1941. $4.00. For an application to education, Who Shall Be Educated? Harper, New York, 1944. $2.50 against a whole universe of objects--ALL Mexicans, ALL Catholics, ALL college professors, etc. Prejudices of immediate concern center on a few great symbols as we have indicated--race, creed, and the like. Unlike food allergies, a groupwise prejudice is not physiological (or chemical) and inborn. It is acquired, emotional and social. It is picked up on the run, usually from people. It should be studied with a map in hand, a map and a fever chart, for it varies in intensity as well as in place.

Prejudice may be dynamic or it may lie dormant, awaiting its proper stimulus to jump out. It is, in final analysis, a response to crisis, for example a grade level "birthday party," a school election, the Junior Prom. Or, in adult life, the struggle for jobs, for houses to live in, for equal access to public services. Prejudice is a defense mechanism, a group wide effort to hold "the line" against some change, real or imagined. From topside, it is an aggressive action; likewise, from below, spears point upward, ever searching for some Achilles heel in upper-group armour. The struggle is for immediate gains, the improvement of "conditions," and for long-range objectives, the acceptance of out-group members as equals.

FOR BUSY STATEWIDE INTERCULTURAL COMMITTEES
Michigan, Leon S. Waskin, Secy, Dept. Pub. Instru., Lansing; Wisconsin, Volmer Sorenson, Secy, University of Wisconsin, Madison.

In our talks with college people, we have tried to advance a rather commonsense point of view. People are, obviously, different, incurably different, and nowhere more than in our land. Our people, whatever their creed or color, are wanting people, due chiefly to the thing-richness of our culture. No matter what one wants, the supply is, or can readily become, limited, so that life itself is struggle. While this struggle principle needs qualification, it is broadly true. To struggle, to achieve, to make something of one's self, is the heart of the American creedo. It is central in our manysided, all-pervasive "success system."

WE, THE PEOPLE

So far we have talked about no particular people, just people. Here thinking can be angled toward race, class, cultures, etc. We stereotype whole masses of people, treat them as a group apart or lower down, and then organize society, by custom and law, to keep them in their "place." Whatever this place may be, it is not beside us at a dinner table, never at our front door! What is involved here is not, in essence, sheer physical contact, or even intimacy. It is the presumption of an equality status. Such relationships, if unchecked, would cause (and indicate) the disintegration of the caste-class system.

One advantage of this point of view is its simplicity. It can be readily understood and, secondly, it will support a tremendous amount of data, from both experience and science. For instance, college students, regardless of their backgrounds, can fill in this framework to perfection from either their life or their experience, and they like to do it! Thirdly, the viewpoint will carry a sizable moral charge. For example, what do people want? Are you "people"? What do you want in life--health, wealth, sunshine, knowledge, status, success, power? Are Negroes people? Jew, Czecks, Chinese? What do they want? Are they like us, seeking similiar goals? Do they have equal chances? Why should their "ceilings" be kept so low, the normal ladder up so hard to climb? If these people ARE people, should they be treated as such?

REVIELLE FOR RADICALS
By Saul Alinsky, University Chicago Press, '46 $2.50. Don't miss it!

VI. ORGANIZING A COLLEGE PROGRAM

Here we want to veer again from the task we have set, an effort to dissect the role of any kind of director, or teacher, in the intergroup field. Colleges continue to make inquiry as to what to do, how to "get something started" in intercultural education. We do not, to be sure, know the answer, if there is any one "best way," for that is what we also are asking.

While preference will differ, it would seem to us that Step 1 might be an inquiry into school and college practices. What are the feelings, tensions, behaviors, centering about race, creed, and the like? What is happening in and about the school? This is the kind of beginning any social scientist would make in studying any sort of social problem. All that it assumes is that the behaviors in question, or enough of these behaviors, can be identified so that one can form an impression of what the situation is like. Even this assumption can be safeguarded in various ways. For instance, one can ask teachers, school heads and others, to describe behaviors centering about race, etc. Our case materials show that they know enough, and are concerned enough, to do this rather well. Other data bear out this point of view.

PLANNING COLLEGE WORK IN INTERGR. EDUCATION

DEFENSES OF PEACE
A 31-p pamphlet by the State Dept., Wash., '46, on UNESCO
U.S. Printing Office, free.

Step 2 might well involve another inquiry, a study of what is being taught in the college curriculum to prepare teachers to deal with these problems. This study should not be limited to course offerings; it should include extracurricular activities and other nonclass experiences. It could also deal at length with student backgrounds, sensitivities, and group relations skills.

Step 3 would be to ask a college faculty, after reflecting on the above data, to project a philosophy of intergroup relations. How should children treat children? What is good for kids, harmful to them, in their social relations? What, therefore, should they be taught? What kinds of training, or types of experiences, not now provided in the college program, should be given the prospective teachers of these children?

Step 4 would implement the above proposals. It might take the form of a new course on intergroup relations. Better still, from our standpoint, it would result in changes in existing courses--new emphases, new materials, new experiences, etc. Community use and extracurricular programs could be planned. Practice teaching offers an especially valuable channel for educating in intergroup relations. And so on, around the board, wherever opportunity can be found.

FOR A WIDE RANGE OF COLLEGE PROJECTS SEE OUR APRIL COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN

Most teacher educating institutions must move on a much smaller scale than this, a situation that is understandable in view of mounting enrollments. If one staff member is interested enough to try out any hunch he may have, that is a gain. If a committee can be appointed, some studies can be made, some program changes gotten under way. Assemblies can be devoted to intergroup problems. Perhaps a summer workshop, or a section of a workshop, can be planned. Students are interested, the times are critical, and some kind of start should perhaps be made.

VII. STUDY TECHNICS AND DEVICES

An important phase of a project director's work has to do with the making of field studies. Nowhere, perhaps, have we felt a greater limitation than in this phase of the job. Colleges want help, more help and better help than we have been able to provide them. Staff members are, many of them, study-minded. They will give time and thought and energy, in unbelievable large amounts, if they are convinced that a given study is worthwhile, that it will pay off in a practical way. The rub comes in making, or in finding, study forms that are at all adequate, that penetrate to realities.

SOME METHODS OF USE IN INTERGROUP EDUCATION

Likewise, how to frame a problem is a great puzzler. For example, when one makes a "community" survey, what does he survey? Judging from a collection of these studies over the years, students are poles apart on what to study, and worse still, without rhyme or reason. Surveys, purporting to deal with the same thing, are unalike in every other way. There

SOCIAL RESEARCH
By Lundberg, Longman Green & Co., New York '42, $3.50, is still an outstanding volume is no standard practice, no semi-standard practice, no semi-semi... There is not, as in comparable interest areas, well defined type forms from which to select and adapt. Community study is either completely chaotic, or else so sentimental, so ill-conceived, that its only obvious value is to get students out into the air!

WHY FOOL WITH FIELD STUDIES

There is, so far as I know, nothing strange about method, nothing to make one throw up his hands in horror or stand agast in awe. In common usage, method is simply a way of doing things, a scheme for relating means to ends. Scientific field study method refers to procedures by which data are obtained and conclusions draw. Its basic worth is that it tends to make our inferences more exact. It is work; at times, hard sweat labor. No intergroup program need be built on field data. It can, as usually true, be based on talk, on hunches, good intent, or administrative fiat.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIAL Surveys and Research. Pauline Young, Prentice-Hall, '39, 619 Pp. Not new but good.

Where program planners feel a need to know, the study process shows, in some form or other, at least eight steps.

THE STUDY-ACTION PROCESS

1. Defining the problem for study, including the kinds and amounts of data to be collected, time and place.
2. Making study forms, for example questionnaire, needs inventory, etc., pretesting and revising if necessary.
3. Working out a scoring plan, involving tally sheets, table forms, definitions, classifications, etc.
4. Selecting a sample, administering tests, making interviews, and the like, culling for defective cases.
5. Tabulating data, or analyzing student experiences, by significant variables such as ethnic grouping and sex.
6. Making final tables, drawing graphs and charts, slides, other visual aids that reveal meaningful relations.
7. Writing and publishing one or more final reports for the kinds of readers for whom the study was intended.
8. Securing a hearing for, and taking action on, the findings and recommendations for school changes.

STUDY THE GROUP, THE COMMUNITY AND THE INDIVIDUAL

Among the eight colleges at work last year, we talked at times about the kinds of field study methods for which they felt a need. In general, their interests centered around childhood groupings, the community as young people experience it, and the various kinds of ways individuals are related to groups. Each of these headings breaks up into various parts, so that all in all, as reported in previous Bulletins, thirty-seven separate study projects were undertaken. Some, it is true, did not involve much study, but mostly action in the sense of program changes; others, unfortunately perhaps, were limited to study. What we want, in general, is the type of study that leads to action, for our research is a use research, not a "pure" contribution to knowledge.

In group study, many school and college classrooms were subjected to analysis. College students, at times in their practice teaching, made two kinds of studies. Classrooms were treated, most often, as learning groups. This is an old, old educational interest and all we did was to adapt it to intergroup purposes. For example, films on race or creed or socioeconomic problems were used, or a class read fiction or drama, or heard lectures on anthropological facts. Pre- and end tests were given, or student reaction papers analyzed, or behaviors in and about the school were noted. All of this, as in our other studies, was to determine chiefly if evidence could be found to show changes in pupils, and in the college students themselves, as to their feelings and behaviors toward minority-group members, or the latter toward them. We felt, as college professors, some changes going on within ourselves.

THE TEACHING OF INTERNATIONAL AND INTERCULTURAL UNDERSTANDING IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF CALIFORNIA
An 82 page pamphlet, International Center, 68 Post St., San Francisco, Fine ethnic Biblio.

Classrooms were also treated as living groups. Here prospective teachers were given experience in observing group processes, for example the development of cooperation, mounting conflict and unrest. Some rudiments of group interviewing were taught, some roughly made group observation forms were tried out, some schemes for studying group tensions and group types (leader, isolate, clique, etc.) were started. We do not, at this writing, count any of these forms as in shape for general use. We did the best we could and hope this year to do better.

REQUESTS FOR BULLETIN II
We regret to say that our supply of this bulletin, 800 copies, has been exhausted.

In respect to the community, much of our effort was to provide a kind of participant observer experience for our students. Trips were made to ethnic areas, agencies dealing with intergroup problems took students as part-time workers, and different kinds of interviewing, for example the "informant technic," were tried out. In addition, some cholleges made surveys, all having value but none value enough to be viewed as a contribution to study methods. Fortunately, students learn, or seem to learn, no matter how they are projected into "life." We need to know, however, what they learn and the best ways of learning.

Due to education's great concern for the individual, a good "readiness" exists for any sort of psychological study. Among our colleges, individuals were studied most often as collective aggregates, that is as statistical units. This is the usual type of social survey or school survey, a head count, with averages, ranges, etc. Such studies have uses in intergroup education, for example if we want to know in a diet survey how many children choose how many foods in given combinations. What we must not neglect, however, is the type of study that treats children as persons, that is with group sensitivities, roles and statuses. The first type study would count the number of running noses, unwashed hands, etc., the second type the rating these things draw within age-level groupings. Importance of the latter kind of inquiry has been well attested by recent sociological research, chiefly on factory workers. Change the group and you change individual behaviors; ignore the group, you may find that your best efforts come to little!

INDIVIDUALS AS AGGREGATES AND AS SOCIAL PERSONS HAVING GROUP ROLES, STATUSES

The above idea implies a conception of the school around which a number of studies might be planted. From this standpoint, the school is a pattern of interacting groups, each structured along some dominant axis (age, sex, race, interest, power, etc.). Some groups are formal, some informal, and some--the most basic of all--are small sub-rosa gossipy cliques. The school in action is the action of its interlocking groups. Or put otherwise, set this social structure in motion and one has a social process, or innumerable processes, of group action--a classroom activity, an athletic contest, a faculty vote, a P-T A assembly, a factional fight. It is through these group behaviors, the struggle of unlike interests, that the school gets its basic unity. Group norms alone make the big events of the day intelligible. These norms get built into stick and stone, (hence into habit patterns), so that the very walls of some schools seem to shout to youngsters "be fair and square," or conversely, "steal, steal, steal." Given time, norms harden into traditions which come, at last, to comprise the control that rules the school.

THE GROUP APPROACH TO EDUCATION

TO COUNTS AND WALLER
We return for the best conceptions of the school as a group world, a power struggle, George Counts, School and Society in Chicago, and Willard Waller, Sociology of Teaching.

If, now, this sketch will do, how does one go about changing the school? How can one create an atmosophere of good will, a moral tradition that will, in turn, capture incoming individuals and educate them? Since groups are the prime ports of entry for new ideas, it seems obvious that we should work through these channels. Find the real leaders, the natural leaders of staff and student body, and help them to lead in democratic ways.

FIND GROUP LEADERS LEAD THROUGH THEM

Could problems be solved by formula, we would not need to make studies. The school, like any other structure, resists change. Thus a study of leadership may well have two foci: who are the leaders and how do they lead, and what restraints are imposed on them, what are the barriers to communication?

One study technic that we can highly recommend is sociographic charting. As the work implies, this is a way of locating the kinds of group members and subgroups found in every school. It centers on the "attractions-repulsions" that divide or unite people, and our favorite approach is via a short questionnaire. This is presented as an inquiry into extracurricular activities, but in it are the two standard sociographic questions. "Who are your best friends here in our group? Name one, two or more, or none, as you like." And conversely, the pupil is asked to list persons he does not like, would not want to run around with, "one, two or more, or none, as you like." It is important that these be open-end questions, not forcing any set answer, and that no attention be centered on them. Names are tallied on a data sheet, individual and group sociograms made, as illustrated in a recent study.[1]

SOCIOGRAPHIC CHARTING

READY AND ARARIN'
Prexy sent your letter on.
When can you come to help us plan this?
..Earle Rugg, Chairman
Colorado State at Greeley

What makes sociographic charting of special value is that it can be used in tensional situations where entre might be denied to one, or if sanctioned, be unwise. No questions are asked about any minority-group member. Children do not know the uses to which their responses are put, nor are sociograms talked over with them. The technic is for the purpose of determining group relations, group roles, subgroupings, etc., and the extent to which these matters run along racial, creedal or other lines. Once these facts are known, further studies can be made, or corrective action started.

VIII. GROUP MANAGEMENT TACTICS

One may elect in intergroup education to waive any study and proceed at once with action. Here the project director, the committee chairman, the classroom or other experimenter, faces his most critical test. Persons who do best at this do not seem to write about their methods. Either the democratic management of group action is a complex thing, hard to analyze, or experts here do not really know what they do, or else to reveal technics decreases their effectiveness. At any rate, we are slow to get ahead, to improve. No college committee chairman feels that we have made any notable contribution at this point.

THOSE WHO CAN, DO AND----------

We have elected to use our limited space to show, from our case materials, what group management means. The situation selected is a tough one, tougher by far than most teachers will ever face. The case will illustrate a number of principles underlying this kind of teaching and will raise questions as to its feasible for use in mass-jammed schools. It is not offered as "the way" to conduct class work; in truth, average teachers cannot do it. We question, however, if any college teacher training program can plumb the bottom of intergroup education and not, somewhere, provide such experiences for their students.

TEACHING GROUP UNITY IN FEELING AND ACTION

A LESSON IN GROUP MANAGEMENT

Big John, age 10, swept the paper houses, the green grass and flower gardens, aside. He kicked over the land site, knocked down a chair in passing, and stalked out of the room. Hang it all, he was mad, madder than he had been since whipping the punk whose place he had taken as gang leader...

---

[1]See Lloyd Allen Cook, "An Experimental Sociographic Study of A Stratified Tenth Grade Class," American Sociological Review, 10, April 1945, 250-61. For better data and a psychological emphasis, Helen Jennings, Leadership and Isolation, Longmans, Green, 1943.

Little John, his twin, had warned against the new teacher. "Dumb." Johnny had said, "dumb like a fox!" The warning had gone unheeded. Anyhow, it had not been the teacher, little Miss Silky Pants, who had put the hex on him. No, it had been the gang, his gang, in the workroom now, playing. Well, it was Saturday morning, a nice Saturday morning. He would do... heck, what could a guy do without his gang! Big John fell to thinking about his trouble. It had all happened so easy like, starting two weeks ago...

On that first day, with all the kids bug-eyed with curiosity, the new teacher had given the usual spiel--"good living," "group unity," "learn by doing." And then when she (fine arts major) had said, "how's about a trip to the museum to see things," Big John had given the nod. Ok, the trip was in. Nobody voted against it.

On the next day, the big project had started. Would the class like to experiment with some "art materials," say to build some pretty little houses? Again ok, why not; so alone or in pairs, the Third Street Rockets, and the others, went at it. Houses were made out of paper mache and, for a while, everyone kept busy. Then the fun had started--wisecracking, throwing things, running about, shoving, tripping guys.

To all of this, Miss Silky Pants seemed indifferent, at least too much indifferent. She cautioned against getting hurt. She put things away and locked up cabinets. She helped those still at work and didn't seem worried. She was, as Little John The Brain said, "too damn calm" about the business.

At the next meeting, the group surveyed its houses. Someone asked the teacher what they were to do with them. Big John said "do whatever you want. Kick 'em up, give 'em away, take 'em out. They're yours, ain't they?" All the teacher had done was to repeat the question. "When people build houses, what DO they do with them?" "Put 'em on the land," some punk had answered. This, once again, started gang action.

Mostly, the gang scrounged for things, though Silky Pants had warned against stealing. In no time, they found an old sandbin and sand, then a table to put it on, so a stretch of good earth came soon to await settlement. Each kid chose a landsite as he pleased, facing his house any way he liked. Big John got around to it late and so he found that the best spots were taken. With one sweep of his hand, he knocked over three or four homes, taking the whole south end of the area and putting his house in its center.

Faced with such viciousness, one might guess as to the teacher's emotions, for no one likes to see a bully in action. Instead of pinning the toughie's ears back, thus uniting him with the group against her, she must have felt the situation needed some thinking over. To prevent the tedium vitae that strikes a group during a period of inaction, she had the class landscape residential holdings.

We had helped to plan this project so that the teacher came in to talk it over. After some casting about, we got an idea that seemed worth trying. Inspecting the work the next day, I praised the homes, gardens, etc. But hang it all, "something was lacking." The town did not look right, not at all like the one in which we lived. What was the matter? We got pretty quick the type of answer we had expected, "Ain't regular like, no streets," a boy had said.

Here we had planned to reach in and take hold of the group process. Thus the children did not slap down their streets, for the old peck order would have been reestablished. Instead, a "study" was made of the city street plan. Big John himself set this up by steps he never did understand and appointed himself, forthwith, the leader of a block survey. Wanting to make this trap really solid before it was sprung, the teacher helped the class make a checkerboard street plan, drawn to scale and cut out of cardboard. When this grid was placed over the land site, a main thorofare ran squarely through the center of Big John's baronical estate!

At first, John fussed and fumed, aimlessly. Then he wanted to fight a class member, claiming he had been framed. But here the class stood tight against him. He had "made" the plan, now he was "squealing." In all of this, the teacher made no accusations, offered no explanation. She simply stood by to steady the group in what it had to do. It was here that John vented his ill feeling by knocking over the houses.

Once on the outside, with his gang aligned with the teacher, he did not know what to do. These youngsters were his boon companions, his street crowd. Within a day or so, an overture came. John sent "word" that he would consider "a deal," if the teacher was willing. She replied through the spokesman that her responsibility was limited, that the class would have to consider the matter. John's reentry into the group was effected with face saving for him, but nonetheless, on a novel basis for this little fascist, majority rule and fair play for all group members!

Cases of this sort excite strong pro and con reactions. They lead to involved ends-means discussions. Is this kind of teaching good, from a moral standpoint, and should it be taught to teachers? The defense rests its case as a rule on three points. Does the opposition know what such boys are really like? If so, in what other way (thumbs down on force or its threat) could they be captured long enough to give education a chance to work? 2) Is not this kind of group management all pervasive in our everyday group life? Is it honestly undemocratic? 3)In and of itself, is it not a pretty good preparation for social living, providing the process itself is explained somewhere along the way to participants in it?

WITH WHICH WE AGREE

As I read the reports of last year's projects, I gained the impression that our experience would fit into the picture the Council is attempting to get.

...Wayne A. R. Leys, Dean
Roosevelt College, Chicago

Group tactics per se, like any tool, are neither good nor bad, simply used by variously motivated people. For this reason, we repeat, a group leader in whom one can have faith must have a set of values, a philosophy, a religion, that shows a deep-lying belief in people, the worth and dignity of all peoples. If agreement here is full and complete, tactical differences are not irreconcilable.

FOR YOUR BOOKSHELF ON LEADERSHIP

Bowen, Yankee From Olympus
Browne, See What I Mean
Dos Passos, Number One
Langley, Lion in Streets
Steinbeck, In Dubious Battle

IV. STAFF ACTIVITIES

It is a pleasure to announce the appointment of Paul H. Hatt, Ohio State University, as associate director. Dr. Hatt hails from Vancouver. He was naturalized in '41, took his M.A. and Ph.D. at the University of Washington, and has held a number of teaching posts and directoral positions. He has studied and written extensively on intergroup problems, and likes especially to put ideas under test. He will be on the job at our workshop and then, in August, visiting colleges.

Welcome in, Paul. A guy like you will like our people!

17-Intercultural Educ.

RECEIVED
DEC 11 1946
Southern Regional Council

How Can The American Teacher Help To Foster Intercultural Relations?

by

NATHAN DRUT

HOW CAN THE AMERICAN TEACHER HELP TO FOSTER INTERCULTURAL RELATIONS?

By NATHAN DRUT

The following essay was recently awarded first prize, a $1,000.00 Victory Bond, in Hunter College's Diamond Jubilee Contest. This contest, national in scope, attracted thousands of entries from teachers in colleges, universities, high schools and elementary schools all over the United States.

By winning first prize, Mr. Drut not only received a $1,000.00 bond for himself, but also won for his school, P. S. 121, an additional $1,000.00 award.

The American teacher can help greatly to foster intercultural relations, especially if she is blessed with a progressive supervisor. It is axiomatic that a school reflects the personality of its chief administrator, be it principal, assistant-to-principal, or teacher in charge. Fortunately for the teachers of Public School 121, Manhattan, Fate has given them two remarkable principals in the persons of Dr. Michael Levine and Mr. William H. Levy. The former inaugurated the program of intercultural education which will be described in the following pages. When Dr. Levine left to become a principal of a Junior High School, his successor, Mr. Levy, continued the program already established as a basic school policy, and even explored new channels in that direction. Under the inspirational guidance of these two men, the teachers responded enthusiastically to the experiment. What has been done here can be done in any school.

Now for a brief description of the school. P. S. 121, is located on 103rd Street between 2nd and 3rd Avenue, the heart of East Harlem. While a great many racial and national groups are represented in this neighborhood, Negroes, Puerto Ricans, and Italians are predominant in this underprivileged area, and represents about 95% of the total population. Of this group approximately 50% are Negroes, 30% are Puerto Ricans, and 20% are Italians.

At the time Dr. Levine launched the program, marked racial antagonism existed both in and out of the school. Each group resented the other two groups. There were frequent instances of clashes outside of school. Occasionally, Negroes would exact tribute from Puerto Ricans and Italians. Parents frequently complained that their children were being molested. As a matter of fact, many parents themselves were intolerant.

The program to improve intergroup relationships is a two-fold one, embracing instruction and extra-curricular activities on the one hand, and parent and community relations on the other. These phases are carried on concurrently. The finest program in the world, however, will fail if the members of the teaching staff are not willing to cooperate. The success of a school intercultural program, therefore, is contingent upon the full cooperation of the members of the faculty. This has been achieved to a notable degree in P. S. 121, which is particularly fortunate in having a group of teachers whose actions and attitudes reflect that friendliness and cooperation which capture the willing participation of the children and their parents. Most members of the faculty have taken a course in conversational Spanish, thus enabling them to understand the Puerto Rican element. They have volunteered to take on extra-curricular activities, designed to bolster the pupils' morale. They observed a film on intercultural relations at the Union Settlement, and discussed ways of bettering their own program.

The instructional phase of the program is not a direct teaching of tolerance. It consists rather of curriculum and practices which lend themselves to the understanding and appreciation of the contributions of the major school groups to the common culture, to the participation of all groups in the cooperative solution of problems, and to the general enjoyment of the school program, with a consequent improvement of social relationships.

Units on Pan-Americanism and Negro Culture bring about mutual understanding and respect. The Pan-Americanism theme serves as a unifying curricular force. Once a year as an appropriate culmination of this type of activity, a colorful Fiesta is held in the school auditorium. This brings together children, parents, and community leaders.

Departmentalization of subjects like music and health education give the children greater opportunity to sing and play together. A Good Neighbor Chorus, organized and trained by Mrs. Hilliard of the Hilliard Music School, unites white and Negro children in a harmony which is both musical and social. Assembly music and athletic contests as culminating activities are quite effective in breaking down racial barriers. Racial differences are cast aside during a spirited game of softball in the 101st Street Park Playground, or in a ping pong tournament on the auditorium platform. Broadjumping and Indian hand wrestling for the boys, and double Dutch contests for the girls are feature of the assembly programs. Negroes, Puerto Ricans, and Italians play together amicably in informal games of punch ball and box ball on the school play street during the lunch hour.

Varied and interesting assembly programs also include concerts arranged through the Manhattan School of Music, talks by Negro librarians of the 135 Street branch of the Public Library and by neighborhood religious leaders, an intercultural program by the students of the Elizabeth Irwin High School and a performance by the Benjamin Franklin High School Glee Club. Also, as a regular feature of these assembly programs, there are culminations of classroom units of activity (such as the Pan-American Fiesta), athletic tournaments previously mentioned, contributions of various clubs of our own school, and original plays on intercultural themes. One of these plays was broadcast over station W. N. Y. C., on January 18, 1944.

The over-all school program stresses aptitudes, abilities, and creative talents of the children. Included in the extra-curricular activities are an art club, a glee club, a dance club, a gym club, a volley ball club, a basketball club, a shuffleboard club, a press club, a ping pong club, and a Youth-Builders Club.

The Youth-Builders Club in particular has a profound influence upon the school spirit. This fact was strikingly illustrated at a special assembly held in the auditorium on January 29, 1946. On that occasion the Youth-Builders conducted a panel discussion on the topic, "How Can We Become Better Neighbors." Children, parents, teachers, and specially invited guests listened with keen and attentive interest to the remarks made by the members of the Youth-Builders Club. Among those organizations represented in the audience were the Union Settlement, the Bureau for Intercultural Education, the Play Schools Association, and the Board of Health. Dr. Curtis, Superintendent of the school district, spoke briefly on the educational significance of this type of discussion. The moderator at the panel discussion was a principal from another school. At the conclusion of the program all present unanimously agreed that the experiment had been a success. It was generally acknowledged that the pupils who spoke on the subject of tolerance and brotherhood had revealed a depth of understanding and a sense of social responsibility hitherto believed non-existent in young children.

The community aspect of the problem of intercultural relations has not been neglected. The Parent-Teachers Association of P. S. 121, long dormant has been revitalized by frequent get-togethers other than meetings, such as teas, dances, and other "socials." At these affairs, the officers and members of the organization, including Negroes, Puerto Ricans, and Italians, mingle freely. Parents are invited to attend all school assemblies. They are urged to visit the school whenever they wish, to bring their problems and complaints to teachers and supervisors. It is, in short, a perpetual Open-School Week. As a direct result of the genuine friendliness of the faculty, the parents, as well as the children, now feel as if they are a part of the school. Realizing that they are always welcome, the parents are eager to cooperate.

Thru the efforts of a Parents-Teachers committee, more than a hundred children are sent each year to the Union Settlement summer camp for two-week's periods. Here, again, the parents eagerly participate in raising funds for the worthy enterprise. Our school camp committee was able to place many children in other camps, such as those run by the Casita Maria, the Herald Tribune Fresh Air Fund, the Salvation Army, The Masons, and the Boys' Club.

The school is represented in the East Harlem Council for Community Planning and the East Harlem League for Unity. While it works with a number of agencies, the most helpful is the Union Settlement. Children of all races and creeds from this school are enrolled in the Settlement's after school clubs. Parent-Teachers Association teas are sometimes held at the Settlement. Speakers from the Settlement frequently address our assemblies.

Since the intercultural program described in the previous paragraphs has been established as a basic school policy at P. S. 121, there has been a real improvement in racial relationships here. The various racial groups do not resent each other as they used to. Ancient animosities are gradually disappearing. The process is far from complete, but a step in the right direction has been taken. The classroom teacher receives less and less complaints of molestation. Pupils reflect the happier atmosphere in school by their actions. Parents work together harmoniously in the Parent-Teachers Association.

Moreover the friendly spirit engendered in the school is being carried over in the outside play of the children. Fights and brawls are less common occurrences now than in the past. Here is proof positive that the American teacher can help to foster intercultural relations. What has been done at P. S. 121, can be done in any school.

Supplementary Sheet No.5

File SS-5
E-4753

MATERIALS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

The College Study in Intergroup Relations*
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education
Wayne University, 5272 Second Ave.,
Detroit 1, Michigan

RECEIVED
DEC 30 1946
Southern Regional Council

Among the several ways in which the COLLEGE STUDY seeks to further "study and action" programs in intergroup relations, as these ways in which "people treat people" enter into teacher education, is the provision of reliable reading materials, for example bibliographies, study forms, and the like. This is the function of our MATERIALS LABORATORY. In general, materials deal with five large areas of human relations: race, creed, immigrant cultures, rural-urban differences, and social class (or income) levels.

In ordering items listed below, please observe the following conditions:

1. No charge is made for materials sent to colleges participating in the COLLEGE STUDY. To other colleges, public schools, citizen groups, etc., we are glad to send materials at their mailing cost to us.
2. Please order by file number. Enclose stamps or check in your letter. Be sure to indicate clearly your mailing address.
3. Where our stocks permit, we will send the number of copies requested; in general, however, our function is to supply samples which can then be adapted and duplicated.
4. In using any study form devised by our staff, or by our participating colleges, please credit the source in any study form you may make or in publication. In case of copyright, permission to use or quote must be secured from the author.
5. The COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN, a monthly mimeographed report on college programs, plans, etc., along with special SUPPLEMENTARY SHEETS, are sent free on request to professional persons. Ask, if you wish, that your name be put on our mailing list.

I. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

1. Bird, Charles, Studies of Attitudes: A Selected Bibliography. Mimeographed, 38 pages. Examination of 1600 technical articles. 349 studies cited and cross indexed. Order from Charles Bird, Department of Psychology, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. File # B-1. No price given.
2. Intergroup Relations: A General Bibliography. Issued as College Study Bulletin No.3, June 1946. Current fiction, sociological studies, child acculturation, school programs, community and group study technics, etc. Mimeographed, 14 pp. File # B-2, 10¢.
3. Rogers, Carl R., Bibliography on Nondirective Therapy. Mimeographed, 70 titles, 4 pages. Order from Carl R. Rogers, Department of Psychology, University of Chicago (no price given) or from the COLLEGE STUDY. File # B-3, 5¢

---

*Financed for a four year period by a grant to the American Council on Education by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

II. COLLEGE STUDY PROGRESS REPORTS

1. The Study of Intergroup Relations. 24th Yearbook, American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1945, pp. 5-51. Papers by Ethel Alpenfels, Allison Davis, R. J. Havighurst, Frank Baker, Julius Warren, Lloyd Cook. 46 pages. Reprints exhausted; order Yearbook from Chas. W. Hunt, Secretary, American Association of Teachers Colleges, State Teachers College, Oneonta, New York. $1.00.
2. Cook, Lloyd A., "Teaching Teachers Cooperative Action," 25th Yearbook, American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1946, 97-108. Report on the first year of work in the College Study. Reprint. File # PR-2, 10¢. Limited stock, one copy only.
3. Cook, Lloyd A., "The College Study in Intergroup Relations: A Progress Report," Educational Record, October 1946. Reprints available on publication. About 15 pages. File # PR-3, 10¢

III. COMMUNITY STUDIES, PROBLEMS, PRACTICES

1. Humphrey, Norman D., "Housing and Household Practices of Detroit Mexicans," Social Forces, 24, May 1946, 433-37. Concrete findings, quotes, interpretations. Reprint, 5 pages. File # CS-1, 10¢.

IV. GUIDANCE AND GROUP MANAGEMENT TECHNICS

1. Cook, Lloyd A., "An Experimental Sociographic Study of A Stratified Tenth Grade Class," American Sociological Review, 10, April 1945, 250-61. Two year experimental attempt to change interpersonal relations in a high school class, pre- and end-test sociograms. Reprint, 12 pages. File # GM-1, 25¢. One copy only.
2. "Teaching as Group Management: Two Cases." Concrete cases, no interpretation. Mimeographed, 3 pages. File # GM-3, 5¢

V. SCHOOL PROBLEMS, VIEWPOINTS, PRACTICES

1. Improving Intergroup Relations in School and Community Life. Committee on In-Service Education, North Central Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges, August 1946. 48 page pamphlet; ethnic groups, cases, technics. Written in part from materials obtained from the COLLEGE STUDY. Order from the COLLEGE STUDY or from George W. Rosenlof, Secretary, North Central Association, Lincoln, Neb. Single copy, 25¢; 10 or more, 15¢. File # SP-1. Limited to 25.

VI. STUDY FORMS

ACTIVITY AND EXPERIENCE INVENTORIES

1. General Activity Inventory. Developed by William Reitz, Wayne University, Detroit. 200 activities college students reported as having engaged in during week of inquiry. Mimeographed, 5 pages. File SF-1, 5¢.
2. Experiences With White People. By Grace Woodson, West Virginia State College, Institute, W. Va. Check list for Negro students. 48 items. File # SF-2, 3¢.

ATTITUDE SCALES, OPINIONNAIRES

1. Race Attitudes and Contacts. 4-page composite inquiry. Developed by College Study as a way of initiating a course on intergroup relations. File SF-7, 5¢
2. College Study Attitude Scales
   - Attitudes Toward Jews (short form), 1 page, mimeo. File SF-10, 3¢.
   - Attitudes Toward Jews (incident type), 4 p., mimeo. File SF-11, 3¢.

Attitudes Toward Negroes (short form), 1 page, mimeo. File SF-15, 3¢.
Attitudes Toward Negroes (incident), 4 p., mimeo. File SF-16, 3¢.

3. Experiences With Negroes: Community Contacts. By Robert N. Ford, University of Alabama, University, Ala. Nature and extent of Negro participation in community life as respondents have seen it. 2 pages, 12 tested items, five response alternatives, total scale values 12 to 60. To be used only by permission of author. File # SF-20, 3¢.
4. Experiences With Negroes: Personal Contacts. By Robert N. Ford. Same type scale as above. 14 items, scale value 14 to 70. File # SF-21, 3¢.
   Note: For use of, and data on, these scales, see Ford's article in Amer. Sociol. Rev., 6, February 1941, 9-23.
5. The Culture Conflict Index. By Louis Raths, Ohio State University, Columbus. 18 kinds of intergroup attitudinal situations answered in terms of "how many people in your room" (or group) would react by liking, disliking. Middle to upper elementary grades. Separate answer sheet. 6 pages. File # SF-30, 5¢.

COMMUNITY STUDY FORMS

1. Social Participation Scale, 1937. By F. Stuart Chapin, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. Husband and wife participation in community organizations, tentative norms. Copyrighted. File # SF-3ϕ, 5¢.
2. Community Resources Inventory. By Lloyd A. Cook. 3-page inventory for collecting essential information on agencies of use in a school program. Sample forms only. File # SF-35, 3¢.
3. Community Satisfaction Scale. By Vernon Davies, Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. 20 scaled statements. File SF-38, 3¢.
4. Minnesota Home Status Index. By Alice M. Leahy, University of Minnesota, Minneapoli A scale for measuring the urban home environment of children. Copyrighted. Order from author.
5. Occupational Rating Scale. By C. C. North and Paul Hatt, Ohio State University, Columbus. Six ratings for perhaps 100 common occupations. File # SF-43, 3¢.
6. Ethnic Group Problems and Adjustments Survey. College Study form, developed for use by college students in surveying Mexican adjustments to community life. Adaptable to any ethnic group. File # SF-48, 5¢.

COURSE EVALUATION DEVICES

1. Evaluation of Introductory Social Science. College Study form. Course rating, achievement of course objectives, teacher personality. Typescript, 2 pages. File # SF-54, 3¢.
2. Evaluation of A School and Community Workshop. College Study form. Comparative rating, course objectives, improvement. Typescript, 2 pages. File # SF-55, 3¢.

GROUP OBSERVATION FORMS

1. Observing A Youth Group. College Study form. Typescript, 3 pages. For use in sensitizing observer to group structure, processes and member roles. SF-52, 3¢.

INDIVIDUAL CASE STUDY GUIDES

1. Anecdotal Record Sheet. By Bertha Lawrence, New Jersey State College, Trenton, N. J. Pupil's relation to his group, school progress. File SF-62, 5¢.
2. Life History Data Sheet. College Study form. Guide questions for interviewing based on John Dollard, "The Life History in Community Studies," Amer. Soc. Rev., 1938, 724-37. File SF-63, 3¢.

INFORMATIONAL TESTS

1. American Ethnic Peoples. College Study form. A 100-item factual test, multiple choice type. Items indicative of general knowledge, college level. SF-~~55~~ 68, 10¢.

PERSONALITY INVENTORIES, GENERAL

1. The Personal Audit. By C. R. Adams and W. A. Lepley, Psych-Educational Clinic, Penn. State College, State College, Pa. Percentile score profile in nine areas of personality makeup and adjustments. 11 printed pages, copyrighted. Obtain from Science Research Associates, 228 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago. File # SF-70.
2. The Personality Inventory. By Robt. G. Bernreuter. 5 pages, copyrighted. Obtain from Stanford University Press, Stanford Univ., Cal. File #SF-71.
3. Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory. By S. R. Hathaway and J. C. McKinley. 15 pages, copyrighted. Obtain from Univ. Minn. Press. File # SF-72.
4. Minnesota Survey of Opinions (Short Form). By E. A. Rundquist and R. F. Sletto. 31 tested items. Copyrighted. Obtain from authors. File # SF-73.

PROBLEM CHECK LISTS

1. Problem Check List. By Ross L. Mooney, Ohio State University, Columbus. Over 300 items classified in 11 categories, such as health, social relations, school progress, etc., regarded as problems by respondents. Separate forms for grade school, high school, and college levels. Copyrighted. Obtain from Bureau for Educational Research, Ohio State University. File #SF-80.
2. The Wishing Well. By Louis Raths. 160 items in eight categories. More projective than Mooney Problems Check List. Elementary grades only. Obtain from Bureau for Educational Research, Ohio State University. File #SF-81.

PROJECTIVE TESTS

1. What Would You Do? An Interviewing Device. By Arnold Meier. Series of simple line drawings, showing child entering country, traveling to subject's home town, entering school, etc. Child (small doll, paper cutout, etc.) a little Negro boy, Jewish girl, and the like. Test used as interviewing device. Obtain from Detroit Citizenship Education Study, 436 Merrick St. File # SF-90.
2. Rosenzweig P-F Study. By Saul Rosenzweig, Western State Psychiatric Hospital, Pittsburgh, Pa. Four printed pages, four drawings to a page, with subject asked to write in response to personally frustrating situations. Copyrighted. Order from author. File # SF-91.
3. The "Faces" Test. By staff, Research Center for Group Dynamics, Kurt Lewin, director, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass. Panel of 16 tested photo faces about which "guess who" questions are asked. Half the panel can be Jewish or other out-group members. Also put on slides. Now in experimental stage and available only on a cooperative use and reporting basis. File # SF-92.
4. Social Insight Test. College Study form. Series of 18 original charcoal drawings (printed) depicting common intergroup social situations, for example seating on a bus, a basketball game, corner street scene. Subjects asked to write a short story about each situation, telling what has happened, how it came about, what will happen next. Test given to a college class, for example, via individual sets of photos, plus mimeographed answer sheets. Available, if at all, for experimental use only. File # SF-93.

SCHOOL INQUIRY FORMS

1. The School Inventory. By Hugh M. Bell. Series of 70 or more questions about the school, reactions to teachers, etc. Copyrighted. Order from Stanford University Press. File # SF-102.
2. Moral Judgment Scale. College Study form. 32 scaled items indicative of classroom morale. One page, mimeographed. File # SF-105, 3¢. "Upper grades."
3. How Do You Feel About Education for Better Human Relations? By staff, Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York. Check-type test, wide range of items. Order from Bureau. File # SF-108.
4. School Inventory of Intergroup Problems. College Study form. 8-page questionnaire inquiry on school viewpoints and practices to be filled in by school administrator or staff member in conference with administrator. Mimeographed. File # SF-112.

SOCIOGRAPHIC TESTS

1. Ohio Social Acceptance Scale. Form G-3, Intermediate Grades. By Louis Raths, in cooperation with Euclid Elementary Teachers. A social distance test with six categories of personal friendliness. Printed, one page. Order from author, or from College Study. File # SF-116, 3¢.
2. Who's Who In My Group? Form G-4-B. Intermediate Grades. By Louis Raths, in cooperation with Euclid Elementary Teachers. 18 "guess who" type items indicative of pupil roles and prestige ratings. Order from author or from College Study. File # SF-117.
3. Our Home Room. By Committee Seven, Summer Workshop, Wayne University, 1946. A questionnaire blank presumably on home room activities but containing two sociographic questions, i.e. "best friends" and persons in group "whom you don't like, wouldn't want to run around with." One page, mimeographed. File # SF-121, 3¢.

MISCELLANEOUS STUDY FORMS

1. Role of Humor in Intergroup Relations. By Lulu Johnson, West Virginia State College, Institute, W. Va. Six page instrument for collecting stories told about Negroes, whites, very rich, etc., plus reactions of reporter to the incident or story. File # SF-130, 5¢.

PUBLICATIONS ON INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

1946

SRC - P. 14

A single order to the Bureau brings your choice of recommended materials from many groups.

BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
1697 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

Publications on Intercultural Education

Selected and annotated by
WILLIAM VAN TIL
Director of Learning Materials

The Bureau for Intercultural Education serves you as America's central clearing house for the distribution of intercultural publications. These are selected from among hundreds of possibilities. This 1946 list includes books, pamphlets, bibliographies, and articles published directly by the Bureau and in co-operation with other educators. It also includes pamphlets, bibliographies, and articles published by other educational organizations and community agencies. Space limitations temporarily prevent us from stocking non-Bureau books; see bibliography sections for the recommendations of specialists.

In Democratic Human Relations, Wilbur Murra writes, "Even though the . . . publications originated with a large number of different publishers, they can all be ordered inexpensively from the Bureau—an arrangement of very great convenience for all teachers who use this list." One single order to the Bureau brings you what you need.

The first section, For School and Community Educators, lists available materials primarily useful to teachers, administrators, group workers, and community workers.

The second section, For Students, consists of publications especially useful for high school students, unless the materials are specifically annotated as suitable for younger age groups. The reader should especially note that many of these same publications were written for and are useful to adults.

INDEX

FOR SCHOOL AND COMMUNITY EDUCATORS Page

Intercultural Background 3
What Some School Systems Are Doing 4
Promising Practices in Intercultural Education 6
Specialized Techniques and Approaches 6
Teacher Education 7
Evaluation 8
General Intercultural Bibliographies 9
Prejudice and Its Causes 9
Related Social-Economic Problems 10
Race and Racial Relationships (Bibliographies) 10
Religion and Religious Relationships (Bibliographies) 11
Nationality and Ethnic Relationships (Bibliographies) 11

FOR STUDENTS

Prejudice 12
Plays on Prejudice 13
Related Social-Economic Problems 13
Race and Racial Relationships 14
Religion and Religious Relationships 15
Nationality and Ethnic Relationships 16

BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
1697 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

H. H. GILES
Director

WILLIAM H. KILPATRICK
Chairman of Board

For Community and School Educators

INTERCULTURAL BACKGROUND

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION IN AMERICAN SCHOOLS

COLE, STEWART G., AND VICKERY, WILLIAM E.

An introduction to the problem of the responsibility of the schools for improved relations with members of cultural groups in America. Proposed objectives and methods are set forth and suggestions made for activities and experiences in intercultural education, most of which could be carried on within the usual school curricular framework. A major insight is the advocacy of cultural democracy. In the Bureau for Intercultural Education Publications Series. Harper & Bros., 1943. 215 pp. (paper) $1.00, (cloth) $2.00. Professional discounts on quantity orders. (a1)

AGENCIES IN THE FIELD OF INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

GILES, H. H.

Brief resume of the nature and activities of groups fostering intercultural education. Lists thirty selected educational organizations with addresses. By the Director of the Bureau for Intercultural Education for the Bureau Work in Progress pamphlet series. 1945. 8 pp. 10c. (a2)

CHARTING INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION, 1945-55

STAFF OF STANFORD WORKSHOP

Reports the thinking of the Summer 1945 Workshop on Intercultural Education led by Stewart G. Cole, I. James Quillen, and Mildred J. Wiese. Includes analysis of major intercultural issues and suggests effective practices for elementary and secondary schools, administrators, and community leaders. Bibliography. Stanford University Press, 1946. 58 pp. 50c. (a3)

THE CURRICULUM AS AN INTEGRATING FORCE FOR ETHNIC VARIATIONS

YEISER, IDABELLE

"The basic studies of the curriculum could and should be the medium for intercultural education." Suggestions for intercultural education through science and mathematics, social studies, literature and language arts, health and physical education, arts and crafts. Graduate School of Education, Harvard University, 1944. 17 pp. 25c. (a4)

DEMOCRATIC COMMUNICATION AND EDUCATION

KILPATRICK, WILLIAM HEARD

A discussion of building ideas and principles against intergroup injustice and of the role of education in lessening group tensions. An application of philosophy to a current problem by the distinguished philosopher of education and chairman of the Bureau Board. Bureau reprint from Journal of the National Association of Deans of Women, January, 1945. 7 pp. 10c. (a5)

THE FOURTH R

GILES, H. H.

Questions and principles to be considered by junior high school educators in bettering relationships—the fourth educational R. This article emphasizes the importance of democracy in administration. Bureau reprint from The Bulletin of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, April, 1945. 4 pp. 5c. (a6)

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION NEWS

EDITED BY VAN TIL, WILLIAM, AND FISH, ELEANOR

Official Bulletin of the Bureau published quarterly during the school year. Sent regularly to individuals upon request. 8 pp. Single copy of current issue, free. In quantity, 5c each. (a7)

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL—LABORATORY FOR DEMOCRACY

GILES, H. H.

A brief summary of how some school systems are initiating intercultural programs. Twelve steps taken by a school system are described. Bureau reprint from The Woman's Press, October, 1945. 4 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 5c each. (a8)

RACE AND CULTURAL RELATIONS

BENEDICT, RUTH, AND ELLIS, MILDRED

A description of the problem by an anthropologist followed by suggested teaching activities by a classroom specialist. Useful for the teacher who utilizes resource units and who desires an analysis of the problem for her own professional competency. The National Council for the Social Studies and the National Association of Secondary-School Principals, 1942. 60 pp. Single copy, 30c. In quantity of 100 or more, 20c each. (a9)

THE SOCIAL STUDIES LOOK BEYOND THE WAR

Includes curricular recommendations on intercultural education in the social studies. A statement of postwar policy adopted officially by the National Council for the Social Studies. An important curricular document. Advisory Commission, National Council for the Social Studies, Washington D. C., 1944. 40 pp. 10c. (a10)

WE, THE CHILDREN—Boys and Girls Discuss Intercultural Understanding

The frank comments of students from early elementary grades to college age on racial, religious, and ethnic relationships. This pamphlet on what young Americans are thinking rouses adult concern. Department of Supervision and Curriculum Development, N.E.A., and Bureau for Intercultural Education. 32 pp. Single copy, 25c. In quantity of 100 or more, 17c each. (a11)

WHAT IS INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION? COLE, STEWART G.

Intercultural education seen as the nurturing of personalities in democratic directions. What happens to the personalities of dominant and minority group members when discrimination takes place. By the co-author of Intercultural Education in American Schools. Bureau reprint from The American Teacher, April, 1944. 4 pp. 5c. (a12)

WHAT SOME SCHOOL SYSTEMS ARE DOING

MINORITY PROBLEMS IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS: A Study of Administrative Policies and Practices in Seven School Systems

BRAMELD, THEODORE

A survey of intercultural education in seven educational Middletowns. The author has studied what helps and hinders the development of good human relations through schools, and he states findings frankly. This "must" book helps educators and citizens to take stock of policies and practices in their own schools. In the Bureau for Intercultural Education Publications Series. Harper & Bros., 1946. 262 pp. (paper) $1.50, (cloth) $2.50. Professional discounts on quantity orders. (a13)

BETTER TEACHING, February, 1946, Issue

CINCINNATI PUBLIC SCHOOLS

An entire issue on intercultural education, with special emphasis on social-economic relationships. "Making a Bigot," "Prejudices Are Learned," "Some Teaching Procedures," and other articles supply direct guidance to teachers. 12 pp. Single copy, 7c. In quantity. 5c each. (a14)

BUILDING UNITY WITHIN A COMMUNITY EDMAN, MARION

Description of Detroit's problem and the approach of the city schools to it. A clear exposition of face-to-face contacts, appreciation of cultures, the analysis of factual data, and the ethical approach as techniques of teaching. By the Supervisor of Language Education in the Detroit Public Schools, now acting as a school consultant for the Bureau for Intercultural Education. Bureau reprint from Elementary English Review, May, 1944. 7 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 5c each. (a15)

INTERCULTURAL POLICY FOR THE DETROIT PUBLIC SCHOOLS

DETROIT BOARD OF EDUCATION

A statement of policy to govern contacts of the public schools with all persons whom they serve or employ, adopted by unanimous vote of the Board of Education, January 9, 1945. Bureau mimeo. 2 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 3c each. (a16)

PROGRESS REPORT ON INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION IN THE DETROIT PUBLIC SCHOOLS, 1944-1945

ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE ON INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

A forthright summary of the achievements and unfinished business of an administrative committee of a large city system. A realistic description written about progress in one city and made available to aid other teachers and administrators who are also working on problems. Detroit Public Schools. Bureau mimeo. 1945. 8 pp. 8c. (a17)

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION NEWS

EDITED BY VAN TIL, WILLIAM, AND FISH, ELEANOR

Six issues of the Bureau for Intercultural Education quarterly containing articles on the work of school systems. Also articles, book reviews, activity reports, notes and news. November, 1944 through February, 1946. 30c for packet of six. (a18)

LIVING TOGETHER WITH MUTUAL RESPECT

PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Suggestions evolved by Philadelphia teachers on what teachers have done and can do interculturally. The suggestions are summarized under such headings as "We can work on tensions in the community itself," "We can provide backgrounds for friendly relations." Based on a conference. Mimeo. 1945. 35 pp. 15c. (a19)

THE NEWSLET, Summer-Autumn, 1944, Issue

STATE OF NEW JERSEY GOOD WILL COMMISSION

This special issue describes intercultural work of New Jersey schools through contributions by the State Commissioner of Education, Newark's Director of Elementary Education, and others. 24 pp. 10c. (a20)

RACE RELATIONS IN THE SOUTH HIGHTOWER, ESTELLE

A unit on Negro life developed in Grade XII, Lee County High School, Auburn, Alabama. Suggested activities, list of supplementary materials, and study guide. Bureau of Publications, Teachers College, 1942. 18 pp. 25c. (a21)

SCHOOLS ARE ORGANIZING TO IMPROVE HUMAN RELATIONS

BIDDICK, MILDRED

Representatives of seven school systems meet together to discuss how programs have developed in different communities, the problem approach, leadership, and functions in intercultural education. Report of a conference sponsored by the Bureau. Bureau Work in Progress pamphlet series, 1945. 12 pp. 10c. (a22)

PROMISING PRACTICES

DEMOCRATIC HUMAN RELATIONS: Promising Practices in Intergroup and Intercultural Education in the Social Studies
TABA, HILDA, AND VAN TIL, WILLIAM (EDITORS)
The Sixteenth Yearbook of the National Council for the Social Studies on promising practices now current. Reported and appraised are a variety of units, social studies courses, school activities, community projects, and guidance experiences. Important for intercultural teaching today. Includes comprehensive list of teaching aids. National Council for the Social Studies, Washington, D. C., 1945. 366 pp. (paper) $2.00, (cloth) $2.30. (a23)

CONTROLLING GROUP PREJUDICE ALLPORT, GORDON W. (EDITOR)
In this issue of the Annals, specialists write of developments in education, industry and business, government, housing, private agencies, communication and entertainment, and research. The American Academy of Political and Social Science, March, 1946. 240 pp. $2.00. (a24)

EDUCATION FOR CULTURAL UNITY MYERS, N. D. (EDITOR)
Intergroup problems discussed by specialists; reports of school and community intercultural programs. Includes survey of literature and teaching aids in the field. Seventeenth Yearbook, California Elementary School Principals' Association, 1945. 155 pp. $1.00. (a25)

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION THROUGH THE SOCIAL STUDIES
DETROIT PUBLIC SCHOOLS
Opportunities within the standard social studies courses of Detroit for teaching intercultural appreciations. Based upon suggestions from teachers sent to the Department of Social Studies. Represents intercultural emphasis in regular social studies curriculum, rather than through special units. Division of Instruction, Department of Social Studies, Detroit. Mimeo. 1945. 49 pp. 50c. (a26)

SOME GOOD PRACTICES IN INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
Realistic accounts of actual schoolroom problems and practices in intercultural education. Illustrative of a range of approaches possible. By qualified specialists. Bureau reprint from Religious Education, March-April, 1944. 11 pp. 10c. (a27)

SPECIALIZED TECHNIQUES AND APPROACHES

THEY SEE FOR THEMSELVES BROWN, SPENCER
How students learn about intercultural relationships through first-hand experience in the community and through the presentation of documentary plays dealing with their findings. The author draws freely upon experiences in eleven schools which experimentally fostered documentary, fact-finding projects. Suggests procedures for the continuance and extension of such experimentation. In the Bureau for Intercultural Education Publications Series. Harper & Bros., 1945. 147 pp. (paper) $1.25, (cloth) $2.00. Professional discounts on quantity orders. (a28)

ART IN INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION DIX, LESTER
Addressed to the general educator as well as the art teacher, this article deals with the role of art education in intercultural education. By the Bureau's Administrative Associate. Reprinted from Education, February, 1946. 7 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 5c each. (a29)

CATHARSIS AND THE REDUCTION OF PREJUDICE

ALLPORT, GORDON W.

A psychologist discusses the technique of cathartic release through expressions of hostility as a preliminary step in re-education for constructive attitudes. Bureau reprint from The Journal of Social Issues, December, 1945, 8 pp. 11c. (a30)

THE EARTH: A COMMON GROUND FOR CHILDREN

SMITH, LILLIAN

Advice on guiding the child's personality growth toward maturity to avoid the distortions of prejudice. Lillian Smith, the Georgia novelist, analyzes adult fears and repressions which block many in their child guidance as to race. Reprinted from South Today, Spring-Summer, 1944. 15 pp. 10c. (a31)

GOOD WILL AMONG AMERICANS COLE, STEWART G.

A discussion of the Chanukah and Christmas seasons as effective occasions for dramatizing the meaning of democracy. Bureau reprint from Educational Method, 1942. 8 pp. 7c. (a32)

HOSTEL VACATION VAN TIL, WILLIAM

Understanding one's neighbors through youth hosteling. A proposal for an extensive program of social travel and greater school experimentation with trips. Bureau and Youth Hostels reprint from Progressive Education, April, 1945. 4 pp. 5c. (a33)

HOW CAN MAJORITY AND MINORITY GROUPS CONTRIBUTE TO DEMOCRACY? COLE, STEWART G., AND TRAGER, HELEN G.

A discussion outline consisting largely of provocative quotations about which discussion might center. Useful to discussion leaders concerned for getting groups to air their opinions. Majority-minority issues and prejudice are typical focal points. Prepared by Bureau for Democratic Discussions, the New Jersey Education Association, 1943-44. 46 pp. 15c. (a34)

TEACHER EDUCATION

EDUCATION OF TEACHERS FOR IMPROVING MAJORITY-MINORITY RELATIONSHIPS CALIVER, AMBROSE

An examination of opportunities for teachers in training to learn about racial and national minority groups. Important to the teacher educator who wishes to know what is taught in colleges and universities. Federal Security Agency, U. S. Office of Education. U. S. Government Printing Office, 1944. 64 pp. 15c. (a35)

THE MONTCLAIR CONFERENCE ON WORKSHOP PLANNING

DIX, LESTER

Workshop problems, as discussed by specialists. The report considers workshop resources, recreation, administration, evaluation, public relations, and following up participants. Invaluable for those planning workshops, for workshop leaders, and for teacher educators. By the Administrative Associate of the Bureau for Intercultural Education for the Work in Progress pamphlet series. 1945. 55 pp. 25c. (a36)

THE STUDY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS

IN TEACHER EDUCATION
COUNCIL ON COOPERATION

An introduction to a teacher education project in intercultural education and addresses by specialists: Ethel Alpenfels on race, Allison Davis and Robert J. Havighurst on acculturation and status, Frank Baker on teaching and evaluation, Julius Warren on needs, and Lloyd Allen Cook on getting the study started. Reprinted from the 24th Annual Yearbook, National Association of Teachers Colleges. 51 pp. 15c. (a37)

THE WORKSHOP: A Summary of Principles and Practices of the Workshop Movement

DIEDERICH, PAUL B., AND VAN TIL, WILLIAM

A pamphlet on the essential characteristics of the workshop and on practical considerations for leadership. A summary of workshop possibilities useful for teachers who plan to attend, for workshop leaders, and for teacher educators. Cites practices in intercultural education workshops. Joint publication of American Education Fellowship and Bureau for Intercultural Education. Hinds, Hayden & Eldredge, 1945. 32 pp. 25c. (a38)

EVALUATION

THE CASE OF MICKEY MURPHY BALLER, WARREN R.

A test particularly useful for teacher training to measure the extent to which a teacher is aware of the nature of growth and how much information she needs to make decisions concerning a child. Useful for discussion of what a teacher needs to know. Valuable for determining a teacher's awareness to the conditions that affect attitudes toward other nationalities. University of Nebraska, 1943. Test, 15 pp. Answer Sheet, 1 p. 37c. (a39)

THE CULTURE CONFLICT INDEX

This is an inventory that shows how pupils feel about many different groups, such as farmers, the British, Mexicans, people of different religions, Negroes, foreigners, Japanese-Americans, and so forth. Useful for grades 6-9. Bureau of Educational Research, Ohio State University. Mimeo. 1946. 6 pp. Single copy, 4c. 30 or more, 2½c each. (a40)

HOW DO YOU FEEL ABOUT EDUCATION FOR BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS—An Inventory for Use by a School Staff

A questionnaire designed to help a teaching staff think through its approach to intercultural education. It deals with (a) the emphasis on intercultural problems, (b) who is responsible for policies, (c) causes of poor human relations, (d) stumbling blocks to progress, (e) clues to readiness for further progress, etc. Division of Evaluation, Bureau for Intercultural Education. Mimeo. 1946. 7 pp. Single copy, 4c. 30 or more, 2½c each. (a41)

THE OHIO RECOGNITION SCALE—WHO'S WHO IN MY GROUP?

A scale to find out why pupils are or are not accepted by their group. Useful for grades 6-9. Ohio Scholarship Tests and Elementary Supervision, State Department of Education, Columbus, Ohio. 8 pp. Single copy, 6c. 30 or more, 4½c each. (a42)

THE OHIO SOCIAL ACCEPTANCE SCALE

This scale is intended to reveal those boys and girls in a classroom who are or are not accepted by others in the group. It should be followed by the Ohio Recognition Scale to find reasons for acceptance or rejection. Useful for grades 6-12. Ohio Scholarship Tests, State Department of Education, Columbus, Ohio. 1 p. Single copy, 4c. 30 or more, 2½c each. (a43)

A SCALE FOR MEASURING ATTITUDES TOWARD RACES AND NATIONALITIES REMMERS, H. H., AND GRICE, H. H.

This scale and scoring guide can be used to determine how any person or group feels about any racial, religious, or nationality group. The items are scaled from positive liking to disliking. Useful for grades 7-12. Purdue Research Foundation, Purdue University, 1934. 6 pp. Single copy, 4c. 30 or more, 2½c each. (a44)

GENERAL INTERCULTURAL BIBLIOGRAPHIES

INTERCULTURAL BOOKS FOR CHILDREN TRAGER, HELEN G.
An article developed as a result of a critical survey of lists of recommended books appraised by the Bureau for Intercultural Education specialist on childhood education. The reprint is largely devoted to a basic list of intercultural books for children based on specified criteria and edited from preceding bibliographies. Important for elementary and junior high school teachers. Bureau reprint from Childhood Education, November, 1945. 8 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 8c each. (a45)

A LIST OF SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHIES FOR TEACHERS—Elementary and High School TRAGER, HELEN G.
A bibliography of bibliographies which includes intercultural, the Negro, culture groups, our neighbors, the Orient, folk materials. Bureau mimeo. 1945. 4 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 5c each. (a46)

RACE RELATIONS WAXMAN, JULIA
A thorough, carefully selected list of readings on racial and cultural minorities in the United States with special emphasis on Negroes. Includes a bibliography on minorities, race, intercultural education, books for young Americans, and specialized readings on Negro-White relationships. Attractive format. Julius Rosenwald Fund, 1945. 48 pp. 15c. (a47)

TOWARD BETTER INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION: A Bibliographical Guide COLE, STEWART G.
An up-to-date general survey of the literature and teaching aids in the field plus an annotated list of pupil reference materials. Reprinted from Seventeenth Yearbook, California Elementary School Principals' Association, 1946. 32 pp. 15c. (a48)

PREJUDICE AND ITS CAUSES

A B C's of SCAPEGOATING FOREWORD BY GORDON W. ALLPORT
Psychological examination of the pathology of unwarranted aggression. Sources of race prejudice in the child are examined. Scholarly, abstract presentation lightened by examples prepared by a Harvard seminar. Roosevelt College, Chicago, 1944. 72 pp. 25c. (a49)

THE BIGOT IN OUR MIDST ALLPORT, GORDON W.
A psychologist's reflections on frustrations, tabloid thinking, and projection characteristic of the bigot. An introduction to the paranoid mental life of bigotry. By a Harvard social psychologist. Reprinted from The Commonweal, October 6, 1944. 5 pp. 3c. (a50)

MINORITY GROUPS IN THE UNITED STATES MCWILLIAMS, CAREY
An economic interpretation of prejudice. Explains how dominant groups maintain dominance over newcomers. By the author of Prejudice and Brothers Under the Skin. Reprinted from ORT Economic Review, August, 1944. 13 pp. 6c. (a51)

THE MYTH THAT THREATENS AMERICA WRITERS' WAR BOARD
The myth is that America belongs to Anglo-Saxon white Protestants. Eric Johnston, Rex Stout, John Roy Carlson contribute. One section, useful for students, reports on how writers perpetuate stereotypes through short stories, movies, advertising copy. Useful for English teachers. 1945. 35 pp. 10c. (a52)

RACE AND WORDS HAYAKAWA, S. I.
An article on the necessity for recognition that Jew_1 is not Jew_2, that individuals differ, that names for groups are words and not living persons. A lively application of semantics to prejudice, useful to all who deal with understanding words. Reprinted from Common Sense, July, 1943. 5 pp. 15c. (a53)

RACIAL AND RELIGIOUS PREJUDICE IN EVERYDAY LIFE
WELTFISH, GENE (EDITOR)
A series of "episodes from life" described and commented upon by scientists from fields of social action. For instance, Episode 7, "Prejudice and Emotion in the Living Room," is commented upon by Charles Hendry, Margaret Mead, and Violet Edwards. Helpful case studies for developing insight on the part of adults who are guiding or will guide individuals or groups. The Journal of Social Issues, February and May, 1945. 112 pp. $1.00. (a54)

TWO MEN AND A BARGAIN SMITH, LILLIAN
"A parable of the Solid South" through which the novelist interprets discrimination as related to psychological fears and economic exploitation. Vehement and memorable. Reprinted from South-To-day, Spring, 1943. 12 pp. 10c. (a55)

RELATED SOCIAL-ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

COMMUNITY RELATIONS MANUAL
AMERICAN COUNCIL ON RACE RELATIONS
A manual to help the community examine and solve its intercultural problems. Deals with immediate programs such as law enforcement, and long-range programs such as employment. Helpful to the citizen who asks what he can do about tensions. 1945. 23 pp. 25c. (a56)

WORKING AND FIGHTING TOGETHER: Regardless of Race, Creed, Color or National Origin
CIO COMMITTEE TO ABOLISH RACIAL DISCRIMINATION
A pamphlet for those responsible for union practices on non-discriminatory unionism. Includes consideration of seniority, shop facilities, etc. An unequivocal statement against discrimination. Congress of Industrial Organizations, Washington, D. C., 1943. 20 pp. Single copy, 5c. In quantities of 100 or more, 4c each. (a57)

RACE AND RACIAL RELATIONSHIPS

BOOKS ABOUT NEGRO LIFE FOR CHILDREN BAKER, AUGUSTA
"Books for children that give an unbiased, accurate, well-rounded picture of Negro life in all parts of the world." Stories for younger and older children are the basic sections, with shorter sections on folklore; literature, art, and music; poetry; songs; biography and history. Prepared by a children's librarian in charge of the James Weldon Johnson collection, New York Public Library. Bureau. 7 pp. 10c. To be published, May, 1946. (a58)

CHILDREN'S LITERATURE AND THE NEGRO STEREOTYPE
STERN, CELIA M., AND VAN TIL, WILLIAM
How literature can help children recognize differences in people of the same race and combat stereotypes. Discusses books on Negro children in West Indies, Africa, North and South America. Bureau reprint from Childhood Education, February, 1945. 6 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 5c each. (a59)

THE NEGRO 135TH STREET BRANCH, NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
A highly selective bibliography on the Negro. Sections on historical background, economic outlook, social development, race relations, personal achievement, literature, music and art, folklore, and books for children. Prepared by staff members of the Public Library which serves New York's Harlem. Reprinted from Branch Library Book News. Rev. Ed., 1945. 8 pp. 15c. (a60)

OUR HIGH SCHOOL LIBRARIES AND RACISM JACOBS, MELVILLE
An anthropologist's case for use of books on race in our schools. He names problems to be faced by teachers. Recommended readings for school purchase are listed. Reprinted from the University of Washington College of Education Record, December, 1944. 6 pp. 10c. (a61)

RELIGION AND RELIGIOUS RELATIONSHIPS

THE JEWS IN AMERICA LIBRARY OF JEWISH INFORMATION OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
A selected bibliography prepared by an authoritative source. Classifications include contemporary problems, biography, juvenile reading, etc. Rev. Ed., 1943. 11 pp. 5c. (a62)

RELIGIOUS BOOK LIST NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS
Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant book lists selected by a committee of the faith under whose name each appears. Also a Good Will book list. 1946. 31 pp. 3c. (a63)

NATIONALITY AND ETHNIC RELATIONSHIPS

THE IMMIGRANT IN FICTION AND BIOGRAPHY
ROUČEK, JOSEPH S.; HERO, ALICE; DOWNEY, JEAN
Annotated bibliography of fiction and biography about immigrants to America. Includes major national groups as well as smaller groups in a listing which ranges from Armenians to Yugoslavs. Books especially appropriate for junior high school have been marked by Lou LaBrant. An essential guide for all teaching or studying the literature of peoples. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1945. 32 pp. 20c. (a64)

AMERICAN SLAVS ROUCEK, JOSEPH S., IN CO-OPERATION WITH PINKHAM, PATRICIA N.
A bibliography of many general works, autobiographies and biographies, novels, and children's books on Bulgarians, Czechoslovaks, Poles, Russians, Ukrainians, and Yugoslavs in America. Annotated. Comprehensive rather than selective. By a co-author of One America. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1944. 49 pp. 35c. (a65)

SPANISH-SPEAKING AMERICANS AND MEXICAN-AMERICANS IN THE UNITED STATES SAUNDERS, LYLE
An unannotated bibliography to help the teacher obtain a well-rounded understanding of the problems and achievements of the Spanish-speaking American. Divisions on social and economic conditions, education, migrants, folklore, music and dances. Periodicals and organizations are also listed. By a University of New Mexico researchist. Bureau for Intercultural Education. Mimeo. 1944. 12 pp. 20c. (a66)

For Students

PREJUDICE

PROBING OUR PREJUDICES
POWDERMAKER, HORTENSE, AND STOREN, HELEN FRANCES
The first supplementary textbook in intercultural education for high school students. Written by a professor of anthropology with suggested school activities by an educator, Helen Frances Storen. Explores the nature, origin, and effect of emotionally based reactions, helping students to change attitudes that have been reached without sufficient consideration of the facts. In the Bureau for Intercultural Education Publications Series. Harper & Bros., 1944. 73 pp. (paper) 65c, (cloth) $1.00. Professional discounts on quantity orders. (s67)

DISCRIMINATION IN MEDICAL COLLEGES KINGDON, FRANK
A report on the extent of discrimination in specific medical colleges. This reprint will be helpful to high school groups studying vocational opportunities as well as to guidance counselors. Reprinted from The American Mercury, October, 1945. 10 pp. 5c. (s68)

I'M NOT PREJUDICED, BUT . . . BEATON, ALICE
An informal, chatty article directed to high school girls. Encourages self-examination of attitudes and gives suggestions on recovering from prejudice. An effective short piece. Reprinted from Seventeen, May, 1945. 1 p. Single copy, free. 30 for 15c. (s69)

LET'S NOT FORGET WE'RE ALL FOREIGNERS SINATRA, FRANK
An article addressed to youngsters by the singer. It is simply expressed and deals with prejudice. Usable in junior and senior high. Reprinted from Magazine Digest, July, 1945. 2 pp. Single copy, free. 30 copies, 30c. (s70)

PREJUDICE!—ROADBLOCK TO PROGRESS WAR DEPARTMENT
An Army orientation fact sheet which states clearly how prejudices develop, six dangers of prejudice, etc. Contains aids for discussion leaders. This is the same fact sheet that soldiers have read. Useful for high school students. Fact Sheet No. 70. May, 1945. 8 pp. 5c. (s71)

PURE RACE MEETS MIXED-BLOOD BOYS PHILLIPS, H. I.
A light, humorous poem on the power of the "mixed-blood" American Army. Illustrated with cartoons. From the column in the New York Sun. 1944. 1 p. Single copy, free. In quantity, 2c each. (s72)

SPEAKING FOR AMERICA SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
A set of twelve posters for classroom use, on which twelve noted Americans speak up for intercultural goodwill. Personages included are President Truman, military men, and stars of the entertainment world. Useful on many age levels. 10c for set of 12. (s73)

THEY GOT THE BLAME: THE STORY OF SCAPEGOATS IN HISTORY GOULD, KENNETH
A study of the origin and history of scapegoating. Religious persecution, the black man's burden, the Jew as scapegoat, and labor versus capital are treated. By the editor of Scholastic Magazine for high school use. Centered about an important idea. Association Press, New York, 1942. 63 pp. 25c. (s74)

THEY GOT THE BLAME — Comic Strip GOULD, KENNETH
Cartoon story of scapegoating in history. Relates simply the technique of blaming others, with particular emphasis upon Nazi tactics. Based on the pamphlet, They Got the Blame. Elementary and junior high. Reprinted from True Comics Magazine, published by Parents Institute. 1943. 7 pp. Single copy, free. 30 copies, 15c. (s75)

WHAT KIND OF WORLD DO YOU WANT? GAIR, BARBARA
A challenge addressed to 'teen-aged girls to widen their horizons. Based on a discussion of Hortense Powdermaker's analysis of prejudice in Probing Our Prejudices. Reprinted from Seventeen, February, 1945. 3 pp. Single copy, free. In quantity, 3c each. (s76)

20

Plays on Prejudice

LOOK BEYOND THE LABEL JAWORSKI, IRENE
Lively, humorous one-act play for high school and junior college students. Helps students understand the falsity of stereotypes and leads to a better comprehension of propaganda. Simply staged and forthrightly written. Outstanding among available short plays. Illustrated with photos to aid production. Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1945. 18 pp. 15c. (s77)

DIVIDE AND CONQUER SLOANE, ALLAN, AND RUSSELL, BOB
A Catholic, Negro, and Jewish boy play together. A bully divides their loyalty and picks up their marbles. A bystander points out the analogy to Hitler's tactics. A delightful short play for elementary and junior high school use. Green Publishing Company, New York, 1944. 15 pp. Single copy, 15c. In quantity of 100, 5c. each. (s78)

MEET YOUR RELATIVES WELTFISH, GENE (TEXT), AND NIRENBERG, ALICE B. (DRAMATIZATION)
"This dramatization of some of the ABC's of anthropology takes the form of an illustrated lecture in musical comedy fashion." Light and gay. Written by an anthropologist, dramatized by a teacher. Elementary and junior high school. Public Affairs Committee, 1944. 24 pp. 5c. (s79)

WE CALL IT FREEDOM WILSON, DOROTHY CLARKE
A one-act play which dramatizes the importance of living democratically in contrast to giving only lip service to democracy. A melodramatic situation involving contrasting characters—notably a hypocritical adult, her sheltered daughter, a college educated Negro maid. High school or junior college presentation. Friendship Press, 1942. 24 pp. 15c. (s80)

RELATED SOCIAL-ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS OF THE NEGRO:
American War-Community Services Bulletin No. 1
A sketch of the background of Negro-White work relationships. Includes descriptions of progress made and problems faced. Dispassionate analysis by a group working for economic progress for the Negro. National Urban League, 1944. 15 pp. 10c. (s81)

HEMMED IN: ABC's of Race Restrictive Housing Covenants
WEAVER, ROBERT C.
The clear, simple story of the effect of the current housing shortage and restrictive covenants on race relations. Attractively illustrated. Useful in courses on contemporary problems. American Council on Race Relations, 1945. 14 pp. 10c. (s82)

NEGRO PLATFORM WORKERS

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON RACE RELATIONS

A realistic analysis of the economic roots of the so-called race strike of Philadelphia transportation workers in August, 1944. A revealing study of experience with Negro operators in other cities. Particularly helpful for high school social studies classes. 1945. 48 pp. Single copy, 25c. In quantities of 10 or more, 15c. (s83)

WILL NEGROES GET JOBS NOW? NORTHRUP, HERBERT R.

A summary of Negro employment gains during the war and present job prospects. Suggests needed government activities, including FEPC. For the advanced high school student. Public Affairs Committee, 1945. 32 pp. 10c. (s84)

RACE AND RACIAL RELATIONSHIPS

"The American Indians" BUILDING AMERICA

SOCIETY FOR CURRICULUM STUDY

Picture text on the background of American Indians and their present problems. New policies of the Office of Indian Affairs are considered. Junior and senior high. 1942. 30 pp. 35c. (s85)

AMERICA'S TENTH MAN: A Brief Survey of the Negro's Part in American History

A history of the American Negro, packed tight with names and facts. A useful source pamphlet for students studying phases of Negro contributions. Published by one of the South's outstanding intercultural groups. Southern Regional Council, Inc. Rev. Ed., 1944. 31 pp. Single copy, 10c. In quantity, $1.00 per doz. (s86)

CAVALCADE OF THE AMERICAN NEGRO

ILLINOIS WRITERS' PROJECT—WPA

The cultural contributions of the American Negro to education, religion, music, literature and art, etc. Fact-packed with names and dates. Useful for reference for data on Negro contributions to particular areas of American life. 1940. 95 pp. 25c. (s87)

THE NEGRO IN AMERICA STEWART, MAXWELL S.

The status of the American Negro, including his disadvantages, community life, protests, participation in the war. The discrepancy between the American Creed and American discrimination. A summary of Gunnar Myrdal's An American Dilemma. Public Affairs Committee, 1944. 32 pp. 10c. (s88)

NEGROES IN CHICAGO GRUNSFELD, MARY-JANE

Dramatic picture pamphlet on the background and present status of Negroes in Chicago. Useful on many age levels. Mayor's Committee on Race Relations, Chicago, 1944. 30 pp. Single copy, 5c. In quantity, 3c each. (s89)

THE NEGRO'S CONTRIBUTION TO MUSIC IN AMERICA

NELSON, ROSE K., AND COLE, DOROTHY L.

Description of the origin and development of spirituals. A shorter description of the Negro's other contributions, notably to the blues, jazz, and concert music. Also a comprehensive annotated bibliography and some suggested activities. Bureau for Intercultural Education. Rev. Ed., mimeo. 1941. 25 pp. 15c. (s90)

RACE RELATIONS BALANCE SHEET EMBREE, EDWIN R.

A summary of debits and credits in race relations today. Gains and setbacks in Negro-White relations are graphically described. Authoritative, lively. Reprinted from Review for the Two-Year Period, 1942-44. Julius Rosenwald Fund. 20 pp. 3c. (s91)

RACE? WHAT THE SCIENTISTS SAY SINGER, CAROLINE
Definitions of Aryan, Semitic, Hebrew, Jewish, and race. A small handbook of terms, approved by three leading anthropologists. Prepared to correct the language of intolerance employed by the ignorant and the racists. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 1939. 13 pp. 5c. (s92)

THE RACES OF MANKIND BENEDICT, RUTH, AND WELTFISH, GENE
What are race differences? How are races classified? What is the future of race differences? A best-selling popularization of race knowledge by two anthropologists. Humorous illustrations. Public Affairs Committee, 1943. 31 pp. 10c. (s93)

SENSE AND NONSENSE ABOUT RACE ALPENFELS, ETHEL J.
A primer of scientific answers to questions about race raised by high school students. Includes recommendations for further reading. Illustrated. By the Bureau's staff anthropologist. Useful for high school students. Friendship Press. To be published, April, 1946. 25c. (s94)

THERE ARE NO MASTER RACES!
A "comic" booklet based on the pamphlet, Races of Mankind. Useful particularly for elementary and junior high school students who find the original Public Affairs pamphlet too difficult reading. Reprinted from True Comics Magazine, published by Parents' Institute, 1944. 7 pp. Single copy free. 30 copies, 15c. (s95)

THERE ARE THINGS TO DO SMITH, LILLIAN
Some simple, undramatic things white people can do to promote better race relations (avoiding jokes directed against Negroes, calling Negroes by courtesy titles, sitting by Negroes in street cars). By the author of Strange Fruit. Written for Southerners but containing useful advice to other regions too. Reprinted from South Today, Winter 1942-43. 16 pp. 10c. (s96)

RELIGION AND RELIGIOUS RELATIONSHIPS

BUILDING BRIDGES BETWEEN GROUPS THAT DIFFER IN FAITH, RACE, CULTURE ELLIOTT, JOHN H.
A description of the backgrounds, beliefs, and forms of worship of Roman Catholics, the Jewish people, and Protestants. Includes questions for discussion, things to do, and a section on racial minorities. Attractively illustrated. Prepared primarily for Protestant youth groups. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 1945. 47 pp. 25c. (s97)

THE GROWTH OF GOOD WILL: A Sketch of American Protestant-Catholic-Jewish Relations CLINCHY, EVERETT R.
Description of religious intolerance and the struggle against it throughout American history. Includes descriptions of Know-Nothing and Klan agitation and surveys future Protestant-Catholic-Jewish relations. By the president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. n. d. 64 pp. 10c. (s98)

JEWISH HOLIDAYS: DO YOU KNOW THEM? MOLLER, ELISE F.
Suggestions on sharing holiday festivals with Jewish youngsters, as well as descriptions of the significance of Jewish holidays. Prepared primarily for Gentile club members by a YWCA staff member. The Woman's Press, 1945. 32 pp. 15c. (s99)

JEWS IN AMERICAN LIFE MARCUS, JACOB R.
An effective narrative of the Jews' contribution to America. An historical sketch which includes pioneers, religion, education, literature, the arts, farming, philanthropy, labor, commerce and industry, and war service. The American Jewish Committee, 1945. 16 pp. 6c. (s100)

ONE WORLD — ONE GOD SCHEUER, JOHN
An original radio play based on the sacrifice of four chaplains of varied religions who demonstrated the unity of all faiths when they gave up their life-belts to transport troops as the S. S. Dorchester sank. Originally given over radio station WFIL, Philadelphia. Philadelphia Fellowship Commission, 1945. 16 pp. 20c. (s101)

NATIONALITY AND ETHNIC RELATIONSHIPS

BY DIFFERENT BOATS U.S.O. DIVISION, NATIONAL BOARD, YWCA
Colorful, very brief, typographically pleasing pamphlet dramatizing that we're all Americans. States simply "what you can do" to advance the American dream. Useful for many age levels. The Woman's Press, 1943. 10 pp. Single copy, 3c. In quantity, 500 for $10.00. (s102)

20

"Italian-Americans" BUILDING AMERICA
SOCIETY FOR CURRICULUM STUDY
Picture text largely devoted to the historical background of Italian immigration. Adjustment to American life is considered briefly, as are Italian-American contributions to our culture. Junior and senior high. 1943. 30 pp. 35c. (s103)

"Spanish-Speaking People" BUILDING AMERICA
SOCIETY FOR CURRICULUM STUDY
Excellently illustrated picture text on the historical background of Spanish-Americans and on their problems of relationships to other groups in the United States. 1943. 30 pp. 35c. (s104)

THE REFUGEES ARE NOW AMERICANS
DAVIE, MAURICE R., AND KOENIG, SAMUEL
Summarizes a nation-wide survey of the adjustment of refugees and their effect on American life. Includes background of refugee movement, distribution, difficulties encountered, integration into community life, etc. Useful for high school courses in contemporary problems. Public Affairs Committee, 1945. 32 pp. 10c. (s105)

"We Americans" BUILDING AMERICA
SOCIETY FOR CURRICULUM STUDY
An issue of this educational picture magazine on the backgrounds of immigrants, controls on immigration, the extent of Americanization. A central problem is whether to expand immigration or restrict it further. Colorful, lively publication for junior and senior high school use. 1943. 31 pp. 35c. (s106)

WHAT ABOUT OUR JAPANESE-AMERICANS? MCWILLIAMS, CAREY
The Japanese-Americans before Pearl Harbor, the evacuation, the relocation centers, and democratic potentialities in the situation. A skillful popularized summary of recent history by a California writer. Prepared for American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, by Public Affairs Committee. 1944. 31 pp. 10c. (s107)

Please give catalogue number in ordering.

324

Reprinted from
NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION JOURNAL
March 1947

FREE AND EQUAL

—leaves from a teacher's diary

GABRIEL R. MASON

Principal, Abraham Lincoln Highschool
New York City

NOVEMBER 5—Work this week was highlighted by pupils' reports during homeroom. Topic for the week was "Understanding Our Neighbors." Students described visits to Little Italy, Harlem, and Chinatown.

A boy had interviewed managers of six large hotels in connection with a school prom. He inquired whether there was any objection to Negro students' participating in the dance. One said there was no objection. The other five said that tho they had no personal prejudices their clientele would object.

NOVEMBER 12—We had an interesting faculty meeting. It was devoted to a demonstration lesson by Mrs. S. of our English department. She had her pupils on the auditorium platform and gave them a 30-minute lesson on just four lines of poetry. She used Markham's quatrain, "Outwitted":

He drew a circle that shut me out,
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win:
We drew a circle that took him in.

The lesson was beautifully taught. The pupils' discussion was on a high plane. It was followed by questions and comments by many of the teachers.

I was surprised to learn of the wealth of material for better human understanding—poems, one-act plays, essays, biographies, and students' compositions—being used in our classes. If all this were used skilfully, we could look forward to the dawn of a brighter day.

NOVEMBER 19—At our assembly Mr. H. in an address attacked the newspapers which, Hitler-like, stir up racial, religious, and political animosities. He warned us to be on guard against such papers, and not to be inveigled into patronizing them because of their price, their sensational pictures, or their comics.

DECEMBER 6—Just came back from our varsity show, It Can't Happen Here. I am glad Mr. B. chose a play with social significance, rather than wasting time putting on an empty farce.

DECEMBER 8—At assembly a film, Americans All, was shown. It reminded us forcefully that many generations of immigrants have built America. When I complimented our visual instruction director, he told me there are hundreds of such films.

JANUARY 8—We had elections to decide who should receive the school award for service to the city. I was delighted that 63% of our students voted for Paul Robeson for his courageous efforts in the battle for minority rights. Perhaps our campaign for interculture is succeeding.

JANUARY 12—Two hundred teachers met to discuss ways of developing tolerance among school children. For an hour and a half we talked about good subjects for compositions, poems, and essays for classroom reading, assemblies, appropriate movies, and the contribution various subjects of the curriculum can make for better mutual understanding among our students.

Just before adjournment a principal said bluntly that he thought nothing we had done this afternoon was of much consequence, that in his school all his efforts in human relationship had come to naught because on Sunday hundreds of his pupils had received at church a pamphlet, a copy of which he took from his wallet.

This, he said, was a garbled version of the Gospel according to St. John. Sentences were lifted out of their context to serve as a brief for condemning the Jews for crucifying Christ. He said that history records it was the Romans who crucified Christ. But, in any event, he inquired, "Why should all this be revived now to accuse a generation of Jews after almost 2000 years?"

Immediately several teachers rose in defense of the pamphlets and the practice of distributing them in church. Arguments multiplied, voices became louder, and the air was surcharged with antagonism.

JANUARY 15—Talked with a minister about our meeting. He thought the principal was right, and added: "The schools' well-intentioned efforts will accomplish little if the churches don't help. The whole problem could be easily solved if our church leaders would courageously tell their congregations that they had erred in the past when they encouraged antagonism to any other religious group. They must emphasize the fact that it is un-Christian to hate, ridicule, or hurt people of other faiths."

JANUARY 25—Just returned from our commencement exercises. We had an unusually fine speaker. He discussed "Five Levels in Human Relationship."

On the first level men say, "We hate you and we'll kill you." That's extermination. On the second they say, "We hate you, but we'll use you." That's exploitation. On the third they say, "We don't like you, but we'll let you alone." That's toleration. On the fourth they say, "You're different, but we know your worth." That's appreciation. On the fifth and highest level they say, "We appreciate you and will help you to realize all your latent powers and capacities." That's creative development.

JANUARY 29—We are planning to establish a community cultural center as a school war memorial. The best speech at the launching of the campaign was made by a student who quoted from Chaplain Roland B. Gittelsohn's address at the Iwo Jima cemetery:

"Here lie officers and men, Negroes and whites, rich men and poor—together. Here are Protestants, Catholics, and Jews—together. Here no man prefers another because of his faith or despises him because of his color. Here there are no quotas of how many from each group are admitted or allowed. Among these men there is no discrimination. No prejudices. No hatred. Theirs is the highest and purest democracy.

"Whoever of us lifts his hand in hate against a brother, or thinks himself superior to those who happen to be in the minority, makes of this ceremony and the bloody sacrifice it commemorates, an empty, hollow mockery."

RECEIVED
JUN 27 1947
Southern Regional Council

1947 SUPPLEMENT

PUBLICATIONS ON INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

A single order to the Bureau brings your choice of recommended materials from many groups.

BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
1697 BROADWAY NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

H. H. GILES
Director

WILLIAM H. KILPATRICK
Chairman of Board

1947 SUPPLEMENT

PUBLICATIONS ON INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

Since issuing its 1946 Publications on Intercultural Education, the Bureau for Intercultural Education has been screening the published materials in its field in order to continue serving as America's central clearing house for distribution of recommended intercultural publications. Listed herein are recent pamphlets, articles, and bibliographies to be stocked by the Bureau in addition to those in the 1946 catalog. This supplement includes Bureau publications and those of other organizations and agencies.

While the materials described here supplement rather than replace those on the previous list, certain earlier items will not be restocked when present supplies are exhausted. If you wish to make sure of economically obtaining such items before they become unavailable, please write for the Bureau's "Special Offer" list.

Thanks are due to Evelyn Necarsulmer of the Bureau staff for much of the preliminary screening and annotating. Final selection was made by the writer.

WILLIAM VAN TIL

Director of Learning Materials

If you wish, you may use this list as an order blank. Simply write beside each item the quantity you want and fill in the blanks below. Another list will be mailed to you with your order.

Name .....

Street .....

City and State .....

Amount Enclosed $ .....

For School and Community Educators

INTERCULTURAL BACKGROUND

SCHOOL AND COMMUNITY PROJECTS

H. H. GILES AND WILLIAM VAN TIL

An informative review of some intercultural agencies and their projects, and a statement of five hypotheses which seem to underly current efforts. By the Bureau's Director and its Director of Learning Materials. Reprinted from Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, March 1946. 8 p. 5¢. (a108)

PLANNING INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

WILLIAM VAN TIL

Points to the ideals of western civilization as the basis for the growth of intercultural education and urges courageous experimentation in finding techniques suitable for each individual community. By the Bureau's Director of Learning Materials. Reprinted from The Clearing House, January 1946. 2 p. Single copy, free. (a110)

WHAT SOME SCHOOL SYSTEMS ARE DOING

BETTER TEACHING, February 1947

CINCINNATI PUBLIC SCHOOLS

An entire issue devoted to basic concepts, promising practices, and a number of suggestions on what needs to be done next in intercultural education. 16 p. 10¢. (a111)

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION IN THE DETROIT PUBLIC SCHOOLS

ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE ON INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

A progress report on activities in administrative organization, curriculum, in-service education, school-community relations, and cooperation with the Bureau. Detroit Public Schools. Bureau mimeo, 1947. 6 p. 7¢. (a112)

MORE—THAN TOLERANCE

NEA RESEARCH DIVISION

Summary of activities carried on in a number of city school systems to promote tolerance, intergroup understanding, and the democratic way of life. List of things to do and questions for discussion. Bibliography. NEA Commission for the Defense of Democracy through Education, 1946. 32 p. 15¢. (a114)

A PROGRAM OF INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION IN SAN DIEGO

SAN DIEGO CITY SCHOOLS

Outgrowth of a 1946 intercultural workshop. Outlines the scope, basic principles, and objectives of intercultural education and the resources available. Numerous suggestions for discussions and activities. Pacific Coast Council on Intercultural Education, 1946. 95 p. 50¢. (a115)

THREE BOARDS OF EDUCATION SPEAK OUT

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION NEWS

Statements of intercultural policy by the school boards of Detroit, Gary, and Kalamazoo. In the Bureau's Intercultural Education News, Spring 1947. Single copy, free. In quantity, 5¢. each. (a116)

SCHOOL ADMINISTRATION AND INTERCULTURAL RELATIONS

THEODORE BRAMELD AND ELEANOR FISH

A summary of Brameld's book, Minority Problems in the Public Schools, with the conclusion that despite confusions and negative factors the "American school is one of the most encouraging foretokens of a genuinely equalitarian democracy." By Bureau staff members. Reprinted from Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, March 1946. 8 p. 5¢. (a117)

UNDERSTANDING OTHERS

MICHIGAN STATE COMMITTEE ON INTERCULTURAL UNDERSTANDING

Summarizes the basic concepts of intercultural education, the nature of prejudice, and the role of the school and the teacher in developing programs of intercultural education at all age levels. Bibliography. Eugene B. Elliott, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Lansing, Mich., 1946. 34 p. 15¢. (a118)

PROMISING PRACTICES

INTERCULTURAL ATTITUDES IN THE MAKING

EDITED BY WILLIAM H. KILPATRICK AND WILLIAM VAN TIL

Ninth Yearbook of the John Dewey Society. Chapters by various investigators to show how intercultural attitudes can develop and change in the family, in a primary grade, in a junior high school, in a senior high school, in an adult-sponsored youth group, in a gang, and in a school system as a whole. By a committee under the chairmanship of the Bureau's Board Chairman, William Heard Kilpatrick, distinguished philosopher of education. Harper. Ready early autumn. About 180 p. (a119)

A POUND OF PREVENTION

JAMES L. HYMES, JR.

Describes the behavior of "war babies," as examples of children injured by life experiences, and suggests how the teacher especially can help meet the emotional needs of such children. By the President of the National Association for Nursery Education. Teachers Service Committee on the Emotional Needs of Children, 1947. 63 p. 25¢. (a120)

SPECIALIZED TECHNIQUES AND APPROACHES

SOCIAL TRAVEL

EDWARD G. OLSEN

Examples of social travel by both children and adults, with evaluations of the technique and some conditions that contribute to its success. By the Director of School and Community Relations, Washington State Office of Public Instruction. Joint publication of the Bureau for Intercultural Education and the American Education Fellowship. Hinds, Hayden & Eldredge, 1947. 46 p. 35¢. (a121)

DEMOCRACY FOR ALL

HELEN PARKER MUDGETT

An adaptable study program for intergroup relations, including introductory suggestions, reading materials, questions for discussion, and projects and activities. University of Minnesota Press, 1945. 87 p. 50¢. (a122)

ENGLISH JOURNAL, June 1946

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF TEACHERS OF ENGLISH

An entire issue devoted to the contributions of English teaching to increased understanding of prejudice. Specific suggestions for using literature and language for broadening young people's thinking. 77 p. 35¢. (a123)

IMPROVING INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN SCHOOL AND COMMUNITY LIFE

NORTH CENTRAL ASSOCIATION OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

A useful summary of basic concepts and advanced techniques in intergroup relations, emphasizing progressive principles for the curriculum and for school-community action. Stresses the need for centering on a challenging problem in the local situation, the solution of which involves the creative participation of the entire faculty. 1946. 48 p. 25¢. (a124)

GENERAL INTERCULTURAL BIBLIOGRAPHIES

FILMS IN INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

JAMES H. TIPTON AND PAUL K. WEINANDY

An annotated list of films for stimulating better group relations, prepared by Bureau consultants. An attempt was made to find films that were entertaining as well as based on sound principles. Includes bases of selection, suggestions for use, and recommendations for appropriate age levels. Bureau mimeo, 1947. 18 p. 10¢. (a125)

ONE WORLD IN SCHOOL

LOUELLA MILES

An annotated bibliography in intergroup relations, including novels and films, for teachers and students. Introductory comments and specific suggestions for use. American Teachers Association, 1946. 57 p. 35¢. (a126)

READING LADDERS FOR HUMAN RELATIONS

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION

Reading ladders and annotations for eight areas which teachers consider important for developing sensitivity to the values and ways of life of others. Developed by the Advisory Committee on Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools. 1947. 67 p. $1. (a127)

RELIGION AND RELIGIOUS RELATIONSHIPS

RELIGIOUS BOOK LIST

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

Annotated lists for children and adults, selected by Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant committees, plus a general Good Will list. 1947. 35 p. 10¢. (a128)

For Students

PREJUDICE

COLLEGE QUOTAS AND AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

DAN W. DODSON

Refutes arguments favoring discrimination often advanced by college administrators and offers reasons for complete abolition of the quota system. By the Executive Director of the Mayor's Committee on Unity in New York City. Reprinted from The American Scholar, Summer 1946. 12 p. 5¢. (s129)

PLAYS ON PREJUDICE

AS ONE STAR DIFFERETH

HELEN R. FISH

A play which aims to develop respect for people by showing how individuals are persecuted because they differ in behavior, appearance, tastes, or interests. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 1947. 6 p. 10¢. (s130)

RELATED SOCIAL-ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

RACIAL PROBLEMS IN HOUSING

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE

Examines a few underlying causes of slum areas, points out that a slum is a danger to the whole community, and urges an end to segregation. 1945. 30 p. 25¢. (s131)

RACE AND RACIAL RELATIONSHIPS

OUR NEGRO VETERANS

CHARLES G. BOLTE AND LOUIS HARRIS

Analysis of the Negro veterans' intensified problems since the end of the war, based on a series of surveys made by several organizations. Public Affairs Committee, 1947. 31 p. 20¢. (s133)

OUR RACIAL SUPERIORITY

ETHEL J. ALPENFELS

Attacks the myth of racial superiority with an array of scientific facts. By the Bureau's Staff Anthropologist. Bureau reprint from Reader's Digest, September 1946. 4 p. 2¢. (s134)

SEGREGATION

SURVEY GRAPHIC

An authoritative historical review, a description of existing practices, and an account of the struggle to abolish segregation. Numerous photographs. January 1947. 130 p. 60¢. (s135)

RELIGION AND RELIGIOUS RELATIONSHIPS

THREE GREAT FAITHS WORSHIPPING ONE GOD

Six colored posters portraying Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish customs, based on Florence Mary Fitch's book, One God—The Ways We Worship Him. American Jewish Committee, 1946. Set of six, 60¢. (s136)

NATIONALITY AND ETHNIC RELATIONSHIPS

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT IMMIGRATION?

MAURICE R. DAVIE

A review of immigration trends, policies, and laws, with proposals for domestic and international action. Public Affairs Committee, 1946. 32 p. 20¢. (s137)

BOOKS ON MINORITY GROUPS FOR HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

compiled by

Mabel E. Jackman

New York State College for Teachers
Albany, New York

for

The College Study in Intergroup Relations
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education

August, 1947

The majority of the books on this list are fiction and biography which make an emotional appeal to the reader. Books marked with "j" are for junior high school. Those marked with "s" are for the mature reader in the eleventh and twelfth grades. It would be advisable for the teacher or librarian to read them before recommending them to individuals. A few books have been marked "T" to indicate that they are intended for the teacher. A very few are listed which are not recommended at all.

Some books of the factual type have been included to furnish background for the student whose interest has been aroused by the fiction and biography.

Each book has been read with the following in mind: Does it present a fair picture of the group depicted? Even though it is an unfair picture of a racial, religious, or national group as a whole it may help in the understanding of some social or economic strata of that minority. Does it give the reader an understanding of the problems confronting such individuals and evoke a feeling of sympathy? Are the characters real or stereotypes?

The list is incomplete for two reasons. No books have been included which have not been read by the compiler. Some areas such as immigrants from Europe have been touched very lightly while others, such as Protestant-Catholic and economic levels have not been included at all.

IMMIGRANTS

FICTION

Judson, C. I. Peter's treasure. Houghton, 1943.
Contrasts life in Dalmatia and the American gulf coast in the early 1900's. Difficulties of adjusting to the new ways and the pride in the new country.

MacLean, K. A. Mama's bank account, by Kathryn Forbes, (pseud.), Harcourt, 1943.
Warm sketches of a Norwegian-American family in San Francisco.

Rolvaag, O. E. Giants in the earth. Harper, 1927.
A Norwegian family faces great hardships in settling in the Midwest. Difficulties of adjusting to a new environment.

BIOGRAPHY

Christowe, Stoyan This is my country. Carrich, 1938.
The author came to this country from Macedonia at the age of thirteen.

De Jong, D. C. With a Dutch accent. Harper, 1944.
The first half covers his childhood in the Netherlands, the second his experiences when he first came to the United States. The difficulties of adjusting to a new country and language are brought out.

Logan, Milla Bring along laughter. Random, 1947.
A Serbian family in San Francisco in the years following the earthquake. Many traditions and customs of the homeland were kept in the new country as well as increasing conformity to American ways.

Papashvily, George and Helen Anything can Happen. Harper, 1945.
George Papashvily came from Georgia in Russia. Amusing account of meeting bewildering situations in America.

DRAMA

Van Druten, J. I remember mama. Harcourt, 1945.
Play based on Mama's bank account.

FACTUAL

Adamic, Louis From many lands. Harper, 1940.
Problems of immigrants told through the medium of stories of individuals.

Seabrook, W. B. These foreigners. Harcourt, Brace, and Co., 1938.
Various foreign born groups - problems seen through the eyes of individuals.

NAGRO AMERICANS

FICTION

Allen, M. H. Great tradition. Houghton, 1937.
A group of white graduate students at the University of Chicago share an apartment. A Negro student who works for them is also in the same laboratory. Good understanding of the difficulties for both the Negro student in a large university and the Negro college.

Carter, Hodding Winds of fear. Rinchart, 1944.
Rising racial tension and fear in a southern town. For mature readers. Read before recommending.

Cook, F. F. Mrs. Palmer's honey. Doubleday, 1946.
Negroes in St. Louis. Honey Hoop becomes a war worker and a C.I.O. enthusiast. More a labor than a race story.

Fast, Howard Freedom road. Duell, 1944.
North Carolina in reconstruction days. A short lived, successful attempt of Negroes and whites to work together to improve conditions.

Fuller, Edmund Star pointed north. Harper, 1946.
A novel about Frederick Douglass through 1877. Closely parallels his biography.

s Harris, B. K. Janey Jeems. Doubleday, 1946.
The long happy marriage of Jeems and Janey West as they struggle to raise a family and to acquire land in the N. Carolina hills to pass from "heir to heir". Dialect may bother some readers. No mention that the characters are Negroes.

s Harris, Mark Trumpet to the world. Reynal, 1946.
Willie Jim from his birth through his experiences in the army. He does much thinking about racial problems.

s Hedden, W. T. Other room. Crown, 1947.
Nina Latham of an old Virginia family to New Orleans to teach in a college, learning that it is for Negroes after her arrival. She stays and gradually loses her prejudices. Not sensational but provocative.

j Jackson, Jesse Call me Charley. Harper, 1945.
Charley is the only Negro in the high school. A group of his classmates try to overcome the prejudices of their elders.

T Jackson, Jesse Anchor man. Harper, 1947.
Continues the story of Charley. He is a senior and a member of the student council. New school problems arise with the admission of a group of Negroes. Track team plays an important part.

j Lang, Don Strawberry roan. Oxford, 1946.
Appealing story of a boy and a race horse. Only the illustrations and one mention indicate the boy is colored.

s Lewis, Sinclair Kingsblook royal. Randon house, 1947.
Neil Kingsblood discovers he is one thirty second Negro and "resigns from the white race". An exposition of a thesis rather than a novel. Improbable but thought provoking.

Means, F. C. Great day in the morning. Houghton, 1946.
Present day story of a Negro girl who decides to study nursing. She attended Tuskegee while George Washington Carver was there.

Means, F. C. Shuttered windows. Houghton, 1938.
A Negro girl from Minneapolis goes to live with her grandmother in South Carolina.

Miers, E. S. Big Ben. Westminster, 1942.
Ben Jackson goes to a "white university", plays football, and eventually becomes a singer. Based on the life of Paul Robeson. Good depiction of the obstacles confronting the talented Negro.

s Norway, N. S. Chequer board, by Nevil Shute. Morrow, 1947.
When John Turner learns he has not more than a year to live, he decides to look up three soldiers who had shared a hospital ward with him. One was an American Negro who has since married an English girl. Another is married to a Burmese girl. The essential similarities of peoples are stressed.

T Petry, Ann Street. Houghton, 1946.
Lutie Johnson lived in Harlem with her eight year old son. Shows the effect of sordid living conditions due to segregation which forces slum conditions on even the Negro of a higher economic level. Not for high school students.

s Pope, Edith Colcorton. Scribner, 1944.
Florida family that has Negro ancestry unknown to the present generation. Tragedy follows when Jared learns this.

s Smith, Lillian Strange Fruit. World, 1947.
The deep South in the years following the first World War. Love affair between a white man and a colored girl. Attitudes and mob spirit well depicted.

Sumner, C. R. Quality. Bobbs-Merrill, 1946.
Excellent, moving story of a Negro girl who appeared white, in Mississippi. A sympathetic understanding of both races.

j Swift, H.H. Railroad to freedom. Harcourt, 1932.
Novel on the life of Harriet Tubman, the Negro "Moses" who helped so many to escape by the "Underground Railroad".

Tunis, J. R. All American. Harcourt, 1942.
Football story in a large city high school. Ronny Perry transfers from his private school as a protest against discrimination. Later the race question arises when the team has a chance to play a southern school.

Wheaton, E. L. F. Mr. George's joint. Dutton, 1941.
Story of Negroes in a Texas city. Told in dialect. Characters are stereotypes. Not recommended.

Whitney, P. A. Willow Hill. Reynal, 1947.
A group of high school students work to solve inter-racial problems rising from a Negro housing project in the community. Good explanation of how prejudices start.

BIOGRAPHY

Bartlett, R. M. They did something about it. Association press, 1939. p. 72-82 a biography of Mary McLeod Bethune.

Bontemps, A. W. We have tomorrow. Houghton, 1945.
Biographies of twelve Negroes who have achieved success in unusual lines. E. S. Campbell.-B. J. Trammell.-Dean Dixon.-S.C. Watkins.-Douglas Watson.-E. M. May.-Hazel Scott.-A. P. Henry.-J. E. LuValle.-Benjamin Davis.

Embree, E. R. Thirteen against the odds. Viking, 1944.
Short biographies of M. M. Bethune, Richard Wright, C. S. Johnson, Walter White, G. W. Carver, Langston Hughes, Marian Anderson, W. E. B. DuBois, M. W. Johnson, W. G. Still, A. P. Randolph, Joe Louis, and Paul Robeson.

Graham, Shirley, and Lipscomb, G. D. Dr. George Washington Carver. N.Y., J. Messner, Inc., 1944.
Written for younger people than the biography by Holt.

Graham, Shirley. There was once a slave. Messner, 1947.
Biography of Frederick Douglass - for senior high school. More interesting than the novel.

s Holt, Rackham George Washington Carver. Doubleday, Doran & Co, 1943.
Outstanding biography of a great Negro scientist.

s Hughes, Langston Big Sea. Knopf, 1940.
Autobiography of the Negro poet.

Fisher, D.F.C., and Kaufman, Enit American portraits; illus. by Enit Kaufman. Holt, 1946.
Brief sketches by Dorothy Fisher to stress contributions of individuals of minority groups. p. 294-7 Paul Robeson
p. 311-2 Marian Anderson
p. 314-8 Joseph Barrow Louis

Hurok, S. Impresario. Random House, 1946.
Reminiscences of the author's career and the musicians he has known. p. 237-261 are on Marian Anderson. He discusses discrimination and how they have tried to combat it.

Lotz, P. H. Rising above color. N.Y., Ass'n. Press, 1943.
Short biographies of G. W. Carver, Marian Anderson, W.E.B. DuBois, R. R. Morton, S. C. Taylor, Richard Allen, Frederick Douglas, D. H. Williams, B. T. Washington, Roland Hayes, P. L. Dunbar, J. W. Johnson, and Walter White.

Miller, Margery Joe Louis: American. Current books, 1945.
Readable biography.

Thompson, E. B. American daughter. U. of Chicago press, 1946.
As a Negro growing up in a North Dakota town she met very little prejudice. Contrast with situation in city is marked.

Vehanen, Kosti Marian Anderson. Whittlesey, 1941.
Biography by her accompanist.

DRAMA, POETRY

Brown, S. A. Negro caravan. The Dryden Press, 1941.
A selection of the literary work of Negro writers.

Cullen, Countee On these I stand. Harper, 1947.
A collection of his best poems which he chose from his nine volumes before his death.

D'Usseau, Arnaud, and Gow, James Deep are the roots. Scribner, 1946.
Drama about a Negro officer who returns from the war to the southern town where he grew up. Various attitudes are depicted and the problems posed but no answers given.

Swift, H. H. North star shining. Morrow, 1947.
Narrative poem of the Negro's part in the United States. Well illustrated. Could be adapted to choral reading.

FACTUAL

Beecher, John All brave sailors. N.Y., Fischer, 1945.
The story of the S. S. Booker T. Washington which was manned by a mixed crew under a Negro captain.

Bontemps, A. W., and Conroy, Jack They seek a city. Doubleday, 1945.
The Negro migration from the South with the difficulties and problems it has raised. Emphasis on the 20th century.

s Conrad, Earl Jim Crow America. Duell, 1947.
A white newspaperman who has worked on Negro papers discusses the entire problem of Negro-white relationship. Readable and provocative.

s DuBois, W. E. B. World and Africa. Viking, 1947. or "An inquiry into the part Africa has played in world history."
T Stresses the culture of Africa and its influence from prehistoric times to the modern era.

Federal writers project Lay my burden down; a folk history of slavery; ed. by B. A. Botkin, U. of Chicago press, 1945.
Memories of Civil War and Reconstruction days collected from interviews with former slaves.

s Halsey, Margaret Color blind. Simon, 1946.
Experiences in running an inter-racial canteen in New York during the war. Straight forward writing on racial issues. Read before recommending to high school students.

s Logan, R. W. What the Negro wants. U. of N. Carolina press, 1944.
Fourteen Negro leaders, representing left-wing, right-wing, and moderate points of view have tried to answer the question of what the Negro wants today.

s Logan, Spencer Negro's faith in America. Macmillan, 1946.
Condemned by the Negro press for its "Uncle Tom" attitude. May serve as introduction to problems.

T Lumpkin, K.D. Making of a southerner. Knopf, 1947.
Autobiography. She depicts clearly the traditional southern culture in which she grew up and her participation in the movements for better inter-racial understanding.

s Moon, Bucklin, ed. Primer for white folks. Doubleday, 1945.
"An attempt to present a general picture of the Negro-his backgrounds, his relationship with whites, his everyday denial of first-class citizenship, and what he really wants in American life." Preface.

s Ottley, Roi New world a-coming. Houghton, 1943.
"An intimately detailed story of Negro life." A reporter's job, with the main emphasis on Harlem as presenting examples of most of the problems.

s Smith, Ruth White man's burden. Vanguard, 1946.
Ruth Smith, blond, white, Protestant, taught in Negro mission schools in the South. She is keenly aware of the problems of the "Negro world" and the responsibility of the white group for this.

s White, W. F. Rising wind. Doubleday, 1945.
Discussion and reporting on the Negroes in our armed forces during the war. Attitude of some officers in producing racial tension and friction.

ANGLO AMERICANS, ASIATICS

SPANISH AMERICAN

FICTION

Means, F. C. Teresita of the valley. Houghton, 1943.
Teresita moves with her family to Denver and goes to high school. At first she is ashamed of her Spanish speaking background but eventually becomes proud of it.

MEXICAN

FICTION

j Angelo, Valenti Paradise valley. The Viking Press, 1940.
A Mexican family living in southwestern U.S.

j Gates, Doris Blue willow. Viking, 1940.
A blue willow plate is the only treasure of Janey Larkin whose family are migrant workers from the "Dust bowl". She finds a friend in Lupe Romero, a Mexican girl, and finally a house where the family may live "as long as we want to".

JAPANESE

FICTION

Emery, Anne Tradition. Vanguard, 1946.
Japanese-American family moves into a conservative Chicago suburb. Tensions arise in high school but eventually the student body evolves a real sense of democracy.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

s Kohoe, Karon --~~City in the sun.~~ -- Dodd, 1946.
The Maricopa relocation center and its effect on the individuals, told through the story of the Matsuki family, father, mother, and high school age son, Coke.

Means, F. C. Moved-outers. Houghton, 1943.
Moving story of a family of Japanese-Americans, Sue and Kim are high school seniors in Dec. 1941. Popular. Junior and senior high school.

s Wynd, Oswald Black fountains. Doubleday. 1947.
A Japanese girl educated in the U.S. returns home before Pearl Harbor. She struggles against imperialistic trend in family.

BIOGRAPHY

Martin, H. G. Boy from Nebraska. Harper, 1946.
Biography of Ben Kuroki, the first Nisei to be in the air corps in the Pacific. Emphasis is on the struggle against race prejudice. The difficult position of the Japanese-American soldier both during the war and the immediate post-war period.

s Matsumoto, Toru A brother is a stranger, by Toru Matsumoto and Marion Olive Lerrigo. Day, 1946.
Autobiography of a Japanese who was a fugitive from Japan because of his liberalism. Excellent understanding of both Japanese and American character.

FACTUAL

s McWilliams, Carey Prejudice: Japanese Americans Boston, Little, Brown, & Co., 1940.
The facts about the treatment of the Japanese Americans after Pearl Harbor.

Okubo, Mine Citizen 13660. Columbia Univ. Press, 1946.
Sketches and brief comment by an artist who was in two of the centers for Japanese-Americans. Text is free from bitterness.

CHINESE

BIOGRAPHY

Lowe, Pardee Father and Glorious Descendant. Little, Brown, 1943.
Autobiography. Lowe grew up in a suburb of San Francisco. Father was more "westernized" than most of the Chinese and conflicts between the generations were settled more easily than in many homes of the foreign-born.

FACTUAL

Colman, Elizabeth Chinatown, U.S.A. Day, 1946.
Very brief history of the Chinese in the United States and a large section of photographs of Chinese-Americans and Chinatowns.

Click, Carl Shake hands with the dragon. Whittlesey, 1941.
A journalist and social worker tells of life in Chinatown in New York City. Shows how the Chinese keep many of their patterns of living while conforming to the ways of an American city. Amusing, interesting.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Click, Carl Three times I bow. Whittlesey, 1943.
More about New York's Chinatown. The central character is Kung who was in the U.S. Army.

INDIANS

FICTION

Armer, L. A. Dark circle of branches. Longmans, 1933.
Navaho boy and his uncle, the medicine man. Many legends retold in the story. Includes the "Long march" when the Navahoes were moved into exile during the Civil War period.

Armer, L. A. Waterless mountain. Longmans, 1931.
Navaho boy who aspires to be a medicine man. Good protrayal of Indian life and beliefs but of limited appeal.

s Arnold, Elliott Blood brother. Duell, 1947.
Cochise, Apache chief, and Jeffords, peacemaker and Indian agent, are the leading characters. Sympathetic portrayal of Indian cause. Theme that all men are blood brothers.

s Fuller, Iola Loon feather. Harcourt, 1940.
Novel about an Indian girl, the daughter of Tecumseh. A time of adjustment to changing ways for the Indian. Much of the story takes place at Mackinac.

s Fuller, Iola Shining trail. Duell, 1943.
The Indian rebellion against the treachery of the whites at the time of Black Hawk's War.

s Lauritzen, Jonreed Arrows into the sun. Knopf, 1943.
Navaho Indians in the period when the Mormons were spreading into their territory. Sympathetic treatment of Indians.

McNichols, C. L. Crazy weather. Macmillan, 1944.
Two boys, one white, and one Indian, travel together through the Mohave country during a period of hot "crazy weather". Sympathetic portrayal.

j Means, F. C. Whispering girl. Houghton, 1941.
Vensi, a Hopi girl of today, is so shy she rarely speaks aloud outside the family circle but she gains courage to talk to the village when the family honor is at stake. Good picture of customs.

j Moon, Grace Singing sands. Doubleday, 1936.
Piki, a Navaho girl, comes back to her home after five years in a government school.

s Shepard, Odell Holdfast Gaines, by Odell and W.O.Shepard. Macmillan, 1946.
A long historical novel covering the period of the Revolution and the early 1800's. The hero is an Indian who tries to bring peace between the two races.

BIOGRAPHY

Coblentz, C. C. Sequoya, Longmans, 1946.
Biography of the Indian who invented the Cherokee Alphabet.

FACTUAL

Hannum, A. P. Spin a silver dollar. Viking, 1945.
The Lippincotts bought an Indian trading post at Wide Ruins, Arizona, and spent four years there. Very understanding portrayal of Indians, especially the little boy who did paintings.

JEWISH AMERICAN

FICTION

s Asch, Shalom East river. Putnam, 1946.
46th St, in New York in the early part of this century with its mixture of nationalities and religions. Jewish and Catholic predominate.

j Gollomb, Joseph That year at Lincoln High. Macmillan, 1918.
Religious prejudice in a public high school. Jim comes to like and understand the Jewish boy whom he disliked at first.

s Graham, Gwethalyn Earth and high heaven. Lippincott, 1944.
Eria Drake, of an old English-Canadian family, fell in love with Marc Reiser, a Jewish lawyer. Racial and religious intolerance well portrayed.

s Hobson, Laura Gentleman's agreement. Simon, 1947.
To gather material for a series of articles on anti-Semitism Phil Green pretends to be Jewish. Vivid picture of discrimination as it affects the educated group, even from those who pride themselves on tolerance.

s Lawrence, Josephine Let us consider one another. Appleton, 1945.
Cecilia, convent bred daughter of a Catholic mother and a Protestant father, marries the son of a Jewish father and Gentile mother. Racial and religious prejudices are well reflected but story is weakened by overdrawn minor characters.

s Miller, Arthur Focus, Reynal, 1945.
The hero, personnel manager for a very anti-semitic firm, finds new glasses make him look Jewish. He meets increasing discrimination and acquires sympathy for the minorities.

s Nathan, Robert Road of ages. Knopf, 1935.
Fantasy in which all the Jews are moving across Europe toward an exile in Mongolia. There are still the same economic, national, and ideological divisions as in the countries from which they had come.

Rosten, L. O. Education of H Y M A N K A P L A N. Harcourt, 1937.
Humorous accounts of a night school for adults. Hyman Kaplan's love of America is evident through all his difficulties with language.

T Sinclair, Jo Wasteland. Harper, c1946.
Jake Brown's memories as tells them to a psychiatrist. His denial of his religious and cultural background had made him confused and ashamed.

Singer, J.F.G. This festive season. Harcourt, 1943.
A Jewish family in New York. The story covers the period of the Passover, Discrimination in faculty appointment at a university is a factor in the story.

BIOGRAPHY

Bartlett, R. M. They did something about it. Association press,1939.
p. 61-72. Louis Dembitz Brandeis.

Chagall, Bella Burning lights. Schocken books, c1946.
Reminiscences of the celebration of the Jewish holidays in Russia in the author's family during her childhood.

Fast, Howard Haym Salomon, son of liberty. Messner, 1941.
Biography of the patriot and broker who helped finance the American Revolution.

Ferber, Edna Peculiar treasure. Doubleday, 1939.
Autobiography. Although in her childhood she met very little discrimination, she is conscious of the need for greater understanding.

s Lewisohn, Ludwig Up stream. Liveright, 1922.
Biography of a writer. For the most mature students.

Lotz, P. H. Distinguished American Jews. N.Y.Association press,1945.
Short biographies of A. S. Ochs, Lillian Wald, Charney Vladeck, S. S. Wise, C. P. Steinmetz, Fannie Hurst, Paul Muni, Yehudi Menuhin, Joseph Goldberger, Carl Maemmle, Felix Adler, and L. D. Brandeis.

s Solomon, H. G. Frabic of my life. Bloch, 1947.
Autobiography of the founder of the National Council of Jewish women.

DRAMA

Zangwill, Israel Melting pot; drama in four acts. Macmillan, 1914.
Jewish life and ideals in America.

FACTUAL

Adamic, Louis From many lands. Harper, 1940.
p. 3-52 Story of a Jewish doctor.

j Fitch, F. M. One God. Lothrop, Lee, & Shepard Co., 1944.
Elementary presentation of three religious beliefs, Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant. Well illustrated with photographs.

GENERAL

FICTION

Allee, M. H. House. Houghton, 1944.
A group of graduate students at the Univ. of Chicago live in a cooperative house. The fact that one is Chinese causes prejudices in one neighborhood. Some of the characters in The Great Tradition appear.

Fernald, H. C. Jonathan's doorstep. Longmans, 1943.
A descendant of an old American family gains understanding of the refugees from Europe and their contributions to the country.

Gollomb, Joseph Tiger at City High. Harcourt.
Same setting as Up at City High but a better story.

j Gollomb, Joseph Up at City High. Harcourt, 1943.
A large city high school, torn by inter-group tensions.

McLellan, M. B. Within our gates. Harper & brothers, 1940.
A collection of stories and short essays about various minorities.

Walden, A. E. Gateway. Morrow, 1946.
Peyton, a spoiled rich girl, and Mig, of Hungarian ancestry are the principal characters in a story of school and winter sports. Peyton gains understanding of others who are different.

Worth, Kathryn New worlds for Josie. Doubleday, 1944.
Two American girls at school in Switzerland find themselves the "outsiders" and must overcome prejudice caused by the behavior of former American students.

FACTUAL

Baruch, Dorothy (Walter) Glass house of prejudice. N.Y.W.Morrow & Co., 1946.
Excellent treatment of prejudice and suggestions for combating it.

j Evans, E. K. All about us. Capitol, c1947.
Simply presented facts about peoples, their beginnings, variations in skin color, customs, etc. Humorously told. Useful for both intermediate grades and junior high school.

Huszar, G. B. ~~Anatib~~ Anatomy of racial intolerance. Wilson, 1946.
Reference shelf. Good bibliographies.

s McWilliams, Carey Brothers under the skin. Little, 1943.
The history and treatment of the various non-Caucasian minorities in the United States and its possessions.

Powdermaker, Hortense Probing our prejudices. Harper, c1944.
Good basic presentation of the formation and effects of prejudices and suggestions for attacking them.

Stegner, Wallace One nation. Houghton Mifflin Co., 1945.
Pictures of various minority groups with a brief accompanying text.

TEACHERS COLLEGE
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
NEW YORK 27, N. Y.

November 4, 1947

Gentlemen:

Sorry it was necessary to mimeograph attached letter involving Brooklyn Tablet and its new attack on intercultural education. (It has previously attacked the Springfield Plan.)

Sincerely yours,

Clyde R. Miller

Clyde R. Miller
Associate Professor
of Education

17 - Intercultural Education

FORUM ON

"THE PRICE OF PEACE"

DR. RALPH W. SOCKMAN, Presiding

RECEIVED
NOV 17 1947

HUMAN RELATIONS ASPECTS

An address

by

DORIS E. FLEISCHMAN

CHRIST CHURCH
Park Avenue at Sixtieth Street
New York

Doris E. Fleischman is associated with Edward L. Bernays, her husband, in the practice of the profession of Counsel on Public Relations at 26 East 64 Street, New York 21, N. Y.

I'VE been asked to discuss three questions about human relations: "What is the scope of human relations as applied to world organization? What is its promise? What are its limitations?" You'll agree, I think, that the questions are broad enough to cover most of our troubles. The chaotic conditions of the present-day world are the direct result of faulty human relations. They are so bad that we may have war again, soon. If we do it seems certain that a human relations debacle will follow the next peace. Only wise and decent human relations can save civilization.

We might answer these three questions quickly and cynically, something like this. The scope of human relations is unlimited. Man's conduct towards his fellow men, and nations' conduct towards nations can be improved forever. The promise of human relations is almost negligible. The limitations are ominous. Time is so short, education is so slow and difficult. Our attitudes on national and international affairs are irresponsible. Most individual Americans don't mix into politics, into education, or any matters of state. We let George do it. We don't even bother to vote in the primaries. We are defeated without a struggle.

But these short answers aren't really complete. There is some hope that we can bring peoples together. Our scientists, and experts on communications may decide to put the brakes on the downward plunge of human relations.

Seventy-eight years ago, a great scientist, Mendeleyeff charted ninety-two elements, all of which he predicted would be discovered in time. He was right. He failed to allow for plutonium, uranium, neptunium and curium. He failed also to list the most powerful element of all—human relations—because technically it's not a physical entity. But human relations is stronger than plutonium, more powerful than atomic fission. It controls and directs these energies. The basis of all human relations, and understanding is communication. We can, even at this late date, make a peaceful world if we communicate correctly with one another. Words, pictures and other symbols give us moral, ethical, spiritual and cultural values. What we tell the child, teaches it to get along with other people. In the same way, nations can learn to get along with one another through effective communications. The evolution of civilization and the history of the world parallel the history of communications.

Communication is the art, or the science, of getting our ideas understood by other people. We can build up sounder human relations at home and abroad by using our enormous communications systems to the full, and using them wisely to increase knowledge of people.

Now you can divide the whole question of communications neatly into two parts. One part is content, and the other is form. Or, what you say, and how you get it said mechanically. Science, engineering, and commercial mass production have made communications media so superbly efficient, that it's possible, physically, to reach the mind of everyone in the world in a short time. Radio, telephone, motion pictures, airplanes, ships, automobiles, trains, and wires race through time and space to carry our ideas everywhere. We drop pictures into the hands of a Sudanese farmer, broadcast a song to an Indonesian patriot, leave a news sheet at the door of a Bulgarian peasant. An inch of photographic film is reflected in five continents almost simultaneously. A whisper encircles the world. But the messages they carry have little relation to the need for better understanding. What they say is not nearly as good as the machines that tap out their messages. Our great networks of communications have achieved technical excellence. Now is the time for them to apply the same skill to the propagation of constructive ideas, in words and pictures to create good will and international understanding. Ignorant, unskillful or vicious expressions injure human relationships. Intelligent communications can guide us to peace.

There is a practical and realistic way of persuading people to see that world organization is necessary and possible. The great communications networks that control world communications can do it by assuming this responsibility. The church, press, radio, motion pictures, wire services, public relations, advertising agencies, book publishing, authors, artists, all have entree to the public's eyes and ears, to the public's mind. They can speak up for world organization as we are doing in this Forum today. For example, they can show Europe how democracy works in practice. Our own State Department's Bureau of Cultural Affairs is working in this direction. But its budget is so limited that its efforts are inadequate. We need the active help of all commercial and professional channels to people's attention, so that we may spread good will and reasonableness in ways that will carry conviction.

While social scientists have made little research in the vast field of communications, a good deal is known, and should be used by the press, radio, motion pictures to solve some of our human problems.

What shall we say, for instance, to uneducated or unintelligent people? What words or pictures will make sense to the millions of men who now shout yes to the half-truths and promises of unscrupulous demagogues? What ideas would appeal to Italian leaders, to French workmen, to Greek Guerillas, to American share-croppers? Dictators know the answers intuitively, but men of good will neglect the science of sharing ideas.

Let's apply the important facts that social scientists have learned. Populations of the world have different customs and points of view, of course, but we can appeal to the common denominators of self-preservation, moral standards and human feelings to bring peoples closer together.

Unesco is trying to increase world understanding, but Unesco is young and comparatively small. It's only one part of a harassed body. It has to go gingerly. Unesco ought to be encouraged and enlarged, because its potentiality for improving human relations are enormous. But we can't expect Unesco to do the whole job of education. Other groups could help. Especially our American systems of communications. They would be wise if they drafted themselves to promote amicable human relations. If they will study and plan the social effects of their messages, they might, even at this late date, conceivably make the peoples of the world understand one another's aims. What we say in this country affects the rest of the world. Our words are reprinted, and influence world opinions directly and indirectly. So we should start in this country. We can use the content of our communications to build a more peaceful daily life right here.

In a sense, America is a microcosm of the entire world. Most of us have prejudices, and fears. Like other people, we are intellectually lazy, because we accept rumors, unfacts and lies.

We are immature, often emotionally unstable. We have aggression, greed, love of power, and all the rest of the psychological zoo. On a broad scale our group tensions constantly disrupt the ordinary course of life. We can't change what we call human nature quickly, but we can change important attitudes by making good use of every road to people's minds.

Can we educate people to break down the ugly barriers between races here in the United States? I think so. Can we clarify the issue between producer and consumer? Can we show majorities how to treat minority groups considerately? Can capital and labor be made to understand that they have the same goals? Can we teach legislators to work for the entire country, and not for special groups? We must, it seems to me, before we can hope to accomplish anything important abroad, where the problems are so much graver.

We can go a long way in a short time, if our experts in communications lead the way. Our opinion molders, all men and women of influence, can educate people to get along with one another. It's not enough to rush curious crowds through red, white and blue Freedom Trains. We shall have to use all the ready-made channels to the public.

How can communications systems solve these social problems? The first step, it seems to me, is for them to set high professional standards for themselves, just as the medical profession has done. A doctor must complete training before he can practice, and then he is bound by the Hippocratic oath. The legal profession sets rigid standards of ethics and education. The communications professions should realize that our social conditions demand a high professional level of education and self-regulation. American journalism, for instance, is the best in the world, and the majority of newspapers, columnists, editors, show great integrity and skill. Certainly, however, at this critical time all these professions should be able to bar those who use the great media to distort facts and thus disrupt human relations.

Our radio obeys the vague demands of "public interest convenience and necessity." But it should go much farther to expand its social responsibility, by propagating methods for bringing discordant groups into harmony, by showing the benefits of democracy. If we succeed at home, we may succeed abroad. For example, we export so many crime pictures that many sections of the world actually believe we are a nation of gangsters, rioters and lynchers. All communications media can give positive value to their messages all over the world. They will become more valuable if they raise their own level of responsibility.

They can insist on better education for their own professions, schools and colleges. They can also use adult education methods, such as seminars, to keep their members refreshed and orientated on the best methods of solving human relations problems.

This is not a matter for government intervention or law. Official regulation would threaten freedom of speech. It's up to the communications industries to regulate themselves. When we have learned how to use our mechanics of communications for sound social purposes in this country, we may be able to show the rest of the world how to do it. We can get clear talk among people and nations, if our free press takes the lead.

Perhaps I had better sum up the things in my mind. There is no limitation to improvement in human relations. Two groups are sufficiently organized to undertake the job of improving them. One is Unesco. The other is the commercial communications systems. Communications are only as good as their content, no matter how excellent are the mechanics. We must be sure that what we say increases international understanding and good will.

We can start at home, in the United States, by educating people, groups and communities in the salient facts of human relations. Public opinion will surely follow the leadership of the professional communications groups.

America's example in solving these problems will help Unesco show the rest of the world how to use communications for good will.

There is no other short-cut. Perhaps, if communications systems work for better human relations, we shall be able to reach the goal of world organization before all roads leading to it are blown to bits. At least we can function as if there were time enough, and work hard and quickly for a peaceful world.

Phi Delta Kappan
Vol. XXIX Nov. 1947 No. 3

Foster Intercultural Relations

By CORNELIUS V. TROUP

THE American teacher is a person of great influence. In many instances, the influence of the teacher far surpasses that of the parents. The teacher has been likened to the potter and the child to clay. This simile is objectionable only because the child, a growing being, is likened to an inanimate object. Nevertheless, the general idea expressed in this figure of speech is sound, for the teacher does shape and mold, for good or for ill. To the pupil, the teacher is a leader—a person worthy of emulation, and whatever the teacher says or does frequently carries with it tremendous weight.

With regard to intercultural relations, there is much that the American teacher can do. Here, in the United States, we see enacted daily on the stage of human affairs a paradoxical drama. In a country founded upon the principle of human equality, we see executed, planned efforts to relegate to a status of inferiority certain groups within the national population because of so-called racial or religious differences. We see, through the press, through textbooks and other media, deliberate attempts to ignore the cultural contributions of certain groups or efforts to minimize their importance as significant aspects of a total cultural pattern.

In the light of his status as a person of influence, the American teacher can help to foster intercultural relations:

(1) By living the type of life which bears testimony to the fact that the teacher respects and appreciates the cultural contributions of all peoples. This goes far deeper than the mere formality of paying lip service to the ideals of sound intercultural relations. The teacher must prove that he knows our present civilization was made possible because of the cultural contributions of many different groups of people. This can be easily reflected in the way the teacher lives with his neighbors; in his dealings with people of other national backgrounds and in the way he reacts to his students who happen to belong to different cultural groups. Young people are not easily fooled and can readily discern the difference between pretense and reality. The teacher who would help foster intercultural understanding must remember that the tree is known by the fruit it bears.

★ Cornelius V. Troup is President, Fort Valley State College, Fort Valley, Georgia. He is a member of Phi Delta Kappa.

(2) The American teacher can help foster intercultural relations by inviting people of different cultures to visit his classes from time to time. In too many instances, young people in school have no opportunity to come in contact with persons of other cultures. Not knowing such people often leads the child to reach the erroneous conclusion that there is but one culture—that produced by people of his particular group. Hence the teacher, by making possible frequent opportunities for youngsters to see and hear people of different "races," can do much toward the develoment of a better understanding of other peoples and greater appreciation of their achievements.

(3) The resourceful teacher can contribute much toward fostering intercultural relations by weaving into his teaching the cultural achievements of all peoples. The history of history, sociology, art, literature, music, etc., has innumerable opportunities to supplement the materials found in textbooks with a plenitude of data pointing out the cultural developments and contributions of groups other than those treated in the texts. For example, the teacher of American history could easily enrich his teaching by including information relative to the part played by the Indians, the European immigrants, the Negroes, and other groups in developing our American culture.

Likewise, the teacher of music could do much toward fostering intercultural relations by giving students an opportunity to learn something about the musical contributions of different peoples. This technique could be employed to great advantage in many ways.

(4) The American teacher can help foster intercultural relations through the intelligent use of audio-visual aids. With the growing popularity of such devices, it is possible for the teacher to use them most effectively in helping young people to understand and appreciate others. The radio, for example, provides a cogent means of bringing to the classroom programs which reflect the cultures of many diverse groups.

The moving picture is another practical way of enabling youngsters to learn about the culture of peoples throughout the world. At a nominal cost, films depicting life in many lands can be rented. The phonograph could also be used to great advantage in presenting the recorded music of many different groups. Other audio-visual aids could be used to advantage in helping young people to appreciate the cultural contributions of others.

(5) The American teacher can foster intercultural relations by believing firmly in and striving zealously to help boys and girls to develop the "one world" concept.

The bitter experiences of World War II should have taught all men that this is a small world after all and that an enduring peace can come only when all of the peoples of the earth understand, appreciate, and respect each other. The teacher who constantly emphasizes the many respects in which all people are alike instead of accentuating the few unlikenesses, is the one who makes the greatest possible contribution toward developing intercultural understanding.

The teacher could use, rather convincingly, the voluminous scientific data which shatters the myth of human superiority and inferiority. This, supported by the teaching of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, should go a long way toward breaking down long-standing prejudices and building up in their stead new vistas of world brotherhood.

The teacher can help foster intercultural relations by ceasing to teach the existence of several "races." Instead, enlightened teachers should know and teach the fact that there is but one race —the human race, and that peoples of different skin colors are merely branches of one great family. When young people can be taught that under the skin all men are the same, the way is paved for teaching them to comprehend fully what is meant by "one world."

We are compelled to look askance at our so-called civilization when we consider the fact that for centuries, men have used their intellectual and physical powers to devise more effective means of destroying one another. If the present generation and generations to come continue this damnable folly, all mankind will eventually be destroyed. To survive, man must learn that every other man is his neighbor and that, as neighbors, it is to the mutual advantage of all to "love thy neighbor as thyself."

In this process, the teacher in America has a great opportunity to make a lasting contribution toward the development of an enduring peace. One of the chief tasks of the teacher is to strive for the development of intercultural understanding as a means of bringing to fruition a society in which the individual worth of every person is fully recognized and appreciated.

Causes of Accidents

Every day 17.1 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are accidentally killed.

Causes for accidents to such children, listed by a speaker before the National Safety Congress section of schools and colleges, included the following:

1. Lack of proper supervision.
2. Lack of proper or safe equipment (including clothing).
3. Use of incorrect equipment for purpose.
4. Lack of knowledge.
5. Lack of skill.
6. Lack of desire (show-off, unhappy child, timid child).
7. Accident-prone child (poor mental health, poor physical health, personality difficulties such as too rapid or too slow reactions, etc.).
8. Adult imposition of activity for which child is not sufficiently matured or prepared.
9. Lack of safe environment (poor or insufficient playgrounds, unsafe home, unsafe schools, poor illumination, unguarded streets, etc.).

For how many of these can causes be removed? How may adults help remove these causes of accidents?

"The pleasures of the senses pass quickly; those of the heart become sorrows; but those of the mind are ever with us, even to the end of our journey."—From an old Spanish proverb.

17 - Intercultural Educ.

RE CIVIL LIBERTIES IN THE NEW YORK CITY SCHOOLS

RECEIVED
DEC 15 1947
Southern Regional Council

To: The Southern Regional Council

From: The Executive Boards of the New York City English Teachers' Association, Biology Teachers' Association, and Social Studies Teachers' Association, c/o Mr. Joseph Gallant, 250 E. 178th Street, Bronx, New York.

The Case

The Superintendent of the New York City Schools, Dr. William Jansen, has advised Dr. Bernhard J. Stern to withdraw as a lecturer from the in-service course offered to New York teachers, "Background and Techniques for Teaching Intercultural Education." Reasons given for Dr. Jansen's request are that Dr. Stern has become a subject of "public controversy," and that he has impaired his effectiveness as a lecturer because he once wrote (1930), under a pen-name, a pamphlet which was critical of established churches.

Further, the Board of Superintendents has indicated that it will not approve the course for credit in the spring term. (Dr. Stern is one of about twenty lecturers in the course.)*

Origins of the Case

On October 10, 1947, Frederick Woltman, in the New York World-Telegram, and, on October 11, the Brooklyn Tablet, attacked the course, writing among other things that "the word 'intercultural'....has now generally come to be associated with propaganda of the Communist Party line."

The Issue

Neither the World-Telegram nor the Brooklyn Tablet has offered any evidence that the course is "subversive." Failure to renew the course will deprive teachers of enlightenment by experts on how best to encourage intercultural understanding in the classroom. That Dr. Jansen and the Board of Superintendents have acted without considering all the facts is documented below, and constitutes a threat to academic freedom.

Action Requested

1. Write to Dr. William Jansen, Superintendent of Schools, Board of Education, 110 Livingston Street, Brooklyn 2, New York, protesting against withdrawal of Dr. Stern and urging renewal of approval of the course.

2. Kindly send copies of your letter to the press and a copy to Mr. Gallant whose address is at the top of the page.

3. Since Dr. Stern is scheduled to speak on January 14, may we urge immediate action?

* ON DECEMBER 10th THE BOARD OF SUPERINTENDENTS DIRECTED THE CANCELLATION OF DR. STERN'S LECTURE AND REFUSED TO CONSIDER RENEWAL OF THE COURSE FOR THE SPRING TERM.

Re Bernhard J. Stern

PRESENT POSITION: Lecturer in Sociology, Columbia University, since 1931.

QUALIFICATIONS: Ph. D., Columbia University, 1927; Assistant Professor of Sociology, University of Washington, 1927-1930; Assistant Editor, Encyclopedia of Social Sciences, 1930-34; Lecturer in Anthropology, New School for Social Research, 1932-1943; Visiting Professor of Sociology, Yale University, 1944-45; Collaborator Carnegie Study of the Negro in America, 1939. (A detailed outline of Dr. Stern's activities are in Who's Who 1948-49.)

WRITINGS: Author and co-author of 12 books among which are: When Peoples Meet. A Study of Race and Culture Contacts, N.Y., 1942. Co-author with Alain Locke. Third ed., 1946.

"...outclasses any other book on the subject."

Book-of-the-Month Club News

Outline of Anthropology, N. Y., 1947. Co-author with Melville Jacobs.

"It has the balance and comprehensiveness expected of your publications, but in addition it has a freshness of approach and an unusually attractive style."

William F. Ogburn, Professor of Sociology, U of Chicago

ENDORSEMENTS

"I have a high regard for him both as a scholar and as a gentleman of manifest integrity. His writings have given him an enviable reputation in the field of sociology. Several of his books...have been of great use to me and my colleagues in historical work. They show scrupulous accuracy, a penetrating power of judgment, and a liberal and tolerant temper. All his recent writings that I have examined show a thoroughly scientific approach toward the problems of our time, free from prejudice or unfairness."

Letter from Allan Nevins, historian and Pulitzer Prize winner, to Dr. Jansen, Nov. 22, 1947.

****

"We in the Methodist Federation for Social Action would consider it very detrimental and alien to our American democratic tradition to eliminate lecturers because of their religious views. Such elimination becomes, if anything, even less justifiable when the views in question are not those at all being expressed currently but rather those expressed seventeen years ago."

Jack R. McMichael, Executive Secretary, Methodist Federation for Social Action, to Dr. Jansen, Nov. 21, 1947.

(continued on page 3)

"...may I express to you the deep appreciation for the intelligent and clear cut presentation you made last Monday evening on the subject 'Can There Be Peace in Palestine?'....Our choice of you as one of the speakers was completely justified. I felt that you were not only fair and authoritative in all your statements, but the spirit in which you presented your address was typical of that which is so necessary to the amicable solution of a problem as important as this."

Philip H. Ahrens, on behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association,
Plainfield, N.J., to Dr. Stern,
Feb. 12, 1947.

****

"Organizations such as the National Conference of Christians and Jews have inquired whether we would be willing to publish Dr. Stern's chapter /on races in Outline of Anthropology/ in a separate booklet as a public service. I am certain that Dr. Stern's oral presentation in a lecture would be in no way inferior to his printed exposition in our books. If he is not encouraged to lecture on this vital topic, will the next step be an attack on his books so that teachers will be deprived of an opportunity to read as well as listen to the findings of an acknowledged expert?"

Dr. Samuel Smith, of Barnes & Noble, to Dr. Jansen, Nov. 6, 1947.

****

"All the men were delighted with the leadership which you gave to the Round Table on Science and Race. With Weltfish gone, we would not have known what to do. You saved the day. Even though you do not believe in miracles, your presence was a miracle."

Rabbi F. M. Isserman, Central Conference of American Rabbis, to
Dr. Stern, Nov. 28, 1945.

Dr. Jansen's Objections Answered

The foregoing is a sampling of abundant testimony on Dr. Stern's qualifications to lecture before teachers on intercultural relations. He has lectured in in-service courses for several years (always without remuneration) without any objection from the Board of Superintendents either prior to or after his addresses.

The pamphlet which Dr. Jansen cited has long been out of print and does not reflect Dr. Stern's current views; nor was it an attack on religion. Many of Dr. Stern's scholarly productions, on which he should be judged, have been subsidized by the leading Foundations in the country.

The use of a pen-name is acceptable practice (e.g., Mark Twain, Ellery Queen). Dr. Stern's pen-name was, for example, known to his colleagues on the Encyclopedia of Social Sciences.

Objections to his lecture on the ground that he is a "matter of public controversy," if extended, would mean that any person criticized in the press would be eliminated as a lecturer to New York teachers.

(continued on page four)

Re The Course

"In-service course No. 117, called 'Background and Techniques in Teaching Intercultural Education' has been described by certain newspapers as subversive and un-American.

"To date, I have attended the first five sessions of this course. During these sessions I have seen and heard nothing which remotely resembles subversive or un-American teachings. On the contrary, I have seen a large number of school teachers meeting to consider seriously and discuss in a highly professional manner how to combat such un-American phenomena as racial and religious prejudices.

"Every speaker we listened to and every film we saw were directed toward the aforementioned aim.

"I hope that you will give serious consideration to this first hand testimony as to what goes on in this course at the same time that you read second hand accounts of the course in the newspapers."

Letter signed by teachers taking the course, to Dr. Jansen,
Nov. 12, 1947

Appendix

An outline of the course, approved by the Board of Superintendents, and now being given, is attached.

12/12/47

IN-SERVICE COURSE NO. 317 AIERTNESS CREDIT GRANTED

BACKGROUND AND TECHNIQUES IN TEACHING INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

Wednesday at 4:15 -- October 1, 1947 - January 21, 1948
Central High School of Needle Trades, 225 West 24 St. bet. 7 & 8 Aves.

1. Oct. 1 - Registration - Introduction - the indirect approach to creating intercultural understanding.
   Mr. Harold Nagler, Chairman, F. K. Lane H.S.
   Film: "Brotherhood of Man"
2. Oct. 8 - Fighting prejudice through the motion picture film. Demonstration lesson to show the use of the film in intercultural education. Mr. Louis Relin, Abraham Lincoln H.S.
   Film: "Does it matter what you think?"
3. Oct. 15 - Intercultural education in the General Science curriculum. Demonstration lesson. Use of 'rumor' slide prepared by Dr. Gordon Allport of Harvard University; and use of the slide-film, "Forward, All To-gether".
   Mr. Alfred B. Kirshner, W. H. Taft H. S.
4. Oct. 22 - Intercultural Education in the English Curriculum. Panel: Mrs. Theresa Carlucci, Central H.S. of Needle Trades, Chairman; Miss Margaret Heaton, Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools; Dr. Lou LaBrant, New York University; Mr. Norman Rubinstein, Food Trades Vocational H. S.
   Film: "Seeds of Destiny"
5. Oct. 29 - The Psychology of Prejudice. Dr. Kenneth Clark, Queens College. Film: "Man - One Family"
6. Nov.5- Intercultural Education in the Elementary School. Panel: Mr. Morris Lipschitz, P.S. 253, Bklyn., and Mr. Irving Caesar. Film-slides illustrating "Songs of Friendship"
7. Nov. 12 - A Social Studies Project in Intercultural Education in J.H.S. 165. Dr. Rachel Davis DuBois, Director, Workshop for Intercultural Democracy.
   Film - "House I Live In"
8. Nov. 19 - Applications of Intercultural Teaching to the Social Studies Curricula. Panel: Mr. Louis Jaffee, S.J. Tilden H.S.; Dr. Howard Murwitz, Grover Cleveland H. S.
   Film: "Don't Be a Sucker"
9. Nov. 26 - The Negro and Intercultural Education. Dr. Lawrence D. Reddick, Schomberg Collection, N. Y. Public Library. This session will be given at the library - 104 West 136 Street. (Take 8 Ave. local to 135 St.; or 7 Ave. Bronx Park Express to 135 Street.)
   Film: "The Negro Soldier"
10. Dec. 3 - The public relations of a community program to fight prejudice. Mr. Robert Norton, Secretary, League for Fair Play.
    Film: "The Town"
11. Dec. 10 - Propaganda Analysis. Dr. Clyde Miller, Columbia University.
    Film: "Americans All" (March of Time - Springfield Plan)
12. Dec. 17 - Research in Prejudice. What prejudice does to people. Dr. Marie Jahoda, Assistant Director, Department of Scientific Research, American Jewish Committee.
    Film: "Color of a Man"
13. Jan. 7 - Intercultural Education in the Biology Syllabus, Demonstration lesson. Mr. Harold Nagler, Chairman, F.K.Lane H.S.
    Film: "A Way in the Wilderness"
14. Jan. 14 - The development of Prejudice. Dr. Bernhard J. Stern, Columbia University.
    Film: "The Cummington Story"
15. Jan. 21 - Moving Forward - This is our America - Organizations for unity. Panel: Mrs. Annette Smith Lawrence, Council Against Intolerance in America; Mrs. Elizabeth Brady, Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools; Mr. Henry K. Craft, N. Y. State Com. Against Discrimination; and representative of parent group.
    Film: "Whoever You Are"

Sponsored by: New York Association of Teachers of Biological Science
New York Association of Teachers of English
General Science Teachers Association
Association of Teachers of Social Studies

Committee: Miss Catherine Shinar, Chairman; Mrs. Theresa Carlucci; Mr. Rudolf Cooper; Mr. I. A. Herskowitz; Mr. Alfred B. Kirshner; Dr. Leonard Lashley; Mr. Louis Relin; Mr. Norman Rubinstein; Mr. James Taite.

Vol. II, No. 10, 1947
Colleges, Schools, Churches, Agencies
Address 5272 Second Ave., Detroit 2
(E5105)

Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Ray P. Harris, Associate Director
Eleanor Carabelli, Secretary
Research Assistants

THE COLLEGE STUDY BULLETIN

*
*****
****

RECEIVED AUG 5 1947 COLLEGE STUDY IN Southern Regional Council

The College Study in Intergroup Relations*
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education

ACTION, ACTION-RESEARCH, FOR 1947-48

1. Once Again, the Goals We Seek
2. Four Roads, None Easy
3. Action Research, How and Why
4. College Study Emphases '47-48
5. Group Process in Colleges
6. Action Projects in Public Schools
7. Community Study and Action
8. Science, Values, and Reality
9. News and Notes, Staff and Colleges

I. ONCE AGAIN, THE GOALS WE SEEK

"In any activity of size," warns a critic, "there is always a danger that one will lose his way, charging off, lapsing back, wasting time. The cure is to state, and restate, major goals, define them, apply them, ask for greater ingenuity in their realization. This is the only way to keep on the beam, to make effort cumulative."

While the College Study is not large, as nationwide experimental projects go, it is large enough to heed this warning. Now, at the end of our second year, with twenty colleges and universities reporting their 200-odd committee projects, we can see the need to affirm, and reaffirm, our major purposes.

> ONE PEOPLE, MANY TONGUES
>
> One problem of our modern world, perhaps at the moment the greatest problem, has arisen from the necessity of curing ourselves, as far as that is humanly possible, of every form of blindness which makes it difficult for us to communicate, to achieve understandings, and to act effectively with others in the interest of a common cause.
>
> --Robert E. Park

We can state, with confidence, what sponsors of the College Study had in mind. Here, in our files, is a now fading, dog-eared document, undated (1944), and much marked up for emphasis.

A PROPOSAL FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE STUDY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN TEACHER EDUCATION

In few words, the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education details the concern of its member bodies in intergroup relations. It takes the stand that these relations, "in all their many forms," are now of "supreme importance" in American life, and certain "to increase in critical nature" as we move into and out of the war's inevitable backwash. The Council then goes on record, as the single most representative national body dealing with teacher education, to suggest a program, and request a budget, for work in intergroup relations. Its general aim is "to stimulate teacher educating institutions to deal more adequately" with these human relations in their total college program.

Nowhere does the Council assume that we in teacher education know how, in any exact sense, to do the work it has in mind. On the contrary, participants in the College Study are charged with finding out how to get the job done. Here, again, the document is clear, "Our concern," it is said, "is to achieve actual changes in the behaviors of teachers." To this end, it is judged that "an adequate program" in intergroup education is one which will stimulate a college "to work through all aspects of its program"--classrooms, staff, campus, schools, the community, etc.

---

*Financed for a four year period by a grant to the American Council on Education from the National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 Fourth Ave., New York.

In November, 1945, as our first year of work neared its end, the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education prepared a second document, a request for the continuation and enlargement of the College Study. Work with the eight institutions in the Study was reviewed and approved, and a bid made to the National Conference of Christians and Jews for sufficient budget to expand the work to include a larger, more representative sample of the nation's teacher educating institutions. A budget was granted which made possible a rather thin service to twenty colleges and universities, perhaps an eighth of the schools making application to us.

LIMITED RESOURCES
MANY APPLICATIONS

What, now, in succinct words, are the things we are after, the goals which guide our many diverse efforts? Our colleges are charged to find out how, under as exact test as possible, teaching practices, and teacher behaviors, in respect to intergroup relations, can be changed in line with the democratic ideals of the nation. Colleges are asked to work cooperatively toward this inclusive goal, with frequent interchange of ideas and experiences, and to make, with as much speed as is possible, improvements in their own teacher educating program and contributions to the profession at large.

HUMAN RELATIONS
Is the title of a new journal of interest to educators. Issued quarterly, $7.00 a year, Research Center for Group Dynamics, N.I.T., Cambridge 39, Mass. Action-research studies

Within the above framework, each college has formulated its own specific interests, its own study-action projects. These run for 1946-47, as was said, into more than two hundred. Each college, each college subcommittee, has been encouraged to experiment, to determine its own major interests, to devise its own procedures. Confusing as this may appear to one trained in laboratory research, we have not found it so in our staff operations. It has seemed the sensible thing to do, the approach enjoined by our educational sponsors. No two colleges have organized for work in exactly the same way, moved forward at the same speed, used findings in an identical manner. All of this is, we believe, an aspect of the problem we were asked to try to solve.

FREEDOM TO EXPERIMENT

At this writing, the College Staff is engaged, in cooperation with the twenty colleges, in analyzing the past two year's experiences for publication in book form. Of particular interest here are the four main roads the colleges have traveled toward their common goal, changes in teaching practices and in teacher behaviors.

II. FOUR ROADS, NONE EASY

One road our colleges have followed, an "assembly line" for a vast amount of factual data, consists of fact-finding studies the only immediate aim of which is to make known what people are like, how people treat people, the conditions under which people live. For example, the State Teachers College at Moorhead, Minn., has assembled more information on its campus population than any other college we know. Faculty committees have worked all year, and hard, at this difficult job, and the coming year they plan to use these data in their teacher training program.

SIGGLE-SOGS AND BIGGLE-GOGS
And Oh my, what a time they had! And it was all so funny, too, for at first you know, they were just one big family. And somebody went away, and somebody else went away, and then they all went away. And Gee, you know what? Well, much, much later, why they didn't know each other, 'cause some were white, and some were black, and some were yellow. And so everybody just stuck out his tongue and said, "Go 'way, go 'way, I'm better'n you."
A purely delightful little book, ALL ABOUT US, by Eva Knox Evans (Capitol Publ. Co., New York) for your very young hopeful.

In general, descriptive studies in the twenty colleges deal with student attitudes, experiences, and groupings. They deal with faculty viewpoints and course content, with public school problems and practices, with area living conditions, social agency and church programs. They are of the survey type, the questionnaire, attitude scale, projective test, student "log," and case study. They do not purport to show any changes in teachers, but merely to assemble data from which such changes in courses, campus life, etc., can be made.

EXPERIMENTAL STUDIES SUGGEST A BIG PAYOFF

Another type of study, in fact the most indisputable road to our basic goal, are experimental efforts to induce changes. These studies, while not as numerous as one might hope, are in sufficient number to suggest that here is a rich area for further work. It is rich from four standpoints. Students are provided meaningful experience in group processes. Group work per se can be made an object of study. The experimental effort in itself is a program change, a new way of educating for better intergroup relations. And finally, action research generates strong motivational goals on the part of participants.

In some college programs, experimentation involves laboratory school and college classrooms, for example use of group relations films or social fiction. Some studies deal with campus groupings, experimenting with say small-group discussion or associational technics. Some fall into the area of college uses of community, for example area visits, field trips, and agency services, and some in the area of planned community action, such as an effort to organize for the solution of some areawide problem in human relations. All these studies introduce some change producing factor and then, by use of pre and end-test data, attempt to infer the nature and effectiveness of this factor.

> SOCIAL TRAVEL
> As a technic in intergroup education. A 46 p. booklet by Edward G. Olsen, Hinds, Hayden & Eldredge, New York, 1947. Eight exciting cases but light on evaluation. Well written.

A third type of college program, not at all numerous in our schools, consists of what we shall call "group process" education. This is an effort, with or without experimental controls, to provide for prospective teachers what John Dewey would define as an "experience in" intergroup relations. For example, it may take the form of a sociodrama on some campus or community problem in which students are cast in relevant reality roles. Since we shall return to this type of work for special emphasis, we shall say no more about it here.

THEORY AND PRACTICE
PRACTICE AND THEORY

Finally, we regard college efforts to build a theory of intergroup relations as a fourth way of working on group relations problems. Where this has been tried, data have been drawn from three sources: studies college committees have made, observations and experiences in the college community, and the systematic writings of sociologists, anthropologists, and psychologists. The idea in this work has been to frame a philosophy of intergroup relations, their nature, causes and effects in child and adult life, which can then be used to judge the kind of work, and the amount of work, the college should do in this field. Where this has been done, as at Talladega College, Alabama, "theory can be made to guide practice, and practice, in turn, becomes the critical test of theory."

> KINGSBLOOD ROYAL
> A new novel by Sinclair Lewis (Random House), has caused a storm of discussion. Story of a white man who discovered a distant colored ancestor and turned Negro, facing almost every prejudice ever known.

Above, then, are the major ways the colleges in the College Study have conceived their task, worked toward the common goal. Have we been wise in the pathways we have followed, the means toward the ends we have pursued? One is reminded of a quote from Abraham Lincoln: "I do the very best I know how, the very best I can," and so have our colleges. For us, in the staff, the year has been most profitable, our learnings very great. We are, in sober truth, right proud of college achievements--happy, proud and grateful. Again, like our colleges, we have no desire to rest on our record. We know now, as do college committees, how to do better some things which need to be done, to put means and ends in tighter harness. This we hope to do in the year ahead.

III. ACTION RESEARCH, HOW AND WHY

A CASE STUDY IN ACTION RESEARCH

The scene is a junior high school, the time is noon, and the writer has come for a visit. In the gym, three white boys have teamed up against two Negro boys at basketball. Nothing strange about this, for the school is almost 50-50 white and colored. A Negro boy comes in and joins the Negro players. A white comes in, sides with the whites. Another white, and another. Now there is a five man white team, with a sub, standing the three man opposition.

Through an opened window, there come sounds of a fight. Seeking, again, the "feel" of this school, I made it out the window in record time. A colored janitor, also window hopping, had beat me there, separating the battlers, scattering the assembled crowd. What had happened, as bit by bit the story unfolded, was this. A white teacher came walking down the narrow cement walk to the gym and was met, head on, by an oversize colored girl.

"I ain't gonna let you by," said the girl. "Now, Mary," the teacher replied, "I'm in a hurry. I'll have to get by." Not budging any, Mary said "But, I ain't gonna let you by." With this, the white teacher tried to push past and was, forthwith, shoved off the walk. Stepping on the walk again, she slapped Mary, knocking off her glasses, and Mary, in turn, hit back, catching the teacher off balance and causing her to fall. At this point, the Negro janitor stopped the scrap.

Similar incidents that day need not be recounted. In short, the school was race ridden, tension filled, unable to do an educational job, unwilling to face its obvious problem. At the 3:35 P.M. faculty meeting, the talk was on the College Study and its efforts to help schools on human relations problems. Asked to name the No. 1 human relations problem of their school, the faculty was unable to do it. The principal appointed a committee to study the matter and report.

When the report came, two weeks later, it would have been unbelievable were one unacquainted with the total school. I asked if the committee had studied the situation, had help, etc., and all the answers were yes. What, then, was the No. 1 human relations problem in the school? It was, the committee chairman said, after detailing the study that had been made, THE CHEWING OF CHEWING GUM in the school! Bubble gum, the worst of all!

Here, then, was the problem for our concerted action, the "readiness" of this faculty for work in human relations. One wants to laugh, and well he may, but such does not educate. It does not sharpen sensitivities, deepen felt concerns, help any group to develop the power to change things of which the group is capable.

> THE CCI'S FIRST JOB
>
> It was Yom Kipper evening. Five high school boys came down the street, killing time. "Cripes," said one, "will ya listen to that guy bellowin'. Ain't that terrific? Like this.."
>
> "Naw," said a pal, "I can do it lots better, like this.."
>
> And so the game started, listening to the cantor, imitating him. Church members came out, asked the boys to leave which made it (for the boys) much better. Leave? H--l, no. Fun, ain't it?
>
> And then some Jewish boys came up, edging in, closer. "Look, you guys, you'd better shut up and go home." And so the fight started--kicking, shouting, punching, breaking up synagogue services.
>
> "And this," writes CCI's director, "was our first job," a long, involved action-research to effect changes in human relations in that area.
>
> ---From Report, Commission on Community Interrelations, New York, '45.

So, we went to work. What was to be done? Obviously, or so faculty spokesmen said, the need was "for a campaign to stop the chewing of gum." We planned it out on the spot, organized it, with a report on progress due in a week. And in fairness, some staff members really worked--homeroom talks, assembly program, etc. Again, we assembled for the report. Faces were glum, for the news was bad. STUDENTS WERE CHEWING GUM WHO HAVE NEVER CHEWED GUM BEFORE! We had scored a perfect flop!

Faced with our failure, we began to probe deeper. Maybe students were smarter than we had thought. Maybe they ran the school. Maybe, maybe.. Talk like this, of course, excited the faculty. Indifference began to give way, arguments to arise.

WORKING TOGETHER TO SOLVE PROBLEM

Why did students do as they did? Who controlled their behavior? As groupwide concern grew on the part of the faculty, we set off on a study of leaders in the school, the idea being to find out who they were, how they led, and if possible to lead through them. This study stretched over a month of time, the faculty sharing in every decision, growing stronger in its unity. When, once again, we faced the chewing gum problem, we had a good idea of what to do, how to tackle it.

Incomplete as the incident is, it illustrates a way of working on human relations problems. Starting with whatever "readiness" he may find, one moves along with a group. He helps them, as best he can, to SEE more clearly, FEEL more deeply, THINK more wisely, until at last, if luck holds, a full grasp of the problem will emerge. This is, in substance, what we want to define as ACTION RESEARCH.

> ACTION RESEARCH ON PREJUDICES
>
> The major assumption in action research is that individuals and groups can be guided to participate in a research role in discovering the facts about their own prejudices. There is evidence that this type of experience makes possible, psychologically, the acceptance of facts and their implications by the researchers for changes in their own attitudes and behaviors. In academic research, these "same" facts would be rejected or "not seen."
>
> --Ronald Lippitt and Marion Radke

Action research is, of course, not to be identified with some particular problem, for example work with a faculty group. It can be applied to an almost inexhaustable range of human situations--the classroom, extracurricular activities, community-wide organization to solve any kind of social problem. In comparison with academic research, the description of a situation or condition, action research has at least four great advantages.

Action research provides the maximum amount of student participation. Young people, who are going into teaching, will find here an opportunity to define their own interests in a problem, uncover elements of common concern, and organize a plan of study and action. Student participation is varied, continuous, and meaningful.

Secondly, we count the group process itself a great positive value. It is a means toward an end, the end being to activate democratic behaviors. In being together, thinking together, working together, students come, if they ever do, to see what people are like, to take their roles, to enter into the personal, subjective aspects of their life. Growth in self understanding seems inevitable, and when it does not occur, or seem to occur, the problem is one for study. No college study and action committee in the College Study seems to have probed as deeply into this as we would like, as deeply as we hope to do another year.

> HOW DOES ANYONE CHANGE ANYONE, EVER?
>
> The very heart of political democracy is adjudication of social differences by discussion and exchange of views. This method provides us a rough approximation to the method of effecting changes by means of experimental inquiry and test...
>
> The very foundation of the democratic procedure is dependence upon the experimental production of social change. Experimentation, directed by working principles that are tested, is in itself, a test of these principles in social action, a way of effecting change.
>
> --John Dewey

The above point is so critical, not only to the College Study, but to all social education, that it should be developed further. The most basic problem in all intergroup education is how to get knowledge translated into action. Data, in college reports, show many direct attacks on this inconsistency, and in almost every case, where information is given, the individual becomes defensive. He regards the evidence as biased or incomplete, or else a particular set of circumstances prevents trying out new ways of action. Even when educative efforts are less direct, the chances are against behavioral changes in line with what one knows to be true, or good, or decent. Guilt feelings arise, anxieties develop, aggressions appear. But by the great horny toad, the old action patterns tend to persist!

Here, we believe, is the great dilemma in intergroup education, the impasse no college in the Study has solved as well as it could be solved. We are inclined to approach the problem in terms of a simple truth. Education is, in last analysis, self-education. It is a voluntary, self-motivated desire to change, to improve, to learn. One must, therefore, want to be different; and the problem is how this mindset can be created. Here group process education has its advantage. It is not only a laboratory for the practice of new social skills; it motivates toward these skills. As one enters deeper and deeper into groupness, as his sense of belonging increases, he will want to be like the group and be liked by it. In consequence, the group becomes the prime agent in the individual's self education. Change the group, help it clarify goals, build unity, etc., and you tend to change its participating members!

CHANGE THE GROUP AND YOU CHANGE THE INDIVIDUALS:OTHERWISE WHAT?

This was, incidently, the basic hypothesis in the chewing gum episode, already discussed. Chewing gum, bean shooting, wise cracking--any kind of student behavior would have done. What the faculty needed was to think in unity about any school behavioral problem; and in this integrative thinking, we took a chance that our best leadership would come to prevail, that we could, in concert and by study, understand and control the behaviors at issue. Help the faculty to educate itself, to see how things work, and you will change the school. Failing this, well, what can one do?

A third advantage in action research is that the action, the experimental undertaking, is in itself a program change. Time and again, college faculties have refused to face the improvements recommended by their own appointed study committees. There are many different ways to account for this, one being that the initial impulse to make changes has lost force with the passing of time. In action research, the program change, for example "the group process way of teaching," is in effect, here and now. Somebody is trying it out, gathering evidence, so that its good points can be made known, its weaknesses minimized or eliminated through better planning. It stands to reason that more program changes, and we hope better ones, are likely to be made, to persist beyond the period of experimental study.

EXPERIMENTATION IS AN INITIAL STAGE IN BASIC PROGRAM CHANGE

BY WHICH ENDS CAN ONE JUDGE THE WORTH OF MEANS OR WHAT IS GROUP EXPLOITATION?
***
Of the modes of persuasion by the spoken word, there are three kinds. The first depends upon the personal character of the speaker; the second on putting the audience into a certain frame of mind; the third on proof, or apparent proof, in the speech itself.
---Aristotle

Finally, we would point out that action research, especially of a group process type, generates strong motivational goals on the part of participants. Usually, as everyone knows, it is difficult to set up study goals which are taken, or can be taken, by college students, much less by towns people, as genuine. They do not make sense to participants, hence any sort of personal involvement is not evident. In group relations work, this is most unfortunate for, as our data show, the subjects' big learning in the experiment is that they do not want any part of it! From their point of view, the whole business is trivial, superficial, a waste of time.

This simply does not happen in well advised group action studies. Actors themselves initiate action; thus results count. One wants to know how it all will come out!

WHY, WHY, WHY
DON'T WE IN EDUCATION DO MORE GROUP ACTION RESEARCH?
***
We give lip service to the fact that attitudes of importance are deeplaid in the fundamental needs of life as molded by group actions and then we proceed to experiment with the use of an opaque projector! Our experimental ingenuity can surely be expended along the lines of our most important hypotheses.
--Murphy, Murphy, and Newcomb

IV. COLLEGE STUDY EMPHASES 1947-48

This all too brief account of college work in intergroup relations, with emphasis on action research, has been given for two reasons. It will acquaint others with our efforts, and it will provide us a basis for remarshalling our forces, replanning our attack. To jump at once to the heart of the issue, Staff members believe that field data, as well as the logic of our present situation, indicate the need for a well-planned, concerted focus on our most difficult problem, the problem of developing attitudes in young people which will show carryovers into overt behaviors. Allied with this target are lesser targets, each important, each related, but behavioral changes should be the bull's eye for 1947-48!

WHERE NOW, IS THE TARGET AT WHICH WE SHOULD SHOOT

What is "the logic of our present situation"? Our Study did not begin work on college campuses until March, 1945. From March to June, these eight first year colleges could do little more than to explore local problems of race in child life, or religious creed, immigrant heritages, income or social-class levels, and rural-urban (or inmigrant, residential) cleavages. College enrolments were skyrocketing, faculty members were extremely busy, time pressed on us all and work was hurried. We got things started. We showed the need for study, the widespread interest of teacher educating institutions in a thorough, largescale study program.

With no apologies for that first year, with only praise for the colleges, we still faced in June, 1946, the need for an around-the-nation exploration of intergroup problems in relation to teacher education. With twenty institutions in our sample, we have made this exploration in the year now closing. We know now a great deal, which we shall shortly try to communicate in book form. We are at the end of a phase in the College Study. We are ready for a new, finer, even a more profitable "fix" on our general problem, effecting "changes in teaching practices and in teacher behaviors" in intergroup relations.

What we wish to propose now for 1947-48 is an all-out attack on the single, most important, most resistant problem in intergroup education, how to translate learning into day by day actions! We ask that our colleges, institutions continuing in the Study and those wishing to inquire into an affiliation with the Study, talk over this proposed focus. If the proposal makes sense, if within its broad sweep, each college committee can do whatever it thinks most important, we will organize forthwith to move the work along. If all the colleges in the Study decide to concentrate for the year on this problem, the total push effect, to use an army phrase, will be tremendous. We should, in sum, reap all the gains of a carefully planned concentrated effort.

WHAT IS KNOWN ABOUT PREJUDICE

****

1) Racial, religious, or other group prejudices, play an appreciable role in the life of 4 out of 5 Americans.
2) Prejudiced persons report very few school experiences favorable to minority groups.
3) Most prejudices develop during the years at school, notable ages 12 to 16, but in some cases as early as 6.
4) Casual contact with minority members does not diminish prejudices as does intimate equal-status contact.
5) Religious teaching does not reduce prejudice, unless it stresses realistic tolerance training and brotherhood.
6) Anti-Negro prejudice is lowest in Jews, in persons with no church affiliation, higher among Protestants, the highest of all among Roman Catholics.
7) College women tend to be less prejudiced than college men, though differences are nowise as great as between students from different parts of the nation.
8) Prejudiced persons are very often unaware, and usually underestimate, the extent of their prejudices.

---Gordon W. Allport and B. Kramer

Let us now consider strategies and tactics. Our line of thinking, cut to the essence, is about as follows. Knowledge is a way of effecting changes in behaviors. This is the fundamental assumption in all higher education, the chief reason why we read so many books. Experience is also a way of effecting behavioral changes; we learn, in Dewey's phrase, by "suffering and undergoing." Either without the other is incomplete, ineffective, so it would be pointless to choose between them. Hence the problem of ends is in a sense solved; we want both knowledge and experience in a realistic program of intergroup education. How are these two ways of learning, i.e. reading books, factual surveys, and the intimate sharing of ideas and feelings, to be put together, to be structured into an effective educational whole?

TRY ONCE, TRY TWICE, TRY AGAIN
THE SMALL GROUP ACTION TECHNIC

Our tentative hypothesis, as already stated, is that action research via the small group technic will bring the greatest insight on how to educate for the kind of life every democratic person so earnestly wants for every child. Reasons for this viewpoint have been given. We would add here only that, to those factors already mentioned (knowledge, experience, small group technic), two more should be listed: personality structure and the community frame of life. Good thinking, like good juggling, demands that one keep the five balls in the air at the same time.

V. GROUP PROCESS WITH COLLEGE STUDENTS

PROMISING AREAS FOR EXPERIMENTAL PROJECTS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Since our principal concern is with students who are planning to become teachers, it is natural, in implementing the above hypothesis, to think of group process education in and about the college. Experimental areas are four in number: in college classrooms, workshops, seminars, etc.; in campus activities, clubs, and the like; in and about the public school; and in the community.

The study plan, in any of these four areas, is a concrete, rather personal, and tricky thing. Like golf clubs, fishing rods, and choice steaks, a wise man would say each man to his own tastes! Whatever the specific design, all plans will have some elements in common.

One specification of a good plan is that it be pointed toward an aspect of human relations of importance in the college teacher training program, that is, toward race, creed, income level, or the like. Another element is that the approach be indirect. That is, housing, not Negroes, be made the topic of study, although the real object is to teach that some Negroes are poor people, that poor people live under bad conditions, and the like. Thirdly, acquisition of new ideas (knowledge) must enter into the plan, and fourthly, the student's past experiences must be made educational content. That is, the student should be made aware of what he has learned, or thinks he has learned, from past living, the need to unlearn and relearn, etc. And finally, as in all research design, the plan will be no better than the scheme by which it is evaluated.

> DEEP DOWN INSIDE, WHAT IS AN UNPREJUDICED PERSON LIKE?
> Case # 28
>
> Subject is mature, optimistic, energetic, outgoing. His intimate family and social groups are of a liberal sort. Shielded, thusly, from acquiring prejudices, he now as a college student, reacts vigorously against them.
>
> He is well integrated, with high behavioral consistency. He has a wide acquaintance range, expending on others much positive feeling. He is not troubled with inferiority, or ego inflation, hence has no uncontrollable urge to proclaim himself as better or worse than others by reason of race, creed, or the like. He is a socially well adjusted individual.
>
> ---Eugene Hartley

We shall now select at random from reports of college work an example of "action research" in each of the above areas. No faculty member would claim that his work is perfect, or near perfect, that he could not under ideal conditions, have done better.

WHAT IS A GROUP, A GOOD GROUP MEMBER, GROUP WORK

At Wayne University, a "group process" way of teaching has been tried out. In substance, a six weeks course on intergroup relations was divided into three two week periods: orientation, group work, class reports and evaluation. In the group work period, 50-odd graduate students distributed themselves into six study-action groupings in terms of their interests. These "aggregates" faced, most of all, the problem of group making, the building of group cohesion. Conflicting interests had to be resolved, a common goal established, a plan of work evolved, factual data and experiences brought together; in sum group became something, not to talk about, but to be and do, an experience. Groups were mixed, as would be the case in any large urban student body. Students came to react to one another in terms of personal qualities, i.e. "a good worker," "worthless scamp," rather than in terms of color, accent, and the like. They began to show a loyalty to the group, a concern for its good name and progress, as has always been true of men under stress.

Group process teaching of this sort can be done in any college. No time? Meet at the class hour. No place? Students will find one. Too much bother? Yes, the lecture system is easier. But consider results. Both systems can get an approval rating from students. But did any lecturer ever find students en masse piling more and more work on themselves? Or talking so much, so animated? Or so obviously enacting roles into which they cast themselves? Or so conscious of their own growth processes? Or coming in to talk over personal problems? At times kind, at times so heartless, a group is a mirror for the reflection of personality, a testing ground of individual capacity to accept responsibility.

MEN UNDER STRESS IN WAR

Although members of combat crews are thrown together only by chance, they rapidly become united by the strongest of bonds. The group becomes an object of extreme affection. Men are proud of their group, resent newcomers. Not what happens to the individual, but what happens to the team is the dominant concern.
--Grinker and Spiegel

Turning now to campus activities, we recall a most exciting evening with some Spanish-American students at Arizona State College, Tempe. In this club, the Conquistadores, talk drifted to status on the campus, experience with Anglos, and the like. In general, Spanish students felt well treated, a view supported by factual evidence.

CAN A LOOSELY UNITED MINORITY GROUP CONTROL ITS OWN MEMBERS

Were things, then, near perfect? No, not at all. There were some Anglo misconceptions, some overt discriminations. Were Spanish speaking students doing anything to keep alive these negative feelings? Yes, with examples. Take the cafeteria line. A student up front would be joined by his buddies. "We should stop line crashing," one club member said, only to be refuted by another. "Sure, I crash the line. I'll keep on crashing it, just as long as the Anglos do." A pro and con discussion, uncovering a few more rebels, but not many.

Another type of in-group problem appeared. It came from a girl under obvious tension. "I came here," she said, "two years ago. I listened to talk about how to treat Anglos, mix with them, etc. So, I did. I started dating a swell fellow. You know what this club here did to me? It pulled me right back inside. It started talk about me--who does she think she is? Too good for us, huh? What is she putting out? So, I stopped dating Anglos."

In the swirl of feeling, the club as a whole got hold of two ideas. Anglo attitudes should be changed and, also, something should be done by the club to control its own group members. These were not hard problems to fit into an experimental study design. The third problem was tougher. Were group ideals and member behaviors inconsistent, as with the girl who was talked about? Was there a need for group action here, a policy review? On test, this proved too hot to handle, too destructive of club unity.

The campus abounds in opportunities to teach good human relations within the context of everyday, real-life living. Were one to write his own ticket, he could set up no better experimental situations. Why do we ignore them? We miss so many big moments when the door is wide open to us, wide open for teaching.

In respect to schools, the experimentalist in group action faces a somewhat different problem. From kindergarten up, we have studied children's behaviors. However, in intergroup education, we are in waters viewed, and correctly, by school administrators as deep and dangerous. One reason is that children are born with parents. Parents have friends, friends have power, and any spark can start an almighty bitter and complex struggle. Here, if ever, good sense and good tactics are needed.

We shall skip illustration here until a later section.

Finally, there is the community. By this, we mean to include the full range of community-use experiences which can be provided in a teacher training program. We mean to include also whatever contact with "direct action" groups a professor feels should play a part in the education of the teacher. Merely requiring the student to put in time at some social agency, some boys' club or the like, falls short of what we believe possible and desirable.

Take two projects from the State College for Teachers, at Albany, New York. An English class wanted to participate in the college intergroup program. What was it to do? Sentiment was for a study of immigrant peoples, their heritages, adjustments, and so on. Why do it; of what use can it be to a Senior soon to start teaching? Ideas were many, broad, and vague.

Should an English teacher help pupils understand immigrant ways of living? Do Old World heritages figure in this? Here was an interest, strong and functional, but not an action research problem. Do native born people understand, and value, their foreign born neighbors? If the class were to study a single phase of immigrant culture, say folklore, each in his own hometown community, could English majors find ways in their own teaching to use these materials in educating for better intergroup relations? What data would be gathered, and how would they be used?

The second problem involved a field study by advanced sociology students of the then pending Ives-Quinn Bill. In the words of its director, Dr. T. G. Standing: "The study was predicated on the assumption that changes in attitudes are incidental products of direct experience, rather than of verbal preachment. Students were required to make a field study, but the class selected the problem. It was, simply, to find out and report the state of public opinion in Albany toward the much debated Ives-Quinn Bill, and no effort was to be made by the professor to modify student attitudes by direct oral instruction. A specially developed attitude indicator, given as a pre- and end test, plus freely written student papers, showed substantial attitudinal changes toward tolerance by the majority of students."

THE PROBLEM OF TEACHING SOCIAL PROBLEMS

***

The student's interest in social problems is an interest in what can be done about them. He wants to know how they can be solved, if solution is possible. But we rarely tell him that, much less let him experience it. We do not let him in on the fact that the heart of any current social problem health, housing, crime, race relations, is value clash, a conflict in which individuals and groups estimate their prospective gains and losses.

--Richard C. Fuller

VI. ACTION PROJECTS IN THE SCHOOLS

All our colleges have made studies in the schools--nursery, the grades, high school, laboratory and public. Studies are mostly of a descriptive sort--children's attitudes, associations, and experiences. These are valuable materials, for they will play a part, presumably, in program changes. But for next year, as several of our colleges have already proposed, we want to stress the type of action program which will try to secure behavioral changes.

Here are six teachers who want to work as a group on some group relations project in their respective schools. Two schools are in a congested slum area, one in Negro-white zone of transition, one in the same type Jewish-Gentile area, and the fifth is near a newly developed, low-cost housing project.

FROM INDIVIDUAL INTERESTS TO AN INCLUSIVE, COMMON PROBLEM

From the above, and whatever can be assumed, how is one to assist these teachers? While procedures will differ, all will show some common elements. First, what are these teachers really concerned about, ready to do some acting on? Talk takes the form of "my interest is..." or "I am concerned about.." Talk will, likely, be rather vague, value laden, and divisive. Thus, the group worker faces the first real test of his competence. What are the basic, underlying elements in all these problems? What is the real center of concern, not yours but their's, the teachers? What one big problem will include all these lesser problems? In this case, it seemed to be the integration of out-group and in-group members on a basis of personal worth. A generalization of this sort is always a hunch, a best guess, and it must be checked with care. This can be done by a why question: why do you (and you, and you) want to integrate children in your school? What good things will happen because of it?

> THESE AMERICANS
>
> ***
>
> They know, and are content that the world should know the worst as well as the best about them. They have an almost boundless faith in free inquiry and full discussion. They admit the possibility of any number of temporary errors and delusions.
>
> ---Lord Bryce

Time spent on the above problem will save time later, for the group is now building its common understandings, its unity for the pull ahead. Of all the evils that can befall one here, word traps are the worst, mostly assumptions that anyone much understands what you are trying to say. One way to escape is to force speakers into examples: for example... and even then misunderstandings will be inevitable. Communication is a most difficult art, a subtle and exciting one.

Step 2 can be initiated with a what question: by what means can integration be brought to happen? Here responses often repeat goals, or deal with forms, or if on the line at all, get too specific. What we want now is the theory of ameloriative change, the instrumentalities which may be of help to us. For instance, whole sentence phrasing is important,

A. Integration can be brought about through use of knowledge
B. Integration can be brought about through shared experience
C. Integration can be brought about through social pressure

For convenience, we call this "principle-application" thinking, for Step 3 is application. After listing as many principles as one can, the group worker might ask: how would this one work in your case? What use of knowledge (books, pamphlets, a speaker) would help parents understand the problem? And then, what shared experience (emotionalized, sociable), etc.

Assured that we, the group, have shared both knowledge and experience, we move on to Step 4, the actual launching of an action program. Of all the means that can be used to implement a given principle, which ones seem most practical in my own situation, most likely to succeed? In specific detail, how can I get the work started and, above all, what kinds of data must I plan to collect in order to show what the project has accomplished?

What is the common problem? Why is it important? How, in theory, can it be solved? Which technics seem most useful? What data will provide a basis for judging the effectiveness of our efforts? These are the questions we have followed in working with many kinds of groups on many kinds of problems.

VII. COMMUNITY STUDY AND ACTION

To some colleges in the Study, it has not made sense to educate for better human relations without, at the same time, doing something about the community. Prejudices, mistreatment, and the like, are structured deeply into the frame of living, so that the best of school work may come to naught.

Colleges have made various approaches to community problems, depending chiefly on their local situation. At Lynchburg, for instance, the research-action focus has been in part on the "symbol system," wherein Negroes and whites cannot associate on a basis of social equality. The technic has been a plan of intercollege visitation, with colored students visiting the Lynchburg campus and visa versa.

At Greeley, the College of Education, in cooperation with the public schools, city officials and social agencies, has spent the year in gathering facts on Anglo-

Spanish relations. An incident will throw light on the study, progress to date and the plans ahead.

Last spring, a public meeting was held on the campus, with three or four hundred persons in attendance. All working committees made brief reports on their investigations--health statistics, job openings, wage rates, juvenile offenses, school attendance, grade progress, adult social attitudes, etc. The Greeley Tribune carried a detailed summary of these facts as a front page article; in fact, it has from the outset given the study the most helpful kind of publicity.

AN ORGANIZED COMMUNITY APPROACH TO A LOCAL STUDY-ACTION PROGRAM

At the above meeting, we began an inquiry into the worth and meaning of all this voluntary sociocivic effort, the question asked many times by thoughtful civic leaders and agency heads. One use was very evident. Colorado State College of Education draws students from, and prepares them for teaching in, the entire Southwestern region, a vast area from the Mississippi River to the Pacific shoreline. Why not work into the college curriculum all of the materials we had gathered in the intergroup study? The proposal made sense to all persons.

> ONLY
> BY STARTING WITH > THE COMMUNITY
> ***
> Only when we start from a given community as a fact in thought, so as to clarify and enhance its constituent elements, can we reach an idea of democracy which is not utopian.
> ---John Dewey

What about the conditions of life in the "Mexican colony," no running water, no electricity, no sanitary measures, a small, poorly equipped school, and so on? And too, discriminating practices in the community? We touched these matters lightly at that time, chiefly to find out how people were thinking, and what was found out indicated, of course, the tenacity of local mindsets, the resistance of status quo interests.

On a third point, we fared better. We have always counted on adults, regardless of age or sex or position, being concerned about children. They want all kids to have a chance, to get ahead, to amount to something. They are, almost without exception, responsive to this line of evidence, to this type of appeal. The depth of this conviction at Greeley, and thus a most promising field for action, is indicated in an editorial in the Greeley Tribune, following the public meeting.

In the editorial, the writer praises the action of the American Veterans in creating a $2000 scholarship in honor of Joe Martinez, a local boy of Spanish ancestry who lost his life at Attu and was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. Editor Floyd Merrill reviews the impressive ceremonies at which the medal was presented and then continues:

ALL CAN ASSIST IN MEMORIAL TO HERO

***

> That was splendid. But at the time we said, and wish now to repeat, that the enduring monument to Joe Martinez, and to other Spanish-Americans with fine war records, would be equality of treatment of their people in everyday life in this community. All could assist in maintaining such a memorial without a penny's expense...
>
> Little has been done about this until recently. A solid foundation for improving intergroup relations is now being laid. The local college and community study... will slowly but surely get results... This survey here, in the three years it is to go, could well be dedicated to Joe Martinez.

And so, while no realist expects needed changes to make themselves, our start is solid and the outlook not unpromising. We have learned much of use in the tasks ahead, and we can move forward, as the situation permits, to further learnings.

The great problem in community work, as in all action research, is how to give people the opportunity to do what they believe should be done, to express in everyday life new behavioral forms. They must know, to be certain, better ways of treating people, and they must will to try them out, to make them work. This is motivation, and in it fact-finding studies will play a big part.

MOTIVATE, ORGANIZE
DELEGATE, EVALUATE

If impulse is to catch hold, to live on, it must be channelized. It must be structured into institutional forms, for instance an area council. Not only do such forms provide an instrument through which a community can work, a means to goal achievement, but they tend also to originate more impulses, to refine impulses and hook them up to objective targets. This is organization, an insightful skill-use job.

To organize is, in essence, to discover interests, to determine talents, and to assign roles. In this, the delegation of responsibility is basic, and a most critical test is the handling of power. Where power is kept within someone's hands, or within a top level clique, all the words about "democracy" make precious little sense. One must have power to act, power to make decisions, if, in turn, he is to be held accountable to the group for his success or failure, a simple lesson but hard to learn.

IMPULSE CREATES STRUCTURE AND VICE VERSA
***
New arrangements breed new minds. The very act of participating with others in organized activity is educative. Organization provides training in responsibility, gives rise, in turn, to initiative. Moreover, people learn to know the feeling of security and satisfaction that comes from cooperative activity by experiencing that feeling.
---Alice Miel

Evaluation is the effort to find out how well we are doing, where we stand in relation to our goals. It is a study function, a group morale builder par excellence, a basis for in-process changes in program, and final appraisal and replanning. Whether we win, lose or draw, the group action process is exceedingly important, hence its evaluation should be planned from the very start.

In community action, it would be most unreal to ignore the buzz saw which lies in wait, the community power system. Many factors operate to perpetuate a cultural pattern, for instance human inertia. But the one factor we are least able to educate against, by all the evidence in the College Study, is the undemocratic use of power. Maybe this is why, in college and out, we sink back into wordy battles on "prejudice," the beliefs that people hold, when it is their actions, and our actions, which count for more. Put in other words, it is not what a community says, but what it does, its discriminatory practices, that teach children undemocratic behaviors.

THE LOCAL POWER SYSTEM

In the year ahead, we shall, for our part, regard no problem as of such urgent importance, not only to the College Study but to intergroup education at large, as the nature, use, and educability, of power interests, local and nonlocal. We hope by careful work to learn a great deal more about this than is now known. Whatever the specific view one may take, students going into teaching need this kind of learning.

VIII. SCIENCE, VALUES, AND REALITY

Any departure from a beaten path, in education or outside, raises questions as to its meaning, worth, and uses. Faculty members in the College Study have vigorously debated these issues, often without final agreement, all of which in itself is a most hopeful sign. "I know of no better way," a college president once said, "for truth to prevail, at long last, than to keep people talking. Right ideas, and true ones, have a way of winning out in competition, or so I have found in a lifetime at this work." This, too, is our faith, and to it, there is little to add, except some brief summary of what we believe to be the viewpoint advanced in this Bulletin, the frame of reference accepted in principle by every college in the Study.

DO YOU, DOES YOUR COLLEGE, HAVE ANY OVERALL THEORY AS TO WHAT INTERGROUP EDUCATION IS ABOUT, HOW IT WORKS, WHERE IT FITS INTO TEACHER EDUCATION, TODAY AND NOW?

Affiliation with the Study commits one to a set of values. One value is a belief in the equal moral worth of all persons. Another is the use of intelligence in relating one's self to people, a reaction to them on the basis of evidence. In the thrid place, one is committed to cooperative action as a way of solving problems, as opposed say to authoritarianism. Fourthly, there is a faith in experimentalism as an educational philosophy, a "trial, retrial and reflection" on what things are, how they work. And lastly, we are of one mind in respect to the significance in the nation, hence in teacher education, of the effects in child and adult life of race, creed, immigrant heritages, income levels, and rural-urban differences. We want, as already stated, a fair break for every person, a competitive chance.

A FIVE PLANK PLATFORM

NEGATIVE VALUES ARE, NONE THE LESS, VALUES

The social scientists we have cited (Sumner, Park, Ogburn and others) could not have reached their negative views on planned and induced social change unless they were guided by a set of general assumptions in their selection and interpretation of empirical data. This implies that they have introduced valuations along with facts in deriving their conclusions as to what can be and should be the nature of man's practical efforts.

---Gunnar Myrdal

In all of this, the role of science is, with scientists, a disputed issue. We view it as inevitably linked with values, negative or positive, in respect say to the efficacy of planned social action. Our reasoning is as simple, perhaps too much so, as that of Robert Lynd. "Science does not pronounce judgments," he writes, "but scientists do." Scientists are people. They have values and they express them, not only in a search for truth, but for truths most worth searching for. If, as is argued, no one can avoid, or should avoid, value judgments, the questions are which values seem best to us and how we can keep them from distorting the data processing aspects of scientific study. On the latter point, we believe that value premises should be explicitly states, showing that we recognize our linkings with our data, and by so doing, put others on guard. They may, as is their right, hold opposite views.

Aside from valuing truth, we value most the use of science in helping people face their own values. From this standpoint, science would function in intergroup relations much as does "the reality principle" in personality adjustment. It would help a society understand its behaviors, to judge their worth. Whether or not individuals, en masse, can ever be led to face reality, and what would happen to them if they did, are still to be determined. On the answer to these questions, a great deal depends; in truth, one wonders if any factual inquiries can be as important.

IX. SOME NEWS AND NOTES

Raymond P. Harris has joined the College Study staff as associate director, replacing Paul K. Hatt, now on full time duty at Princeton University. Ray comes from the Basic College at Michigan State College, in Lansing, and took his doctoral work at Teachers College, Columbia University. His special interests are in functional and general education, in experimental studies, and in the guidance of small group discussion processes.

Paul Hatt has just concluded a workshop on intergroup relations at the State Teachers College, Duluth, in which he was director. His research work at Princeton, while more than enough to keep him busy, will not prevent him on occasion from giving us help on technical testing problems. It may be that he will have time to serve a day now and then as consultant to schools and colleges on their intergroup programs.

Editing college reports, and writing our own chapters, for the first major publication of the College Study, has kept us working overtime. In between times, we have taught an 18-hr per week schedule, tried to scheme through a plan for visiting all the colleges in the Study in September and early October, and withal, done a bit of fishing. Registration for the workshop on school and community problems (Aug. 4 to 15) is more than satisfactory, with half the students from outside the State.

PRESS COPY FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Following publication of attacks by the New York World Telegram, Oct. 1, 1947 and by the Brooklyn Tablet, Oct. 11, on a Board of Education inservice course in Intercultural Education and discrediting Professor Clyde Miller who lectured at the course, Professor Miller sent the letter given below to the Superintendent of Schools, to the Mayor, and to the President of Columbia University.

Teachers College
Columbia University
New York, New York

Dr. William Jansen
Superintendent of Schools
Board of Education
110 Livingston Street
Brooklyn, N. Y.

October 27, 1947

Dear Mr. Jansen:

In the New York World Telegram of October 10, in an article by Frederick Woltman, and in The Tablet, Catholic weekly of Brooklyn, issue of Saturday, October 11, 1947, are attacks on a course in intercultural education offered for alertness credit by the New York Board of Education.

Both the World Telegram and The Tablet denounced this inservice course as having "Reds for Teachers."

For a number of years I have, from time to time, been glad to participate as a public service and, of course, without compensation in these alertness courses of the Board of Education. My subject has been propaganda analysis. I indicated my willingness to participate again this year in the particular course now under attack.

In the Brooklyn Tablet story mentioned above, I note I am mentioned as "former director of the Institute for Propaganda Analysis cited by the House Committee (on Un-American Activities) as a Communist-front organization" and as connected with "a dozen or so other groups found by the Congressional investigators to be Communistic."

I cannot speak for the other persons who have signified their willingness to teach in this particular course or similar courses which may be under attack at the present moment, I can speak only for myself. As an educator and as a citizen of New York I sincerely hope those in charge of our public schools do not yield to these pressures represented by the World Telegram and the Brooklyn Tablet. I would consider such yielding certainly a gross injustice to myself in what it would be tantamount to accepting at face value the false charges of the Brooklyn Tablet.

I consider this matter of sufficient importance to send copies of this letter to Professor Alonzo Myers of New York University, chairman of the Committee for Defense of Democracy of the National Education Association, and to Dr. Richard B. Donnan, Secretary of that committee.

Irrespective of what action may be taken by Board of Education authorities with respect to this course I am inclined to suggest to the above mentioned committee that this particular attack itself be carefully investigated.

For many years I have been a student of public opinion as it involves public education. Out of this study it is plain to me, as it must be to many others, that the Brooklyn Tablet has consistently opposed the idea of American public education, and that the World Telegram, in recent years, by certain of its special writers, has followed fairly consistently the Brooklyn Tablet line.

I trust there will be no yielding by Board of Education authorities to these forces which are enemies of the American ideal of free public education.

Sincerely yours,

Clyde R. Miller
Associate Professor
of Education

17- Intercultural Education

RECEIVED
NOV 10 1947
Southern Regional Council

TEACHERS COLLEGE
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
NEW YORK 27, N. Y.

November 4, 1947

Gentlemen:

For several years the New York Board of Education has given a course for teachers in intercultural relations and methodology. It has been sponsored and administered by: The New York Association of English Teachers, and The New York Association of Teachers of Social Studies, and The New York Biology Teachers Association.

Early in October this course was attacked by The Tablet of the Catholic diocese of Brooklyn and the New York World-Telegram. Since then the Superintendents of the New York school system have been carrying on an investigation of the course, of the coordinating committee of the teachers' associations which administer it, and of various speakers who were named in the newspaper attacks.

The executive committees of the sponsoring associations on October 27 adopted a resolution, addressed to the Superintendent of Schools, defending the course, and insisting upon the maintenance of academic freedom.

What will happen to this urgently needed course is not yet clear.

You may wish to express your opinion to Superintendent of Schools, William Jansen, Board of Education, New York, or to any of the following: President of the Board of Education; Andrew Clausen, Commissioner of Education, Maximilian Moss, and Mayor William O'Dwyer.

For your information the following enclosures:

a) the syllabus of the course and its list of speakers
b) the attacks printed in the Brooklyn Tablet and the World-Telegram
c) the resolution adopted by the executive committees of the sponsoring associations
d) the article printed in the Journal of the National Education Association and reprinted in American Unity to which the Tablet article alludes
e) a letter I, myself, have sent to Superintendent William Jansen with copies to Mayor O'Dwyer, Acting President Fackenthal of Columbia University, and others immediately concerned.

If these attacks move you to any action, I'd appreciate knowing about it.

Sincerely,

Clyde R. Miller

Associate Professor of Education

PLEASE POST

IN-SERVICE COURSE NO. 117 - ALERTNESS CREDIT GRANTED

BACKGROUND AND TECHNIQUES IN TEACHING INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

Wednesday at 4:15 -- October 1, 1947 - January 21, 1948
Central High School of Needle Trades, 225 West 24 Street, between 7 and 8 Avenues.

1. Oct. 1 - Registration - Introduction - the indirect approach to creating intercultural understanding.
Mr. Harold Nagler, Chairman, F. K. Lane H.S.
Film: "Brotherhood of Man"

2. Oct. 8 - Fighting prejudice through the motion picture film. Demonstration lesson to show the use of the film in intercultural education.
Mr. Louis Relin, Abraham Lincoln H.S.
Film: "Does it matter what you think?"

3. Oct. 15 - Intercultural education in the General Science curriculum. Demonstration lesson. Use of 'rumor' slide prepared by Dr. Gordon Allport of Harvard University; and use of the slide-film, "Forward, All To-gether".
Mr. Alfred B. Kirshner, W. H. Taft H.S.

4. Oct. 22 - Intercultural Education in the English Curriculum.
Panel: Mrs. Theresa Carlucci, Central H.S. of Needle Trades, Chairman; Miss Margaret Heaton, Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools; Dr. Lou LaBrant, New York University; Mr. Norman Rubinstein, Food Trades Vocational H.S.
Film: "Seeds of Destiny"

5. Oct. 29 - The Psychology of Prejudice. Dr. Kenneth Clark, Queens College
Film: "Man - One Family"

6. Nov. 5 - Intercultural Education in the Elementary School.
Panel: Mr. Morris Lipschitz, P.S. 253, Bklyn. and Mr. Irving Caesar.
Film-slides illustrating "Songs of Friendship"

7. Nov. 12 - A Social Studies Project in Intercultural Education in J.H.S. 165.
Dr. Rachel Davis DuBois, Director, Workshop for Intercultural Democracy.
Film: "House I Live In"

8. Nov. 19 - Applications of Intercultural Teaching to the Social Studies Curricula.
Panel: Mr. Louis Jaffee, S.J. Tilden H.S.; Dr. Howard Hurwitz, Grover Cleveland H.S.
Film: "Don't Be a Sucker"

9. Nov. 26 - The Negro and Intercultural Education. Dr. Lawrence D. Reddick, Schomberg Collection, N.Y. Public Library
This session will be given at the library-104 West 136 St. (Take 8 Ave. local to 135 St. or 7 Ave. Bronx Park Express to 135 St.)
Film: "The Negro Soldier"

10. Dec. 3 - The public relations of a community program to fight prejudice. Mr. Robert Norton, Secretary League for Fair Play
Film: "The Town"

11. Dec. 10 - Propaganda Analysis. Dr. Clyde Miller, Columbia University
Film: "Americans All" (March of Time-Springfield Plan)

12. Dec. 17 - Research in Prejudice. What prejudice does to people.
Dr. Marie Jahoda, Assistant Director, Department of Scientific Research, American Jewish Committee.
Film: "Color of a Man"

13. Jan. 7 - Intercultural Education in the Biology Syllabus, Demonstration lesson.
Mr. Harold Nagler, Chairman, F. K. Lane H. S.
Film: "A Way in the Wilderness"

14. Jan. 14 - The development of Prejudice.
Dr. Bernhard J. Stern, Columbia University.
Film: "The Cummington Story"

15. Jan. 21 - Moving Forward-This is our America-Organizations for unity
Panel: Mrs. Annette Smith Lawrence, Council Against Intolerance in America; Mrs. Elizabeth Brady, Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools; and representative of parent groups. Mr. Henry K. Craft, N.Y. State Com. Vs Discrimination
Film: "Whoever You Are"

Sponsored by: New York Association of Teachers of Biological Science
New York Association of Teachers of English
General Science Teachers Association
Association of Teachers of Social Studies

Committee: Miss Catherine Shinar, Chairman; Mrs. Theresa Carlucci, Mr. Rudolf Cooper; Mr. I.A. Herskowitz; Mr. Alfred B. Kirshner; Dr. Leonard Lashley; Mr. Louis Relin; Mr. Norman Rubinstein; Mr. James Taito.

Copied from: World Telegram, October 10 1947

3 COMMIE COURSE INSTRUCTORS HOLD CITY LECTURE JOBS

LISTED AS EXPERTS IN CLASSES LEADING TO TEACHER PAY RISES

by Frederick Woltman

One seasoned Communist and two members of the Communist party's Jefferson School faculty are featured in an in-service course offered to teachers in the city's school system by the Board of Superintendents, it was learned today.

By attending their lectures, public and high school teachers can help work off alertness credits required for their annual pay increments.

The seasoned Communist is Dr. Bernhard J. Stern of Columbia University, who formerly taught at the Communist Workers School and wrote pamphlets for the party under the name of Bennett Stevens. He will lecture on "The Development of Prejudice" in the Board-sponsored course on January 14.

OTHERS TEACH AT JEFFERSON

The two other lecturers teach in city schools as well as the Jefferson School, which is the party's training center for aspiring Marxist-revolutionaries.

They are Louis Rolin, of Abraham Lincoln High School, Coney Island, and Morris Lipschitz, of P.S.253, Brooklyn.

The course itself, called "Background and Techniques in Teaching Intercultural Education" is given every Wednesday afternoon at the Central High School of Needle Trades. Most of the 15 scheduled lecturers come from the school system or are outside authorities and have no Communist connections.

ALL CALLED EXPERTS

All 15, however, are termed experts in the Board of Superintendents printed booklet, "In-Service Courses For Teachers".

Dr. Stern's chief literary contribution to the cause of Communism was a pamphlet, "The Church and The Worker", which generally expounded Marxist atheism. He also edited Science and Society, Stalinist-Marxist magazine, and served on scores of Communist fronts.

With scores of other Communists, he signed a statement in 1938 defending the Moscow purge trials. It was given out in the name of "American progressives".

Mr. Lipschitz's subject for the in-service course is "Intercultural Education in the Elementary School" with "film slides illustrating 'Songs of Friendship'".

ROLE AT JEFFERSON SCHOOL

Jefferson School lists him as teaching "Current Problems of Jewish Life," one subdivision being "the role of British and American Imperialism."

Mr. Rolin's subject for the course is "Fighting Prejudice through the Motion Picture Film." At the Jefferson School, it's catalogued as "Fighting Prejudice through Movies and Music."

On its first anniversary last February, People's Songs listed "Lou Rolin" as sending birthday greetings. People's Songs is the Communist party's venture into the music field for promoting the class struggle here through ballad singing.

Meanwhile, the World-Telegram queried the Board of Education for its policy toward teachers who do outside work in Communist institutions such as the Jefferson School. A spokesman replied that the Board's hands are tied since there is no ban on it in the state education law.

Copied from THE TABLET
A CATHOLIC WEEKLY
BROOKLYN 17, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1947

CITY SPONSORS COURSES BY REDS FOR TEACHERS (Headline on Page 1)

ALERTNESS CREDIT GRANTED FOR PROGRAM CONDUCTED BY SEVERAL EXPOSED BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

There are certain words which, after years of respectability, suddenly fall into disrepute because of questionable association. The word "intercultural" is one of these. It has now generally come to be associated with propaganda of the Communist Party line.

An in-service course for teachers, given under the auspices of the Board of Education of the City of New York and entitled "Background and Techniques in Teaching Intercultural Education," is a case in point.

One unfamiliar with Communist propaganda would suppose that a course with the above title would deal with the customs, the mode of living, the literature, art, music, religion of the various nations from which Americans derive them, together with the best methods of presenting this subject matter sympathetically.

Here, however, are some of the titles of the lectures to be given: "Fighting Prejudice Through the Motion Picture Film," "The Psychology of Prejudice," "The Development of Prejudice", "Research in Prejudice", "Propaganda Analysis."

OVER-EMPHASIS NOTED

One lecture on the means of combatting prejudice might be expected in such a course - but six? This over-emphasis on prejudice is part of the party-line technique which seeks to divide and conquer by stirring up hate among minority groups, by making them feel more discriminated against than they actually are.

The list of subjects alone would arouse one's suspicions, but a perusal of the names of those who are to give the lectures confirms.

Dr. Bernhard J. Stern, of Columbia University, has the most glaring record of Communist Party affiliations, more than thirty all told. He is considered by the House Committee on Un-American Activities to have been one of the "leading members of the Communist Party."

He wrote under the name of Bennett Stevens for International Publishers a Communist publishing house. As recently as Sept. 2, 1947 the House Committee issued a report on the Civil Rights Congress as a Communist front organization. It was shown in this report that Bernhard J. Stern was affiliated with the organization.

CLYDE MILLER ON PROGRAM

Included among the speakers for the Board of Education in-service course for New York City's teachers is Clyde R. Miller, also of Columbia. He is best known as former director of the Institute of Propaganda Analysis, cited by the House Committee as a Communist front organization. His name has been connected with a dozen or so other groups found by the Congressional investigators to be communistic.

It may be recalled here that during the Rapp-Coudert investigation Dr. Miller was vigorous in his opposition to the Committee and became involved in a controversy with the New York "World-Telegram." In the course of the debate he stated over and over again that Communism was not a menace to the New York City school system.

(continued)

His inclusion as one of the lecturers in an in-service course is particularly an insult to every Catholic teacher in New York City school system because only last June, in an address at Colgate University he stated that "members of the Catholic Hierarchy in the United States are representatives of a foreign power" and he urged that the foreign agents Registration Act "should apply to agents of the Vatican State as much as it applies to those of the Kremlin."

"RUMOR" SLIDE A TOPIC

Although not present in person, Dr. Gordon Allport's influence will be felt through the use of his "rumor" slide. Dr. Allport, professor at Harvard, was cited five or more times by the House Committee for his pro-Communist activities.

The first lecture was to be given by a Louis Relin of Abraham Lincoln High School, who, as it was revealed by Frederick Woltman in the "World-Telegram" on October 1, is also a teacher in the Communist Party's Jefferson School of Social Science.

The final lecture of the course is to take the form of a panel discussion in which Mrs. Annette Lawrence is to be a participant. Mrs. Lawrence, member of the Council Against Intolerance, is co-editor with James Waterman Wise of its publication "American Unity". In the April, 1947, edition of "American Unity" appeared a slanderous article against Christian clergymen. Reprints of this article, by the way, were circulated among principals of the New York City schools.

Many questions come to mind.

Who initiated this course?

Who is responsible for the selection of the lecturers?

Why are these men willing to give of their time and energy without ostensible remuneration?

Why in an in-service course for teachers, given under the auspices of the Board of Education, are there so many whose pro-Communist leanings are a matter of record?

Were the members of the committee which approved this course ignorant of their affiliation?

Or was the committee cognizant of their background yet willing to permit them to promulgate their ideas among New York City school teachers because members of the committee also subscribe to them?

Or did members of the committee succumb to some pressure?

RELEASE FOR PRESS:

October 28, 1947

Dr. William Jansen
Superintendent of Schools
Board of Education
Brooklyn, 2, N.Y.

Dear Sir:

The executive boards of the English Teachers Association, Association of Teachers of Social Studies and the New York Association of Teachers of Biological Science met on October 27, 1947 with the joint committee of these associations which has been responsible for the planning and conducting of the in-service course "Background and Techniques for Teaching Intercultural Education." Our acquaintance with the personnel of the committee was renewed. The objectives and procedures of the course that they are conducting were reviewed.

The report of the committee convinced us that their work in organizing the course and in achieving the objectives stated deserves our continued sponsorship. We felt that the time was opportune for us to restate our confidence in the committee and our complete endorsement of their work. We believe that the committee in charge of the course has exercised its best judgement as to how such a course should be organized, and as to how the various topics should be presented.

We should like to point out that the speakers selected for this course were chosen on the basis of their competence for their respective assignments. The list of speakers as a whole was approved by the Board of Superintendents in Janu ary 1947 and again in June 1947.

Furthermore we have taken cognizance of the fact that the number of teachers who elect this course for credit has always been large and has increased considerably during the past year. This is indicative of the need for this type of course at the present time and a recognition of its value by the teachers who have participated in its program. The course of world events has placed upon all teachers in our democratic society the responsibility for spreading the message of unity and brotherhood, and of aiding their pupils to recognize and combat the forces of intolerance. The approval of this course for in-service credit by the Board of Superintendents has aided materially in bringing its valuable content to the many teachers who have attended. We look forward to your continued support and encouragement.

We offer our cooperation to you in considering further questions that may arise in connection with this course.

Although members of the executive board of the Association of Teachers of General Science were present, they did not constitute a quorum of their board and therefore did not vote on the motion to send this letter. The executive boards of the other three sponsoring associations voted affirmatively to do so, and have empowered me to send this letter in their name to you.

I. Alex Herskowitz
Member of Committee for in-service course "Background and Techniques for Teaching Intercultural Education"

Associations that have approved sending this letter:

1. The English Teachers Association
   Shirer Van Steenburgh, President

2. The Association of Teachers of Social Studies
   Bernard Greenberg, President

3. The New York Association of Teachers of Biological Science
   Elias Blechman, President

Marion Pease

Children are born without prejudice. No white baby dislikes any colored baby, and no colored baby knows what inferiority is

A Famous Novelist

and Humanitarian Asks—

Do You Want Your Children to Be Tolerant?

By Pearl S. Buck

CAN YOUR children be taught tolerance? Not unless you understand the difficulties in such teaching! Certainly tolerance cannot be taught by any easy, ready-made method.

Tolerance—an ugly word—is not even enough. When one is tolerant, it means that he can only endure. We have to teach something much more constructive than a passive acceptance of the existence of other creatures.

Tolerance implies lack of pleasure in such acceptance. All of us must learn to enjoy knowing as friends those whose looks and ways may be different from ours. Knowledge must lead to understanding, in order that enjoyment may be a pleasant fruit, enriching life for us all.

Where can you and your children learn such tolerance? Nowhere, as school and church and home now exist in our average communities.

To begin with, children learn no theories which they do not see practiced. Life in the community contradicts too often what the school teaches. This is eternal struggle between school and community.

Even the school's own practice often contradicts what it teaches. All the teaching the school can give a child will not teach him tolerance if colored children are not admitted to the classrooms. All that a teacher can say will not sell him on tolerance if that same teacher will not invite Negroes, however well educated and delightful, to her home.

But even if there are schools that practice what they teach, they still meet the obstacle of the home which clings to prejudice. Much of the conflict in the average American's life comes from the contrast between what he is taught at school and what he sees practiced outside. If your boy or girl is

(over)

Reprinted from Better Homes and Gardens Magazine
Copyright, 1947 by Pearl S. Buck;
By permission of David Lloyd, agent of Pearl S. Buck very intelligent, the school may win.

But the very intelligent child is not the average child. Moreover, the average American youngster, by some mystery which our educational specialists ought to discover, often dislikes school. Therefore, it is probable that he will absorb much of his real education from the home, rather than from the school. This puts an intolerable burden on the school.

I WISH it were possible for the overburdened school to know that it has the active cooperation at least of the church in this matter of tolerance. If church and school would work closely together in this most essential of all teaching, the prejudices in the home might be overcome.

But alas, the teachings of human equality, so beautifully expressed in the sacred scriptures of all peoples, are not fulfilled in practice in most American communities. Your child's observing and absorbent mind hears the preacher in the pulpit, but he does not see colored members in the congregation. He is taught in Sunday school to give pennies to the people of Africa and China, but no one suggests for him a connection between those peoples and the Negro and the Chinese in his own town.

What then? Are we to give up trying to teach tolerance until such a time as our community changes its pattern? No, for this pattern will never change unless we and our children change it. We must find new ways of teaching. We must utilize the handicaps instead of ignoring them.

LET us start with one blessed fact. Children are born without prejudice. No little white baby dislikes any colored baby, and no little colored baby knows what inferiority is. Somewhere along the way the tragically false teaching begins. Perhaps you begin it yourself, when you pull your toddler away from a little colored child passing by. The two are not allowed to clasp hands or to play together. By the time your child has reached school the lesson is learned thru many incidents, and the teacher has then to cope with the fact. If she herself practices prejudiced behavior, the lesson goes on.

And yet it is encouraging to see how the natural justice of the child persists. A Negro friend told me of two football teams in a Texas town. They were champion teams in their own race groups, but they wanted to play a match together. Their coaches forbade it, whereupon they agreed to play secretly. They had a fine game, by lucky chance a tie.

I am indebted to The New Yorker for an even better true story, one which took place in a certain city where race riots threatened. Children, black and white, playing on a street were observed to be playing "race riot." But the colored children were fewer than the white, so in order that the game could be perfectly fair, some of the white boys volunteered to be "colored."

What tragedy to warp and twist a child into hating those not like himself! Yet that is what adults do to their children everywhere in this land of ours.

BUT the very failures of the community can be used by the wise parent, teacher, and minister who wants to teach tolerance. Children understand so amazingly well the problems of life around them if they are given perspective. That is, if they know what the problem is and where they stand in regard to it. How shall we begin to teach?

In the first place, let us plant the child firmly in his whole world. He is not only the dweller in a town, in a state, in a nation; he lives also in the world.

If he is white, let him realize that the white people in the world are a minority—and rather a young one. The white people have much to be proud of, because, even tho they are so young, they have got hold of a wonderful thing called science, which has helped some people, altho a wrong use of it has killed more than it has helped. That is bad; let us acknowledge it. Let us teach the child that as a white person he can change it some day.

MEANWHILE, let him realize that the world is full mostly of colored people. These colored people are of many varieties and kinds. The oldest and finest civilizations belong to them. China and India are the mother civilizations. Their people understood even science long before we did. Let us help the child to investigate the sciences as they were in India and Egypt, and investigate the way China felt toward inventions that might be harmful to people. There is a legend, for example, that airplanes, invented a thousand years ago in China, were forbidden because the emperor foresaw that such machines might one day drop bombs on innocent people. Yes, the Chinese of that day even had bombs. Gunpowder, first made in China, was early diverted to making firecrackers instead of ammunition.

Those old civilizations went thru the warlike period in which we now are and rejected arms and wars because their wise men, teachers, and religious leaders, taught them it was foolish and wrong. A human attitude, rather than a political or militaristic one, developed out of those civilizations. India was an old and high civilization of black people when white barbarian tribes came invading from Europe.

LET your boy or girl be properly planted in our world and in its true history. It has been a strange fact—can it be conscious?—that our western educational emphasis has been placed upon the relatively short life of Greece and Rome, whose peoples were white, rather than upon the far more ancient, and in some ways the far more important and valuable, civilizations of peoples who are dark—and who still exist!

Your child can be helped to approach the colored people in his own community by learning first of their origins. He must understand how it is that 13 million Americans are Negro. Who brought them here and why? Whose is the injustice? Can white children compensate for the cruelties of their ancestors? Yes, by present justice. This is their duty and their privilege.

YOUR children ought to know that the Negroes who were wickedly seized and sold into slavery were not savages. Savages do not make good workers. The slaves were people of old and even of civilized tribes, who had their own ways of life and thought. They were the best of those tribes, the young and the handsome and the strong. How did our ancestors take part in such an evil trade?

He can be taught thru geography, too, to understand the colored peoples in his community. Africa is a magic continent, rich in every sort of life and resource. It has a history, a civilization, languages and arts, yesterday and today. Only its climate, the hot sun of ages, has made the people dark. Skin darkness is a mere physical protection against the powerful rays of the sun. So would we grow dark if we lived long enough in Africa. But inside we would be what we are, and the Africans inside are exactly the same as we—and the Africans are Negroes.

SCIENCE as well as history and geography must help the child to learn tolerance. Science must teach him that the human brain is the same brain, varying only in individuals. The Negro child is not mentally inferior. He merely lacks equal opportunity, and this is an injustice the white child can help to mend.

Such background the school should and must provide. But it has to be done by definite planning and cooperation with church and home. Tolerance must be taught thru everything that a child learns. It cannot be taught as a separate "subject" in the classroom. It has to pervade the school as an attitude, a lens thru which the child surveys the past and the present. It must pervade the community, thru church and home.

BUT suppose one of them—church, home, school—is backward? Suppose a parent refuses to practice tolerance? Suppose a minister considers it outside the field of religion? Suppose a principal will not think of it?

Then those few in the community who know that human equality is essential in our world must come together to plan for leadership and a program. Children can be enlisted to help in changing community practices. The community can be explained to them with all its backwardness, in terms of simple lack of primary knowledge and consequent understanding. To know all is to understand all. But older people have not had the opportunity to know all. New people, a new world, must produce new attitudes.

Can the adults of the community, too, be given this new education? They should be, if there is not to be estrangement. They can be taught best by the simple necessities of our present world. They can be taught that if we are not to go like sheep to the slaughter of final war, we must know what our world is and what is going on in it. The old indifference and local absorption cannot continue. If we relapse into our before-the-war attitudes and limitations, war will burst upon us as suddenly and as unexpectedly as the atomic bomb fell upon the people of Hiroshima—and we shall be as helpless.

EVERY American community must wake up and stay awake in the world of today. The sole protection that we have against this final war is to know other peoples well and to understand what they are thinking and feeling—to know them well enough to demand discussion and patience, to know them well enough to see justice in their claims as well as in our own, to know them well enough to act with justice when there is conviction on both sides.

A new education in tolerance, for young and old, is what we need and what we must have

But the materials for such education are not to be found within our communities as they now are. They must be gathered from all the world of peoples. The most valuable of all materials for education in tolerance are human beings, men and women from other countries, citizens of other civilizations. The best education in tolerance is to meet and know such individuals. Then the emotions of friendship are stirred to life. A cultivated and imaginative man from Africa, black as coal and with a sense of humor as vital as electricity, spent days with us this year, and in our little community prejudice melted away like mist before sun. Visitors from India and China, too, win interested glances from us, but no more intolerance.

THESE countries mean people to us now. One pleasant person from another land or race coming into a community as a visitor is worth a carload of books and a trainload of academic teaching. The human touch is the only way to cure prejudice and build tolerance.

But behind the education are the educators. The first step toward teaching our children tolerance is for the adults of the community, the ministers and priests and rabbis, the newspaper editors, the teachers, and parents, to come together and decide if they really do want their children to learn tolerance and to practice it. If they fear the consequences, it is better to make no pretenses of teaching a theory that's not to be put into use. There is too much of such teaching already showing its dangerous effects in split personalities, restlessness, discontents, and the extremes of apathy and violence.

Do you want your children to learn tolerance? Really?

Please answer that question honestly. Teaching is easy when practice goes with it.

Printed in U.S.A.

17 - Intercultural Educ

HOT COPY

By George Vick

The idea that crystallized last week with the formation of the Inter-Race Council was born in the minds of Sandie observers who visited Patten School, the negro high school, a few weeks ago. Astounded by the inadequate and super-crowded facilities these underdog negro scholars were obliged to use, the Sandie investigators decided to try to alleviate the situation.

They saw brilliant negro youths, hampered and held down by lack of facilities Sandies take for granted. They saw the senior class holding class in the corridor of the school.

These Sandie humanitarians talked with intelligent negro students, young men and women who will be fighting against overwhelming odds all their lives. They talked with one young man in particular who impressed them with his winning personality and his quick mind.

As they talked together, the Sandie visitors began to grasp just what a battle the negro student has today. They soon realized that these same youths they were talking with would soon be fighting to prove their worth against deep prejudice, violent hatred and ever-present contempt.

They began to see the many colleges that would close their doors against them, the many business firms that would send them away

(Continued on Page 8)

IS BASHFUL JACK

The Silent Type

After several futile attempts to gain recognition during a Civics discussion, Jack Fuqua's efforts were at last rewarded.

"What is your comment, Jack?" Miss Laura Roberts asked.

Following a moment's hesitation, Jack replied sheepily:

"I've waited so long that I've forgotten what I was going to say."

Quoth the Raven...

Since the removal of hall guards under the Honor System, never more will Sandies be halted as this unfortunate girl was. Rifles are no longer needed to restrain the vigorous plainsmen from Sandie land.

The Sandstorm

AMARILLO HIGH SCHOOL TEXAS

New Courses Convene Today

"What is your comment, Jack?" Miss Laura Roberts asked.

Following a moment's hesitation, Jack replied sheepily:

"I've waited so long that I've forgotten what I was going to say."

They began to see the many colleges that would close their doors against them, the many business firms that would send them away

(Continued on Page 8)

Since the removal of hall guards under the Honor System, never more will Sandies be halted as this unfortunate girl was. Rifles are no longer needed to restrain the vigorous plainsmen from Sandie land.

The Sandstorm

Vol. XXIII — Monday, January 26, 1948 — Number 9

Lynch Asks Confidence Vote of School Board

Amarillo Times Cut.

Board To Decide By Feb. 2 Meet

Whether the Golden Sandies will enter competition next fall under the tutelage of a new mentor or not is slated to be decided a week from tonight as the Board of Education gives its verdict on a vote of confidence called for by Head Coach Howard W. Lynch.

At its last meeting, the Board heard Coach Lynch ask them to affirm their belief in his proficiency as director of Sandie destinies.

During the 11-year period Mr. Lynch, affectionately known among his gridders and fans as "The Bull," has been responsible for the career of the Black and Gold, AHS has garnered one state championship, two bi-district and one quarter-final berths. They advanced to the semi-finals in 1942 and have hung up seven district banners among their trophies.

In the same 11 years, no school has won the coveted state trophy at a repeat performance, each season having found a new champion crowned.

Not only loved by his players, Coach Lynch stands high in the respect and admiration of the students in general as shown by the ovations he receives in pep rallies and by his being named to the Steering Committee of the Honor System.

New Courses Convene Today

Five new courses, all additions to the speech and commercial departments, will form the new curriculum for the second semester.

Radio and interpretation, corrective speech, business English and office practice are definitely on the schedule. A salesmanship course will be offered if enrollment is large enough.

Two classes, first and fourth periods, in radio and interpretation will be held under J. H. Flathers. The two objectives of the course are to improve the interest of the student in speech work and to improve his ability to do more visualized radio speech. Students will use the PA and a tape recorder in class and do some outside radio work.

In keeping with modern curriculum trends, corrective speech will be taught by Mr. Flathers at the fifth period for students having difficulty with stuttering, lisping or nasality.

One year's typing experience is required for enrollment in the fourth period office practice class under Miss Velma Shows. The course consists of training in filing and invoice writing.

Mrs. Corrah Braudt will teach business English third period. Though this subject includes grammar, its chief object is training in business correspondence and letter writing.

Salesmanship, given first period by Miss Icie B. Johnson, will adapt students to all types of sales work.

Another change in curriculum is the disbanding of all zero hour classes.

In line with the difficulties in modern education as voiced by the Prosser Resolution (See "60 Per Cent Leave School Unfit"), AHS's curriculum additions are all slanted toward practical training of students.

New courses offered teach facts and methods that can be used profitably by graduates after leaving AHS.

Students Attend Distributors Club Meet in Austin

Four members of the AHS chapter of the Distributors Club of Texas, will attend the annual convention at Austin, Thursday and Friday, February 5 and 6.

The quartet of Sandie representatives going are Bob Rice, Ann Rushmer, Harold Williams and Garrett Barker.

The club, a state wide organization of high school Distributive Education courses, meets in order to become better acquaitned with the work each group is doing.

FOR ONCE

She Heard Him

Mid-term review was taking place in Miss Louise Russell's fifth period class.

"David, when you answer a question, talk loud enough for everyone to ehar you," requested Miss Russell. "Now, let's do that again. What does 'irrefutable' mean?"

"I don't know," thundered David Boss.

Pointless Points

R. B. Norman

The recent epidemic of prowling and theft by boys of high school age in Amarillo has shocked many people. It certainly comes as no surprise to thinking adults who know about liberties parents are allowing their children.

It is not uncommon for many boys to roam or ride the streets nightly until late hours. There is something about night life conducive to unlawful and immoral conduct. In the first place, all legitimate business is closed by approximately 11 o'clock. Where could boys legally and properly go after 11 o'clock except to honky-tonks which, though legal, may be immoral. There is nothing left for youth to do after such hours, and since youth is going to do something, it is inevitable that they shall do the illegal or immoral.

The problem is one of parental control and supervision. Youngsters of high school age should stay at home nights most of the time to do their work, read, listen to the radio, and fraternize with the family. They should be permitted to go to school affairs, church affairs, and occasionally other social functions on school nights, provided their family know the nature of the function they are attending, and provided they can be depended upon to arrive home at a reasonable hour.

Some may censure the schools for not assigning home work. The truth of the matter is that plenty of home work is assigned. It is just that the pupils do not do it nor are their parents or teachers able to persuade or compel them to do it.

Blind

Several different people were astounded when a schoolteacher in Boston, Massachusetts, refused to read "The Japanese Twins," by Lucy Perkins, to her pupils.

All the children knew as well as adults that Japan was in the war. "The Dutch Twins," by the same author, was read instead.

"The Japanese Twins" was written long before the war, is both enjoyable and timely, and contains no war propaganda.

How is world peace ever going to be established if hatred and intolerance, such as this episode illustrates, are taught?

How can countries be coped with if people have no knowledge of the difference between nations and races, and do not learn that there is good as well as bad in all people.

Tolerance can never be learned by citizens unless they are taught that doing things differently is correct in some countries, and even by some people living in their own country.

Now, with inventions of certain war missiles that can be sent for undreamed of distances, people cannot be ignorant in the future of what any nations are doing or preparing to do.

Oceans are no longer barriers of importance. Space is no longer a hindrance.

Ignorance is no longer a defense.

Dabberwot

Tunce upon a wime, in a Kighty mingdom called AHS, there lived a pibe of treeple sown as Wandies.

Sow these Wandies were kambitious iddies, and although they had a sood gystem, they all se-didcd that a netter one was beeded.

So! They asopted an Honor Dystem. The kiddle lids were eft on

904 Students Now Enrolled In Commercial Training Classes

By J. B. Gardner

Boasting a record of outstanding service, AHS's commercial department celebrates its thirtieth birthday this year.

Originated in the year 1918 with R. F. Williams as its first head, the commercial department has experienced all the growing pains of early childhood and adolescence. Today it shows itself to be an efficient and fully grown organization.

Nine hundred and four students, almost one-half the enrollment of AHS, are attending at least one of the 25 commercial classes offered each day. Despite many beliefs to the contrary, girls hold only a slight margin in number over the boys.

Mr. Williams, who retired from teaching to become the executive secretary of the Local Teachers Credit Union, was succeeded by Miss Icie B. Johnson. Miss Johnson took over the commercial department in 1939 and is still at its helm.

Ten different courses are offered yearly when space and teachers are available. These courses are typewriting, shorthand, secretarial training, bookkeeping, business arithmetic, office practice, business law, commercial geography, business English and sales.

A staff of seven teachers, headed by Miss Johnson, instruct the commercial classes. They are Mrs. Corrah Lee Braudt, Miss Betty Bridges, Mrs. Margaret Josserand, Miss Adelle Shows, Miss Velma Shows and S. G. Anthony.

Typing Most Popular

Most popular subject with students is typing, which has a large edge in enrollment on the other commercial courses. Business arithmetic is second, followed by shorthand and bookkeeping. The typing rooms are equipped with 76 typewriters.

The speed-writers are Richard Archer, Bill Coffee, Clifford Bradley, Lynn Whitten, Basil Walker, H. K. Stanfield and Carl Johnson. Truman Kemper, the eighth boy, is in Miss Velma Shows' second period class.

Shortage Plagues

"There is much room for improvement of the commercial department," says Miss Johnson, "in meeting the demands of the students and of the public. We aren't meeting the demands of the public in that there are requests for more commercially educated people than we are turning out at this time. We aren't meeting the demands of the students in that we can't enroll all who ask for commercial courses because of the shortages of teachers, rooms and equipment.

"Three more machines are in use in the commercial department now than in 1938," Miss Johnson explains.

The ambitious side of the commercial department is brought out by the extensive plans for the future being made by Miss Johnson as head.

"In the future I would like the department equipped with a sufficient number of adding machines, calculators and duplicators for do the illegal or immoral.

The problem is one of parental control and supervision. Youngsters of high school age should stay at home nights most of the time to do their work, read, listen to the radio, and fraternize with the family. They should be permitted to go to school affairs, church affairs, and occasionally other social functions on school nights, provided their family know the nature of the function they are attending, and provided they can be depended upon to arrive home at a reasonable hour.

Some may censure the schools for not assigning home work. The truth of the matter is that plenty of home work is assigned. It is just that the pupils do not do it nor are their parents or teachers able to persuade or compel them to do it.

One of the most important factors in this lack of control of youngsters by their parents lies in the frequency of broken homes, patched up homes, or homes where strained domestic relations exist.

In the future, there will likely be much greater emphasis in education upon the value of work experience on the part of the youth while still in high school. Many would like, no doubt, to know what advantages are claimed to the pupil from supervised work experience.

Here is a list for your study: (1) Improves the type of job youth finds; (2) provides a counseling service under a life situation; (3) encourages youth to remain in school; (4) tends to improve school attendance; (5) aids in school adjustment; (6) improves morale; (7) tends to develop an improved relationship between employer, employee, labor and the school; (8) improves wages and working conditions; (9) reveals the necessity for qualifying for life's work; (10) gives an opportunity for outlet of physical energy; (11) contributes to economic adjustment;

(12) affords an opportunity through school instruction to make meaningful such items as: (a) factors leading to success on the job; (b) significance of social security, taxes, labor organizations, child labor laws, health, blind alley jobs; (13) develops a more wholesome attitude toward work; (14) improves general scholarship; (15) enables youth to contribute to family budget; (16) reveals need for further education; (17) puts students on their own; (18) provides a sense of security and independence.

It is remarkable how many things we discover too late. Last week, while attending the mid-term senior banquet, we heard Jack Glasgow, the erstwhile football star and crooner, deliver a mighty after-dinner speech. His story of the unvarnished tale was especially clever.

People not generally known to the schools and whose lights are hidden under bushel measures are the principal's office girls. We picked these girls from the study halls on the basis of apparent intelligence, personality, and of course, did not hold it against them if they happened to be attractive looking.

If we had conducted a competitive examination for these, we doubt if we could have selected six girls possessing the requisite qualities in greater abundance than Henrietta Rumbaugh, Marian Schultz, Frances Miller, Pat Grimland, Carla English, and Reba Yocham.

Because of schedule changes, we regret losing our first, second and fourth period girls and will be receiving applications to fill these vacancies.

dreamed of distances, people cannot be ignorant in the future of what any nations are doing or preparing to do.

Oceans are no longer barriers of importance. Space is no longer a hindrance.

Ignorance is no longer a defense.

Dabberwot

Tunce upon a wime, in a Kighty mingdom called AHS, there lived a pibe of treeple sown as Wandies.

Sow these Wandies were kambitious iddies, and although they had a sood gystem, they all se-dided that a netter one was beeded.

So! They asopted an Honor Dystem. The kiddle lids were eft on their lonar to det to gasses on time without a bardy tell, pot nush in linch luns even if they were darving to steth, and not pake a teek at um-one selve's paper.

Now there were two pinds of keeple in this trarge libe; soyal Landies and So-no-royal Landies. The royal lide pid everything in its dower to wake the plan mirk while the pass smortion that was left just kiddn't care.

One day the groo troops wot into a gar (fad a hight). And being that the grood goop was larger by win to tun, they pashed to a mulp every sisloyal Dandie and won with kying flullors; which just proes to groove that bood is stronger than gad and something that is bent to me will always wid a fay.

THE CASE OF THE

Duoble Pick-up

What boy was caught picking up a 'coon the night of January 12?

Dale Grantham, junior was on his way home from the Sportsman Club when he spied a 'coon wandering around near Seventh and Taylor. Getting off the bus, Dale ran over and started a chase.

A State Police car roared up to Dale just as he caught the 'coon. "What'cha doing, son?" they asked.

Dale said they took the racoon to the police station.

Birds can see a hundred times better than man.

One pound of onion seed can yield four tons of unions.

yearly when space and teachers are available. These courses are typewriting, shorthand, secretarial training, bookkeeping, business arithmetic, office practice, business law, commercial geography, business English and sales.

A staff of seven teachers, headed by Miss Johnson, instruct the commercial classes. They are Mrs. Corrah Lee Braudt, Miss Betty Bridges, Mrs. Margaret Josserand, Miss Adelle Shows, Miss Velma Shows and S. G. Anthony.

Typing Most Popular

Most popular subject with students is typing, which has a large edge in enrollment on the other commercial courses. Business arithmetic is second, followed by shorthand and bookkeeping. The typing rooms are equipped with 76 typewriters, while the bookkeepers have 3 adding machines and 2 calculators. The commercial department also has a mimeograph and a mimeoscope at its disposal.

An illustration of the practical value of commercial education in AHS is the fact that 60 per cent of the students of AHS who take business courses go straight to jobs in Amarillo after graduation. Approximately one fourth of the students enrolled in commercial courses at this time hold part-time jobs downtown. No credit is received for part-time jobs as it is in DE and DO classes.

Requests for students to work full-time downtown are numerous. Miss Johnson often finds it impossible to meet the demand. The requests for boy stenographers are turned down the most frequently. Only eight boys are enrolled in shorthand classes in AHS. Seven of the boys are in Miss Bridges' fifth demands of the public in that there are requests for more commercially educated people than we are turning out at this time. We aren't meeting the demands of the students in that we can't enroll all who ask for commercial courses because of the shortages of teachers, rooms and equipment.

"Three more machines are in use in the commercial department now than in 1938," Miss Johnson explains.

The ambitious side of the commercial department is brought out by the extensive plans for the future being made by Miss Johnson as head.

"In the future I would like the department equipped with a sufficient number of adding machines, calculators and duplicators for training bookkeepers and clerical workers," plans Miss Johnson, "as well as rooms equipped for training secretaries and a sales institute."

Chamber of Commerce

The business department's club called the Chamber of Commerce Club, originated in 1941, acts as a public relations committee for the department. Lynn Whitten is president; John Evans, vice-president; and Marian Schultz, secretary of the 173-member organization.

The purpose of the club is to do commercial projects not connected with classroom activity. Immediate goal of the Chamber of Commerce Club is to become a member of the National Business Leaders, whose headquarters are in Washington, D. C. Miss Johnson, as sponsor, hopes to meet the requirements of the national organization this year.

League Contest Featured

Every spring the Texas Interscholastic League has typing and shorthand contests which are run off in a way similar to the football race. AHS's commercial department is a member of the league and therefore is eligible for competition in these contests.

Elimination inside AHS takes place in March. Only first year typists and first year shorthandists are eligible for the race. Students who have had typing or shorthand instruction before September of the previous year are not considered eligible by the Interscholastic League.

Winners of the contest within the school compete in district play, after which, the district winners journey to the regional scrap. Regional victors, three in typing and three in shorthand, win the right to make the trip to Austin for the final eliminations and the determining of a state champion in both events.

AHS produced only one state champion, but has consistently won two of the three places at the annual regional meet. Winner of the lone championship was Virginia Shannon. Virginia copped the honor for the business department in the 1946 shorthand tangle.

The Sandstorm

AMARILLO SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL

Room 106 Tel. 25616

Published Bi-Weekly

EXECUTIVE EDITOR ..... George Vick

ASSOCIATE EDITOR ..... Billie Roberson

Editorial Board

Sports ..... Dick Brooks
Editorials ..... Donnie Stevens
Consultant ..... Betty Burkhalter
Features ..... Joanne Whittington
Columnist ..... Hurshelene Journey

Reporters: Nell Baucum, Bessie Baumgarter, Charlie Bennett, Donna Blair, Patsy Butler, Chrystelle Champion, Connie Clark, Bill Coffee, Barbara Farley, Donnie Foreman, Lynn Graham, Arthur Lamb, Don McCormick and Bill Merry.

Circulation Editor ..... Barbara Farley
Copyreader ..... Nancy Greef
Photographers ..... Glenn Hatfield, Arthur Lamb, Nikki Ince

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER ..... Melvin McClung
Assistant Business Manager ..... Anne Dodson

Advertising Salesmen: Beverly Brown, Donna Blair, Anne Dodson, Barbara Farley, John Hunter, Nedra Jacobs, Bogie Jones, Gene Keirsey, Frances Miller, Pat Starks, Donnie Stevens, Kenneth Wardlaw and Deanie Windsor.

Sharpshooters Emerge Cage Champions

Left to right are: Nina Jones, Lou Lynn Rogers, Marcella Hall, Ernestine White, Louise

For the third straight year, the Sharpshooters, girls' basketball team, won the high school girls' intramural Junior-Senior championship, 30-27. In the title game this year they downed the Invincibles, consolation winners in the already concluded gym class tournament.

Sparking the winners on to victory in the feature attraction played Wednesday night in the Armory was pint-sized Nancy O'Brien, a forward, who dunked seven field goals and three free throws for 17 points.

Tied with her for high point honors was Nancy Fields, of the Invincibles, who had the same shot record. Marcella Hall, who dropped in four field shots before she fouled out, also leading the S'shooter offensive by driving in around the opposition to score.

Melba Henry was second in command of the Invincible scoring, with seven markers. Particularly outstanding on the defense for the losers was Nancy Puckett who controlled the backboards throughout most of the struggle.

That the Sharpshooters were the more experienced was more than evident to the 600 fans present, most of them girls, for they had much better luck with their passing and shooting. The Invincibles missed more than enough shots to win the tilt early in the game, and continually passed the ball out of bounds or to an opponent.

Both teams played hard all the way, never letting up for a minute. In fact, they exhausted themselves. There was only one casualty, however, a fainting case after the game.

Earlier in the evening, two sophomore teams, the Houseflys and the Lady Mars battled it out for the championship of that bracket. The Lady Mars won the game, pulling ahead late in the contest behind the accurate shooting of Barbara Gravestock. Barbara, who bucketed 22 points, and Rose Blasingame paced the winners' scoring. Blasingame marked 11 points.

The game was exciting all the way, right up until the final few minutes when the Lady Mars pulled decisively ahead. Until that time, it was anybody's ball game.

Betty O'Brien, younger sister of Nancy, was winner of high-point laurels for the losers. She dunked 15 points, leading her team offensively.

Hi-Y Eagles HQ Co. 37-36

Aided by an overtime, the Hi-Y hoopsters edged Headquarters Company of the ROTC 37-36, Monday, January 12, in the girls' gym.

Although at halftime the Hi-Y

Say Fellows, have you been in our store lately? If not "Hurry in" and let Pat Lynch show you those Packard Shoes.

Left to right are: Nina Jones, Lou Lynn Rogers, Marcella Hall, Ernestine White, Louise Irwin and Judy Price

Major League Seeks Bob Henry

Major league baseball has discovered a Sandie diamond star, according to indications of a letter received by Supt. Chas. M. Rogers. Making inquiry about the whereabouts of Bob Henry, who graduated last year after making an enviable place for himself on the basketball team as well as on the baseball nine, the St. Louis Browns organization is seeking to contact the ex-Sandie.

Reporting that a souct of theirs had seen Henry in action and thought him a prospect of great promise, the vice-president of the St. Louis farm group will find his quarry currently starring on the hardwoods for an Abilene college.

Bob is a southpaw pitcher.

TEN SINGING LYNCHMEN, new members of the growing AHS music family.

Amarillo Times Cut.

AHS Athletes are Esthetes, too.

Proof of this is shown by the 10-voiced singing group recently formed by Mrs. Julia Dean Evans, choir director. The dextette is composed of members of the Golden Sandie football squad. All seniors, seven of the vocalists are first-stringers and three are second-string gridders.

The musically-minded athletes are Denny Willis, Jack Glasgow, Ed Hagan, Sam Attebury, Don Anthony, J. B. Gardner, Bobby Brown, Arthur Lamb, Bill Bailey and Gene Wright.

First appearance of the group was made at a Rotary Club meeting in the Herring Hotel Thursday, January 8, when members of the Sandie football team were guests of the club for luncheon. The singing Lynchmen next entertained for the annual Sandie Football Banquet Saturday, January 17, in the high school cafeteria.

Cleveland, Ohio, handles more iron than any other place in the world.

Schell Munday Company

Everything for Your Home and Convenience

1400 W. 10th 28361

Patronize Sandstorm Advertisers!

losers was Nancy Luckett who controlled the backboards throughout most of the struggle.

That the Sharpshooters were the more experienced was more than evident to the 600 fans present, most

Betty O'Brien, younger sister of Nancy, was winner of high-point laurels for the losers. She dunked 15 points, leading her team offensively.

Hi-Y Eagles HQ Co. 37-36

Aided by an overtime, the Hi-Y hoopsters edged Headquarters Company of the ROTC 37-36, Monday, January 12, in the girls' gym.

Although at halftime, the Hi-Y held a 9-point lead, the ROTC boys came back to tie up the game at 33-all when the clock ran out.

In the overtime, the company gained three counters quickly, but field goals by Harold Henry and Stanley Manners cinched the game for the Hi-Y.

Though the Hi-Y boys were the victors, Dickey Anderson of Headquarters stole the show by flipping in several one-handed beauties from 20 to 30 feet out. Manners played an outstanding floor game for the Hi-Y.

One torpedo costs as much as a dozen small automobiles.

Say Fellows, have you been in our store lately? If not "Hurry in" and let Pat Lynch show you those Packard Shoes.

Style . Quality . Right Prices

New Items Arrive Daily

BERT-LEVY
"The Feel At Home Store"

Polk at 5th

The Busy Corner

LET US SERVICE YOUR

DODGE – PLYMOUTH

DODGE TRUCK

Transportation Headquarters

HEDGECOKE MOTOR CO.

416 West 6th

HOT COPY

(Continued from Page 1)

without jobs, no matter how well educated or how highly cultured the young negroes were. In many instances, undoubtedly, business firms would hire men of far less value just because of the color of their skin.

They saw that these negro young men and women after spending long years in training to do a job, would be forced by prejudice to curtail their abilities, and often to do menial labor.

They could see the social snubs, the indignant whites getting up and leaving their seats in theaters when these underdog students happened to want to sit down to see the show.

Naturally the first thing many honorable southerners (And I'm not being sarcastic—I regard myself as one) will think of upon reading this is that a young bunch of radicals is trying to break down all the Jim Crow boundaries that great statesmen like Huey Long and Tom Watson, Theodore Bilbo and John Rankin worked so hard to protect.

They see right off hand the intermingling of whites and negroes on equal social planes, their sitting side by side in public places. And they don't like it.

But the committee is not trying to bring about any social revolution. It wants to do nothing that would increase the tension between the two races.

It is simply a group of young people who have seen the rough plight of other young people their own age who will be branded by society because their skin is black. They have seen the senior class of Patten

'Off the Campus' Sandie News To Be on KVAI

"Off the Campus" will be the name and spirit of a new series of programs over Amarillo's Mutual Network Station KVAI, beginning tomorrow night at 9:15 o'clock.

In charge of the program will be AHS students: News Editor Glenn Hatfield, who is also makeup editor of THE SANDSTORM; News Commentator George Vick, who guides the school paper's destinies as executive editor of THE SANDSTORM; and Sports Editor Dick Brooks, who as sports editor of THE SANDSTORM is responsible for sports coverage in the student newspaper.

Trying to escape from the drier side of the news, the journalists will feature the human interest angle in their broadcasts. News will be timely and important, covering the events and issues of the hour. And news will be gathered from, concerned about and slanted to the Sandieland audience, both of today and of tomorrow.

These regular programs will be broadcast Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 9:15 o'clock, beginning January 27.

"Sandies wanting important events announced on the air should contact one of us three," comments Glenn Hatfield, news editor of the program.

with Mr. Matherly, to report just how well it was going. Mr. Matherly revealed that attendance was excellent, too. Detentions were at an all time low. It's impossible for us to be too proud of this.

The U. S. employs 12,150 people to look after the Indians, or one person for

60 per cent Leave School Unfit For Either College or Industry

By Don McCormick

During the nerve racking days of examinations, many people say, "I should rack my brains to learn all this junk, when I'll never have a chance to use it." (That's really not what they say, but it gets the general idea over, and it's printable.)

The sad part about this is that in many cases this statement is true. In our nation's high schools today, 60 per cent of the graduates are neither suited for college or for a vocation.

In our own school the average is much better. Fifty-five per cent of our graduates go to college, but only fifteen per cent are suited for a vocation.

Prosser Resolution

To alleviate this situation a resolution was made by Dr. Charles F. Prosser of Minneapolis. Dr. Prosser was the head of the committee appointed by the Vocational Division of the U. S. Office of Education in January, 1944, to study the condition of vocational education.

Another recommendation Dr. Prosser made was that at the earliest possible date, a conference of representatives of general and of vocational education meet to consider this problem, and take such steps as would be found advisable for its solution.

Norman Invited

The second regional conference was held at Cheyenne, Wyoming, September 25 and 26, 1946. Some 16 outstanding educators from the Mountain and Great Plains areas were invited to this meeting. Our own principal, R. B. Norman was one of the educators invited.

The purpose of this conference was to provide a forum for free discussion of the Prosser Resolution and secondary school program.

The regional phase of the plan was over by 1947, and late in January, 1947, invitations were sent to about 100 outstanding educators of the nation to come to a meeting in Chicago in May of that year.

Mr. Norman was chosen to represent Texas' secondary schools at this meeting. He was appointed head of the committee which was given the job of the promotion and sale of the Prosser Resolution.

When improvements come in education, and they will come, our school will be in on the ground floor, since Mr. Norman is one of the best informed men in the nation on this subject.

More information concerning this vital subject will be carried in the columns of THE SANDSTORM from time to time, as progress is made in solving the problem of the 60 per cent of high school graduates who are unprepared for work or college.

Patronize Sandstorm Advertisers!

WHY, MRS. CROSSETT

Your Slip Shows

During a discussion of the Civil War Period in Mrs. Lela Crossett's fourth period American History class, Mrs. Crossett was relating some good references on the subject.

"The best book I've ever read on the Civil War," she declared, "is 'The History Of Rome Hanks' The only thing is, it is the filthiest, dirtiest book I've ever read. But it's wonderful. . . ."

After the laughter had subsided, Mrs. Crossett managed to save face by adding "material" to her sentence.

Households in Topeka, Kansas can not include more than five cats, according to law.

SEE
Murry Watts Studio
for PORTRAIT
COMMERCIAL
and
KODAK FINISHING
609 B Taylor Ph. 2-2756

is that a young bunch of radicals is trying to break down all the Jim Crow boundaries that great statesmen like Huey Long and Tom Watson, Theodore Bilbo and John Rankin worked so hard to protect.

They see right off hand the intermingling of whites and negroes on equal social planes, their sitting side by side in public places. And they don't like it.

But the committee is not trying to bring about any social revolution. It wants to do nothing that would increase the tension between the two races.

It is simply a group of young people who have seen the rough plight of other young people their own age who will be branded by society because their skin is black. They have seen the senior class of Patten School (Yes all dozen or so of them) holding class in the hall.

Moved by compassion for these fellow humans, the Sandie observers decided to dedicate a great part of their time to spreading understanding among their own race, their own friends. They formed the Inter-Race Council, an organization of white and colored students.

At the initial meeting last week, Andrew Perkins, a negro, was chosen to head the group. Lavon Bagwell, a Sandie, was elected co-chairman. Elected secretary was Hylasue Yeager, a Sandie.

Some 34 students attended the meeting—14 negroes and 20 Sandies. Adults who came to the meeting were were Mrs. A. D. Foreman, Jr. and Mrs. Ardis Martin. Reverend E. W. Hinds was there. They met at Carver Hall.

Their last meeting, yesterday, was held in the First Christian Church. Unfortunately publication time prevented us from covering this meeting.

The Honor System Steering Committee deserves much praise for their efforts these past two weeks. They have shown that at the helm of the Honor System in AHS we have a capable group of leaders, who will work long and hard to put over the Honor System.

Thanks to the social committee of the Steering Committee for staging the successful Red River Dance. Another Honor System dividend.

Last week, I had occasion to observe the workings of the system in the halls at lunch hour. It was magnificent. The halls were quiet, everyone seemed to know just where he was going. He didn't tarry on the way. Confusion was at a minimum.

I dropped in to have a little chat with Mr. Matherly, to report just how well it was going. Mr. Matherly revealed that attendance was excellent, too. Detentions were at an all time low. It's impossible for us to be too proud of this.

The U. S. employs 12,150 people to look after the Indians, or one person for every 31 Indians.

audience, both of today and of tomorrow.

These regular programs will be broadcast Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 9:15 o'clock, beginning January 27.

"Sandies wanting important events announced on the air should contact one of us three," comments Glenn Hatfield, news editor of the program.

---

in January, 1944, to study the condition of vocational education.

Another recommendation Dr. Prosser made was that at the earliest possible date, a conference of representatives of general and of vocational education meet to consider this problem, and take such steps as would be found advisable for its solution.

Norman Invited

The second regional conference was held at Cheyenne, Wyoming, September 25 and 26, 1946. Some 16 outstanding educators from the Mountain and Great Plains areas were invited to this meeting. Our own principal, R. B. Norman was one of the educators invited.

The purpose of this conference was to provide a forum for free discussion which might lead to a better given the job of the promotion and sale of the Prosser Resolution.

When improvements come in education, and they will come, our school will be in on the ground floor, since Mr. Norman is one of the best informed men in the nation on this subject.

More information concerning this vital subject will be carried in the columns of THE SANDSTORM from time to time, as progress is made in solving the problem of the 60 per cent of high school graduates who are unprepared for work or college.

Patronize Sandstorm Advertisers!

can not include more than five cars, according to law.

SEE
Murry Watts Studio
for PORTRAIT
COMMERCIAL
and
KODAK FINISHING
609 B Taylor Ph. 2-2756

REMEMBER PLAINS CHEVROLET
when you have car trouble
Jesse A. Rogers 212 E. 4th St. Buck Carter
Phone 2-1237

TO GUARD YOUR HOME AGAINST COLD WEATHER

1. Heat your home with safe, clean natural gas.
2. Heat your home with automatic, A. G. A.* approved heating appliances of adequate size—properly vented.

*Look for This Seal

Amarillo Gas Company

J. W. Hill Furniture Company

HOT COPY

By George Vick

The words of Dick Brooks, Honor System Committeeman, on the H. S. in AHS seem particularly fitting—"As it is, the Honor System in AHS is just floating down the stream."

The pessimists say it's slowly sinking.

Defeatism has spread over the school. Nobody rises to say the system is working in top order. Day by day, the situation grows worse. No faith, either in themselves or in their fellow students, is had by students.

* * * *

BIG 5 SENIOR members of the H. S. Steering Committee are, from top to bottom, Dick Tharp, chairman; Shirley Neely, secretary; Dick Brooks, propaganda chief; Clifford Bradley and Sam Attebury.

Though the responsibility for getting the H. S. out of the doldrums rests with the entire student body, it is the job of the recently elected Steering Committee to make the student body aware of the situation.

Your columnist attended the first meeting of the committee last Friday morning, at which members elected Dick Tharp, chairman and Shirley Neely, secretary.

Although the general group was apathetic to say the least, the brunt of the burden will be carried by the few but able members who voiced the opinions. Or at least that is the way it looked Friday morning.

Clifford Bradley, Dick Brooks and Dick Tharp emerged as the idea men of the group.

Controversy over whether the Steering Committee or Congress would carry the H. S. battle to the people stirred the air as Bradley suggested that the Committee merely should advise the congressmen as to the course of action they would follow.

Dick Brooks who afterwards was elected to head the vital propaganda

PICTURED ABOVE is the Colonel T. H. McDonald Award Trophy, which will be given the outstanding senior cadet of the ROTC of AHS at Federal Inspection next April. The winner will be selected by the vote of his fellow cadets on the basis of his leadership, character and reputation, and scholarship. Competition for the award will be keen, reveals Major Carl P. Matney, commandant. Shown holding the trophy are Cadet Sgts. Bob Galbraith and Bill Gunderson.

The Sandstorm

way it looked Friday morning.

Clifford Bradley, Dick Brooks and Dick Tharp emerged as the idea men of the group.

Controversy over whether the Steering Committee or Congress would carry the H. S. battle to the people stirred the air as Bradley suggested that the Committee merely should advise the congressmen as to the course of action they would follow.

Dick Brooks who afterwards was elected to head the vital propaganda committee, injected the idea that the Committee should win approval of Congress on actions, then move.

The meeting almost bogged down over the parliamentary proceedure they would use, over who could do what after who approved it. Which came first, the chicken or the egg?

The most important, the most crucial thing we need from the committee is action!

Every day students comment that the H. S. is a flop, is a failure, is a farce. The general tide of pessimism that has swept the school must be turned back, and the job of beginning that turning back is the Committee's.

Made up as it is of student elected leaders of every class group, the Steering Commitee is expected to produce action. This it can do. Already it has formed a publicity or propaganda staff to keep this most important subject before the people's eye.

Facilities of every group in school will be commandeered by the committee. Posters will be made and changed weekly, reports on the day's progress of the H. S. (suggested by Bradely) will be given to the student body.

Day by day, hour by hour, the idea of the very importance of the H. S. and what it can mean must be instilled into our school life, must be broadcast over the P. A., must be absorbed by every student.

Tomorrow, hall guards leave their posts — never to return. This vital step in the progress of the H. S. is a showing of faith that we are worthy of the system.

It is the beginning of the drive to make the H. S. work, to bring about in AHS the birth of a real spirit, of honor, of decency, of sportsmanship and of comradship. The Honor System will work when AHS is permeated with the spirit of the thing, and with the determination to make it work.

PICTURED ABOVE is the Colonel T. H. McDonald Award Trophy, which will be given the outstanding senior cadet of the ROTC of AHS at Federal Inspection next April. The winner will be selected by the vote of his fellow cadets on the basis of his leadership, character and reputation, and scholarship. Competition for the award will be keen, reveals Major Carl P. Matney, commandant. Shown holding the trophy are Cadet Sgts. Bob Galbraith and Bill Gunderson.

The Sandstorm

Vol. XXIII | Monday, January 12, 1948 | Number 8

Mid-Term Commencement Highlights Examination Week

Why Be Honest?

Today, "Honesty In School Week" begins and it will last officially through Friday; however, under the Honor System this special week should run the entire semester.

Two main questions have been planned for home room consideration and discussion. These questinos are:

1. A boy wrote in to a well known magazine and asked the following question: "Why be honest? Eliminating the reason that it may help me get to heaven (if there is one), please give me several reasons for being honest. I have been told that if you are not honest three things will happen to you: (1) You will not succeed. (2) You will not have any friends. (3) You will suffer from a guilty conscience. But I know a man who made a fortune in the Black Market during the war. He was never

(Continued on Page 8)

Thrty-five mid-term graduates will inaugurate their graduation exercises with the baccalaureate service, Sunday evening, January 18, and close it at commencement Thursday, January 20.

Dr. A. D. Foreman, Jr., pastor of the First Baptist Congregation, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon in his church. The A Cappella Choir, conducted by Mrs. Julia Dean Evans, and John Josey, church organist, will provide musical selections on the program, which begins at 7:30 o'clock in the church, 1208 Tyler Street.

Denny Willis, president of the mid-term class, will preside at the graduation banquet, 7 o'clock Tuesday evening, January 20, at the Capitol Hotel. On the program, Jack Glasgow will make an after dinner address; Kathryn Stewart will deliver a reading; Glenn Vaught and Donnie Stevens will humorize the program with a stunt; and Henrietta Rumbaugh will read the class prophecy.

The Graduation will conclude with the commencement service, Thursday night, January 22, at 8 o'clock in the high school auditorium.

An overture and the processional by the AHS orchestra will begin the program. Denny Willis will preside, addressing the assemblage on the subject "A Task To Be Done." Salutatorian Basil Walker will give the invocation. Other speakers will be: Douglas Husband and Sue Proffitt, with Joann Malin, valedictorian, concluding the students' portion of the program.

Charles M. Rogers, superintendent, will present diplomas and other awards.

Wescoat Named Honorary Quiz Kid

Any student who wishes to have Einstein's Theory of Relativity explained should see Sara Wescoat for an appointment. Sara has the distinction of being an honorary Quiz Kid. She is the first AHS student to receive this title.

News Briefs:

On other pages you will find—

Sandies Plea for Race Justice Story on Page 8

ROTC Cops Honors
See Page 5 for Story

La Airosa Faces Crisis!
See Page 5 for Details

Pointless Points

R. B. Norman

Is the conduct of high school students off the campus a concern of the school? Perhaps this incident will answer the question. Within the past few days, a young couple moving from Rhode Island to California stopped over at Amarillo for a few days visit with relatives. Their car was burglarized and valuables taken from baggage. Instead of going to the Police Department, they came straight to the high school principal's office.

Dr. Carlton Palmer, Art Dealer, Atlanta, Georgia, recently left a collection of nine beautiful water colors by R. Bruce Horsfall as well as some original oils. He made the school a very attractive price on this collection. It would be a wonderful thing if the three classes would adopt a three-year program for the purchase of this collection. No doubt the seniors will continue the tradition of adding one painting to our collection this year. If juniors and sophomores would join the seniors in a three year project, a better bargain could be made.

We regret losing Mr. C. P. Parker from the faculty. Mr. Parker is resigning to accept a better paying position, of course, and we congratulate him and wish him well. He was proving to be a valuable addition to our school.

The compiled experience of our faculty during the Christmas vacation would constitute an interesting travelogue. Miss Icie B. Johnson was in St. Louis, Miss Bond in Florida, and Mrs. Atwood in Old Mexico. Several others were scattered thru-

Girl of the Week and Boy of the Week

He will be one and she will have one.

What?

A husband, of course.

And whom are we talking about?

The Husbands, of course—Barbara and Doug.

Although they are both seniors, Douglas is 19 years old while Barbara is 17. The difference in their ages probably accounts for a good number of the different interests of the two. Barbara plans to enter medicine while Doug hopes to be a cattleman. With ambition to be a nurse, Barbara plans to attend either Baylor or Oklahoma University. Doug's studies will take him to Oklahoma A. & M. His "ranch" has already begun with the purchasing of two horses. A far cry from today's hopes, Douglas's childhood ambition was to be an airplane pilot, while Barbara wanted to be a nurse.

Douglas's pet peeve is Barbara while, strangely enough, Barbara's pet peeve is Douglas.

Doug's favorite food is fried oysters, while Barbara thrives on macaroni and cheese and Spanish foods.

In fact, the only thing the two seem to agree on is that they are strong Democrats. Barbara's hope for the 1948 presidential election, by the way, is Harold Stassen, Republican, and Douglas's is Joe Martin, Republican. But mind you, they're staunch Democrats.

There follows a few inches of harmless patter about Barbara. When she was but a lowly, lowly sophomore, Barbara was elected Band Queen. She says that and being chosen Jim Frank Reynolds' ROTC sponsor have been her biggest thrills in high school. She thinks the most thrilling thing that has happened to AHS is winning district in basketball. But she also seems to have one other permanent thrillsome person by the name of Bobby Amason. It seems they are going steady.

In fact, "Amo" seems to be her favorite hobby, most interesting passtime, most enjoyable dish, happiest time of day, favorite radio program, favorite color, song, movie and recreation.

Strangely enough, the requirements for Barbara's ideal man seem to fit this "Amo" person to a T.

But this so-called "Amo" was not the only subject Barbara was enthusiastic about. She thinks that dear old AHS is just about the best school yet. Her hopes for 1948 are that we will have more and better dances and that the Honor System will succeed. She also hopes compulsory military training will be voted down. (No Men).

Five-feet three, brenette and "hasn't weighed before Christmas," Barbara can be described with one word, "friendly." Her one ambition for 1948 is to get past 30 words a minute in typing.

And now we'll have a little harmless patter about Douglas.

"Rugged's" likes include hot-rods, girls, french fries, travel, girls, swimming, fishing, girls, girls, mystery books, musicals, girls and Varga girl wall paper. (Courtesy of Barbara H.)

He, too, thinks AHS is "it."

"I think AHS has outstanding school spirit, especially the friendliness of the students," he remarked. "During 1948," he continued, "I want the Sandies to win state in basketball, track, football and go places in baseball. I think they can do it too."

Usually seen with Stan Hays, Bob Jones and Jackie Jacobson, Doug is a Sandie letterman in football and, according to our eminent sports editor, would have been a big wheel in the Sandie backfield if the interscholastic age ruling hadn't eliminated him.

Doug's favorite time of the school day is lunch hour and Barbara lives for the 3:35 bell.

They really seem to be an industrious pair, don't you think?

But don't be too hard on them. Remember—Husbands don't grow on trees.

A Plea for Humanity

Race prejudice in AHS is slowly being eliminated.

Mud'n Your Eye

three year project, a better bargain could be made.

We regret losing Mr. C. P. Parker from the faculty. Mr. Parker is resigning to accept a better paying position, of course, and we congratulate him and wish him well. He was proving to be a valuable addition to our school.

The compiled experience of our faculty during the Christmas vacation would constitute an interesting travelogue. Miss Icie B. Johnson was in St. Louis, Miss Bond in Florida, and Mrs. Atwood in Old Mexico. Several others were scattered thruout the states.

We are glad to have Miss Louise Dicken and Mrs. Shaller back after their unfortunate hospitalization during vacation.

Many of our boys are "missing the train" by their failure to take shorthand and secretarial training Every semester we have opportunities to place boys with companies who employ largely men only because of their possibilities as future executives. These jobs are very attractive for beginners.

We are glad to recognize the interest of Colonel T. H. McDonald, former commandant of cadets and assistant principal to AHS who has presented a beautiful trophy to the ROTC. This trophy is to encourage excellence in citizenship in both the Corps and the school. The name of the most outstanding member of the Corps will be engraved upon the trophy annually. It is the plan of Colonel McDonald to present this trophy today at battalion parade.

We should like to introduce Mrs. Twila James, attendance clerk, who has succeeded Mrs. Mary Cochran, resigned to join her husband in Dalton, Georgia.

Here is a sketch from Dana Burnet's "Hills" that affords a real example of loftiness and inspiration:

But I have walked a street with straining crowds,
With surging men who would no say their names;
They were no more than dust and dreams and shrouds,
And dress and gold and little passing fames.

And some there were who would not lift their eyes
From the dim, bitter highway where we trod,
But I was rich! Against the distant skies
I saw the hill that raised my world to God!

for the 1948 presidential election, by the way, is Harold Stassen, Republican, and Douglas's is Joe Martin, Republican. But mind you, they're staunch Democrats.

There follows a few inches of harmless patter about Barbara. When she was but a lowly, lowly sophomore, Barbara was elected Band Queen. She says that and being chosen Jim Frank Reynolds' ROTC sponsor have been her big-in the Sandie backfield if the interscholastic age ruling hadn't eliminated him.

Doug's favorite time of the school day is lunch hour and Barbara lives for the 3:35 bell.

They really seem to be an industrious pair, don't you think?

But don't be too hard on them. Remember—Husbands don't grow on trees.

A Plea for Humanity

Race prejudice in AHS is slowly being eliminated.

Always a bad thing in any group, racial superiority or inferiority is especially ruinous in a school, the foundation for later beliefs and ideas. Citizens of Patten, the negro school of Amarillo, have an unequal chance to share in the benefits which we as members of the white school enjoy. They are hindered, held back, deprived of many of the finer things.

Students, if they were taken at an early age and placed with a mixed group containing children of every color and religion, would know no such divisions as we, children of today, know No barriers would be thrown up to thwart comradeship among people.

As the children of today, we have received a cross as great as any ever beheld. Beset from all sides with conflicting ideas and beliefs, we must face up to a problem more long-lived than any other. A problem which has been passed down through a century to remain the crucifix of generations.

A feeling of bitterness among the minorities has been in the building for more than 100 years. The whites have treated the negroes deplorably and retaliation has been quick and severe; yet there is still time to rectify the mistakes which our ancestors have committed.

It's up to us. Are we game?

The Sandstorm

AMARILLO SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL
Room 106 Tel. 25616
Published Bi-Weekly

EXECUTIVE EDITOR ..... George Vick
ASSOCIATE EDITOR ..... Billie Roberson

Editorial Board

Sports ..... Dick Brooks
Editorials ..... Donnie Stevens
Consultant ..... Betty Burkhalter
Features ..... Joanne Whittington
Columnist ..... Hurshelene Journey

Reporters: Nell Baucum, Bessie Baumgarter, Charlie Bennett, Donna Blair, Patsy Butler, Chrystelle Champion, Connie Clark, Bill Coffee, Barbara Farley, Donnie Foreman, Lynn Graham, Arthur Lamb, Don McCormick and Bill Merry.
Photographers ..... Glenn Hatfield, Arthur Lamb, Nikki Ince

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER ..... Melvin McClung
Assistant Business Manager ..... Anne Dodson
Circulation Editor ..... Barbara Farley
Copyreader ..... Nancy Greef

Advertising Salesmen: Beverly Brown, Donna Blair, Anne Dodson, Barbara Farley, John Hunter, Nedra Jacobs, Bogie Jones, Gene Keirsey, Frances Miller, Pat Starks, Donnie Stevens, Kenneth Wardlaw and Deanie Windsor.

Mud'n Your Eye

Wow! What a holiday season, dances, parties, hangovers and all the trimmin's. Tis going to be hard to keep this column from buzzing places but we'll try.

Boys were raving about that new formal Sue Johnson was wearing to the Deb-Ette New Year's dance . . . also about the trumpet playing of Lewis (Hot Lips) Jobe. During one of those 15-minutes-for-Petrillo breaks the band was taking, Louis and Slick. (Say he's a basketball player.) Ellis, who beat the drums, serenaded the guests with an assortment of duets for drums and trumpet.

Queen Ann Hulett has been supporting her share of the orchid corsages to the Christmas time dances. . . . Hmm.

Neil Hamilton tells wild tales about being stranded at the HH Ranch during the recent frost which made roads to the city impassible . . . seems there were no women within commuting distance.

Visitors during the holidays seemed very impressed with the elaborate Christmas formals. More power to the sororities.

Dot Vogel, so the story goes, hurt her leg at the Deb-Ette brawl and spent the evening looking for Cassanova Tommy Randall—on the arm of Jack Davis.

Our nomination for the most attractive couple at any of the dances would go to Middie Billy Lynch and his date, Dolly Lynch, who were presented at the Huddle dance at the Country Club.

To keep out of trouble with the other sororities we now mention the highlighting features of their dances. Theta Pi. . . . A swell dance with good music and a swell place to show off the new Christmas finery. Sub-Deb. . . . An excellent start to the holiday season with the tops in decorations.

An Aeolian Choir mixture of baritone and tenor envolves Tommy Gruver and Genele Prater.

As a result of an odd policy of THE SANDSTORM not to mention the names of staff members it is impossible to mention "Man Hater" Betty Burkhalter who had a date with "Lovey Boy" John Hunter. Nor can we mention such torrid romancers as "Woo-Woo" Donna Blair or "Involved" Ince or Ick Vick. Dull life.

Jack (Come with me to the Casbah) Heath now has a one and only. We'll let the interested parties—Virginia Rogers and Corinne Bowlin and all other unattached females—know who she is next issue.

This department is open to nominations for the cover girl of AHS.

A note to all: "Mud In Your Eye" is written by a columnist (?) who will try to please all. Optimistic, no?

Couples seen leaving the dances early and returning for the final dance or so—Fred Wells and Carol Robberson . . . Max Carver and Pat Thomas . . . Joe Whitehurst and Donna Manning. Wonder why?

Forming a nice quartet are: A Cappella Choir members Craig Ratliff and Ann Hulett and Aeolians Junior Palmer and Beverly Smith.

Our final thought for this issue—why is SMOE spelled SCHMOE in the newspapers?

A Better Manners Club was active in 1929. The purpose was to teach the student members better general manners. One of the lectures given during the year was "How to Eeat Soup Without Souping." Another was "How to Use Crackers Without Crumbling."

Sport Slants

By Dick Brooks

PENN STATE TIED S. M. U. 13-13 in the Cotton Bowl New Year's Day. Some people think one team or the other should have won. But be that as it may, there was a reference on that game that appeared in the Wichita Falls paper that might be of interest to students here.

It was written by the sports editor and it went something like the following:

"The first thing we noticed about the Penn State Line was its likeness to the line of the Amarillo Sandies. They were big, rough and tough, and able to handle anything that came along."

Those aren't the exact words, but the meaning is the same. Some compliment, no?

At least there is one sports writer that thinks we had a pretty fair football team.

ON THE SPORT AT HAND. That of course would be basketball. The Sandies have been, and we hope will continue to be, a surprise to everyone.

So far, they have played 14 games and up to the time of this writing, have a record of 9 wins and 1 loss. Press dealines keep up from reporting on the four-game trip the Sandies took last week.

The lone blemish came at the hands of Ada, Oklahoma, the squad favored to be Oklahoma's state champions this season. The night before, the Black and Gold beat Ada 41-44.

THERE HAS BEEN A LOT OF talk lately about how weak the Sandies are this year, or rather not so much about how weak the Sandies are, but how unusually strong the other teams in District 1AA are this year.

Attebury Chosen on All-State Second Team

Receiving the highest award of any football player in District 1AA this past grid season, Sam Attebury, co-captain of the 1947 Sandies, was named guard on the All-State last week.

Sam is one of the smallest linemen from these parts ever to make that mythical eleven, chosen each year by the Texas Association of Sports Writers. He tips the scales at a mere 160 pounds.

A regular lineman in his junior year on the Black and Gold, Sam was one of the most dependable and steady of the Sandstorm's forward wall. He was known and feared througfhout the District for his determined play as wheelhorse of the line.

Like George Washington, Sam was to his teammates "first in the hearts of his countrymen." Downstate writers said of Sam after the Wichita Falls battle, that he was perhaps the most outstanding man on the field. They also consider him the sparkplug of the roughest, toughest line in the state.

Not only is Sam a leader on the gridiron, but in scholastic activities as well. He was president of his Sophomore Class and was class favorite that year. He was runner-up in his junior year. He is a member of the National Honor Society, National Athletic Honor Society, and is a member of the steering committee for AHS's Honor System.

Fem Gym

As the girls gym classes prepare for volleyball, the intramural basketball teams are winding up the play-offs.

Leading the junior-senior class in the basketball tournaments are the Invincibles and the Sharpshooters.

Still holding the lead in the sophomore class, the Lady Mars are closely followed by the Honey Bees and the Venus'.

"'These sophomore teams prove to be some of the best we've ever had," Miss Jane Williams, girls' gym teacher, said.

Sometime during the week of the 26, a night game will be held between the winning junior-senior team and the winning sophomore team. The game will be held in the armory and there will be a paid admission.

The trophy for the winning intramural girls' team of the year will be bought with the proceeds from this game, Miss Williams said.

The basketball intramurals will be completed during the semester examination week. With the completion of these games the girls' classes will begin volleyball.

By the middle of February the girls' out of town volleyball team will have been chosen.

An Englander Sees Baseball

By Bil Max Merry

See 'ere 'enry I truly don't understand these Americans. Last year when I was over in the States I witnessed the strangest exhibition. It seemed to be some kind of an athletic contest or the like.

There were nine blighters on some sort of a plowed lot with three bloomin' flour sacks spaced at in-

Hullmen Oppose Four Teams On Rugged Basketball Trip

Gamblin Begins Farm Club Team

Because of the overflow of prohave a record of 9 wins and 1 loss. Press dealines keep up from reporting on the four-game trip the Sandies took last week.

The lone blemish came at the hands of Ada, Oklahoma, the squad favored to be Oklahoma's state champions this season. The night before, the Black and Gold beat Ada 41-44.

THERE HAS BEEN A LOT OF talk lately about how weak the Sandies are this year, or rather not so much about how weak the Sandies are, but how unusually strong the other teams in District 1AA are this year.

Those other teams may be strong, but we here in the Sports department still favor the Black and Gold over everybody in the District, including Pampa and Lubbock.

Just see the Black and Gold play once and it won't be long before you will be impressed by their terrific hustle and their ability to play under pressure. They seem to have an uncanny knack for hitting a large per cent of the shots they attempt.

That's a characteristic of T. G. Hull-coached teams. It's been remarked over and over again by outsiders that ist amazingly high percentage of shots sunk makes the Sandies the winning team they are. We are inclined to agree with them.

ANOTHER REMARKABLE thing about the basketballers this year. None of the present five regulars played very much last year. The team was so good last season, and played so many other good teams, that these fellows just didn't get the opportunity. Doyle Watson probably played more than anyone else. They all lettered though, and that includes Bobby Farmer, who is the sixth man of the Sandies for this campaign. So far, Coach Hull has used all six men about equally, rotating them as he sees fit.

HERE'S AN INTERESTING LITtle sidelight. The Sandies have scored their highest total of the season and their lowest total of the season against the El Paso Tigers. That is, up to the just past road trip.

The two highest individual records for the Hullmen were made during the El Paso series. The first night it was Doyle Watson who was hot, scoring 20 points. That is high for any Sandie this season. On the night following it was Jim Sharp who bucketed 19 points.

Coach Clarence Jarvis' defending State Champions have an excellent ball team, even though these records were set up. His aggregation will give someone lots of trouble downstate.

Not only is Sam a leader on the gridiron, but in scholastic activities as well. He was president of his Sophomore Class and was class favorite that year. He was runner-up in his junior year. He is a member of the National Honor Society, National Athletic Honor Society, and is a member of the steering committee for AHS's Honor System.

Hullmen Oppose Four Teams On Rugged Basketball Trip

—"The bigger they come, the harder they fall!" So said Coach T. G. Hull and his boys as they embarked on the four-game trip last week.

One of the toughest journeys ever taken by the Sandie basketballers, the schedule included games with Carlsbad, New Mexico, El Paso High of El Paso, Bowie, and Austin High of El Paso.

Two of those four squads were state champions last year, the El Paso Tigers the champs of Texas, and Carlsbad the best team in New Mexico.

The Sandies already had met the El Paso Tigers in a two-game series in Amarillo, both of which were won by the Black and Gold. The Tigers are supposed to be the best of the three teams in El Paso, and will be double tough on their home court. Their season record to date is five wins and three losses.

The Carlsbad crew is a top-notch five again this year. That is proved by their 32-22 win over the Tigers from El Paso, and a season record of six wins and two defeats. One of those was lost to Austin of El Paso.

To date (this is being written Wednesday, January 7) the quintet from Bowie has a very good season's record. They have won 10 and lost 2, but the competition they have met up until they played the Sandies was not particularly outstanding.

Austin High of El Paso is slated to be a better-than-average five for this year. So far they have won 11 and lost only one. Their victories include a win over the fine Carlsbad team.

All this information serves to do nothing but confuse the neophyte prognosticator. But regardless of what else it shows, it certainly does prove that the Sandie road trip of last week was one of the toughest ever.

The public address system, over which comes opening exercises and routine announcements, was installed in October, 1938, at a cost of approximately $4,000.

Gamblin Begins Farm Club Team

Because of the overflow of prospective baseball talent, a "farm" club for sophomores and juniors is being planned by diamond Coach Rudy Gamblin, for the second semester.

Most of the "farm" team members will come from the varsity team after it is cut to 15 players who will represent AHS this spring in district play.

Plans for this team are to develop players for future Sandie nines. Under Coach Gamblin's able tutelage, the reserves should profit highly by this team, and insure AHS baseball success in years to come.

Schell Munday Company

Everything for Your Home and Convenience

1400 W. 10th 28361

will have been chosen.

An Englander Sees Baseball

By Bll Max Merry

See 'ere 'enry I truly don't understand these Americans. Last year when I was over in the States I witnessed the strangest exhibition. It seemed to be some kind of an athletic contest or the like.

There were nine blighters on some sort of a plowed lot with three bloomin' flour sacks spaced at intervals in a circle.

One beggar stood on a hill or something and after various contortions, 'e seemed to throw a bloomin' ball over a piece of rubber or the like.

There was considerable yelling and screaming of the most grotesque words one can imagine. One blighter sitting be'ind me seemed possessed with yelling weird noises one would make if one puckered his lips and blew with tremendous force. He called the players the Brooklyn Loafers or was it Beggars.

Another of these persons on this lot always yelled something everytime the blighter threw a ball. It sounded like "baaaaal," or rather "Stuuuuuke." Another person always waved his arms when a contestant ran to one of the sacks. And it always seemed if a beggar sitting on a sort of board on the side always jumped to his feet and yelled such terrible names at him that it seemed 'e was off 'is bloomin' nut.

Also the armwaver had this person ejected from the play with such terrible curses that I should be afraid to look.

By George, I shall never understand Americans.

ARMY AND NAVY STORE

Fourth and Taylor Streets Amarillo, Texas

Headquarters for Cowboy Boots and Levis

REMEMBER PLAINS CHEVROLET

when you have car trouble

Jesse A. Rogers 212 E. 4th St. Buck Carter

Phone 2-1237

FINE MUSIC...

FINE PERFORMANCES

NBC

KGNC 710 on your dial

Sandie Uplifters To Fight for Tolerance

Inter - Race Group Plans Campaign

Perhaps the first forward step toward the abolishing of race prejudice and the opening of closed minds was taken by students of Amarillo and Patten (Negro) High Schools when they organized the first white-colored committee for the uplifting of the minority groups, Saturday, January 10, 1948.

This committee composed of three students from each high school is the foundation upon which better racial, religious and color understanding will grow. Through the committee contains only six members now, plans are being made to include members from other minorities groups to share in the solving of mutual problems. Principal immediate objective of the committee is to obtain backing from forward-thinking and social-minded clubs in Amarillo. Long range objectives are drawn up by the committee are:

First, to obtain a better understanding of problems facing the minority groups;

Second, to do away with race prejudice in Amarillo;

Third, to obtain educational and job equality for minority groups;

Fourth, to promote more good will among all races;

Fifth, adults and ourselves to live up to the old saying: "Peace on earth, good will to men."

The committee stresses the fact that it was not trying to repeal the written and unwritten laws of segregation, but was opportunity for and discrimination against minority groups.

Other projects the committee has planned include a speech in assembly by the foremost student of Patten, and a visit by negro students to AHS such as those American Problems students have made to Patten.

George Bob Vick, editor of THE SANDSTORM, is anxious for all letters giving private opinions on the subject All correspondence should be brought to THE SANDSTORM office, room 106.

CUNNINGHAM FLORAL CO.
"Amarillo's Leading Florists"
2511 W. 6th Ph. 8259

Music Makers Will Travel To State Meet

NANCY ODOM and Richard Kidwell discuss and admire new sweaters of AHS orchestra.

* * * *

Eight lucky AHS orchestra students will journey to the All State High School Orchestra meet in Waco, February 11, 12 and 13.

Selected were: Don Hayworth, cello; Richard Kidwell, bass violin; George Mallett, clarinet; Nancie Odom, flute; Donald O'Heim, violin; Carolyn Vermillion, violin; Joe caught. He has many friends. And nothing can make me believe that he is suffering from a guilty conscience; he seems completely happy. I repeat my question, 'Why be honest?'"

Why Be Honest?

(Continued from page 1)

2. A girl complains to her friends, "Why be honest in doing your school work? I know some people who borrow work constantly, yet they have never been caught. They make good grades, and some of them have gotten into the scholastic organizations. Being dishonest seems to pay."

Giant Boilers Bring Warmth to AHS And Nixson High

Want a job?

A few years past a position was open to shovel coal . . . No! No! Here in AHS.

Two great boilers will occupy the boiler room in the southwest hall once thrived on many tons of coal fed them by human hands. Prior to coal the great cavities of the monster boilers were filled with cord upon cord of wood, again supplied by human power.

Today these massive organs burn 1,200,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

This great quantity of gas warms the 3,000 students of AHS and Nixon Junior High; thawing their frozen toes and fingers in frigid weather.

Through a pipe housed in a tunnel under the sidewalk between the schools, 180 pounds of pressure forces

19 Initiates To Enter NHS Wednesday

Newly nominated members of the AHS Chapter of the National Honor Society will be initiated at an impressive candlelight service Wednesday, January 14.

New members to be initiated were chosen on a basis of scholarship and service to the school. They are: Oliver Barfield, Gilbert Beistle, Virginia Carter, Mantie Deitiker, Rosemary Edwards, Eddie Hill, Ann Hulett.

Mary Alice King, Barbara McCullough, Carolyn Parker, Anne Rushmer, Bettye Singleton, Dick Tharp, Jim Tidwell, Joe Turpin, Elaine Willborn, Joanne Whittington, George Bob Vick and Helen Zweig.

Many Prefer Music To Gun Toting Or Athletics

Who says AHS isn't musically inclined?

A recent survey shows that approximately one third of AHS's students are enrolled in school musical organizations. Totaling 635 pupils, the music makers outnumber both the ROTC and the combined athletic teams of AHS.

The choirs of Mrs. Julia Dean

Amarillo. Long range objectives are drawn up by the committee are:

First, to obtain a better understanding of problems facing the minority groups;

Second, to do away with race pre-

George Bob Vick, editor of THE SANDSTORM, is anxious for all letters giving private opinions on the subject. All correspondence should be brought to THE SANDSTORM office, room 106.

CUNNINGHAM FLORAL CO.

"Amarillo's Leading Florists"

2511 W. 6th Ph. 8259

COMPLIMENTS OF

AMARILLO FURNITURE CO.

E. T. Burk, Owner

906 Tyler St. Phone 23216

LET US SERVICE YOUR

DODGE – PLYMOUTH

DODGE TRUCK

Transportation Headquarters

HEDGECOKE MOTOR CO.

416 West 6th

NANCY ODOM and Richard Kidwell discuss and admire new sweaters of AHS orchestra.

* * * *

Eight lucky AHS orchestra students will journey to the All State High School Orchestra meet in Waco, February 11, 12 and 13.

Selected were: Don Hayworth, cello; Richard Kidwell, bass violin; George Mallett, clarinet; Nancie Odom, flute; Donald O'Heim, violin; Carolyn Vermillion, violin; Joe Whitehurst, trumpet; and Walter Wolfram, violin.

The Texas Music Education Clinic will put together a 100 piece orchestra made up of students from various high schools in Texas.

Conducted by Oran Dalley, director from Wichita, Kansas, the honorary orchestra will play a concert Friday night February 13 at Baylor University Auditorium.

Accompanying the students will be Miss Louise Dicken, AHS orchestra director. Miss Dicken is to conduct a forum on "'String Class Teaching in Public Schools."

Two great boilers will occupy the boiler room in the southwest hall once thrived on many tons of coal fed them by human hands. Prior to coal the great cavities of the monster boilers were filled with cord upon cord of wood, again supplied by human power.

Today these massive organs burn 1,200,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

This great quantity of gas warms the 3,000 students of AHS and Nixon Junior High; thawing their frozen toes and fingers in frigid weather.

Through a pipe housed in a tunnel under the sidewalk between the schools, 180 pounds of pressure forces steam heat into the Nixson building. This same pressure drives warmth into the approximately 75 heaters of AHS.

Patronize Sandstorm Advertisers!

MILLER PRINTING COMPANY

617 Fillmore Phone 4833

FURR FOOD STORES

Inc.

Serving the Panhandle for over forty years.

There is one in your neighborhood.

Many Prefer Music To Gun Toting Or Athletics

Who says AHS isn't musically inclined?

A recent survey shows that approximately one third of AHS's students are enrolled in school musical organizations. Totaling 635 pupils, the music makers outnumber both the ROTC and the combined athletic teams of AHS.

The choirs of Mrs. Julia Dean Evans and Miss Tennie Thompson overshadow all other organizations with a total of 440 songsters. The two Golden Sandie bands under the direction of Clyde A. Rowe are next, numbering 135, followed by the 60 piece orchestra conducted by Miss Louise Dicken.

SOUTHWESTERN

Stationery and Bank Supply

Phone 2-6509 519 Polk St.

THE AMARILLO TIMES

"Your Picture Paper"

Phone 4281 Sixth at Harrison

J. W. Hill Furniture Company

Supplementary Sheet No. 5
January 1948

File TS-16C
Mimeo. E5326

STUDY FORMS AND TECHNICS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

THE COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS*
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education
Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Wayne University, 5272 Second Ave.,
Detroit 2, Michigan

Among the several ways in which the College Study seeks to be of help to workers in intergroup education is in devising, collecting, and distributing study forms, bibliographies, teaching aids, and the like. In the main, these materials have been prepared by the College Study Staff, or by colleges in the Study, although we are glad to receive from others any study form which in their opinion merits general use and test.

In general, our materials are related to College Study goals, with emphasis especially on race, creed, national heritages, rural-urban and social class differences, as suggested in the following statement:

College Study Goals

1. To discover and appraise the role in child and adult life of race, creed, national heritages, rural-urban and class level differences.
2. To provide college and school environments in which all peoples are viewed, valued and treated in terms of their personal worth.
3. To teach prospective teachers a better understanding of and a deeper concern for human relations, and to increase their work skills in this area.
4. To make basic and lasting improvements in teacher training programs in line with the above goals, and to diffuse these changes within the profession.
5. To work directly, and to cooperate actively, with local and nonlocal intergroup agencies for the increasing democratization of our common life.

Please order any item by its file number, including stamps up to $1 in your order. In amounts over $1, make checks payable to the College Study in Intergroup Relations. Charges cover costs to us, including postage.

Our function, as we now regard it, is to supply sample forms, at least for most of our listings, with the user reproducing the form in quantities for his own noncommercial use. Where forms are copyrighted, the right of use must of course be secured from the copyright holder.

Ask if you wish to have your name put on our regular mailing list for monthly Bulletins, reprints of articles, and other College Study materials sent free to professional workers.

---

*Financed for a four year period by a grant to the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education of the American Council on Education by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

I. ANECDOTAL RECORDS

1. Anecdotal Record Sheet. Adapted from form by Professor Bertha Lawrence, State Teachers College, Trenton, N. J. Record Sheet, File #AR-3; Manual, File #AR-3A. Each, 6¢.

2. Student's Record of Group Behavior. Adapted from form by Mrs. Lois Griggs and an Intergroup Committee at Milwaukee State Teachers College. File #AR-5, 6¢.

3. Student's Weekly Log and Program Report. Adaptation of a weekly "log" used in directed teaching in the College of Education, Wayne University, Detroit. File #AR-7, 6¢.

II. ATTITUDE SCALES, OPINIONNAIRES

1. Race Attitudes and Contacts. General, composite inquiry, illustrating various kinds of testing. Of use in orienting a college class and as an endtest measure. Four pages, mimeo. File #AS-1, 6¢.

2. Attitudes Toward Negroes: Statement Form. Seventeen tested attitudinal statements, asking for one of five responses from strongly agree to strongly disagree. Score range of 17 to 85. File #AS-15, 6¢.

3. Attitudes Toward Negroes: Incident Form. Ten incidents, or short cases, asking subject to circle one of five attitudinal statements with which he most nearly agrees. Scale range of 10 to 50. File #AS-16, 6¢.

4. Attitudes Toward Jews: Statement Form. Same type as No. 2 above. File #AS-10,6¢.

5. Attitudes Toward Jews: Incident Form. Same type as No. 3 above. File #AS-11,6¢.

6. Attitudes Toward Social Classes: Statement Form. 32 items. File #AS-12, 6¢.

7. Attitudes Toward the Foreign-born: Statement Form. 15 items. File #AS-13, 6¢.

8. A Survey of Group Opinions. A composite 40-item test dealing with attitudes toward Jews, Negroes, the foreign-born, and lower classes. Each item selected from an original list of about 30 items. Five response categories from strongly agree to strongly disagree. Scale range of 40 to 200, with tentative norms on about 600 cases. Reliabilities high. Test, File #AS-20, 12¢; Manual, File #AS-20A, 15¢.

9. Attitudes Toward Races and Nationalities. By H. H. Grice, edited by H. H. Remmers, Purdue University. A 46-item form which can be filled in for one to five races and nationalities. File #AS-26, 6¢.

10. Living With Others. Developed by Dr. Dorothy A. Goetz, and the faculty of the Lanning Demonstration School, New Jersey State Teachers College, Trenton. An 8 page 32-item test for upper grade children. Attitudes toward Negroes, Jews, immigrant nationalities, and lower classes. Test, File #AS-32, 12¢; Manual, File #AS-32A, 6¢.

11. What People Are Like. A 20-item inventory of personal-social traits, to be filled in for any ethnic group or social class, with ratings in a 10-point positive-negative scale. Separate answer sheet. Adapted from a test by Dr. Eugene Hartley, City College, New York. File #AS-33, 6¢.

12. Paths of Life. Six "paths of life", each described in a paragraph, to which respondents are asked to indicate personal reactions by ratings of 1, very sympathetic, to 5, definitely opposed. Adapted from a test by Charles Morris, University of Chicago. File #AS-40, 6¢.

13. Social Distance Questionnaire. Adapted from scale by Dr. Theodore G. Standing, State College for Teachers, Albany, New York. Twelve types of relationships, ten ethnic groups. One page. File #AS-52, 6¢.

14. Social Attitudes of College Students. An 87-item, four part scale by Dr. Lycia O. Martin, New Jersey State Teachers College, Trenton. Test covers areas of social relations with ethnic groups, likes-dislikes, and attitudes. Scale range of 278 points, with total test reliability of .91. Order from author or from College Study as File #AS-55, 12¢; Manual, File #AS-55A, 6¢.

III. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

1. Intergroup Relations: A General Bibliography. Current fiction, sociological studies, child acculturation, school programs, group study and management technics, etc. Fourteen pages, mimeo. File #B-2, 12¢.

2. Rogers, Carl R., Bibliography on Nondirective Therapy. Mimeo., 70 titles, 1946. Order from Dr. Carl R. Rogers, Dept. of Psychology, University of Chicago (no price given) or from the College Study. File #B-3, 9¢.

3. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Intergroup Education". Reprint of chapter in Review of Educational Research, 17, 266-78, 1947. 77-item biblio. File #TM-25, 15¢.

4. Bibliography on Action Research and Group Management. Four page bibliography covering recent researches and interpretations in the field of intergroup relations. File #B-7, 9¢.

5. Projective Tests: A Bibliography. Adapted from Hertz, Marguerite R.; Ellis, Albert; and Symonds, Percival M. "Rorschach Methods and Other Projective Technics." Review of Educational Research, 17, 73-100, 1947. File #B-5, 9¢.

6. Leadership: A Bibliography. Adapted from Leslie Day Zeleny, "Leadership", Encyclopedia of Educational Research, 1943 Revision. File #B-9, 9¢.

IV. COLLEGE STUDY BULLETINS*

1. The College Study in Intergroup Relations. General information regarding the Study for colleges interested in making an application for inclusion in the Study. File #SS-7, Five pages.

2. Our Colleges for 1946-47. Brief description of the programs of 20 participating colleges as of December, 1946. File #CCB-6, Twelve pages, 10¢.

3. Action, Action Research for 1947-48. Discussion of "action research" in reference to College Study program for the year. October 1947. File #AR-10, Fourteen pages, 10¢.

4. Group Work Technics in the College Study. A listing of the eleven kinds of "group work" approaches made by colleges in the Study, with cases and analyses of a few. February 1948. File #TM-32. Eleven pages, 20¢.

---

*Only Bulletins in stock are listed, with listings changing as our supplies are exhausted.

5. Study Forms and Technics in Intergroup Relations. An inventory of study forms, teaching aids, etc., distributed by the College Study. January 1948. File #TS-16C.

V. COMMUNITY STUDY FORMS

1. Social Participation Scale, 1937. By F. Stuart Chapin, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. Nature and extent of husband and wife participation in community organizations, tentative norms. Copyrighted. File #CS-31, 6¢.

2. Community Resources Inventory. By Lloyd Allen Cook. Three page inventory for collecting essential information on agencies of use in a school program. File #CS-35, 6¢.

3. Community Satisfaction Scale. By Vernon Davies, Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. 20 scaled statements. File #CS-38, 3¢.

4. Minnesota Home Status Index. By Alice M. Leahy, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. A scale for measuring the urban home environment of children. Copyrighted. Order from author. File #CS-3.

5. Occupational Rating Scale. A device to secure rated opinion as to the social worth of 90 common occupations. Adapted from scales by C. C. North and Paul Hatt. File #CS-43, 15¢. National norms, as determined by the National Opinion Research Center, are available from the College Study. File #CS-43A, 20¢.

6. What Would You Do? A 15 item three-choice test for high school ages on local community issues and problems. File #CS-6, 12¢.

7. A Study of Newspapers. A form for rating newspapers in respect to their treatment of minority groups. Six pages. File #CS-12, 12¢.

VI. EVALUATION FORMS

1. Evaluation of a Course in Intergroup Relations. Overall course rating by students, achievement of objectives, teacher personality, etc. Two pages, File #EF-1, 6¢.

2. Student Reaction to College Experiences. Adapted from form by Dr. Harold O. Soderquist and Wayne University Committee on Intergroup Relations. Student reactions to courses, campus and off-campus activities. Two pages, File #EF-5, 6¢.

3. Films and Film Strips in Intergroup Relations. By Robert LeAnderson and Robert Larsen. 15-page description and appraisal, plus list of national distributors. File #EF-8, 12¢.

4. Group Process Approach to Education. Systematic pre- and end-test appraisal form for any college course seeking to make a "group work" approach to teacher training problems. Objectives, procedures, problems. Four pages. File #EF-10, 9¢.

VII. EXPERIENCE INVENTORIES

1. Experiences With White People. By Dr. Grace Woodson, West Virginia State College, Institute, W. Va. Check list for Negro students. File #EI-2, 6¢.

2. Experiences With Negroes: Community Contacts. By Robert N. Ford, University of Alabama, University, Ala. Negro participation in community life as white respondents have seen it. Two pages, 12 tested items, five responses. Scale values of 12 to 60, with some known norms. File #EI-4, 9¢.

3. Experiences With Negroes: Personal Contacts. By Robert N. Ford. Same type scale as above. 14 items, scale value 14 to 70. File #EI-5, 6¢.
Note: For use of, and data on, these two scales, see Ford's article in American Sociological Review, 6, 9-23, February 1941.

VIII. GROUP STUDY FORMS

1. Observing A Youth Group. For use in sensitizing college students to group structure, processes, member roles, etc. Requires training in use. Three pages. File #GI-2, 12¢.

IX. INFORMATIONAL TESTS

1. American Ethnic Peoples. A 100-item factual test, multiple choice type. Items indicative of general knowledge; college level. File #IT-2, 15¢. Key, File #IT-2A, 3¢.

X. PROBLEM CHECK LISTS

1. Problem Check List. By Ross L. Mooney, Ohio State University, Columbus. Over 300 items classified in 11 categories, such as health, social relations, school progress, etc., regarded as problems by respondents. Copyrighted. Obtain from Bureau for Educational Research, Ohio State University. File #PCL-1 (Jr. H. S.), #PCL-2 (Sr. H. S.), #PCL-3 (College).

2. The Wishing Well. By Louis Raths. 160 items in eight "needs" categories. More projective than Mooney Problem Check List. Grades 4, 5 and 6. Obtain from Bureau for Educational Research, Ohio State University. File #PCL-6, 12¢

XI. PERSONALITY INVENTORIES, GENERAL

1. The Personal Audit. By C. R. Adams and W. A. Lepley, Psych-Educational Clinic, Penn. State College, State College, Pa. Percentile score profile in nine areas of personality. Copyrighted. Obtain from Science Research Association, 228 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago. File #PI-2.

2. The Personality Inventory. By Robert G. Bernreuter. Copyrighted. Obtain from Stanford University Press, Stanford University, Calif. File #PI-3.

3. Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory. By S. R. Hathaway and J. C. McKinley. Copyrighted. Obtain from Univ. Minn. Press, Minneapolis. File #PI-4.

XII. PROGRESS REPORTS, ARTICLES

1. The Study of Intergroup Relations. 24th Yearbook. American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1945, pp. 5-51. Papers by Ethel Alpenfels, Allison Davis, R. J. Havighurst, Frank Baker, Julius Warren, Lloyd Allen Cook. Order from Chas. W. Hunt, Secretary, American Association of Teachers Colleges, State Teachers College, Oneonta, New York. $1.00 File #PR-1.

2. Cook, Lloyd A. "Teaching Teachers Cooperative Action." 25th Yearbook, American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1946, 97-108. Reprint. File #PR-2, 15¢.

3. Cook, Lloyd A. "The College Study in Intergroup Relations: A Progress Report." Educational Record, October 1946, 452-465. Reprint. File #PR-3, 15¢.

4. Cook, Lloyd A. "Intergroup Education." Review of Educational Research, 17, 266-78, 1947. 77 title biblio. File #TM-25, 15¢.

5. In-Process Committee Report. Two page form used by the College Study for in-process reports by project committee chairmen. File #PR-17, 6¢.

XIII. PROJECTIVE TESTS

1. What Would You Do? An Interviewing Device. By Arnold Meier. Series of simple line drawings, showing child entering country, traveling to subject's home town, entering school, etc. Child (small doll, paper cutout, etc.) a little Negro boy, Jewish girl, and the like. Test used as interviewing device. Obtain from Detroit Citizenship Education Study, 436 Merrick St. File #PT-1.

2. Rosenzweig P-F Study. By Saul Rosenzweig, Western State Psychiatric Hospital, Pittsburgh, Pa. Four printed pages, four drawings to a page, with subject asked to write in responses to personally frustrating situations of a general sort. No group relations content. Order from author. File #PT-2.

3. The "Faces" Test. By Research Center for Group Dynamics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge. Panel of 16 tested photo faces about which "guess who" questions are asked. Now in experimental stage and available only from authors. File #PT-4.

4. Human Relations Test. Developed by the staff of the College Study. Ten printed drawings, each depicting an intergroup contact. Subjects asked to write a short story about each scene, telling what has happened, how it came about, and what will happen next. Can be used as individual test (cards) or group test (slides, opaque projector). Directions for obtaining and interpreting scores for guidance uses based on 260 cases. Test, File #PT-10, Set of 10 cards, $1.50; ten sets or more, $1.00 each. Manual, File #PT-10A, 25¢.

XIV. SCHOOL INQUIRY FORMS

1. The School Inventory. By Hugh M. Bell. Series of 70 or more questions about the school, reactions to teachers, etc. Copyrighted. Order from Stanford University Press. File #SIF-1.

2. How Do You Feel About Education for Better Human Relations? Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York. Check-type test, wide range of items. Order from Bureau. File #SIF-3.

3. School Inventory: Intergroup Relations. Designed by the College Study as a survey for use in mixed schools. Pupil attitudes and behaviors, school practices, etc. File #SIF-5, 15¢.

XV. SOCIOGRAPHIC AND SOCIAL DISTANCE TESTS

1. Ohio Social Acceptance Scale: Form G-3. By Dr. Louis Raths, New York University. Six categories of personal friendliness. Can be adapted grades 4 to 12. Test, File #ST-3; manual, File #ST-3A; each 3¢.

2. Who's Who in My Group? Form G-4-B, Intermediate Grades. By Dr. Louis Raths. 18 "guess who" items indicative of pupil roles and prestige ratings. File #ST-4, 6¢.

3. The Culture Conflict Index. By Dr. Louis Raths. Middle to upper elementary grades. 18 kinds of intergroup attitudinal situations answered in terms of "how many people in your room" (or group) would react by liking, disliking. Separate answer sheet. Six pages. File #ST-5, 12¢.

4. Activity Inventory. Designed to secure positive and negative friend choices, but to focus attention on an array of activities, sports, hobbies, etc. High school level. Two pages. File #ST-20, 6¢.

5. How I Feel About Others. A 20 item check list for 3rd to 6th grades, seeking attitudes toward country children, small town and big city children. Two pages, File #ST-10, 6¢.

6. Where Should Children Be Reared? Seventeen attitudinal statements, asking for comparison of farm, town, city, etc., as the most desirable place in which to live. For grades 6 to 10. File #ST-11, 6¢.

7. Social Distance Questionnaire. Adapted from scale devised by Dr. Theodore G. Standing, State College for Teachers, Albany, N. Y. Twelve "distance" relationships toward ten ethnic groups. One page. File #AS-52, 6¢.

XVI. TEACHING MATERIALS: INTERGROUP RELATIONS

1. Intergroup Education: Course Outline. By Dr. W. W. D. Sones, University of Pittsburgh. Two page outline of study units. File #TM-1, 6¢.

2. Thaden, J. F., Farm People of Michigan by Ethnic Stocks: 1945. Sample ethnic map ($2\frac{1}{2}$ by 3 ft.). File #TM-2, 25¢.

3. Alpenfels, Ethel, Sense and Nonsense About Race. 47 p. 1946. File #TM-5, 25¢.

4. Improving Intergroup Relations in School and Community Life. By Committee on Inservice Education, North Central Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Cases, theory, study and action technics. 48 p. File #TM-15, 35¢; 10 copies or more, 25¢ each.

5. Redfield, Robert, Race and Religion in Selective Admission. 15 p. 1947. File #TM-8, 25¢.

6. From Sea to Shining Sea. Administrative viewpoints and practices. 64 p. 1947. Order from American Association of School Administrators, 1201 16th St., N. W., Washington, D. C. or from the College Study. File #TM-28, 50¢.

7. Gilchrist, Robert S., et al. Building Friendly Relations. Description of practices in Laboratory School, Ohio State University. 50 p. 1947. File #TM-10, 45¢.

8. Welling, Jane B., et al. What Can Teachers Do? Intergroup Relations in creative arts, college level. 31 p., illustrated. 1947. File #TM-20, 55¢. Over 25, 40¢ each.

9. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Intergroup Education." Review of Educational Research, 17: 266-73, 1947. Reprint. File #TM-25, 15¢.

10. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "An Experimental Sociographic Study of A Stratified 10th Grade Class." American Sociological Review, 10: 250-61, 1945. Sociograms, case materials, biblio. Reprinted, 1947. File #TM-26, 25¢; 10 to 20, 20¢ each; over 20, 15¢.

11. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Group Work Technics in the College Study." Social Education, February 1943. Group discussion technics, activity programs, group therapy, cultural informant, sociodrama, etc. Reprint. 12 p. File #TM-32, 20¢.

12. Preliminary Report of the First National Training Laboratory on Group Development. Order from National Education Association, 1201 16th St., N. W., Washington, D. C. $1.00

13. The Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. To Secure These Rights. New York: Simon and Schuster, $1.00 Available from the College Study in PM's reprints. File #TM-34, 10¢

14. Kilpatrick, William H. and Van Til, William, Editors. Intercultural Attitudes in the Making. Ninth Yearbook of the John Dewey Society. New York: Harper, $3.00

15. Williams, Robin M., Jr. The Reduction of Intergroup Tensions. A Survey of Research on Problems of Ethnic, Racial, and Religious Group Tensions. Obtain from Social Science Research Council, 230 Park Avenue, New York, 17, N. Y.

XVII. TEST SCORING METHODS AND MATERIALS

1. Cook, Lloyd Allen, Methods of Community Study. Adapted from article in W. C. Reavis (ed.), The School and the Urban Community, 1942, pp. 201-14. Emphasis on processing field data, building tables, etc. File #TSM-1, 15¢.

2. The McBee Keyport System. Five page description of an effective "ice pick" system of tabulating social data. File #TSM-4, 9¢.

3. Forsyth, Elaine and Katz, Leo, "A Matrix Scheme for Scoring Sociographic Data." Sociometry, 9, November 1946, 340-7. Reprint. File #TSM-14, 12¢.

4. Worksheet for Recording Sociographic Data. Sample sheet. One page. File #TSM-19, 6¢.

College Study in Intergroup Relations
5272 Second Ave., Detroit 2, Michigan.

File No. TM-32
Mimeo. No. E5294

GROUP WORK TECHNICS IN THE COLLEGE STUDY*

Lloyd Allen Cook

In retrospect, it seems safe to say that the College Study in Intergroup Relations has never had the fumbling about period so characteristic of some largescale efforts to explore human relations. Within the Study's framework, colleges and universities, schools and communities, have had three interests: what ought to be done, how can it be done, and with what evidence of effective doing. So far staff writings have centered mostly on questions one and three. It is the present purpose to discuss some aspects of Question 2, the approaches made to inter- and intra-group problems, with emphasis on what we have called group work technics.

The College Study: A Perspective

The College Study is a four-year cooperative effort by selected colleges, schools and community agencies to improve teacher education as it relates to "inter- and intra-group relations," a field defined as including the nature, workings and effects, in child and adult life, of race, creed, national heritages, rural-urban and social class level differences. Agreed upon goals are five in number, all dating back to the Study's origin but redefined from time to time.

College Study Goals

1. To discover and appraise the role in child and adult life of race, creed, national heritages, rural-urban and class level differences.
2. To provide college and school environments in which all people are viewed, valued and treated in terms of their personal worth.
3. To teach prospective teachers a better understanding of and a deeper concern for human relations, and to increase their work skills in this area.
4. To make basic and lasting improvements in teacher training programs in line with the above goals, and to diffuse these changes within the profession.
5. To work directly, and to cooperate actively, with local and nonlocal intergroup agencies for the increasing democratization of our common life.

Participation in the College Study is for an academic year, subject to a request for renewal to the CTC executive committee,[1] with "old" and new college applications always in excess of resources to expand the Study. Starting with 8 teacher educating institutions in 1945, the number was increased to 20 in 1946-47, then reduced in the present year to 12 in order to do more intensive work. In 1948-49, the last year of the Study, the number may be expanded to 30 or more, depending on

---

*Paper read at the annual meeting of the National Council for the Social Studies, St. Louis, November 27-29. The author is director of the College Study in Intergroup Relations of the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education, and chairman of the Department of Educational Sociology, Wayne University, Detroit.

[1]Executive Committee of the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education, a member of the American Council on Education. The College Study is financed by a grant of funds from the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

possible budget increases. From the first, the aim has been to secure a representative sample of the nation's teacher training institutions, selected from every part of the country.

Also from the start, colleges and schools have stressed the use of science as a method of solving inter- and intra-group problems. This is evident in day by day consultant work on college campuses, in annual reports, in frequent work conferences and summer workshops, and in numerous writings.[2] It is best seen, perhaps, in a "materials laboratory," the functions of which are to devise, collect and circulate study forms, teaching technics, bibliographies, and so on. Well received from the first, this service to colleges and schools within and outside the Study has taxed of late our resources to maintain it.[3]

Approaches to Intergroup Problems

The natural departure for the focus we have in mind is via a broader matter, the approaches made by our colleges and schools to racial, creedal, and other human relations problems. In truth, we know of no strictly logical way to classify these various approaches, each way showing a great deal of overlap.[4] For present purposes, a simple five-way division seems adequate.

Approaches by Colleges and Schools to Group Relations Problems

I. Intellectual Approach
Assumptions that ideas influence conduct, facts change values. Example, an average textbook oriented course.

II. Direct Participation Approach
Informal, at times intimate, participation. Example, school visits, field trips, agency experiences, activities programs.

III. Vicarious Experience Approach
Taking the role of another, usually an outgroup member, via imaginative projection. Example, fiction, movies, plays.

IV. Exhibits, Festivals, Pageants
Display of heritages, customs and contributions. Seeks to create outgroup approval and ingroup self respect.

V. The Group Process Approach
Use of the group as an instrument to influence the individual, for example the sociodrama.

Each of these approaches is a complex pattern, a bundle of many threads. Rather than to try brief comment on each one, we shall consider only the fifth category,

---

[2]For example, "Teaching Teachers Cooperative Action," 25th Yrbk.; 5-51 (Oneonta, New York: American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1946); "The College Study: A Progress Report," Educ. Rec., XXVII; 452-65, 1946; and "The Frame of Reference in the College Study, Jour. Educ. Soc., XXI, 31-42, 1947.

[3]To inspect this list, request it as File No. TS-16, College Study Office, 5272 Second Ave., Detroit 2. Materials are sent at cost to colleges and schools not participating in the College Study.

[4]Others have had the same difficulty. See the writer's "Intergroup Education," Rev. Educ. Res., XVII, 266-78, 1947.

the group process approach to racial, creedal and other problems. Of the 250 odd concrete projects on which we have evidence, this approach has appeared to be the most promising in effecting attitudinal and behavioral changes. As this conclusion began to emerge from our data, we have renewed stress on this way of working with people.[5]

Group Work Technics

Everyday, in countless ways, in schools and outside, groups act upon their members. They motivate and inhibit, reward and punish. They release strains and build new ones in. They set patterns of conduct and stimulate to action. They have leadership, are obviously dependent upon it, and they can be led in directions assumed to be desirable. These are simple truths and yet they are the basis of group process education. Since College Study interest is in the teacher's role, we shall present case materials consistently from the leader angle.

Case 1 is meant only to illustrate the general concept of group work, group guidance or management. It is a commonplace example of using a group to influence the conduct of its members.

Using the Group to Influence the Individual

The time is noon, the place Corpus Christi. Among the 40 or more Spanish and Anglo children eating a hot lunch, one little rebel will not touch his spinach. He looked down at his plate and then up at his teacher, unmoved by her stern admonitions. And then the visitor was introduced, and maybe he would talk to the children. Yes, and he does, but mostly he has heard a new song which is fun to sing. It is about "Popeye, the Sailor Man," how strong he is, and good, and how he got that way. Easy to learn, too, so the group tried it.

As the verses were sung, the visitor moved up the line toward the little rebel. At the end of each verse, and each ended with some reference to Popeye eating his spinach, the visitor would look at some plate, exclaiming that the spinach was all gone, and feel the child's arm muscles. This would cause great excitement, craning of necks to see, much talk and laughter.

It was not until the visitor was three children distant from the boy that he began to focus. A companion whispered to him but he did not reply. Two children away, the youngster began to stare at his spinach, his hands toying with his plate. One child distant, with his turn next, he grabbed the plate with both hands and bolted down the spinach. The song over him was a pretty special affair. Why, the visitor could almost feel his muscles grow! The child's scowl disappeared; he looked around the room and grinned.

No inference should be drawn from the incident as to the field of group process education, for the use of the group as a control device is only one of its many uses. From reports and observations, there would appear to be at least eleven situations in which different group guidance technics are being used in College Study colleges, schools, social agency programs, and community meetings.

Group Work Situations and Guidance Technics

1. Campus Activity Programs
2. Small Group Discussion Technics

---

[5] See College Study Bulletin AR-10, Action, Action Research for 1947-48. Free.

3. Large Class Organization
4. Self Directed Group Therapy
5. Therapeutic "Shock Tactics"
6. Focused Group Interview
7. Cultural Informant Technic
8. Participant Observer Studies
9. Sociodrama and Psychodrama
10. Mass Impression Tactics
11. Group Decision in Crisis Situations

Common elements run through all of these eleven situations, for example degree of worker insight, sensitivity to feelings, group integration skills, calculation of risks, etc. Space does not permit us to deal with the entire list so that we are forced to select a few illustrative examples. This does not indicate any rating of technics as to rank order importance; in fact, that would be impossible.

Campus Activity Programs

The prime interest of college students in intergroup problems is how to solve them. In class and outside, in campus groupings and activities, the average student is concerned to know what can be done to improve the conditions of life for all people. He values more than does his professor direct, experiential contacts, yet his basic beliefs change slowly. His very impatience with dry as dust book learning, plus a naive faith in direct action, may lead him to campaign vigorously for some needed reform. His dominant thought pattern, reenforced by years of schooling, points him strongly toward individualistic, competitive action. Divisive thinking does not yield to integrative thinking without marked resistance, and with notable slips backward. One may readily overestimate the depths and permanence of any sudden behavioral change.

Case 2 bears in part on the above items. It reveals a major emphasis in the intergroup program of a state teachers college in a large midwestern city.

Moving Toward Intercreedal Understandings

It was registration day and a double line of students was passing an outer desk where each was handed a card. Curious about this card, a professor found it contained a jagged, bloody picture of "the head of Christ," plus an invitation to attend a meeting of "the Fundamentalists."

At this meeting, the professor was impressed with the group's faith in their fundamentalist creed, in their attacks on Catholics and Jews, in their announced aim "to clean up the campus and the town," and in their urgent bid for student converts.

Presently, the professor had an invitation to address this group. Instead of a speech, he proposed a "talk session." What were some of their beliefs? Did they believe in one God? Did they believe in life after death? Did they believe in the Ten Commandments? Were good thoughts best expressed in good deeds? Had they ever visited a Jewish synagogue or a Catholic church? Were any of their good friends Jews or Catholics? Disturbed by what he found out, he decided to talk to his Intergroup Committee.

Within a short time, a call was issued to student religious leaders to meet in the dean's office. They were not invited to represent their organizations, nor was anything said about religion. The college, it seemed, was interested in student services to the community. Since there was no service organization of this sort, could some kind of club or council, with a speakers' bureau, be set up and run by the students?

The idea took hold and, for the first time, these particular students were united by a serious common cause. As personal contacts increased, friendships developed, and presently, as was inevitable, students began to swap creedal points of view. Meantime, needing a sponsor, they invited the above professor to fill this office. By the end of the year, they had greatly expended their community services and, more to the point, they were discussing in their meetings the closer unity of all religious faiths on the campus.

In work of this sort, guidance technics take pretty routine forms. Groups must be helped to organize, to clarify values and deepen convictions. They must be saved from inaction, even from ill-considered action, yet leadership dare not be taken out of student hands. One must guide on the group's readiness for action, best sensed in its changing feeling tones. It is amazing to see how students, if really excited about a cause, will work for it--their initiative, good logic and persistence. At Albany, New York, state teachers college students hold an annual statewide conference on intergroup relations, with audiences at times of a thousand or more persons. All of this is done with little or no help from the faculty, a compliment to the faculty as we judge values.

Self Directive Group Therapy

Individuals get tied in knots which they cannot, somehow, readily unkink, and so do groups. They are "sick," dis-eased or ill-adjusted, hence should not be regarded as average or normal. Here group guidance takes a somewhat different turn from the usual campus group work situation. Case 3 reveals a demoralized junior high school faculty in a race ridden, urban "slum area" school.

The Function of Leadership Is to Lead

In the gym at noon, three white boys have teamed up against two Negro boys at basketball. Nothing strange, for the school is evenly divided along racial lines. A Negro boy comes in and joins the Negro team. Two white boys come along, making a five man white team playing a three man colored team. Another white comes in, so that the whites now have a sub.

Through a ground level window come sounds of a fight. Seeking, again, the "feel" of this school, I climbed out the window in record time. A Negro janitor had beat me there, separating the battlers and scattering the assembling crowd. What had happened had been seen and heard by several witnesses, so that the story quickly took shape.

A white teacher, walking down the narrow cement walk to the gym, was met head on by a large Negro girl. "I ain't gonna let you by," said the girl. "Now, Mary," the teacher replied, "I'm in a hurry." Not budging any, Mary said "But I ain't gonna let you by." Trying to push past, the teacher was shoved off the walk. Stepping up again, she slapped the girl, and Mary hit back, causing the teacher to fall. It was here that the colored janitor stopped the fight.

At the faculty meeting in the late afternoon, the talk was along the lines of College Study work and the school's participation as a unit in the local college intergroup program. Asked to name the school's No. 1 human relations problem, the faculty was unable to do so, nor could further questioning bring an answer. A committee was appointed to study the matter and to report to the faculty.

The report was made at a meeting two weeks later. Sensing the turn it would likely take, I asked the committee chairman if his group had studied the matter, had the help it needed, etc., and all the replies were affirmative. What, then, had the committee found? What was the No. 1 human relations problem in the school? It was, the chairman said, "the chewing of chewing gum in the school," with bubble gum the worst of all!

In such situations, one wants, in truth, to do everything but what he knows he must do. Here is the group's readiness to act, so the problem was to get them to act, to start working. Planning was not easy, for it had to avoid internal tensions, be directed outward. Bit by bit, we developed a campaign--homeroom talks, posters, etc., with a progress report due in a month.

A month later we met to hear the committee report. The news was definitely bad. Apparently, we had made no progress. Worst still, it was said that students were chewing gum who had never chewed before. But the group atmosphere had changed; its tenseness was gone. Some staff members could joke about our failure.

Faced with this failure, we began to probe deeper. Maybe the kids were smarter, or tougher, than we had thought. Maybe they ran the school. Maybe... No faculty can stand even a tempered needling of this sort, for the ego is involved. True, too, the "enemy" is in sight, and talk ran on the line of "getting together on this thing."

As faculty morale built up, we shifted our thought accordingly. Why were the students so resistant? Who were their leaders, the boys and girls on whom others patterned? How did communication go on, what groupings existed? We mapped, not one, but several study jobs, forgetting for the moment the chewing gum fiasco.

Incomplete though the case is, it will show a definite theory of how to work with people. Attention need be called to only a single point. The function of leadership in such situations is not to do nothing, to wait for "time," to engage in juvenile inanities, to make big words about little problems, to spread a screen for undercover manipulations. The function of leadership is to lead. The group must be helped out of its jam; it must be pointed toward action wherever action is possible. And as the group acts, always under its own greatest consensus, it will grow stronger in its unity, until perhaps it can face its internal cleavages and unrealities. Too much inner probing early in the guidance process will break the group into countless pieces.

Therapeutic Shock Tactics

If one is to work with people, he must have the opportunity. What if he is given no opportunity? Well, the world is free, and it is big, and he can move along. But what happens if he decides that the situation is not one from which he can or should walk away? Every experienced group worker, every responsible group leader,[6] will say that such situations do arise. If circumstances permit, the technics described in Case 3 can be effective. If these technics fail, or if time does not allow their use, there is little room for choice. About all that is left is recourse to "shock tactics," the aim of which is to explode the group, to induce an emotional catharis.

---

[6] See M. T. Copeland and A. R. Towl, The Board of Directors and Business Management, VII Some Unpleasant Tasks (Boston: Harvard University, 1947).

So far, we have used children, college students, and a school faculty in our illustrations. We shall draw now upon another file. Case 4 and 5 involve college faculties. In retrospect, each case is no more than a passing incident in the life of these ongoing intergroup programs, yet at the moment each case seemed critical.

Stress Test: A Last Resort Technic

By traveling 1000 miles off schedule, the consultant was able to make a college planning meeting, preparatory to a full day's work on the next day with project groups. At three o'clock, meeting time, three staff members were present; at 3:30, another came in. At 4:00 P.M., the consultant prepared to take leave, touching casually on how busy everyone was.

At his own initiative, the committee chairman stepped across the hall to where the president and dean were in conference. He returned with them, and with word that a secretary was phoning other committee members. With this, we took our places, and the chairman began on some routine business. Thinking this would be the time to talk over "some basic problems," the consultant made this proposal.

The past year's work history was pretty spotty.. Little use and poor use had been made of consultant time. Were overburdened professors trying to shoulder too many duties? Was College Study work really worth its time and costs? Twig after twig was laid on the fire, until it burst into flame.

In a spot like this, any man who is a man will talk. Professors began to talk, so did administration. Each described some bloc to his own action, rid himself of some grievance, made sharp accusations. A group worker must, of course, accept any darts flung his way, for he has invited them by his own considered action. He wants aggressions out, and out of the way. He must take upon himself the essential "blame" for failure, which in truth is not hard to do if one but reflects on his own shortcomings.

If participant interest is genuine, if there is hope, one must presently try to redirect the group process. One procedure is to recall the expression of some positive view, restate it, build it up into a group agreement, then another and another, as the group moves toward a new integration. In this case, the above procedure was all we needed. All of us wanted to get matters settled, get on with an intergroup program.

Case 5, like the one above, is also very infrequent, and yet it is crucial enough to merit serious thinking. In this type of situation, the consultant's role is that of a catalytic agent.

Working Groups Must Have Freedom to Work

In the long history of this college, project groups had dragged along, work products were less than average, interest was low, no one had any time. With potentials for national leadership in the group relations field, the record of this college was not what it should have been. In starting the new year, three meetings had been held, yet no general chairman had accepted office, and of course no program had been worked out.

At the fourth meeting, with the consultant present, the college administrator began to write down the areas where work should be done, names of project-group chairmen, and the like. He moved along in dead silence, with no reaction from the group, until he named a certain professor. She spoke, and with deep feeling. She refused point blank to accept the assignment and she criticized the administrator's undemocratic methods.

At this point, the consultant asked who was committee chairman, stating the reasons for his uncertainty. The administrator named a professor, who in turn said nothing. When the consultant asked if she had accepted the appointment, her reply was: "I didn't say I would, and I didn't say I wouldn't." We laughed at this, breaking a bit our increasing tension.

The laugh, above, was probably the turning point in the meeting. One committee member supported the outspoken professor. Another voiced a similar protest, and the administrator became defensive. How else could the work be gotten done? He was, he said in all honesty, doing the best he knew how. With this, he left for another meeting, and we began to pick up the pieces, see where we really stood.

Was the chairman going to accept appointment? Invited to do so by a chorus of voices, she accepted. What about a work program? Was everyone too busy, should we forget it all? Again, an affirmative answer, weakly so, but with a complete reorganization of committees. People were more articulate now and we could move forward into planning.

This case spotlights a very basic problem, the relation of "top" and "bottom" in an institutional structure. If an interest is to diffuse and, in reasonable time, involve a total campus, one must start at the top, for this is the center of communication and motivation. At the same time, a lasting program can be built only from the bottom up, or so it has seemed from College Study and other experience. The impasse in the above case was the tightening of top level control to the point of dominance, as in some bureaucratic systems,[7] instead of freeing these working groups for autonomous action. Of course, the administration might have been right. Maybe the "push way" is the only way to get a high work output, an hypothesis we now have under test in a number of situations.

Focused Group Interview

The focused or guided interview, in contrast to "reaction" and "depth" interviewing, is designed to reveal the responses of persons to critical issues when they are exposed to a situation which the group worker has already analyzed. For example, a school class has seen a film, heard a broadcast, or read a book. By previous analysis, the teacher knows important points in the narrative. He can introduce very explicit verbal cues, even re-present incidents, thus causing a flow of ideas and feelings. He can summate group reaction, inquire further into a particular view, record unanticipated responses, and give guidance as he desires.

Where focused interviews have been used in College Study work, procedures have been of two kinds: direct and indirect. This can be illustrated in reference to RKO's current movie, Crossfire, a murder mystery in which hatred for Jews is pictured as the cause of an unprovoked, brutal murder of a Jew. On the assumption that an audience will want to talk after seeing the film, in fact will feel a compulsion to talk, one can inquire directly into feeling states. On the contrary assumption that even then persons will not disclose their true feelings, or will report attitudes as more liberal than they are, an indirect approach can be made.

---

[7] For example, Reinhard Bendix, "Bureaucracy," Amer. Soc. Rev., XII, 493-507, 1947.

Any indirect approach used in paper and pencil testing can be adapted to a focused interview situation. For instance, on the above film, children were asked a number of questions as to "their best guess about the opinions of young people whom you know."[8] Such approaches can be justified on either of two grounds. It may be held that, under such disguise, subjects will reveal their deeper feelings before and after seeing the film. Or it can be held that subjects will tend to hold the same views as their friends hold, thus under disguise, giving evidence on themselves.

Guidance technics in this type of work include a range of skills, for example centering group attention, exploring individual logics, checking the use of symbols, probing anxieties and conflicts, interpreting ambivalent values, widening the area of common agreement.[9] In intergroup relations, where words are so important and so misleading, we spend too little time in gauging the effects of mass impression media. The focused interview is adaptable to a number of very practical school needs.

Cultural Informant and Sociodrama

There is no necessary relation between these two technics. In elementary schools in the College Study where parents are chiefly of foreign birth, use of the cultural informant technic is patterned on DuBois' examples.[10] For instance mothers, who are invited to a school party, are asked how old they are (i.e. same age as their child), what foods they liked at that age, how they dressed, and the like, while children listen with rapt attention. The technic has many values, the chief one being as a device for the interchange of cultural backgrounds. The moral is in a word, perhaps, we are all Americans but Americans are all different.

The sociodrama has had an increasing use in College Study work at every educational level. By it we mean simply a form of group discussion the essence of which is role playing. At times role content is defined, at other times it is left unstructured, depending on the experiences of participants, their imagination, and the demands of a given situation. At any time, a session may be broken to secure audience reactions to the roles depicted. Is this person's behavior in line with the way you would play the part? Does that character's reactions carry conviction? What would a fair minded individual really do in such a situation?

Uses of the sociodrama are innumerable.[11] Our chief uses are four: to depict the group process itself, the kinds of characters which appear and reappear; to reenact problematic classroom and campus situations; to focus on critical learning experiences in the student's childhood; and to present community viewpoints and conduct patterns.

Case 6 is directed toward a school and community conflict situation. The principal in a large, urban white school, had been sent a well qualified Negro girl as a

---

[8]Confidential report by Louis E. Raths and Frank N. Trager.

[9]For technic and theory, see R. K. Merton and P. L. Kendall, "The Focused Interview," Amer. Jour. Soc., LI, 541-47, 1946.

[10]Rachel Davis DuBois, Get Together Americans (New York: Harper, 1943) and Build Together Americans (New York: Hinds, Hayden & Eldrege, 1945).

[11]See entire issue of Sociatry, Vol. 1, June 1947. Beacon Hill, New York.

substitute "math" teacher.[12] Most pupils liked her and so did the teachers. One youngster told his father about her and the latter called upon the principal, demanding that the colored teacher be discharged. When the school official defended the girl as a highly competent person, the irate parent appealed to the school board. The board has called a public meeting to air the matter.

One can cast a dozen revealing situations from this incident. Let us review a very brief excerpt from the "public meeting." The college class simulating the meeting is a class of graduate students, each a teacher or school administrator. The scene is the school auditorium, well filled with people. On the platform are representatives of "all interested parties," with the board president in charge. Students have volunteered for all the roles enacted in the demonstration.

A College Class
Articulates Community Views and Values

Brd. Pres.: Ladies and Gentlemen. We have met as friends and neighbors to review a matter of grave importance.. Our community is a wonderful place to live.. As president of your schoolboard, I have lived here man and boy for 50 years and I have always served the Northside. That is why I am a candidate right now for City Council on the Repub..

CIO Reprs.: Mr. Chairman, MISTER Chairman. We are not interested in your campaign for office. We are here to tell you and all the schoolboard members exactly what we think. Miss Smith (the teacher) is a qualified person. Your own principal says that. I ask that anyone here wanting her fired bring his charges out in the open.

Parent: Well, we've never had Negro teachers and we don't want them teaching our children.

Brd. Pres.: I would like to hear from Mr. Miller. Foster P. Miller is, as you know, one of our oldest and most respected citizens.

Mr. Miller: I represent the business man's point of view, and also the Property Owners. We didn't have colored teachers in our schools when I was a child and we do not need them. Can't the principal find a white teacher?

Principal: Yes, I suppose that could be done. But you know we were not thinking about that. We were thinking about the best teacher we could get. We were thinking, too, about what the world is like, the many kinds of good people in our city..

2nd Parent: That is what I say, too. We are either a democracy here or we are not, and we have to make up our minds on that. I say what are the charges against this teacher?

One cannot, of course, depict the mood swings of a sociodrama in any brief excerpts, the twists and turns of argument, the breaks in which roles are analyzed and re-enacted. It was about here in the above session when an oldtime rabble rouser arose in the audience, wholly at his own initiative, and threw the panel completely off balance by the vehemance of his feelings. He had, he explained later, been through an experience of the kind we were depicting. If the whole performance seems a bit bizzare, it must be remembered that this was a graduate class of schoolwise persons, wanting to find out what the world was like. Some had, in the past, been on the receiving end of an interracial or intercreedal conflict; others anticipate the occurrence of such conflict.

---

[12] Incident taken from a questionnaire, The Group Process Approach to Education, designed to be used a pre- and endtest measure of learnings in a college level educational sociology course. Request File # EF-10.

In our opinion, the sociodrama should not be introduced with mysticism, or mechanics, or dramatics. It is, as we have said, one form of group discussion, and as such it requires a number of group work skills. Use of this instrument can be readily learned and, as part of a group process education, role playing can contribute materially to fundamental attitudinal and behavioral changes in individuals.[13] It gives skill training to participants, the like of which can be found in no other group work method.

In Conclusion

If we have given to the mind any thoughts to hold, to walk away with and live with as they gather meaning, the substance might be this. Group process education is very old, very poorly done, and very promising. It is poorly done because few of us can or do make it the object of systematic study. Group work is, for most educators, a simple thing of "breaking a big group up into little groups, each with its own problem." While this is good, it is nowise good enough. It gives one very little to write about, to communicate to the profession. Articles take the tone of: "Look! I have done it too! It works! It is wonderful!"

Our discussion of group work technics can have little real meaning unless it is viewed in light of the problems we face in modernizing education. If there ever was a time when we should cure ourselves, if that is possible, of every form of blindness in dealing with people, every booby trap which prevents us from acting with others in a common cause, that time is now. The need to make human relations central in school programs is very great, and changes are in process . The lag is not in fine ideals but in effective methods, ways of working with people.

Here and there, in the College Study and outside, busy people can find time to work on methods. The procedures we have discussed are, by no means, the only ones of importance, perhaps not even the best ones. But they are technical tools, not formulas, hence their use requires practice and training. They are sharp cutting tools, double edged, dangerous, thus subject to misuse and misunderstanding. Not all of them will be acceptable to the educational sentimentalist. On the other hand, they will be criticized by "pure scientists" who, in their own classrooms, are pretty much traditionalists. But that is the way we make progress, namely, in the full and free interchange of ideas and experiences.

---

[13]For exacting experimentation, see the writer's "An Experimental Sociographic Study of A 10th Grade Class," Amer. Soc. Rev., X, 250-61, 1945. Reprint, File #AR-1, 20¢.

COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

THE COUNCIL ON COOPERATION IN TEACHER EDUCATION

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION

COUNCIL ON COOPERATION
CHAIRMAN
KARL W. BIGELOW
TEACHERS COLLEGE
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
NEW YORK 27, N. Y.

SECRETARY-TREASURER
JEAN ARMOUR MACKAY
121 HIGHLAND PARK
HIGHLAND PARK, MICH.

INTERIM COMMITTEE
COUNCIL CHAIRMAN
COUNCIL SECRETARY

WALTER E. HAGER
WASHINGTON, D. C.
CHARLES W. HUNT
ONEONTA, N. Y.
MARY E. LEEPER
WASHINGTON, D. C.
ALLEN D. PATTERSON
LOCKHA EN, PA.
JOHN DALE RUSSELL
WASHINGTON, D. C.

LLOYD ALLEN COOK DIRECTOR
WAYNE UNIVERSITY
5272 SECOND AVE.
DETROIT 2
TELEPHONE TEMPLE 1-1450, EXT. 387

February 6, 1948

Mrs. Jane P. Simpson
Research Assistant
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mrs. Simpson:

Thank you very much for your letter of inquiry. I note, by our files, that the Southern Regional Council has been on our mailing list for materials for the past two years. We are enclosing a listing of our publications, and if we can be of any further service please let us know.

Respectfully yours,

LAC

Lloyd Allen Cook
Director, College Study
in Intergroup Relations

LAC:EJ

COUNCIL ON COOPERATION MEMBER ORGANIZATIONS

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS • AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF TEACHERS COLLEGES • ASSOCIATION FOR CHILDHOOD EDUCATION • ASSOCIATION FOR STUDENT TEACHING • ASSOCIATION FOR SUPERVISION AND CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT • ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN COLLEGES • DEPARTMENT OF CLASSROOM TEACHERS OF THE NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION • DEPARTMENT OF ELEMENTARY SCHOOL PRINCIPALS OF THE NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION • EASTERN STATES ASSOCIATION OF PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS FOR TEACHERS • NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES AND DEPARTMENTS OF EDUCATION • NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SECONDARY SCHOOL PRINCIPALS • NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE DIRECTORS OF TEACHER EDUCATION AND CERTIFICATION • NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF TEACHER EDUCATION INSTITUTIONS IN METROPOLITAN DISTRICTS • NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHIEF STATE SCHOOL OFFICERS • NATIONAL INSTITUTIONAL TEACHER PLACEMENT ASSOCIATION • NATIONAL LEAGUE OF TEACHERS ASSOCIATIONS • NATIONAL SOCIETY OF COLLEGE TEACHERS OF EDUCATION • TEACHERS COLLEGE PERSONNEL ASSOCIATION.

17 International Org.

Office of Public Affairs
Department of State

February 14, 1948

A SUMMARY OF THE CHARTER FOR THE PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

The Charter establishes an agreed code of principles for the conduct of international trade and an organization to assist in implementing them.

The organization would be a specialized agency of the United Nations and its establishment would be a carrying out of the policy laid down by the Congress in the concluding paragraph of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act in which the Congress accepted membership in the Bretton Woods organizations.

The Charter principles deal with commercial policy (i.e., tariffs, preferences, nondiscrimination with regard to imported goods in internal taxation and regulations, the use of quotas, subsidies, simplification of customs duties), international action for the limitation of harmful activities of international cartels, rules governing the formation of intergovernmental commodity agreements, principles affecting foreign investment, and provisions dealing with the international aspects of employment and economic development.

In general, the Charter seeks:

1. To establish the principle of nondiscrimination in international trade with the minimum of exceptions necessary to deal with current economic difficulties.

2. To establish agreement to work for the reduction of tariffs and the elimination of tariff preferences.

3. To establish principles with respect to the operation of state trading enterprises which will subject them as nearly as possible to the same standards as those governing private enterprise.

4. To achieve simplification of customs regulations and formalities.

5. To establish principles and a machinery to limit the harmful effects of private international cartels.

(over)

6. To establish the conditions under which international commodity agreements may be entered into.

7. To establish conditions for foreign investment which will be fair both for the investor and the country in which the investment is made.

8. To provide the conditions most favorable for economic development in backward areas.

9. To recognize the importance of a high level of productive employment and to seek to achieve this through measures appropriate to each member's domestic laws.

10. To establish an organization through which consultation between members on the foregoing problems and combined action in appropriate cases could take place.

RECEIVED
Southern Regional Counc

DO YOU KNOW YOUR

From coast to coast women are finding exciting adventure in meeting their neighbors—all their neighbors—for the first time.

Here's the first national report of a widespread spontaneous movement

BY HELENA HUNTINGTON SMITH

HATE makes headlines. You read about race riots, lynchings, the wanderings of homeless people against whom every national door is barred. You seldom read about Americans of varying races, colors and creeds getting together with quiet determination to rub out the pattern of hate in American life. Yet they have been getting together—in so many cities and towns of the United States that it is almost a national movement.

All over the country, in hundreds of big and little communities, people have been deciding that discrimination is unjust and vicious and that they don't want any more of it where they live. It is worth while noting that the people coming to this conclusion—in a homely and human and home-town way—are not necessarily professional liberals or theorists in human relations. On the contrary, again and again, they are plain John and Jane Citizen—housewives, postmasters, schoolteachers, insurance men and just anybody.

In a modest pleasant residential district of San Francisco two Filipino families and a Chinese family were threatened with eviction because they weren't white. One of the Filipino men had served twenty-seven years in the United States Navy and was a veteran of two world wars, the Chinese was also a veteran and the second Filipino had worked in a navy yard all through the last war—but it didn't make any difference. There was a restrictive covenant which said that "only members of the white race are allowed to reside in this district, except as servants," and some white neighbors proposed to start enforcing it.

But other white neighbors flew to arms under the banner of fair play and freedom for all; the San Francisco Council for Civic Unity jumped into the race; newspapers aired it; and the would-be evictors received such a barrage of indignant letters and phone calls from fair-minded citizens of San Francisco that they backed down and withdrew their suit.

This is far from being an isolated instance. It was practically duplicated only a few weeks ago in a suburban area outside of Washington, D. C. There a similar attempt to evict a Jewish family brought an equally angry response from non-Jewish neighbors. And again the case was dropped.

In Ohio some young men at a YMCA were talking about race relations in their discussion group. "We can't discuss these things right unless we have fuller representation," they decided, so they invited two or three Negro youths from one of the local churches to join them. In an Indiana city some clubwomen of top financial and social rank were planning to discuss Sinclair Lewis' best-selling novel, Kingsblood Royal, which pulls no punches in dealing with the race question. They plunged in and decided to set what was a world-shaking precedent in their community by inviting two Negro women leaders to discuss it with them.

Furthermore—a bit naïvely breathless at their own daring—they made a point of holding the meetings during daylight hours so the whole neighborhood could see the Negro ladies drive in!

Since the Detroit race riots taught this country a bitter lesson four years ago a score of cities have formed mayors' committees on civic unity. School heads are studying the Springfield plan for instilling a spirit of brotherhood into the schools. National organizations such as the Bureau for Intercultural Education and the American Council on Race Relations are providing leadership and funds. But most significant are the hundreds and hundreds of spontaneous neighborhood movements and grass-root projects springing up all over the United States, bringing people of different races together simply as people to attack their mutual problems. These groups are meeting, not formally in halls, but as friends in one another's homes.

I have visited half a dozen such projects and talked with the leaders of many more. They all agree that prejudice starts melting when people get to know one another. About a year ago some clubwomen in a Pennsylvania steel town decided they wanted to know their neighbors better, so they got up a list of leaders in all the different local racial, religious and national groups and invited them to a get-together. Afterward some of the guests remarked on the charm and ability of a Jewish woman who had taken part, saying, "Why haven't we met her before?"

They learned that she had been treated so coldly in their town and her children had been the victims of such unpleasant anti-Semitic experiences that the family was thinking of moving away. They said: "Well, we can't afford to lose such a person from our community. We'll have to do something about that." And they did.

One of the best devices for getting acquainted—it was used by the Pennsylvania clubwomen—is the home festival method taught by Dr. Rachel Davis DuBois through her Workshop for Cultural Democracy. Dr. DuBois is a Friend who became interested in minorities twenty years back when she was a high school teacher and principal in southern New Jersey, where she was born. There she noticed what happened to the personalities of children of minority groups who were not accepted by the other children. Sensitive to childish unhappiness, she began using the school assembly periods to dramatize the cultural contributions of minorities to American life. After three years she felt she had hit upon a good method for interesting children in one another but she felt she needed to know more about people's emotions and prejudices. So she took a leave of absence from the school and went to New York to study social psychology. She never went back. Instead she kept studying and at the same time teaching teachers the art of improving group relations. One thing they kept saying stuck in her mind: "Classroom approaches are good as far as they go but how can we reach the parents and improve their feeling toward other groups?" So she thought of home festivals.

This means that you get together a group of people representing different cultures and creeds in your community—the more varied their backgrounds the better—and you start comparing childhood memories. We all have certain memories in common—of Christmastime (nearly every religion has its winter festivals), of spring or autumn or something like our Fourth of July (nearly every country has its freedom holiday), or of the kind of bread your mother baked or the first money you ever earned. This stirs emotion and breaks the ice. After that anything can happen.

I visited some PTA leaders of a public school on New York's upper west side who've tried it. Two years ago their neighborhood was disunited. A great number of Puerto Rican parents newly come to this country took no part in anything, held back by language barrier or poor economic status. To the well-to-do Jewish mothers active in the Parent-Teachers' Association this seemed wrong. They heard of the home festival and engaged Dr. DuBois to show them how it is done. Groups of seventh-grade youngsters were taken to visit homes representing different cultural heritages. Fourth-generation American ladies trotted out their pewter and more recent arrivals displayed their shawls; childhood memories of a farm in Minnesota were matched against those of a sugar plantation in Puerto Rico. One fascinated lad returned to his class and wrote, "We learned that people are not very different [continued on page 123]

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FAIRCHILD AERIAL SURVEYS

Women in cities like this have learned that life can be richer by reaching out for the neighbor who lives in "the other" section seeds of death to her sons, a father may pass them along to his daughters.

This mechanism had been employed by research men to produce all-male and all-female lines of fruit flies. The lethal gene is established naturally by means of selections, or artificially by means of X-ray. Once it is established in the chromosome, litters of but one sex can be born. In the case of all-male lines, the females perish while still in an embryonic state, thus never come close to birth.

So much space has been devoted to lethal genes for one, and only one, reason. It is the first time in history that the research man has proved his ability to predetermine sex with any species. And in this case he has done his job with one hundred per cent accuracy. Such a plan is, of course, entirely unfeasible with human beings. Lethal genes couldn't be bred into a line: and no one would willingly consent to X-ray tampering.

A possibly workable plan of controlling sex has been proposed by Dr. E. Newton Harvey, Princeton biologist. He reasons that approximately half of male sperm contains girl-producing X chromosomes, the other half boy-producing Y chromosomes. Between the two there is a slight difference in weight. The X chromosome contains slightly more chromatin, a cell material, and is, therefore, slightly heavier.

Why not, Dr. Harvey suggests, use the centrifuge to separate the two? Modern ultracentrifuges whirl at incredible speeds—over a million revolutions per minute. At such speeds, a one-ounce weight exerts a centrifugal pull of two hundred thirty-seven tons—the weight of a large locomotive! Under such terrific stresses separation of two substances with only minute differences in weight may be achieved. Thus, it appears possible that the male and female components of sperm might be separated. Once this were done, it would be simple enough to implant the wanted fraction in the cervical canal of the wife—with an excellent chance of producing the kind of child desired.

Such a plan would be particularly adaptable in cases of artificial insemination. Clinics which provide this service today try to match physical characteristics of the donor father with those of the husband involved. If the husband is tall and blond, a tall blond donor is sought—usually among medical students. If Dr. Harvey's theories prove valid, such prospective parents may have their choice of a boy or a girl.

As yet, this idea exists in theory only. First trials, almost certainly, will be made on animals. If successful here, the way will be open for human work. Then an ancient dream may be realized: that of balancing families as we choose.

But whether, as a race, we would benefit or not, is a serious question. [THE END]

Do You Know Your Neighbor?

from page 34

and that what differences these are, are nice."

As a result of these homey get-togethers, now a regular extracurricular activity, shy Puerto Rican mothers warmed up—and got elected to offices in the PTA; one or two Japanese-American mothers came out of their shells and began to shine and their little boys became buddies with little Jewish boys; a young Negro whose father was janitor of an apartment house was invited to parties and gave a party in return. Now the whole neighborhood is changed for the better. Ask anyone who lives in it.

After getting acquainted most groups start saying: "What next?" In my travels I heard of neighborhood groups that attacked common problems ranging from smoke control to garbage collection, from grade crossings to juvenile delinquency. More intellectual groups are hashing over Palestine, poll taxes, China and the local candidates for mayor. (One such group I know of is made up of miners who started by arguing over the day's headlines in the bus going to work.)

The New Haven Neighborhood Project, which is rapidly becoming famous, gets together on the greatest of all common interests —children. Last year thirty-five children, representing all racial, religious and national groups in a certain neighborhood, attended a nursery school in the home of Mrs. Gertrude Hart Day, whose husband is an eye surgeon. This year five intercultural nursery schools are going full blast in as many areas of the city.

"It's an experience in democracy for the children," Mrs. Day says. "And when the parents see their children playing with children of other groups it educates them as well."

As simple as that.

It all started in 1942 when Doctor Harry Luther Day became a captain in the Army Air Forces, and the Days faced the problem of many families in wartime: "Are we going to stay together or am I to go my way for the duration while you and the children remain at home?"

They decided to stay together as long as they could and piled their three little girls—seven, five and four—in the back of the car. They lived in fourteen states in twenty-two months.

"For the first time in my life I knew what discrimination meant," Mrs. Day recalls, "as landlord after landlord refused us because of our children." In an all-Negro neighborhood in Baltimore they paid $125 a month for two rooms in a cellar with a dirt floor and dripping pipes. The toilet was located in the middle of the so-called front room on a sort of raised throne, enclosed in flimsy wallboard.

"It was a dreadful place. But the worst thing about it was knowing we could go back home and be comfortable after it was over, while our neighbors—people like ourselves—had to stay in such places the rest of their lives."

In 1944 Doctor Day went overseas and Mrs. Day went home. A trained social worker before her marriage, she now became a round-table leader for the National Conference of Christians and Jews. She made speeches and conducted meetings on brotherhood in New Haven. After each meeting somebody—the Jewish delicatessen store proprietor or the Italian grocer's wife—would say: "Mrs. Day, the meeting was wonderful, but what can we do? We want to do something!"

She remembered her children playing with colored children in Baltimore. "Children are color-blind and religion-blind. It's adults who give them prejudices." She started a nursery school. Then in June, 1946, she obtained the support of the National Conference of Christians and Jews for a full-fledged neighborhood project.

THE thirty members of New Haven's Neighborhood Council are all leaders of their own groups. They represent civic clubs, church clubs, schools, libraries, labor unions. Among them are the wives of a Jewish lawyer and a white Protestant pastor, a Negro Protestant pastor, a Negro physician, the former president of the New Haven Junior League and the Catholic head of the PTA. There are various activities to keep bringing the people together—book groups, music groups and a program called, Taste What's Cooking in Your Neighbor's Kitchen. But the core of the whole scheme is the nursery school.

It's no secret that the project's fine nursery school—which charges the small sum of $3.30 a week per child—and its new summer play group for five-to-twelve-year-olds—is bait. A mother may be lukewarm for brotherhood but to get her child into either group she has to attend meetings and do her share of committee work; so she is educated willy-nilly. The first eye opener is discovering that members of minority groups can be just as charming, well dressed, well educated and of as good heart as herself. Other results follow. As one by-product of the school's first year, a father who was dubious at the start became the first businessman in his part of the city

[continued on page 124]

"I ran it over the living room rug just once, and you ought to see the difference—it's amazing! Actually I had forgotten how lovely the original colors looked —but there they are again—all fresh and bright and like new. And—so easy to use too! I just know my Air-Way will save me hours of cleaning time."

•

And that's by no means the whole story about the remarkable post-war Air-Way vacuum cleaner. With a few versatile, specially designed attachments, it easily, quickly, thoroughly cleans everything from floor to ceiling! So light . . . so powerful . . . so quiet—Air-Way keeps you clean while cleaning, too!

AIR-WAY ELECTRIC APPLIANCE CORPORATION, TOLEDO, OHIO

For 27 years—The Finest In Home Cleaning Equipment

"THROW-A-WAY" BAG
...Easy, Safe Dirt Disposal

No bag or container to empty! Eliminates handling and inhaling germ-laden vacuum cleaner dirt! Only Air-Way provides the exclusive, patented Filter Paper Bag which you easily remove when filled and throw away. Sanitary—replaceable—inexpensive.

•

FOR DEMONSTRATION IN YOUR OWN HOME by an Air-Way Dealer phone "Air-Way Branch", your city, or write factory for name and address of Air-Way Dealer.

Air-Way

French's

makes hamburgers

taste heavenly!

TRY MY FRENCHWISE HAMBURGER!

1½ lb. ground chuck beef
1½ teasp. salt
2 tbsp. minced onion
2 tbsp. French's Mustard
1 egg; ¼ teasp. pepper
Knead all ingredients together thoroughly—pat into cakes and pan fry. Serves 6.

HOT DAN THE MUSTARD MAN

FREE RECIPE BOOK

New recipe book, "Mealtime Magic," illustrated in full color. Send name and address to The R. T. French Co., 1433 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N.Y., for free copy.

SMOOTHER—CREAMIER!

Largest selling prepared mustard in U.S.A. today

Also made in Canada

Do You Know Your Neighbor?

from page 123

to employ a colored girl as a stenographer!

The neighborhood project idea is spreading all over New Haven. Neighborhood councils for other areas have formed or are in process of formation; plans are under way for a central supercouncil and a network of ten local councils eventually, perhaps, covering the city. With two or three hundred unity-loving council members, each active in some other organization, you can figure out the possibilities for yourself.

When a stone like that is thrown into a pond there is no knowing where the ripples will stop.

Good will is a mighty power, far stronger than its opposite. In San Francisco a few months ago the question of racial discrimination came up in a neighborhood of large and well-kept homes. A racially restrictive housing covenant was proposed. The Civic Unity Council was alerted and started canvassing families in the area. In three days fifty out of three hundred had agreed to have nothing to do with such a covenant—and that killed it.

Said a leader in the field of interracial relations: "There are plenty of fair-minded people in any American community who will stand up against discrimination if the facts are put before them. Once they get together they can stop restrictive housing covenants almost anywhere."

In nearly every community practical aid to minorities is needed:

In housing.

In obtaining employment.

In police courts and jails, where members of the most conspicuous minority group (Negroes, Mexicans or Nisei, depending on the part of the country) are frequent victims of police brutality or discrimination.

In the schools where youngsters of different cultural backgrounds may suffer lifelong scars from being kept out.

In simple everyday matters of living in the community—a member of a minority may or may not be able to get a decent meal in a restaurant, go to the theater or sit in a church and worship with other Christians whose skin happens to be a different color from his own.

And you don't need to lie awake nights worrying over the possibility of intermarriage between races. All that concerns sensible people is decent living standards and fair play for all Americans.

A RECENT survey shows that on the local level there are at least three hundred community get-together organizations of one sort or another, including more than a few in the south, where interracial committees are raising determined heads. Near Pittsburgh I saw one of them at work.

McKeesport, Pennsylvania, some twenty miles outside of Pittsburgh, is a town of fifty-five thousand where nearly everybody works in the big steel mills. A few years ago Dr. Dubois came there and introduced some of the people to home festivals—the YWCA secretary, some schoolteachers, social workers, ministers and some leaders of minority groups. After several meetings they all agreed that just getting to know one another was valuable, but like many another budding good-will organization they didn't quite know where to go from there. They decided to form an intercultural council.

They were helped and advised by the American Service Institute, a Pittsburgh organization which specializes in group relations—Pittsburgh having taken a shuddering glance at the Detroit riots and resolved never to let it happen to them. One of the first things tackled by the McKeesport people was a ticklish situation in the high school. Seeing the local lack of opportunity for Negro youth, well-meaning vocational councilors had been trying to turn them away from higher education. This hurt more than they knew.

In the home of a member of the Intercultural Council the high school women met leaders of the Negro community who told them how the youngsters felt. They said: "Don't discourage our young people from trying. It is better for them to try and fail than not to try. Our people will never go up in the world unless we keep trying."

Next the YWCA secretary noticed that her young colored assistant had to drive miles to her home for lunch every day because no local restaurant would serve her, and public health nurses and college-trained social workers in the Department of Public Assistance had the same problem. Courageously, though tactfully, the Intercultural Council moved in on the restaurant situation, and while it hasn't yet accomplished anything visible, feels that it may have planted a few seeds. All in all, the Council has done quite a lot for unity—placed one of its members in an advisory branch of the city government, stirred up local support for the local Fair Employment Practices Commission, and made quite a change for the better in the municipal hospital where patients were formerly segregated according to their color rather than according to their medical condition, which might not be too good for the patient.

They'll Help You Know Your Neighbor

National organizations

Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York City

American Council on Race Relations, 32 West Randolph Street, Chicago, Illinois

National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York City

In the south

Southern Regional Council, 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, Georgia

Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, Standard Building, Atlanta, Georgia

For advice on forming neighborhood organizations

American Service Institute, 907 Columbia Building, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Council for Civic Unity, 101 Post Street, San Francisco, California

Mrs. Gertrude Hart Day, 1076 Forest Road, New Haven, Connecticut

For advice on forming discussion groups

National Institute of Social Relations, 1029 Seventeenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Neighborhood festivals

Dubois Workshop for Cultural Democracy, 204 East Eighteenth Street, New York City

It is generally agreed that for practical results in improving neighborly relations the dominant group has to take the initiative. The minority can't lead; the majority must. But if you belong to a minority, what can you do?

You can help organize your people, build up their pride in themselves and in their contribution to American life so that when the bridge is thrown over from the majority side there'll be a firm foundation for it.

Perhaps the least organized and most discouraged of our minority groups are the Spanish-American agricultural workers in our west. Yet they have great possibilities and much to be proud of. From Bataan and Corregidor on they fought outstandingly well and won medals for bravery far out of proportion to their numbers. Now in some of their colonias in the hot sun-baked towns of California's central valley Unity Leagues are springing up, with and without the help of national organizations like the American Council on Race Relations. Leaders are priests, teachers and veterans.

Chino, east of Los Angeles, is a town of nine thousand where almost half of the population is of Mexican descent, yet the school board of four has never had a Spanish-speaking member. Last year the Spanish group, spurred on by its Unity League, decided at the last minute to run one of its members for a place on the board. She was a former school teacher, remarkably well qualified. Some Anglo-American believers in equal opportunity helped canvass the town, with fairness and equal representation as their battle cry. The teacher failed to win but the fairness appeal won her such a big vote among the Anglos that it was a shot in the arm to the whole Mexican community.

HERE is another story that shows what happens when a minority starts lifting itself by its bootstraps. The people of Pittsburgh's unsavory Hill District decided to attack their miserable housing conditions. The soft-spoken middle-aged chairman of their social action committee, with a hundred volunteers, got a total of eight thousand names on a petition to the city. With a good deal of shyness a delegation called on the mayor and city council to present their demands for housing law enforcement.

Thereupon the downtown churches heard about the situation, sent committees up the Hill to shake their heads over stopped-up toilets and broken staircases. Young people's church clubs also made inspections, got more names on petitions. Congregations wrote to Congress in support of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill for better housing for the nation. The newspapers printed stories and pictures. Local big shots got into the fray. And a few of the worst houses were actually repaired. It was a triumph.

In your community or near it there are one or more organizations for unity at work. They may be thriving and effective, or weak and in need of support. How do you get in touch with them? Write to any of the national organizations listed here. Or make inquiries of churches, teachers' organizations, the YWCA, social welfare bureaus or agencies including the public welfare department of your city, or civic groups like the League of Women Voters or the American Association of University Women. Or probably best, and certainly simplest of all, ask your pastor.

Here are some practical hints for starting a new group and making it effective:

1 Meet in homes, especially at first. It gives warmth and genuineness to the whole experience. Serve refreshments—it's a human gesture.

2 As soon as you are acquainted find a program of action. Or better, start right in with one.

3 Get trained help if you can. There are any number of professional workers in intercultural relations; national organizations will give you a hand with this as with everything else.

4 Remember that members of minority groups have suffered a long history of snubs and hurts and need constant assurance that you really want them. I met several community leaders who felt let down because their neighborhood project was drooping—minority members seemed to be losing interest. In at least one case it turned out that routine mailed invitations to a meeting simply didn't work but a few friendly phone calls fixed everything up.

One thing I noticed was that the dominant group members seem to be getting at least as much out of all this activity as anybody else. Again and again as I talked with them I felt their sense of personal satisfaction in having built their share of a bridge, perhaps even conquering a prejudice in doing it. "This is the most wonderful experience I have ever had," I heard many say. But perhaps the most expressive comment was a woman's remark: "You just feel the whole thing is right."

[THE END]

Reprinted from NEA JOURNAL, February, 1948

Intercultural Educ.

RECEIVED
JUL 10 1948
Southern Regional Council

PROMISING PRACTICES in INTERGROUP EDUCATION

The eleven approaches to intergroup education outlined here are based upon a pamphlet entitled Promising Practices in Intergroup Education by Marion Edman, former Detroit, Michigan, teacher now engaged in re-education work in Germany, and Laurentine B. Collins, director of community relations, Detroit Public Schools. This pamphlet is based upon reports of activities in 152 Detroit schools. It may be obtained from the Bureau for Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. for 20¢.

Promising Practices in Intergroup Education emphasizes that, to be effective, intercultural education must consist of a sustained rather than a spasmodic approach.

Dr. Leo Shapiro, director, Department of Education, Anti-Defamation League, and Benjamin Goldenberg, Bureau for Intercultural Education, present a summary of the approaches treated in the pamphlet. Acknowledgment is due Ann Finkenberg of the Anti-Defamation League for invaluable assistance.

In the chart below, the left-hand column under each approach indicates the estimated merits of the approach, while the right- hand colur

Drawings by Elizabeth Miller for NEA JOURNAL

1. The contributions approach—[a] "Great men," outstanding members of minority groups; [b] folk contribution, ethnic or religious customs.

Reinforces concepts of cultural pluralism and intergroup democracy. Encourages individual in identification with his minority group. Appealing to children. Much material available. Fits easily into curriculum. Familiarizes children with use of community as resource.

Basically factual, with the limitations inherent therein. Tends to lead to faulty generalizations about groups. Much of the information false, stereotyped, or outdated. May overemphasize differences. Tends to avoid the fact of intergroup conflict.

2. The people-are-alike approach—Emphasizes the basic characteristics common to all men, that difference as such does not constitute inferiority.

Counteracts racial myths and other erroneous notions. Inculcates objectivity and the scientific attitude. Adaptable to all age levels and most subject-matter.

Entirely factual. Information still inadequate and requires interpretation and integration for which many teachers do not have the time or training.

3. The study-of-prejudice approach—Investigates the reasons for stereotyped thinking and the effects of prejudice and discrimination on personality and social structure.

Investigates cause-and-effect relationships. Realistic attack on contemporary problems, giving insight into the structure and function of society today. Stimulates self-analysis of attitudes and thinking.

May hurt sensitive minority-group members, unless carefully handled. Material not adapted to elementary schools, where it is most needed. Not easily adaptable to usual subjectmatter.

hand column indicates possible weaknesses to guard against. Teachers are encouraged to experiment with all these approaches.

4. The precept approach—Investigates what "the American way of life" really means; analyzes democratic ideals.

Clarifies democratic principles as bases for intercultural education. Stimulates the individual to develop standards of democracy to apply to specific acts and thoughts.

Emphasizes superficial verbal facility and uncritical prestige factors, without directly affecting everyday behavior in personal relations.

5. The democratic-procedures approach—Affords practice in democratic living thru classroom routines and student government.

The learn-by-doing approach.

Background of democratic principles is necessary.

6. The ideals-vs.-practice approach—"The American dilemma"; what America stands for contrasted with actual practices.

Gives honest, realistic picture of the community. Motivates children's thinking about social problems. Makes children aware of community as a resource.

Care must be taken to emphasize that bad conditions are due to malfunctioning of democratic processes rather than to defects in individuals or groups. Approach may be disillusioning and puzzling to children.

7. The vicarious-experiences approach—Attacks stereotyped thinking thru use of books and dramatics.

Affords opportunity for children to identify themselves emotionally with members of minority groups. Emphasizes common humanity of all people.

Many books still give false or sentimentalized pictures of minority groups and do not present them as elements of American culture. Little effect on children who do not learn from words unrelated to activities.

8. The school-activities approach—Attempts to inculcate cooperation and mutual respect in all aspects of school life for all the children.

Fosters democratic principles of living and working together for mutually desired goals, with each person appraised according to his individual qualities.

Requires absolute impartiality and democratic procedures by the teacher, who must also multiply opportunities for cooperative activity and provide guidance in choices.

---

9. The guidance approach—Aims to make children feel secure in school relationships.

Increases feelings of security and thus fosters better human relations. Makes children feel that someone is taking a personal interest in them. Recognizes children's need for status.

Demands much time and energy of teacher. Requires extremely sympathetic and careful handling.

---

10. The personal-contacts approach—Fosters pleasant experiences with members of other groups.

Experiences and positive contacts can counteract prejudices.

Contacts must be meaningful and on a basis of equality, not staged or condescending. Persons contacted must be regarded as individuals with some interesting skill or knowledge, not as "representatives" of their group.

---

11. The community-participation approach—Use of the community as a resource and relation of the school to the community.

Erases artificial barrier between school and "real life." Enriches the school program. Facilitates progress in intergroup relations.

Needs careful and cooperative planning so that community participation will help rather than hinder the school program.

For Additional Copies Write To:
BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
157 West 13th Street, New York 11, N. Y.

AUGUST • 1948

the CHILD

Lawrence League for the Practice of Democracy

BULLETIN

Vol. 2 September, 1948 No. 4

RECEIVED OCT 8 1948 Southern Regional Council

21 Enrolled in Nursery Group

The Lawrence Mothers Cooperative Nursery is beginning its second season in the First Baptist Church annex, with 21 children enrolled and six on the waiting list.

The project was started last April by a group of mothers who studied child development and pre-school play under Mrs. Robert G. Foster, of Kansas University extension division. Mothers who have not taken the course may join the cooperative by reading and reporting on two child care books selected by members.

Children from two to five years old are admitted. A fairly even ratio between ages and sexes is maintained. Cost for each child is one morning a week of the mother's time and a dollar to pay for rent and orange juice. Neighbors share transportation. Once a month the mothers meet to repair toys, scrub and wax the floors, and discuss business.

The mothers and youngsters are grateful to all who have donated and loaned supplies. One father made a slide from old packing material. Little tables, chairs, and a sand pile were donated. The mothers painted two-by-four scraps for blocks and made orange-crate cupboards. Some of the borrowed items now have to be returned to the owners, so the mothers are working on the problem of replacements. The purchase of a new record player is anticipated.

It's an interesting place to visit—the Lawrence Mothers Cooperative Nursery. Everyone is busy and happy at the cottage south of the church on 8th and Kentucky. Look in some week-day morning and see!

William J. Argersinger, Jr., LLPD treasurer, reports the following:

Balance on hand, June 14, 1948	$232.20
Receipts to Sept. 13	51.91
Total	$284.11
Expenditures June 14 to Sept. 13	175.72
Balance Sept. 13, 1948	$108.39

Fall Program Opens; Board Meets

The LLPD board met Monday evening, September 13, at the call of the president, Mrs. L. M. Wallace. Mr. and Mrs. Russell Barrett, 18 D Sunnyside, were host and hostess.

It was with much regret that the board learned that Mrs. Wallace will be unable to serve as president this year. Her resignation was reluctantly accepted, and the board's appreciation of her excellent work was expressed. The board met Monday, Sept. 27, with Rev. and Mrs. G. E. E. Lindquist at which time Calvin VanderWerf was selected as nominee for the office of president, to be voted by the LLPD membership at our next open meeting.

A full report of these board meetings will be presented at the LLPD business meeting.

Walter Starnes Speaks at 9th Street Baptist Church October 7th

The next meeting of the Lawrence League for the Practice of Democracy will have a three-fold purpose.

First, we are privileged to have as speaker Walter Starnes, of the Winter General Hospital staff. His reputation as an interesting speaker equals his record of achievement. Opportunity will be given for discussion following the address.

Next will be a period of relaxation, opportunity to visit and enjoy refreshments.

Then there will be a short business meeting. The executive board will bring a report of recent meetings, and there are other important matters to discuss.

Come to the 9th St. Baptist Church, Thursday evening, Oct. 7, at 8:00 o'clock!

Mrs. Morris Teplitz helps in the cooperative nursery

THE BULLETIN

Lawrence League for Practice of Democracy

Editorial Committee

Marie Smith
Alamada Barrett
George Brown, Jr.
Barbara Duree
Evelyn Harris
Rosalie Wahl

Bulletin published quarterly. Items for inclusion must be mailed to Box 519, Lawrence, Kans.

Officers of L.L.P.D.

President (resigning) ..... Mayzelma Wallace
Vice Pres. ..... C. L. Williams
Treasurer ..... W. J. Argersinger
Secretary ..... Mrs. Eldon Fields

There is no more vicious enemy of peace, either domestic or international, than interracial or interreligious prejudice or bigotry . . .

—Judson J. McKim
from an address delivered on WKRC's Radio Forum, Cincinnati, Ohio.

EDITORIALS

We need an antidote for credulity. Credulity is belief or readiness to believe on slight or uncertain evidence. Credulity borders on superstition, an attitude of mind based on ignorance or unreasoned fear. We point with superior pride to the superstitions and taboos of backward peoples when there is credulity all about us. Astrology has been developed into a multi-million dollar racket due to our credulity. Belief in lucky and unlucky numbers, walking under ladders, having one's path crossed by a black cat, breaking mirrors, etc., etc., are superstitions thousands of years old and still going strong.

Now this credulity might be innocent enough. But when we let our credulity run unrestrained in regard to fellow men of different race and color, it becomes a dangerous affair. Hitler worked on that credulity and ran it into a world war. Racial myths and superstitions are still a plague in this land of ours, causing tensions and frictions.

The true antidote for credulity is faith. Credulity is the expectation of getting something for nothing: faith calls us to act. Superstition is cheap: faith is costly. Superstition promises short cuts: faith may be the long way around. Superstition undertakes to change the world for us: faith summons us to change ourselves. Credulity and superstition cling to man-created estimates and prejudices about fellow-man: faith sees man as God sees him, a being of infinite worth, a brother or sister to be esteemed and to help, and to live and cooperate with.

The world's need is for faith to combat foolish, costly, dangerous credulity.

—Theodore H. Aszman
(from a sermon preached at the First Presbyterian Church, Lawrence, Kansas)

The Blessed Years

These have been the blessed years.
I have learned—Oh, I have learned!
I found you:
You of the thousand faces and the manifold hearts and brains,
My people.
You are not in this small town alone.
I have seen you in the teeming cities;
Seen the courage of your shoulders, the dejection of your shoulders, the defiance of your shoulders.
I have seen you in the country lanes;
Seen the frightened probing of your eyes, seen the accepting calm of your eyes, seen the fierce searchings of your eyes.
You have spoken to me in accents midwest, eastern, southern.
I have read your heart in tongues foreign.
We bend with one accord our heads
To worship the same Father, whatever His name may be.
Our hearts sing together with the grand old masters.
Our eyes weep together in our impotence before death and poverty.
We know the same hatreds and the same loves.
We know the same searing fears, that melt and disappear before knowledge.
You are my people and I am your voice.
You are in me and I am of you.
I know you and I love you.
These have been the blessed years.

—Ellafern Austin

Intelligent Citizenship

Recently issued by Forces United for Intelligent Citizenship is a pamphlet assembled under the direction of Judge Robert V. Bolger, Philadelphia Orphans Court. The booklet contains a discussion of the Principles of Freedom, based on the "Bill of Rights" and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The objects in publishing this series of discussions is presented in the introduction:

"Knowledge of the Bill of Rights is indispensable to an understanding and proper evaluation of government in the same sense that knowledge of the Ten Commandments is essential to religion. . . Since duties are correlative with rights, knowledge of our rights is essential to an awareness of responsibilities. . . The purpose of our government is found in the Bill of Rights, which, in a large sense, is the source of all our law. It is a list of the principles of liberty and justice which makes us citizens, as distinguished from subjects, and constitutes the bulwark protecting the individual and the minority against all forms of tyranny and despotisms of the majority—political, economic or social. . . The Bill of Rights is a statement of principles adaptable to changing political, economic and social conditions in the same manner as the Ten Commandments have been applicable to all peoples in all ages and in all places. . . That we, as a people, constantly violate the principles is no reason for questioning their soundness, any more than our everyday sinning against the Ten Commandments should be regarded by God as reason for re-evaluating that instrument."

Topics discussed are: Freedom of Religion, Freedom of Speech and Press, The Right to Vote, Freedom of Enterprise, Labor Relations Due Process of Law Trial by Jury, and Other Rights of Accused Persons. A question-and-answer section follows each discussion. Following are some examples:

"Let us assume that Mr. John Doe conscientiously believes it is his religious duty not to obey red traffic lights. Is it an infringement of his religious liberties to convict him in a traffic court? . . . No. The public interest in safety on the highways over-balances Mr. Doe's qualified right to act in accordance with his religious dictates."

"May a state prevent the raising of funds by a religious organization unless the organization has been approved as a religious one by the state? . . . No. This procedure would amount to state censorship of religion, and freedom of worship is here superior to the state's police power."

"The State of Alabama enacted a statute which made picketing unlawful. The validity of this statute was questioned in a case before he United States Supreme Court. It was argued, on the one hand, that the statute by preventing picketing, amounted to a denial of the freedom of speech and was therefore unconstitutional. It was argued on the other hand that the statute was a valid exercise of the State's police power and was necessary to protect business. Which side was right? . . . The Court held that strikers have the right to tell the public their troubles and to induce the public not to deal with the employer. No limitation can be placed on peaceful and truthful discussions of matters of public interest. Since the statute prevented the employees from peacefully stating their position it was a violation of their right of free speech. It was pointed out that the statute did not deal with mass picketing, which could have destroyed the employer's property or business. The Pennsylvania Superior Court held in the Westinghouse, in 1946, that when pickets deny an owner access to his property, the picketing is unlawful. The First Amendment, therefore, does not guarantee strikers to do what is known as 'mass picketing."

"Is a state statute constitutional which requires voters to be able to read and write the Constitution, but exempts persons entitled to vote on January 1, 1866, and their lineal descendants? . . Standing alone, the literacy test would be perfectly valid, but when combined with the exclusion statute is unconstitutional since in 1866 no Negro could vote."

"Does a state law which provides minimum wages for women and children deprive the employer of his liberty to contract in violation of the Constitution? . . . No. The Constitution prohibits the deprivation of liberty without due process of law. But the liberty safeguarded is liberty in a social organization which requires the protection of laws against the evils which menace the health, safety, morals and welfare of the people. The protection of women is a legitimate end of the exercise of state power and the requirement of a minimum wage is a means to this end."

"Russian immigrants living in a certain state, raised and educated their children in the native tongue. The state legislaure considered passing a law which would have forbidden teaching in any language except English until the children had completed the first eight grades of school. Do you think such a statute would be constitutional? . . The statute would not be constitutional. The state may go far to improve the mental and physical status of its citizens, but the individual has certain fundamental rights that must be respected. It might be more convenient if all citizens spoke the same language, but this can't be forced by means that are unconstitutional. The state might require that English be taught in the schools but the contemplated statute would have interfered with citizens' liberty by excluding a subject of study. 'Liberty' includes the right to acquire knowledge and to bring up children according to the dictates of the individual's conscience. Justice Holmes and Sutherland dissented on the ground that it might be dangerous to this country to have children inculcated with ideas and sentiments of a foreign power and to think in terms of the foreign language."

"Where the defendant produces no defense, does the judge violate defendant's right to trial by jury by instructing them that they must bring in a verdict for the plaintiff in (a) civil cases and (b) criminal cases? . . . One of the judge's functions is to determine whether the plaintiff has made out a case which entitles him to go to the jury but he may not direct a verdict for the plaintiff unless the defendant admits the facts which fasten liability upon him. In criminal cases the law presumes that the accused is innocent until he is proven guilty. Consequently, jury's verdict may not be directed against defendant. The jury's verdict is final and inviolate even though inconsistent with the merits of the case."

THE L.L.P.D. BOOK PAGE FEATURE

Wasn't It Fun!

The idea of the LLPD picnic July 15 in Clinton park was that everyone should have fun. And everyone did have fun—over a hundred members and friends enjoyed the games and the visiting and the food. The weatherman had made a very special effort and produced the very nicest day possible. In the absence of Mrs. E. M. Wallace, LLPD president, who was vacationing in Colorado, vice president Cal VanderWerf acted as chairman during the brief business meeting for the election of officers.

Oscar White gave the report of the nominating committee. The names presented by this committee were unanimously voted as LLPD officers for 1948-49. They are:

President ..... Mayzelma Wallace
Vice President ... Rev. C. L. Williams
2nd Vice President .....
..... Rev. Edwin Price
Treasurer ..... W. J. Argersinger
Secretary ..... Mrs. Eldon Fields

Members of the Boys League of Lawrence were special guests at the picnic, with their leader, Tal Hiebert Following an exhibition ball game which the boys played, they gathered to be introduced to the picnic crowd, and to receive their new white polo shirts printed in blue with the words, "Boys League of Lawrence." When we see a lad wearing one of these shirts about town we can feel a real thrill of pride that here is one of "our" boys.

An especially happy feature of the picnic was the fact that several out-of-town LLPD members were present. Mrs. Oscar Bonny, daughter of Reverend and Mrs. G. E. E. Lindquist, was here from Anthony, Kansas, with her two children. Mr. Bonny is the minister of the Congregational church at Anthony. Miss Alberta White, on vacation from school teaching at Greensboro, North Carolina, came with the rest of the White family. Morton Davis, executive secretary of the LLPD before his departure, had just returned from an expedition to the Dominican Republic, where he was assisting in gathering material and making films for an illustrated lecture series. Mort had an interesting story to tell of his experiences, and we were sorry that he could stay so short a time in Lawrence before he started out again on further travels. The picnic was the final LLPD gathering to be attended as a local member by the Reverend C. Fosberg Hughes. Mr. Hughes has resigned the pastorate of Plymouth Church to lead in the establishment of a new church in Prairie Village, Johnson County, Kansas, which is close enough to home that we can still expect to see him occasionally even though it is too far for him to continue to serve on the LLPD Board. Another person we were delighted to meet at the picnic is a newcomer, Mrs. Tal Hiebert. "Toni" came from Denver very recently to become Tal's bride, and we are happy to welcome her.

"Wasn't it a swell picnic?" That's what everyone agreed as the day ended.

Events Across the Country

At the biennial convention of the American Nurses Association held in Chicago, it was voted by the House of Delegates that Negro nurses throughout the country be admitted to the ANA. Previously approximately 300 qualified nurses from 8 states had been denied membership by district association bans.

In July the magazine School Life, publication of the U. S. Office of Education, posed a question: "What Are Good Teachers Like?" and gave an answer: Clifford J. Campbell, director of Dunbar Trade School on Chicago's South Side. Cliff Campbell, from Washington, D. C., was once a Pullman porter. He turned from architecture to school teaching, and as dean of boys at Wendell Phillips High School was called "an artist in human relations." In six years he has seen enrollment at Dunbar increase from 125 to 1,650. 400 are Negro war veterans. A faculty of 74, white and Negro, replaced the original 16. Many of these teachers have refused better paying jobs in order to help Campbell build the bigger and better Dunbar high school. A new building is promised within three years; meantime more than four times as many students as the school was built to accommodate are being taken care of in temporary wooden buildings and by running three shifts. Campbell has begged and borrowed $2,000,000 worth of machines and equipment, and set up 23 vocational courses. Students are first taught employable skill, then academic courses and arts. Last year a Dunbar student won the state oratorical contest, and 105 of the 118 graduates demonstrated the effectiveness of the school's training by getting good jobs.

Prejudice and discrimination against persons because of race or color or religion, involuntary unemployment and bad housing are among the foremost causes of social neuroses, says Dr. William C. Menninger, famed psychiatrist of Topeka, Kans. Dr. Menninger told the America Psychiatric Association, "As a group of scientific experts who are interested in and concerned with the way men think and feel and behave, it is only logical to assume that these social ills might be among our very special concerns."

A Negro girl, Edith Mae Irby, has been admitted to the medical school of the University of Arkansas, without segregation.

You say the little efforts that I make will do no good;
They never will prevail
To tip the hovering scale
When justice hangs in balance.
I don't think I ever thought they would.
But I am prejudiced beyond debate
In favor of my right to choose which side
Shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight.

—Bonaro Overstreet
St. Mark's Rubric

Boys League

The Boys League of Lawrence continues its growth numerically and in scope of activities. Membership now numbers over fifty. Several of the boys spent a week at Camp Wood, and a larger group had a week-end camp at Lone Star Lake. All of the boys found employment through the summer, and LLPD members who phoned Tal Hiebert to arrange to hire workers had to wait their turn until the boys were free from previous jobs. All job offers were finally utilized, however, and the boys appreciated the opportunities given them. Membership in the League is open to all boys in the community between the ages of 8 and 18. Send your name and address on a postcard to Box 519, Lawrence, if you are interested in joining.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL OFFICE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

OF B'NAI B'RITH

11 PRYOR STREET, S. W.—SUITE 305 ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

SIGMUND LIVINGSTON
Founder
HON. MEIER E. STEINBRINK
National Chairman
RICHARD E. GUTSTADT
Executive Vice-Chairman
BENJAMIN R. EPSTEIN
National Director
FRANK GARSON
Commissioner Southern Region
ALEXANDER F. MILLER
Director Southern Regional Office

October 25, 1948

RECEIVED
OCT 25 1948
Southern Regional Office

Dear Friend:

The enclosed brochure describes Freedom Pamphlets, a new and important series of booklets dealing with a great problem---the relations of men with their fellow men.

Written by outstanding authorities such as Dr. Allport of Harvard, Dr. Kilpatrick of Columbia, and Dr. Lund of the University of Oklahoma, Freedom Pamphlets are published by the Anti-Defamation League, in cooperation with the American Education Fellowship. The series provides excellent material in the field of human relationships and should prove to be an excellent teaching tool. The first two of the pamphlets---"The Responsibility is Ours" by Bonaro Overstreet and "Danger in Discord" by Dr. Oscar and Mary Handlin---are now off the press and available for distribution. Future units are scheduled for publication at the rate of a new pamphlet every two months.

Should you desire to subscribe, the cost is 20¢ for each pamphlet. As soon as you inform us of your wish to receive the pamphlets, we shall send you the two issues now available and future pamphlets as they are published.

Cordially,

Fred Grossman

Fred Grossman
Associate Director

FG/ff

TO ELIMINATE DEFAMATION OF THE JEWS AND TO COUNTERACT UN-AMERICAN AND ANTI-DEMOCRATIC PROPAGANDA THROUGH A BROAD EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM: TO ADVANCE GOOD-WILL AND PROPER UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN AMERICAN GROUPS: TO PRESERVE AND TO TRANSLATE INTO GREATER EFFECTIVENESS THE IDEALS OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY.

THE RESPONSIBILITY IS OURS

DANGER IN DISCORD

THE RADIO LISTENERS' BILL OF RIGHTS

ABC'S OF SCAPEGOATING

MODERN EDUCATION AND BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS

THE TRIAL OF A NEW WEAPON

Freedom Pamphlets

FREEDOM is more than a word. It is a deeply cherished belief in the essential importance of the person and in the supremacy of a society which respects and safeguards the eminent dignity and integrity of personality.

Freedom is a creative spirit that summons the energies of all men to the task of building the kind of community, the kind of nation, the kind of world in which they want to live. It is a dream of a world in which all men, women and children are encouraged to grow to their fullest—physically, mentally, spiritually—so that they may fulfill the great promise of their inner potential.

But Freedom is more than a belief or a dream. Freedom is also a process; as such it is concerned with means as with ends, seeking through democratic methods to create the good society.

The education of free men to understand their proper role in a free society is basic to such a process. To this task the Freedom Pamphlets are dedicated.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Freedom Pamphlets are published by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. They are edited by Frank N. Trager, National Program Director, with the assistance of Harold Schiff and Adele Liederman.

Freedom Pamphlets are a new series of booklets dealing with the most important problems of our time — the relations of men with their fellow men of various races, creeds, national origins.

Freedom Pamphlets are written by outstanding authorities. Each brings his specialized talents and experience to bear on the problem of human relations. Each makes a valuable and original contribution to a series that embraces every significant facet of the American scene.

(In cooperation with the American Education Fellowship, a number of the Freedom Pamphlets are being prepared by key educators at colleges and universities throughout the country. Prof. Theodore Brameld of the New York University School of Education and regional vice-president of the American Education Fellowship is editorial consultant for the pamphlets.)

Here are some of the distinguished authors of Freedom Pamphlets.

MRS. BONARO W. OVERSTREET

Mrs. Overstreet, whose pamphlet, The Responsibility Is Ours, initiates the series, is an outstanding author and lecturer in personal psychology and adult education. In this essay she emphasizes the responsibilities of all towards integrated group living.

OSCAR AND MARY HANDLIN

Dr. Handlin, assistant professor of social science at Harvard University, and his wife, Mary, devote their pamphlet, Danger in Discord, to a sociological examination of the roots of anti-Semitism in the United States. "While racist ideas originally sprouted without reference to Jews, they were quickly applied to them," the Handlins point out.

CHARLES A. SIEPMANN

Prof. Siepmann, chairman of New York University's Department of Communications, spent twelve years with the British Broadcasting Corporation before coming to the United States in 1937. During the war, he served in OWI's radio division. His pamphlet, The Radio Listeners' Bill of Rights, describes how communities may use radio as an instrument in securing better human relations.

GORDON ALLPORT

Dr. Allport, psychology professor at Harvard University, has prepared a revised edition of ABC's of Scapegoating for the Freedom Pamphlet series. The pamphlet is concerned with the psychology of prejudice, and investigates the motives, sources, forms and effects of scapegoating.

DR. WILLIAM H. KILPATRICK

Professor emeritus at Teachers College, Columbia University, Dr. Kilpatrick is one of the leading educational thinkers in the United States. In Modern Education and Better Human Relations, he traces the development of present-day teaching methods, stressing the importance of intercultural education.

JAMES PARKES

James Parkes, noted English writer and lecturer, has written extensively on anti-Semitism. In the pamphlet, The Trial of A New Weapon, he describes the origin of political anti-Semitism in 19th Century Europe and its culmination in 20th Century Nazi Germany.

Freedom Pamphlets are aimed at community leaders. They demonstrate to men and women in all walks of life how contemporary institutions may be used to forge "the kind of community, the kind of nation, the kind of world in which they want to live."

NOW AVAILABLE

THE RESPONSIBILITY IS OURS: The Individual and Our Human Relationships, by Bonaro W. Overstreet.*

FORTHCOMING ISSUES

DANGER IN DISCORD, by Oscar and Mary Handlin.

ABC'S OF SCAPEGOATING, revised edition, by Gordon Allport.

MODERN EDUCATION AND BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS, by Prof. William H. Kilpatrick.

THE TRIAL OF A NEW WEAPON, by James Parkes.

THEATRE AND HUMAN RELATIONS, by John Gassner, editor of TWENTY BEST PLAYS, member of the New York City Drama Critics' Circle, and professor of drama at the New School for Social Research.

THE RADIO LISTENERS' BILL OF RIGHTS, by Charles Siepmann, chairman of New York University Department of Communications.

THE SCHOOL-CENTERED COMMUNITY, by S.E.T. Lund, professor of education, University of Oklahoma.*

GRASS ROOTS DEMOCRACY IN ACTION, by Kenneth D. Benne, professor of education, Columbia University.*

TOWARD WORLD UNDERSTANDING, by Harold Benjamin, dean, University of Maryland.*

WORKER'S EDUCATION, by Arthur Elder, director of the Worker's Educational Service, University of Michigan.

*Prepared in cooperation with the American Education Fellowship.

Freedom Pamphlets are 20¢ per copy. Discounts for quantity orders.

For additional copies, write to:
SOUTHEASTERN REGIONAL OFFICE
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
22 Pryor St., S. W. - ATLANTA, GA.

Freedom Pamphlets are published bi-monthly.

Order your pamphlets from:
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
PROGRAM DIVISION
212 Fifth Avenue New York 10, N. Y.

College Study Bulletin No. 5
October, 1948

File CB-16D
Mimeo. E5570

STUDY FORMS AND TECHNICS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

THE COLLEGE STUDY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS*
Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education
American Council on Education
Lloyd Allen Cook, Director
Wayne University, 5272 Second Ave.,
Detroit 2, Michigan

RECEIVED
SEP 13 1948
Southern Regional Council

Among the several ways in which the College Study seeks to be of help to workers in intergroup education is in devising, collecting, and distributing study forms, bibliographies, teaching aids, and the like. In the main, these materials have been prepared by the College Study Staff, or by colleges in the Study, although we are glad to receive from others any study form which in their opinion merits general use and test.

In general, our materials are related to College Study goals, with emphasis especially on race, creed, national heritages, rural-urban and social class differences, as suggested in the following statement:

College Study Goals

1. To discover and appraise the role in child and adult life of race, creed, national heritages, rural-urban and class level differences.
2. To provide college and school environments in which all peoples are viewed, valued and treated in terms of their personal worth.
3. To teach prospective teachers a better understanding of and a deeper concern for human relations, and to increase their work skills in this area.
4. To make basic and lasting improvements in teacher training programs in line with the above goals, and to diffuse these changes within the profession.
5. To work directly, and to cooperate actively, with local and nonlocal intergroup agencies for the increasing democratization of our common life.

Please order any item by its file number, including stamps up to $1.00 in your order. In amounts over $1.00, make checks payable to the College Study in Intergroup Relations. Charges cover costs to us, including postage.

Our function, as we now regard it, is to supply sample forms, at least for most of our listings, with the user reproducing the form in quantities for his own noncommercial use. Where forms are copyrighted, the right of use must of course be secured from the copyright holder.

After February 1, 1949, when the field work phase of the College Study program comes to an end, we shall be obliged to terminate the circulation of materials listed in this bulletin. We are hopeful that this service can be continued in some way by the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education.

---

*Financed for a four year period by a grant to the Council on Cooperation in Teacher Education of the American Council on Education by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

I. ANECDOTAL RECORDS, LIFE HISTORIES

1. Anecdotal Record Sheet. Adapted from form by Professor Bertha Lawrence, State Teachers College, Trenton, N. J. Record Sheet, File AR-3, 6¢.

2. Student's Weekly Log and Program Report. Adaptation of a weekly "log" used in College of Education, Wayne University. File AR-7, 6¢.

3. Formative Influences on My Attitudes toward Minority Groups. A guided outline for student autobiographical papers on their experiences as possessors and objects of prejudice. Can also be used as an interview guide. 3 p., mimeo., File AR-12, 9¢.

II. ATTITUDE SCALES, OPINIONNAIRES

1. Race Attitudes and Contacts. General, composite inquiry, illustrating various kinds of testing. Of use in orienting a college class and as an endtest measure. Four pages, mimeo. File AS-1, 12¢.

2. Attitudes Toward Jews: Statement Form. Seventeen tested attitudinal statements, asking for one of five responses from strongly agree to strongly disagree. Score range of 17 to 85. File AS-10, 6¢.

3. Attitudes Toward Jews: Incident Form. Ten incidents, or short cases, asking subject to circle one of five attitudinal statements with which he most nearly agrees. Scale range of 10 to 50. File AS-11, 10¢.

4. Attitudes Toward Social Classes: Statement Form. 32 items. File AS-12, 6¢.

5. Attitudes Toward the Foreign-born: Statement Form. 15 items. File AS-13, 6¢.

6. Attitudes Toward Negroes: Statement Form. Same type as No. 2 above. File AS-15, 6¢.

7. Attitudes Toward Negroes: Incident Form. Same type as No. 3 above. File AS-16, 10¢.

8. A Survey of Group Opinions. A composite 40-item test dealing with attitudes toward Jews, Negroes, the foreign-born, and lower classes. Each item selected from an original list of about 30 items. Scale range of 40 to 200, with tentative norms on about 1500 cases. Test and Answer Sheet, AS-20, AS-20A, 8¢. Manual, File AS-20B, 15¢.

9. Social Distance Questionnaire. Adaptation of Bogardus Social Distance Test. One page. File AS-25, 6¢.

10. Attitudes Toward Races and Nationalities. By H. H. Grice, edited by H. H. Remmers, Purdue University. A 46-item scale which can be filled in for one to five races and nationalities. Test and Answer Sheet, AS-26, AS-26A, 6¢; Manual, AS-26B, 3¢.

11. What People Are Like. A 10-item rating scale of personal-social traits. Adapted from a test by Dr. Eugene Hartley, City College, New York. Test and Answer Sheet, AS-38, AS-38A, 10¢; Manual, AS-38B, 6¢.

12. Paths of Life. Six "paths of life", each related to local "power system" and each described in a paragrphs. Respondents are asked to indicate personal reactions by ratings of 1 to 5. Adapted from a test by Charles Morris, University of Chicago. File AS-40, 6¢.

III. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

1. Intergroup Relations: A General Bibliography. Current fiction, sociological studies, child acculturation, school programs, group study and management technics, etc. Fourteen pages, mimeo. File B-2, 25¢.

2. Projective Tests: A Bibliography. Adapted from Hertz, M., et al., "Rorschach Methods and Other Projective Technics." Review of Educational Research, 17, 73-100, 1947. File B-5, 9¢.

3. Bibliography on Action Research and Group Management. Four pages covering recent researches and interpretations. File B-7, 12¢.

4. Leadership: A Bibliography. Adapted from Leslie Day Zeleny, "Leadership", Encyclopedia of Educational Research, 1948 Revision. File B-9, 9¢.

5. Bibliography on Nondirective Therapy, by Dr. Carl R. Rogers, 1946. Mimeo., 70 titles. File B-3, 9¢.

IV. COLLEGE STUDY BULLETINS*

1. The College Study in Intergroup Relations. General information regarding the Study for colleges interested in making an application for inclusion in the Study. File SS-7, Five pages.

2. Our Colleges for 1946-47. Brief description of the programs of 20 participating colleges as of December, 1946. File CS-6, Twelve pages, 10¢.

3. Action, Action Research for 1947-48. Discussion of "action research" in reference to College Study program for the year. October 1947. File AR-10, Fourteen pages, 15¢.

4. Group Work Technics in the College Study. Descriptions of "group work" approaches made by colleges in the Study, with cases and analyses. February, 1948. File TM-32. Eleven pages, 20¢.

5. Study Forms and Technics in Intergroup Relations. An inventory of study forms, teaching aids, etc., distributed by the College Study. October, 1948. File CB-16D, 6¢.

V. COMMUNITY STUDY FORMS

1. A Study of Newspapers. A 6 page form for rating newspapers in respect to their treatment of minority groups. Six pages. File CS-12, 12¢; Manual, CS-12A, 8¢.

2. Social Participation Scale, 1937. By F. Stuart Chapin, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. Nature and extent of husband and wife participation in community organizations, tentative norms. Copyrighted. File CS-31, 6¢.

---

*Only Bulletins in stock are listed, with listings discontinued as stocks are exhausted.

3. Community Resources Inventory. By Lloyd Allen Cook. Three page inventory for collecting essential information on community agencies of use in a school program. File CS-35, 9¢.

4. Community Satisfaction Scale. By Vernon Davies, Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. 20 scaled statements. File CS-38, 6¢.

5. Paths of Life. Six "paths of life," each related to local power system and described in a paragraph. Respondents are asked to indicate personal reactions by ratings of 1 to 5. Adapted from test by Chas. Morris, University of Chicago. File AS-40, 6¢.

6. Occupational Rating Scale. A device to secure rated opinion as to the social worth of 90 common occupations. Adapted from scales by C. C. North and Paul Hatt. File CS-43, 15¢. Manual, including national norms, File TM-55, 20¢.

VI. EVALUATION FORMS

1. Evaluation of a Course in Intergroup Relations. Overall course rating by students. achievement of objectives, teacher personality, etc. Two pages, File EF-1, 8¢.

2. Student Reaction to College Experiences. Adapted from form by Wayne University Committee on Intergroup Relations. Student reactions to courses, campus and off-campus activities. Two pages, File EF-5, 6¢.

3. Group Process Approach to Education. Systematic pre- and end-test appraisal form for college course seeking to make a "group work" approach to teacher training problems. Objectives, procedures, problems. Four pages. File EF-10, 12¢.

VII. EXPERIENCE INVENTORIES

1. Experiences With Negroes: Community Contacts. By Robert N. Ford, University of Alabama, University, Ala. Negro participation in community life as white respondents have seen it. Two pages, 12 tested items, five responses. Scale values of 12 to 60, with some known norms. Test EI-4 and Answer Sheet EI-6A, 9¢; Manual, EI-6, 12¢.

2. Experiences With Negroes: Personal Contacts. By Robert N. Ford. Same type scale as above. 14 items, scale value 14 to 70. Test EI-5 and Answer Sheet EI-6A, 9¢; Manual, EI-6, 12¢.

VIII. GROUP STUDY FORMS

1. Observing A Youth Group. For use in sensitizing college students to group structure, processes, member roles, etc. Requires training in use. Three pages. File GI-2, 12¢.

2. Guided Outline for Group Study. Form to be used by college students in group description and analysis. File GS-4, 12¢.

IX. INFORMATIONAL TESTS

1. American Ethnic Peoples. A 100-item factual test, multiple choice type. Items indicative of general knowledge; college level. Test IT-1B and Answer Sheet IT-1C, 20¢; Manual, IT-1D, 9¢.

X. PROBLEM CHECK LISTS

1. Problem Check List. By Ross L. Mooney, Ohio State University. Over 300 items in 11 categories. Copyrighted. Obtain from Bureau for Educational Research, Ohio State University. File PCL-1 (Jr. H. S.), PCL-2 (Sr. H. S.), PCL-3 (College).

2. The Wishing Well. By Louis Raths. 160 items in eight "needs" categories. More projective than Mooney Problem Check List. Grades 4, 5, and 6. Obtain from Bureau for Educational Research, Ohio State University. File PCL-6, 15¢.

XI. PERSONALITY INVENTORIES, GENERAL

1. The Personal Audit. By C. R. Adams and W. A. Lepley, Psych-Educational Clinic, Penn. State College, State College, Pa. Percentile score profile in nine areas of personality. Copyrighted. Obtain from Science Research Association, 228 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago. File PI-2.

2. The Personality Inventory. By Robert G. Bernreuter. Copyrighted. Obtain from Stanford University Press, Stanford University, Calif. File PI-3.

3. Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory. By S. R. Hathaway and J. C. McKinley Copyrighted. Obtain from Univ. Minn. Press, Minneapolis, File PI-4.

XII. PROGRESS REPORTS, ARTICLES

1. The Study of Intergroup Relations. 24th Yearbook. American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1945, pp. 5-51. Papers by Ethel Alpenfels, Allison Davis, R. J. Havighurst, Frank Baker, Julius Warren, Lloyd Allen Cook. Order from Chas. W. Hunt, Secretary, American Association of Teachers Colleges, State Teachers College, Oneonta, New York. $1.00. File PR-1.

2. Cook, Lloyd A. "Teaching Teachers Cooperative Action." 25th Yearbook, American Association of Teachers Colleges, 1946, 97-108. Reprint. File PR-2, 20¢.

3. Cook, Lloyd A. "The College Study in Intergroup Relations: A Progress Report." Educational Record, October 1946, 452-465. Reprint. File PR-3, 15¢.

4. Cook, Lloyd A. "Intergroup Education." Review of Educational Research, 17, 266-78, 1947. 77 title biblio. File TM-25, 20¢.

XIII. PROJECTIVE TESTS

1. What Would You Do? An Interviewing Device. By Arnold Meier. Series of simple line drawings, showing child entering country, traveling to subject's home town, entering school, etc. Child (small doll, paper cutout, etc.) a little Negro boy Jewish girl, and the like. Test used as interviewing device. Obtain from Detroit Citizenship Education Study, 436 Merrick St. File PT-1.

2. Rosenzweig P-F Study. By Saul Rosenzweig, Western State Psychiatric Hospital, Pittsburgh, Pa. Four printed pages, four drawings to a page, with subject asked to write in responses to personally frustrating situations of a general sort. No group relations content. Order from author. File PT-2.

3. The "Faces" Test. By Research Center for Group Dynamics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge. Panel of 16 tested photo faces about which "guess who" questions are asked. Now in experimental stage and available only from authors. File PT-4.

4. Human Relations Test. Developed by the staff of the College Study. Ten printed drawings, each depicting an intergroup contact. Subjects asked to write a short story about each scene, telling what has happened, how it came about, and what will happen next. Can be used as individual test (cards) or group test (slides, opaque projector). Directions for obtaining and interpreting scores for guidance uses based on 260 cases. Test, File PT-10, Set of 10 cards, $1.50, ten sets or more, $1.00 each. Individual Answer Summary Sheet, PT-10A, 6¢; Group Answer Summary Sheet, PT-10B, 6¢; General Manual, PT-10C, 15¢; Instructions to Respondents, PT-10D, 3¢.

XIV. SCHOOL INQUIRY FORMS

1. The School Inventory. By Hugh M. Bell. Series of 70 or more questions about the school, reactions to teachers, etc. Copyrighted. Order from Stanford University Press. File SIF-1.

2. School Inventory: Intergroup Relations. Designed by the College Study as a survey for use in mixed schools. Pupil attitudes and behaviors, school practices, etc. File SIF-5, 15¢.

XV. SOCIOGRAPHIC AND SOCIAL DISTANCE TESTS

1. Ohio Social Acceptance Scale: Form G-3. By Dr. Louis Raths, New York University. Six categories of personal friendliness. Can be adapted grades 4 to 12. Test, File ST-3, 6¢. For general manual on sociometric testing, see STM-18A, 15¢.

2. Who's Who in My Group? Form G-4-B, Intermediate Grades. By Dr. Louis Raths. 18 "guess who" items indicative of pupil roles and prestige ratings.

3. The Culture Conflict Index. By Dr. Louis Raths. Middle to upper elementary grades. 18 kinds of intergroup attitudinal situations answered in terms of "how many people in your room" (or group) would react by liking, disliking. Separate answer sheet. Six pages. File ST-5, 12¢.

4. Casting Characters for A Class Play. 10 parts, one page, grade school level. File ST-6, 6¢.

5. How I Feel About Others. A 20 item check list for 3rd to 6th grades, seeking attitudes toward country children, small town and big city children. Two pages, File ST-10, 6¢.

6. Where Should Children Be Reared? Seventeen attitudinal statements, asking for comparison of farm, town, city, etc., as the most desirable place in which to live. For grades 6 to 10. File ST-11, 6¢.

7. Things We Like to Do. Designed to secure positive and negative friend choices, but to focus attention on an array of activities, sports, hobbies, etc. Grade level, ST-16, 6¢; High school level, ST-18, 6¢.

8. Social Distance Inquiry. Adaptation of Bogardus Scale. One page, mimeo. File ST-25, 6¢.

9. Social Distance Questionnaire. Adapted from scale devised by Dr. Theodore G. Standing, State College for Teachers, Albany, N. Y. Twelve "distance" relationships toward ten ethnic groups. One page. File AS-52, 6¢.

10. Sociometric Study, A General Manual. Collecting, analyzing and diagramming sociometric data, with special reference to College Study forms. File STM-18A, 25¢.

XVI. TEACHING MATERIALS: INTERGROUP RELATIONS

1. Intergroup Education: Course Outline. By Dr. W. W. D. Sones, University of Pittsburgh. Two page outline of study units. File TM-1, 6¢.

2. Thaden, J. F., Farm People of Michigan by Ethnic Stocks: 1945. Sample ethnic map (2½ by 3 ft.). File TM-2, 25¢.

3. Alpenfels, Ethel, Sense and Nonsense About Race. 47 p. 1946. File TM-5, 25¢.

4. Redfield, Robert, Race and Religion in Selective Admission. 15 p. 1947. File TM-8, 25¢.

5. Gilchrist, Robert S., et al. Building Friendly Relations. Description of practices in Laboratory School, Ohio State University. 50 p. 1947. File TM-10, 45¢.

6. Improving Intergroup Relations in School and Community Life. By Committee on Inservice Education, North Central Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Cases, theory, study and action technics. 48 p. File TM-15, 35¢; 10 copies or more, 25¢ each.

7. Welling, Jane B., et al. What Can Teachers Do? Intergroup Relations in creative arts, college level. 31 p., illustrated. 1947. File TM-20, 55¢. Over 25, 40¢ each.

8. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Intergroup Education." Review of Educational Research, 17: 266-73, 1947. Reprint. File TM-25, 25¢.

9. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "An Experimental Sociographic Study of A Stratified 10th Grade Class." American Sociological Review, 10: 250-61, 1945. Sociograms, case materials, biblio. Reprinted, 1947. File TM-26, 25¢; 10 to 20, 20¢ each

10. From Sea to Shining Sea. Administrative viewpoints and practices. 64 p. 1947. Order from American Association of School Administrators, 1201 16th St., N.W., Washington, D. C. or from the College Study. File TM-28, 50¢.

11. Cook, Lloyd Allen, "Group Work Technics in the College Study." Social Education, February, 1948. Group discussion technics, activity programs, group therapy, cultural informant, sociodrama, etc. Reprint, 12 p. File TM-32, 20¢.

12. The Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. To Secure These Rights. New York: Simon and Schuster, $1.00 Available from the College Study in PM's reprints. File TM-34, 10¢.

13. Some Principles Defining A Democratic Group Situation. One page, mimeo. File TM-36, 6¢.

14. Preliminary Report of the First National Training Laboratory on Group Development. Order from National Education Association, 1201 16th St., N. W., Washington, D. C. $1.00.

15. Williams, Robin M., Jr. The Reduction of Intergroup Tensions. A Survey of Research on Problems of Ethnic, Racial, and Religious Group Tensions. Obtain from Social Science Research Council, 230 Park Avenue, New York, 17, N. Y.

16. Paul K. Hatt, "Class and Ethnic Attitudes," Amer. Soc. Rev., 13, February, 1948 36-43. Factoral analysis of responses on College Study AS-20 test. 9 pages. Mimeo. File TM-38, 25¢.

17. Grace I. Woodson, The West Virginia State College Group Relations Program. A 13-page study of West Virginia State's participation in College Study program. File TM-42, 25¢.

18. Resource Agencies in Intergroup Education. A list of 50 selected agencies. File TM-45, 6¢.

XVII. TEST SCORING METHODS AND MATERIALS

1. Cook, Lloyd Allen, Methods of Community Study. Adapted from article in W. C. Reawis (ed.), The School and the Urban Community, 1942, pp. 201-14. Emphasis on processing field data, building tables, etc. File TSM-1, 15¢.

2. The McBee Keysort System. Five page description of an effective "ice pick" system of tabulating social data. File TSM-4, 12¢.

3. Forsyth, Elaine and Katz, Leo, "A Matrix Scheme for Scoring Sociographic Data." Sociometry, 9, November 1946, 340-7. Reprint. File TSM-14, 12¢.

4. Manual for Attitude Testing, 5 p., mimeo. File AS-20B, 15¢.

5. Manual for Information Testing, 3 p., mimeo. File IT-1D, 9¢.

6. Classification Code for Scoring Personal Background Factors on College Study Battery A Tests. File TS-20, 12¢.

7. Coded Summary Sheet for College Study Battery A Tests. For the machine scoring of test scores by 14 variables. File TS-20A, 6¢.

8. Interviewing Guide, for use with College Study Battery A Tests, File TS-21, 10¢.

XVIII. WORKSHOPS, CLINICS, CONFERENCES

1. Plan for A One-Day Workshop on Intergroup Relations, Followed by Conferences (Second Day) with Working Committees. File WS-1, 3¢.

10 - Intercultural Education

SECOND NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON INTERGROUP RELATIONS

November 18-20, 1948

International House and Public Administration Clearing House

University of Chicago Campus

Sponsoring Agencies

American Council on Race Relations

National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials

National Citizens Council on Civil Rights

PROGRAM

PART I

Second Annual Meeting of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18

9:00 A.M. - 10:00 A.M. REGISTRATION - International House

10:00 A.M. - 12:00 Noon Session 1 - International House
Assembly Room

WELCOME TO DELEGATES

George Schermer, President, NAIRO

Summary and Review of Current Activities
in Intergroup Relations

Chairman: Benjamin Epstein, Director
Anti-Defamation League

A. On the national scene, report by

Louis Bennett
Assistant Executive Director
American Jewish Committee

B. In the states, report by

John B. Sullivan
Director of Public Relations, Education and Research, New York State Commission Against Discrimination

C. In local communities, report by

Dan W. Dodson
New York Mayor's Committee on Unity

12:30 P.M. - 2:00 P.M. Session 2 - LUNCHEON
International House: Assembly Room

Professional Standards in the Field of Intergroup Relations

Chairman: George Schermer
President, NAIRO

Speaker: E. Franklin Frazier
Department of Sociology
Howard University

2:30 P.M. - 5:00 P.M. Session 3 ROUND TABLES (A.B.C)

ROUND TABLE 3A - PACH Board Room

Administrative Problems and Techniques of State Official Agencies

Chairman: Harold A. Lett
Division Against Discrimination
New Jersey Department of Education

ROUND TABLE 3B - PACH Conference Room

Administrative Problems and Techniques of Local Official Agencies

Chairman: Felix M. Gentile
Executive Secretary
Toledo Board of Community Relations

ROUND TABLE 3C - International House: Room D-E

Administrative Problems and Techniques of Citizens' Community Councils

Chairman: Irene Miller
Executive Secretary
Seattle Civic Unity Committee

7:30 P.M. - 10:00 P.M. Session 4 - GENERAL SESSION
International House: Assembly Room

Organization for Legislation

Chairman: Roy Wilkins
Assistant Secretary
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

A. Congressional Action - International House
Assembly Room

Discussion Leader: Mike Masaoka
Legislative Director
Anti-Discrimination Committee, Japanese American Citizens League

B. State Legislation - International House
Room D-E

Discussion Leader: Will Maslow,
Director, Commission on Law and Social Action, American Jewish Congress

C. Local Ordinances - International House: Room A

Discussion Leader: Byron Miller
Midwest Director
Commission on Law and Social Action, American Jewish Congress

(Presentation of subjects in general sessions will be followed by separate group discussions and then groups will reconvene in Assembly Room for summary of sessions.)

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19

9:00 A.M. - 10:00 A.M. Session 5 - Business Meeting
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
International House: Assembly Room

Chairman: George Schermer
President, NAIRO

10:15 A.M. - 12:00 Noon Session 6 ROUND TABLES - (A, B,C)

ROUND TABLE 6A - International House: Room B

Methods and Techniques of Eliminating Discriminatory Practices in Local Government

Chairman: John G. Feild
Field Representative
City of Detroit Interracial Committee

ROUND TABLE 6B - International House: Room A

Methods and Techniques of Eliminating Discriminatory Practices in Housing and Urban Redevelopment

Chairman: Coleman Woodbury, Director
Urban Redevelopment Study

ROUND TABLE 6C - International House: Room D-E

Techniques of Adult Education and the Use of Mass Media

Chairman: Clyde Hart, Director
National Opinion Research Center

PART II

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 19

Second Annual Meeting on Intergroup Relations

(Sponsored by the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials in cooperation with the American Council on Race Relations and the National Citizens' Council on Civil Rights.)

12:30 P.M. - 2:00 P.M. Session 7 - LUNCHEON
International House: Assembly Room

Implementing the Recommendations of the Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights

Chairman: John B. Sullivan
Vice-President, NAIRO

Speaker: A. Abbot Rosen
Regional Director, Anti-Defamation League (Former Chief of the Civil Rights Section, U.S. Department of Justice)

2:30 P.M. - 5:00 P.M. Session 8 - ROUND TABLES (A,B,C,D)

ROUND TABLE 8A - International House: Room D-E

Citizens and Civil Rights

Chairman: George Field
Executive Secretary
Freedom House

Speaker: Leo Cherne
Treasurer, National Citizens' Council on Civil Rights; Executive Secretary, Research Institute of America

ROUND TABLE 8B - PACH Conference Room

The Role of Fair Employment Practices Officers, Consultants, and Race Relations Advisers in Federal Agencies

Chairman: Frank W. Baldau
Executive Director
Cleveland Community Relations Board

ROUND TABLE 8C - PACH Board Room

Health and Welfare: Providing Equal Treatment and Facilities

Chairman: Michael M. Davis
Chairman, Committee on Research in Medical Economics

ROUND TABLE 8D - International House: Room A

The Role of Religious Groups

Chairman: Homer A. Jack
Unitarian Church of Evanston

7:30 P.M. - 10:00 P.M. Session 9 - GENERAL SESSION
International House: Assembly Room

Reports on Current National Issues by National and Federal Agency Representatives

Chairman: Frank Trager
Program Director
Anti-Defamation League

1. Federal Civil Rights

Speaker: Leo Cherne
Treasurer, National Citizens' Council on Civil Rights

2. Fair Employment Practices

Speaker: Arnold Aronson, Director
Committee on Employment Discrimination, National Community Relations Advisory Council

3. Anti-Lynch Measures

(Speaker to be announced)

4. Elimination of Poll Tax

Speaker: Elmer Henderson, Director
American Council on Human Rights

5. Segregation in the Nation's Capital

Speaker: Joseph D. Lohman, Secretary
National Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital

6. Segregation in the Armed Forces

Speaker: James C. Evans
Civilian Adviser to the Secretary of Defense

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1948

9:30 A.M. - 12:00 Noon Session 10 ROUND TABLES - (A,B,C)

ROUND TABLE 10A - International House: Room A

Problems in Higher and Professional Education

Chairman: A. C. Ivy, Vice-President
University of Illinois

ROUND TABLE 10B - PACH Conference Room

Integrating Minorities Into Employment

Chairman: Sara Southall
Board Member
American Council on Race Relations

ROUND TABLE 10C - International House: Room D-E

The Role of Research in the Field of Intergroup Relations

Chairman: Arnold Rose
Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Washington University

12:30 P.M - 2:00 P.M. Session 11 - LUNCHEON
International House: Assembly Room

Chairman: Homer A. Jack
Vice-President, National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials

A. Discussion of Reports from Conference Round Tables

B. Problems and Prospects for 1949

Speaker: Louis Wirth
Chairman, Committee on Education, Training and Research in Race Relations, University of Chicago

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON RACE RELATIONS

OFFICERS

Clarence E. Pickett, Chairman
Will W. Alexander, Vice Pres. and Treas.
Charles H. Houston, Vice Pres. and Consultant
Leonard M. Rieser, Secretary

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Louis Adamic
Mary McLeod Bethune
Homer S. Brown
Ralph J. Bunche
James B. Carey
Charles Dollard
Edwin R. Embree
Marshall Field
Ernesto Galarza
Lloyd K. Garrison
Most Rev. Francis J. Haas
Augustus Hawkins
Sidney Hollander
Charles S. Johnson
The Rev. John LaFarge
P. L. Prattis
Robert Redfield
Abraham Rubin
Bishop William Scarlett
Boris Shishkin
Sara E. Southall
R. J. Thomas
Channing H. Tobias
Willard S. Townsend
Walter Wanger
Louis S. Weiss
Walter White
Louis Wirth
Donald Young

President: Louis Wirth
Executive Assistant: Louis E. Hosch

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

OFFICERS

George Schermer, President
John B. Sullivan, Vice President
Homer A. Jack, Vice President

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Ruth Abernethy
Edith M. Alexander
Frank W. Baldau
Martin H. Bickham
Marshall Bragdon
Maurice B. Fagan
Harold A. Lett
Charles Livermore
Caroline MacChesney
Mike Masaoka
Irene B. Miller
Frank T. Simpson
Thomas H. Wright

Executive Secretary: Louis E. Hosch

17-Intercultural Educ.
DECEIVED
Southern Regional Council

Publications of the Cooperative Study in General Education

Published by

American Council on Education

Washington, D. C.

THE COOPERATIVE STUDY IN GENERAL EDUCATION

THE COOPERATIVE STUDY IN GENERAL EDUCATION was instituted by the American Council on Education in January 1939 and functioned actively in programs set up in more than a score of universities and colleges until September 1944. It grew out of the belief among a number of colleges which had been pioneering in new programs in general education that a cooperative study would be most beneficial in the exchange of ideas and experiences, and at the same time provide the services of consultants and other facilities which individual colleges could not normally provide.

It was considered important that a variety of types of institutions with their individual problems engage in the program, and the group selected included representatives of the land-grant college, the municipal university, the state teachers college, the independent liberal arts college, the Catholic college, the Protestant church-related college, the Negro college, the four-year college for women, the junior college for women, and the coeducational junior college. The over-all report of the Executive Committee and reports of the major projects carried on in the various fields (with the exception of science which was interrupted by the war) are contained in the publications described in this folder.

COMMITTEE ON THE COOPERATIVE STUDY IN GENERAL EDUCATION

Appointed by the American Council on Education

WILLIAM P. TOLLEY, Chairman
Syracuse University

LLOYD C. EMMONS
Michigan State College

B. LAMAR JOHNSON
Stephens College

EARL J. MCGRATH
University of Iowa

GEORGE F. ZOOK, ex officio
American Council on Education

RALPH W. TYLER, Director

Now Ready

COOPERATION IN GENERAL EDUCATION

A Final Report of the Executive Committee of the Cooperative Study in General Education

In this over-all report the Executive Committee of the Cooperative Study reviews the philosophy, procedures, and accomplishments of the five-year study. This book makes available the conclusions of the Committee on questions involved in the development of a program of general education.

Who should receive a general education? What should be the ends of general education? What kinds of courses should be offered? What content should be included? What teaching methods and materials should be used? How should achievements be appraised and recorded? What characteristics are required of the student personnel and guidance program? How should work in general education be organized and administered? How should instructors be selected and educated?

CONTENTS

I. Factors Influencing the Development of General Education
II. Issues in General Education
III. The Philosophy of the Study
IV. Individual Projects in the Colleges
V. Major Projects in the Humanities
First Project: General Goals of Life
Second Project: The Inventory and Check List in Fiction
Third Project: What Students Think about Art
VI. Major Projects in the Social Studies
First Project: An Inventory of Social Understanding
Second Project: An Inventory of Beliefs about Postwar Reconstruction
VII. The Major Project in Science
The Health Inventories
VIII. Major Projects in Student Personnel
First Project: Self-Inventory in Personal-Social Relations
Second Project: The Inventory of Counseling Relations
IX. Contributions of the Major Projects of the Study
X. The Process of Development within the College
XI. Some Conclusions Concerning General Education

Appendixes list individual college projects in the several fields covered by the Cooperative Study.

240 pages, September, 1947, cloth. $3.00.

Now Ready

GENERAL EDUCATION IN THE HUMANITIES

BY HAROLD B. DUNKEL

This book is practical, interpretive, philosophical, and visionary. Practical because it gives a step-by-step account of the organization of programs in the humanities, outlines of content, procedures, and new measuring devices. It is interpretive in its treatment of the several extensive case histories; philosophical about both students and teachers and their individual philosophies; and visionary in its faith in the eventual solving of old problems and the discovery of new problems in a postwar world.

The technique was primarily the exploration of students' beliefs and attitudes in order to understand them and to effect such changes as will lead to greater personal satisfaction for the student and the betterment of society. The students reported on here were real people with real—and imaginary—problems. A thoughtful reading of this book should increase the understanding and knowledge of all teachers of young people.

The valuable inventories developed by the Cooperative Study (in philosophy of life, religion, literature, and the arts) are treated in Appendixes.

321 pages, September, 1947, cloth. $3.50.

CONTENTS

I. Cooperative Evaluation in the Humanities
II. Students' General Goals for Life
III. Students' Religious Concepts
IV. Students' Beliefs about Fiction
V. What Students Think about Art
VI. An Overview of the Humanities

Appendixes

A. Reliability of the Inventory of General Life-Goals
B. The Validity of the Inventory of General Life-Goals in Correlation with other Inventories
By Charles F. Sawhill Virtue, University of Louisville
C. Items of the Inventory of Religious Concepts Listed by Categories
D. The Reliabilities of the Inventory of Religious Concepts
E. The Items of the Fiction Inventory Grouped by Categories
F. The Novels of the Check List Grouped by Categories
G. The Validity and Reliability of the Two Inventories of Fiction
H. Inventory of the Arts

Ready Summer 1948

GENERAL EDUCATION IN THE SOCIAL STUDIES

BY ALBERT WILLIAM LEVI

This detailed report of how various colleges tackled the problem of designing a two-year basic integrated course in the social studies will be of practical help to others. Valuable inventories were developed, tested, revised, and are here analyzed for their philosophy and discussed as to their results.

CONTENT: Some of the subjects discussed are: the aims and implements of social studies instruction, the structure of social attitudes, the impingement of the war upon the Study and the effect upon students' attitudes toward internationalism, economic understanding, imperialism, race relations, labor, government vs. private enterprise, and many other subjects.

Inventories discussed are An Inventory of Social Understanding and An Inventory of Beliefs about Postwar Reconstruction, both of which appear in appendixes.

Part IV, on "The Future of the Social Studies in General Education," offers constructive suggestions for planning the curriculum, teaching method, and strategy.

About 350 pages, cloth. Probable price $3.50.

ORDER FORM

American Council on Education
744 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Please send me

Cooperation in General Education.....$3.00
General Education in the Humanities.....$3.50
General Education in the Social Studies.....
probably, $3.50
Student Personnel Services in General Education,
probably, $3.50

☐ Cash enclosed ☐ Bill me

Name.....

Address.....

.....

10M 1-48

Ready Summer 1948

STUDENT PERSONNEL SERVICES IN GENERAL EDUCATION

BY PAUL A. BROUWER

This report, intended for those who work with students—teachers, counselors, administrators—analyzes ways to identify and satisfy the needs of students through the coordinated use of fact-finding devices and of personnel services.

Practices in student personnel work are related to the principles which undergird a personnel philosophy in general education and which are derived from psychology, sociology, and related fields.

The contents of the report are based upon the work of many people: instructors, deans, directors of personnel, clinicians, students, and staff members. Their cooperative and individual study of the ways in which the total development of the student may be effectively improved through general education has arisen from the conviction that all those who influence the educational experiences of students are personnel workers.

About 375 pages, cloth. Probable price $3.50.

PARTICIPANTS IN THE STUDY

The twenty-two colleges originally participating in the Study were: Allegheny College, Antioch College, Ball State Teachers College, Bethany College, University of Denver, Hendrix College, Hiram College, Hope College, Iowa State College, Little Rock Junior College, University of Louisville, Michigan State College, Mills College, Northwest Missouri State Teachers College, Muskingum College, Olivet College, Park College, Pasadena Junior College, College of St. Catherine, Stephens College, Talladega College, and the College of Wooster.

During the course of the Study the following colleges withdrew: Bethany College, University of Denver, Hiram College, Hope College, Mills College, Olivet College, and the College of Wooster.

The following colleges joined: Centre College of Kentucky, Fisk University, and Macalester College.

17-Intercultural Education

WHAT DO YOU know ABOUT THE JEWS?

By Eleanor Hard Lake

Most Americans — even those with impressive college degrees — know less about the very present Jews than they do about the ancient Romans.

Take you. Do you know what's in the Talmud? How a Jew worships in synagogue or temple (two quite different things)? Whether Jews are one people or several? How many Jews there are anyway, and where they live?

You read a lot today about tolerance. This article won't be about that. It's going to be about something seldom used in talking about Jews: the facts. Who the Jews are. What

17- Intercultural Educ.

HOW DOES YOUR SCHOOL SCORE ?

CHECKLIST FOR A SELF-AUDIT OF SCHOOL POLICIES AND PRACTICES IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Prepared for BROTHERHOOD WEEK
February 20-27, 1949

National Committee for
BROTHERHOOD WEEK:

Harry S. Truman, Honorary Chairman
Nelson A. Rockefeller, General Chairman
Willard E. Goslin, Chairman for Schools and Colleges

Commission on Educational Organizations

National Conference of Christians and Jews
381 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

One of the responsibilities of the American school system is to help develop the understandings and attitudes necessary for healthy action and reaction between the various groups within a community. The proper use of self-evaluation is one way to help sharpen our understanding and point toward needed developments. This score card has been developed for that purpose.

What Is the Score Card? This is only one method which may be applied by schools in carrying out a self-audit of intergroup problems and what is being done to deal with them. It does not pretend to be a scientific measuring device in any sense. It is simply a checklist containing some of the positive steps which reflect real efforts to improve intergroup relations.

How to Use the Checklist. The score card will have its greatest value if it is checked only after a thorough analysis of the situation in your school. Since the pooled judgments of a number of people will give a more accurate and fairer picture of your school than if only one or two persons do the whole job of checking the list, it is recommended that as many teachers as possible be involved in making the self-audit.

Circle zero opposite each item if your school has no activity or is making no effort in regard to the particular item; if some activity is being carried on with respect to any particular item, circle single plus sign; if a great deal of activity or effort is being carried out in regard to any item, circle the double plus sign. To get your total score on the checklist, simply add up the number of plus signs circled.

After you have determined the score for your own school, you may wish to discuss as a staff the meaning of the self-audit which you have made.

CHECKLIST

(CIRCLE 0, +, ++ to indicate score for each question)

School Practices for Democratic Group Relations

GROUP LIFE OF SCHOOL

0 + ++ 1. Have you checked with your fraternities and sororities to determine if members are selected on basis of democratic principles (without exclusion because of students' group background for identity?)

0 + ++ 2. Are students chosen or elected for leadership positions on the basis of merit or in such a manner as to be truly representative of the various compositions of the total student body?

0 + ++ 3. Are members of clubs (other than fraternities and sororities) selected on the basis of democratic principles?

0 + ++ 4. Are the members of your athletic team chosen solely on the basis of ability and achievement?

0 + ++ 5. Are you making a special effort to organize activities and groups (recreation, intergroup choruses, discussion groups, etc.) to break down barriers between groups?

0 + ++ 6. Are you sponsoring activities in your school which foster cooperative action between groups?

THE CURRICULUM AND TEACHING

0 + ++ 1. Do you encourage classroom teachers to use methods which permit the fullest expression of the student's personality?

0 + ++ 2. Do teachers use any of the following means to help develop hostility-free personalities:

a. development of group self-discipline rather than rigid teacher-directed discipline.
b. pupil participation in planning classroom activities
c. pupil initiative in group projects.
d. pupil participation in managing school affairs.

0 + ++ 3. Are you continuously examining your curriculum to make sure the materials which contribute to the thinking and attitudes essential to good intergroup relations are woven into the fabric of the total curriculum?

0 + ++ 4. Are the contributions to American civilization made by various cultural groups and their outstanding representatives included in the curriculum?

0 + ++ 5. Is attention given in the curriculum to social and economic problems which lead to intergroup tensions?

0 + ++ 6. Is provision made to ensure that pupils are well informed about fallacies in regard to various groups?

ADMINISTRATIVE LEADERSHIP

0 + ++ 1. Do you have a representative committee to study, guide and make recommendations on intergroup problems?

0 + ++ 2. Have you made any studies of any of the following: habits of association (sociometric patterns) open hostility, intergroup attitudes, cliques?

0 + ++ 3. Do you have specifically formulated policies on intergroup relations or attitudes?

0 + ++ 4. Are steps taken to include on your faculty individuals of varying group backgrounds (including economic)?

0 + ++ 5. Do you have an in-service training policy and program for your staff members designed to improve their understanding and skill in human relations?

0 + ++ 6. Do you have a counseling and guidance program which contributes to good group relations through the better adjustment of the individual pupil?

COOPERATIVE SCHOOL-COMMUNITY RELATIONS

0 + ++ 1. Do you employ the school facilities as a center for community activities for the promotion of better group relations?

0 + ++ 2. Does the school cooperate with civic and private organizations in attacking intergroup problems?

0 + ++ 3. Do your courses employ the community for study and as an experience laboratory for such activities as the following:

a. fact-finding interviews
b. field trips
c. participation activities

0 + ++ 4. Do your parent-teacher organizations deal with the problem of intergroup relations?

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS
1201 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

December 28th, 1948

Dear Superintendent:

American education faces no more urgent task today than that of building attitudes, habits and skills which will result in strengthening democratic group relations. The National Conference of Christians and Jews is attempting to focus attention on this problem during Brotherhood Week, February 20-27, 1949, through the creation of a committee, headed by Mr. Nelson Rockefeller, whose purpose is to stimulate wider interest and activity in programs to improve group relations. Because of my deep concern with seeing this whole movement in American education advanced, I have agreed to represent schools and colleges on this committee. I regard this particular occasion as a symbol of the urgency and challenge of the task which faces American educators.

Education for democratic group relations has made steady progress in the last four or five years. Many schools have now moved forward with important achievements to their credit. We have learned a great deal in recent years about the best materials and methods for intergroup education. As significant as such efforts have been, there is much that remains to be done. The important task now is to involve far more administrators, teachers and schools in establishing sound policies and practices for good group relations. No school or community can afford to be complacent about this problem. Even where there are no overt expressions of intergroup conflicts and problems, latent hostilities and prejudices may exist.

Brotherhood Week gives the schools an excellent opportunity to take stock of their policies and practices in intergroup relations and to chart plans for improving these. We are enclosing with this letter a form entitled "How Does Your School Score" which represents a self-audit of your school. Every school can start at once on this self-audit. Your schools can thus join simultaneously with others in a nation-wide self-evaluation of efforts to foster democratic group attitudes and relations through education. In addition to a sample of the score card we are enclosing a folder which gives additional suggestions for schools in connection with Brotherhood Week and a return postal card on which we would appreciate your indicating the number of copies of the score card which you will need for distribution to your principals.

I would like to urge each of us to bring this program to the attention of every principal in our school system with a letter from you stressing participation in Brotherhood Week by each school's undertaking this self-audit. I would also like to urge each of us to look upon this activity as only one in a well-developed plan within our school system to create good human relations and to continuously evaluate our program of education to see whether or not it is meeting the objectives which we have established for ourselves.

Very sincerely yours,

Willard E. Goslin

Willard E. Goslin, President
American Association of School Administrators

17 - Intercultural Education
RECEIVED
JUN 6 1949
Southern Regional Council

NORTH CAROLINA PUBLIC SCHOOL Bulletin

. . . Published Monthly by the State Department of Public Instruction . . .

MAY, 1949 RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA VOL. XIII, No. 9

Barker Attends Meeting for Exceptional Children

Felix S. Barker, Director, Division of Special Education, State Department of Public Instruction, attended the Anual Convention of the International Council for Exceptional Children and State Supervisors and Directors of Special Education which met at San Francisco February 27 to March 3.

The International Council for Exceptional Children is an international organization which has as its purpose the promotion of the education and welfare of exceptional children, the handicapped and the gifted.

Mr. Barker reports that many outstanding leaders addressed the meetings and that opportunity for visitations and discussions were presented to those attending the convention.

Among the outstanding speakers were Dr. Lewis M. Terman, Stanford University psychologist, who spoke on "The Gifted Child Grows Up"; Dr. Leslie Hohman, neuropychiatrist from Duke University, whose address was titled the "Adjustment of Emotionally Disturbed Children"; Dr. Eugene J. Taylor, instructor of rehabilitation and physical medicine at New York University's College of Medicine; and Dr. Frederich C. Cordes, San Francisco eye specialist.

Mr. Barker stated that he attended a sectional meeting which discussed the subject: Development of Special Service for Epileptic Children in the Public Schools. It was the conclusion of this group that "The best program for an epileptic child, as for any child, is one that permits him to attend school and to participate in the normal experience so important to the development of healthy, adult maturity."

Features

Page

Study Shows Most U. S. Texts Free of Group Bias 1

Colleges for Negroes Graduate 17,000 5

What Subjects Do N. C. High School Boys and Girls Study?.. 6

The Attorney General Rules 15

STUDY SHOWS MOST U.S. TEXTS ARE FREE OF GROUP BIAS

School textbooks are not guilty of "planned derogation of groups," but much material essential to understanding intergroup relations is not presented to pupils. This condition is revealed in a study prepared by Dr. Howard E. Wilson, executive associate of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. The survey, known as Intergroup Relations in Teaching Materials, was published recently under the auspices of the American Council on Education. It represents an analysis of the most commonly used elementary and secondary school textbooks.

Started at Harvard University in 1944 under the direction of Dr. Wilson, who was then at Harvard, the study embraced 267 elementary and secondary school texts, 24 introductory college texts, 25 college manuals and 100 of the most widely read children's library books. These were analyzed for statements of bias in regard to minority groups in the United States.

"Textbooks," declares Dr. Wilson, "fail to come to grips with basic issues in human relations. The fault lies not in texts alone but in the courses of study for which such books are prepared. Only as courses of study demand the inclusion of topics on intergroup relationships will textbooks be substantially improved."

The remaking of the curriculum, therefore, is a prerequisite to the alteration of textbooks, it is emphasized by the report. Such changes, it was stated, involve the writing of passages focused directly on the description of contemporary relationships between groups. They also involve careful scrutiny of indirect references to all groups.

Discussing the suggestions contained in his report, Dr. Wilson, who recently returned from Enrope, said:

"These recommendations are more important today than ever before, since the treatment of groups within the United States has tremendous effects on our influence abroad. Conflict here between Catholics and Protestants, for example, makes Good Neighbor policy toward Latin America more difficult. Mistreatment of Asiatic groups within our population makes a wise Asiatic policy harder to formulate and put into effect. Our problem of race relations causes many groups in other lands—black, yellow and white—to view our protestations of democracy with scepticism."

Governor Appoints New Board Members

Governor W. Kerr Scott appointed four new members of the State Board of Education on April 22, which were approved by the General Assembly as provided by the Constitution. One of the number, Dr. H. L. Trigg, President of St. Augustine's College, is the first Negro member ever to serve on the State Board.

Paul S. Oliver of Marietta, Robeson County, was appointed for an eight year term to succeed H. E. Stacy of Lumberton.

Santford Martin of Winston-Salem was appointed to succeed himself for an eight year term.

Claude Farrell of Elkin was appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Mrs. R. S. Ferguson, which runs till April 1, 1955.

H. L. Trigg of Raleigh was appointed for an eight year term from the State at large to succeed Alonza C. Edwards, who had resigned to become a member of the General Assembly but whose term would have expired on April 1, 1949.

Driver Training Institutes To Be Held in Summer

Plans are being made for holding Driver Training Institutes in three sections of the State during the summer, it is announced by John C. Noe, Safety Adviser for the State Department of Public Instruction.

Details concerning places for these institutes, dates, etc., will be made available just as soon as all plans have been completed, Mr. Noe stated.

Superintendent Erwin Says . . .

The General Assembly of 1949 has enacted certain important school legislation which I wish to call to your attention.

In the first place, the appropriations for operating the nine months school term were increased from $61,633,597 in 1948-49 to $82,273,494 and 83,520,898 for 1949-50 and 1950-51, respectively. This represents an increase of around 33⅓ per cent in this fund, and will enable the State to pay an average salary of $2500 annually to teachers holding Class A certificates, or an increase of approximately 28.5 per cent in instructional service. The salary of beginning teachers in this group will be increased by approximately $450 annually. Funds for vocational education, and for the purchase of free textbooks and school buses were also substantially increased.

Other legislation enacted at this session of the General Assembly included the following:

1. An appropriation of $25,000,000 was made to the counties ($250,000 each) for the erection of new school buildings, and provision for voting another $25,000,000 for this purpose by the people was also made.

2. Provision was made for the appointment of a State supervisor of music for the Department of Public Instruction. Provision was also made for other State supervisors for the Divisions of Instructional Service and Negro Education and for the support of the Safety Adviser and Resource-Use Education Division, formerly supported by the aid of private funds.

3. Provision was also made for the enrichment and strengthening of the public school system by giving the State Board of Education broad discretionary authority in making allotments of personnel to the local administrative units for various purposes other than actual teaching.

4. Provision was also made for accepting and using any Federal funds that may be appropriated to this State for schools.

A number of other acts which concerned public education were passed. Mimeograph copies of the most important of these have already been furnished to superintendents. All of this legislation will be codified, and with legislation enacted by the General Assemblies of 1945 and 1947 will be printed and made available to those persons desiring these laws.

NORTH CAROLINA
PUBLIC SCHOOL BULLETIN

VOL. XIII, No. 9

May, 1949

CLYDE A. ERWIN
State Superintendent of Public Instruction

EDITOR:

L. H. JOBE
Director, Division of Publications

EDUCATIONAL PRESS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

Official Publication Issued Monthly Except June, July and August by the State Department of Public Instruction

Entered as second-class matter November 22, 1939, at the post office at Raleigh, North Carolina, under the Act of August 24, 1912. . . .

10 - Education, Intercultural
RECEIVED
JAN 16 1950
Southern Regional Council

Reprinted from
THE EDUCATIONAL FORUM, January, 1948

Intergroup Education: The Still Small Voice

MAXWELL H. GOLDBERG

I

THERE was once an unusually sponsored intercollegiate conference at a university in New England. It was a gathering of a recently formed organization of Jewish students in the Connecticut Valley region of Massachusetts and Connecticut. It was unusual in that the student Christian Association of the university was acting as host to the visiting Jewish delegates, and it had supported the conference both by official endorsement, and by financial aid to the local Jewish student sponsors.

In welcoming the participants, the president of the Christian Association commented on these exceptional circumstances. Quietly, without ostentation, without a hint of condescension to a cultural and religious minority group, he explained why his society had supported the conference, and why it was pleased to welcome the delegates. He said, in effect: we compared our aims with yours, and we found that we shared most of them. You stand for truth, justice, and mercy. So do we. You stand for peace and good-will among men. So do we. You sincerely want to do what you can to make this world a better place for mankind. So do we. In short, while we may differ as to the way in which we formulate our religious creed, and as to the ritual by means of which we dramatize it, we are pretty well agreed as to the translation of our faith, our creed, and our ritual into the direct conduct of life. Hence, concluded the host, we have felt justified in active support of your conference.

Neither the speaker, nor his fellow hosts, nor the student delegates got any academic credit for participating in this unusually sponsored conference. Yet this participation was a distinctive experience in an urgently needed kind of education—education in intergroup appreciation and friendship. It was all the more valuable for not being so labeled and publicized.

Some years ago, at a college also in New England, a distinguished Catholic scholar delivered the annual lecture on John Henry Cardinal Newman, under the sponsorship of the local Newman Club. Known for my interest in religion from the point of view of the college student and the college teacher, I was invited to the dinner in honor of the guest; and, being an appreciative student of Newman, I was also asked to write, for the college newspaper, a feature article on the Newman lecture.

Both of these invitations, from a Christian religious group, pleased me. What appealed to me, in particular, was that they were extended so naturally and wholeheartedly, without a hint of self-consciousness because of the frequently stressed differences between Jew and Catholic—just as, with similar spontaneity, I myself invited the visiting scholar to speak on Newman, the morning after the public lecture, before one of my own classes in which Newman was studied.

My write-up of the lecture was without a by-line. The President of the Newman Club sent a copy to the lecturer. He did not happen to mention the name of the writer of the article. By way of acknowledgement a letter of thanks came. It referred to the article as very good. Then the President of the Newman Club jokingly informed his scholarly correspondent that one by the name of Goldberg had written the piece. The comeback was: "I still think it's very good."

The head of the Newman Club did not hesitate to tell me of this exchange of comments concerning the authorship of the write-up of the Newman lecture. He knew that I would enjoy it. For it came in a context of friendship and esteem. The other members of the Club must have sensed the mutual regard between their president and me; for, at the conclusion of his term of office, a gift committee had me select, for their outgoing leader, several books on Newman, and thus inaugurated a tradition which persisted for a number of years, and in which I annually participated.

This series of incidents furnishes another good illustration of intergroup education that is none the less valuable for not being listed in the curriculum and for not getting credit toward degree. It is education in intergroup friendship, not by precept and formal instruction, but by example and action. The Catholic students and faculty members whom I joined in their Newman Club functions (Catholic townspeople were present, too), as well as the students of various denominations in my class addressed by the eminent Newmanian—to all of them, through example and participation, were afforded opportunities to know, by immediate experience, the enrichment of understanding and sharing in the cultural and spiritual life of groups other than their own.

A similar realization of common heritage and sympathetically acknowledged differences prompted an invitation that I once got, not from one, but from several members of a society of Christian students, who thought I might like to attend a meeting at which one of my own former teachers was to speak. This teacher, a devout Christian, was to talk on a central mystery—the Mass—of the religious fellowship which he and the students shared. Yet those young people, knowing my appreciative attitude, having heard me voice indebtedness to this teacher for the insight the latter had given me into Christianity, and sensing my affection and regard for the scheduled speaker, actually wished me to join their intimate group. I responded to the invitation in the same gracious spirit in which it had been extended.

The recognition on the part of members of one religious group, of a respectful and sympathetic attitude toward their doctrine and practice, by a respected member of another group; their decision to invite the outsider to their intimate gathering; their reiterated invitation; their welcome to the outsider upon his arrival; their awareness of his presence throughout the meeting—all yielded a rich experience in intergroup sharing. This was intergroup education—without fanfare, but none the less effective for being so.

Then there was the time when, as guest of honor, I was asked to say grace before dinner at a Christian fraternity house. How much better, perhaps, than a whole series of lectures on the validity and the worth of interfaith co-operation was this one direct example, in which I, a Jew, performed a universal religious rite on behalf of a group of Christians. It turned out, moreover, that the leaders of the fraternity had asked me to dinner in great part because they had discovered among their members much social and religious prejudice, and they wanted me to help them combat it by frankly discussing intergroup relations with the assembled chapter.

Or, again, there are my recommendations. That Jewish students should use my name as reference in their applications for admission into rabbinical schools is not at all surprising. But that students seeking scholarships granted by explicitly Christian religious organizations, or applying for instructorships in emphatically Christian denominational schools, or seeking entrance into theological schools that prepare for the Christian ministry—that these students should likewise ask permission to name me among their references is worthy of note. For, in the blanks which I am requested to fill out concerning the applicant, I am often asked to give my estimate not only of his general character, but, specifically, of the quality of his Christian faith and his promise for professional Christian service. When I first used to fill out the forms, I approached this question very gingerly. I no longer do. I have recognized that, thanks, in great part, to like moral and spiritual criteria, I may put down my answer without compunction or impertinence. I have recognized, too, what an important experience it is in indirect intergroup education for these non-Jewish students to turn to me, a Jew, for recommendations to Christian appointments.

II

To the professor of literature who stresses the philosophic, moral, and religious elements in his subject matter, numerous opportunities are afforded, in areas bordering the curriculum itself, for experiences in the operative community of tradition shared by students of different faiths and denominations, and in the valuable results, from the point of view of intergroup education, of their fresh commingling.

Thus, a Christian student has requested and secured me as the supervisor of his master's essay on Newman in relation to American theorists of liberal education; a Christian undergraduate has selected me to supervise her senior honors work on the religious development of Newman; a number of additional students of the same faith have written, under my guidance, semester papers on various phases of Newman's religious life and thought; on the problem of John Donne's "conversion"; and the same problem as found in Thomas Carlyle; on Milton's religious development; on Milton and Dante; and on similar subjects of religious implication. Other Christian students similarly under my direction, have prepared theses on the religious humanists of the Renaissance, on the Cambridge Platonists, on the relationships between the religious and the social philosophy of T. S. Eliot, on Thomas Carlyle in relationship to Calvinism, on John Ruskin's varying relationships with traditional religion, and on other subjects related to religious experience as inspiration to memorable literature.

Conversely, even while I have cooperated with Christian students in their studies having to do with religious matters, I have, with parallel enthusiasm, encouraged Jewish students in their papers on Milton and the Biblical Prophets, and on like topics involving religious considerations. One of my Jewish students, whose rabbinical studies were interrupted for service in the Merchant Marine, but who has now completed these studies with distinction, and is a student at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, proposed to me, as the subject of a term paper, a study of the similarities and contrasts between Matthew Arnold's treatment of traditional religion and that of the Jewish Reconstructionists; and, though I realized that this subject was quite tangential in a literary course dealing with English prose writers of the nineteenth century, I approved of it. The results have fully justified my decision.

This sort of intercultural teaching probably would not have come about had not I shared, with my students of various faiths and denominations, a common moral and spiritual heritage so strong as to enable them to approach, reasonably and sympathetically, the numerous troublesome yet frankly recognized and identified differences among them. Such out-of-class teaching, moreover, may be most fruitful. It brings about in some students a day-to-day acceptance of the idea that there may be much cultural and spiritual stimulation when one explores his own traditional resources under the friendly guidance of a teacher who does not happen to be identified with that same tradition, but who has studied it honestly, sincerely, with sympathy and respect. In like manner, this out-of-class teaching encourages other students to enjoy the illumination and enlargement that come from friendly correlation of their inherited tradition with its development in other religious currents of thought, feeling, and practice.

About a year after our entrance into the War, a young man came to my office to talk over with me a project about which he and several other students had become very enthusiastic. This was his proposal. There were a number of undergraduates, perhaps ten or twelve, who had a strong interest in cultural and spiritual studies—not just as an end, but rather as a means toward understanding themselves and the universe and integrating and implementing their lives.

They wanted to study literary masterpieces. They wanted to study crucial documents in the history of Western Culture—documents from formal philosophy, from literature, from religion, from other departments of cultural and spiritual endeavor. They wanted practice in discussing these things informally, yet purposively. They didn't have time to get all this in courses. Besides, courses didn't offer them all that they sought.

So they proposed to organize a study group. They wished to lay out a plan of study; to have the dean of the college recognize this work and give them college credit for it. They hoped to have me as their director and moderator. They didn't care to have me lecture to them. They were emphatic on that point. They got more than enough of lecturing. But they did want me to be their guide and constructive critic.

I was delighted with this spontaneous expression of eagerness for co-operative exploration of our various cultural and spiritual resources. But I felt it my duty to be the devil's advocate. I told the student who made the proposal that his group were very ambitious. They were tackling a hard job. They were forgetting all of the usual distractions of campus life, to say nothing of the special distractions caused by the War. I went on to say that I myself could give them little help, since I was so busy. Finally, I said that the group could not hope to get college credit for what they proposed to do.

None of the arguments daunted the student. Let the weaklings fall by the wayside. Echoing Isaiah and Plato, he said that a remnant would remain. Even if there were three or four students who persisted—that would be enough. They would forget academic credit. They would do the work on a voluntary basis.

So it went. Each of the objections was answered, and the original purpose was all the more strongly affirmed. That made me regretful of having raised the doubts, and I agreed to sponsor the program of study and discussion. A tentative plan of reading was mapped out. Books were ordered. Soon the group was in action.

True, difficulties developed. Some of the members were suddenly called into active military service. But the rest continued. I had to be absent from meetings; the group met without me. Even before the end of the college year, the members discussed taking in some freshmen so as to make sure that the studies would continue on into the next college year—war or no war.

One of the most interesting features of this group was that it was made up of widely differing students. There were science majors and arts majors. They represented divergent, or actually conflicting, socio-political attitudes. In one seat at the seminar table was a young man who is now a chemist in industrial research. Next to him was another young man who is now a theological student. There were Christians and Jews. There were professed secularists, traditional religionists, and sceptics concerning religion—at least as traditionally conceived and institutionalized. But all of them were agreed in their faith in the worth of the intangibles in human experience, and all of them were eager to experience these intangibles in spite of the emphasis they had to place upon the tangibles of their training in a war emergency. These students, few in number, were a true cultural and spiritual "remnant."

Since no examinations were given in the "course," there was no systematic gauge of the amount of knowledge each member of the group acquired, of the number of new, changed, abandoned, or freshly connected ideas he gained, of the number of old convictions in which he was freshly confirmed, or of the degree and quality of inspiration toward the good life that he got from the course. It is certain, however, that each participant enjoyed numerous valuable experiences in intercultural sharing. Each frequently thought, imagined, felt his way into attitudes, doctrines, and traditions different from his customary mental and emotional modes; sought to understand them, and learned to respect them even when he concluded that they were not for him.

III

To the teacher who is a competent oral interpreter of literature, and who has had experience with dramatics, special opportunities are afforded for informal intergroup education. Once it became known, for example, that I had a sympathetic understanding of the Christian tradition, I was asked to give dramatic or poetry readings at Christmas celebrations, to direct the production of religious plays, and to give readings from devotional literature.

A non-Jewish sorority invited me to give readings from the Bible at a Sunday afternoon fireside gathering of the members. I accepted the invitation, and prefaced my program by commenting on the King James version as a mighty example of what may be accomplished through the creative combination of varied traditional resources. The accumulated heritage of several great traditions, I said, were fused into what Professor John Livingstone Lowes has called "the noblest monument of English prose." I pointed out that two of the most important of these traditions were the Hebraic-Christian and the English. Neither of these traditions alone, I observed, would have been adequate to produce a great work like this version of the Bible. Yet both together, with the inclusion of other traditional resources, principally the Graeco-Roman, did yield this literary treasure. I concluded my introduction by endorsing similar ventures in intercultural pooling among the students on our campus. The Biblical readings that followed became an immediate experience of the intergroup sharing that I had just recommended.

On another occasion, a religious club of Christian students invited me to give poetry readings. I decided to read from the devotional poets of their own sect. My audience proved unusually responsive. I got this response at least partly because, in addition to my long and serious study of the Christian tradition, the spiritual heritage which I shared with my audience enabled me to penetrate into the soul of the poems that I read and to give a convincing interpretation of them.

It came as a revelation to my listeners: the discovery that an "outsider" was enabling them to tap afresh the spiritual resources of the sacred poets of their own denomination. It was an unforgettable experience in intergroup co-operation. At least seven years later, I received a copy of the informative leaflet got out by the club for circulation among students of its church. On the leaflet was written "For your information." My sympathetic joining in the functions of the club apparently were still remembered—though several student generations had come and gone.

A Christian student came to me for help with his oral interpretation of Milton's "Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity." The student was preparing this poem for presentation at a candle-light Christmas service in the college chapel. The constructions and some of the imagery of this poem are unusually difficult; but even more difficult are the encyclopedic allusions and the theological references.

I found the student enthusiastic, but vague in his appreciation of the poem. I told the lad that, until he understood the written text, he could not hope to give an effective oral reading of the poem. The student was eager to be informed. We spent a great deal of time in a detailed explication of the poem. In so doing, we were both deeply enriched in our immediate awareness of the Christian and the Judaic heritage; for Milton moved as freely within the one as within the other; and he extracted rich poetic substance from both.

Since his graduation from college, this young man has corresponded with me, and has told me of his experiences, first as teacher, and, during the last two or three years, as member of our armed forces. From these accounts, it is clear that our informal lessons in intercultural enrichment have become a factor in his own motivations and practices as teacher.

Another member of the armed forces, this one Jewish, who also has studied with me, has brought to bear upon his military life his own undergraduate and extra-curriculum education in intergroup understanding, good will, and co-operation. As a student, he was very active in the Jewish religious club at our college. Friday evenings, he conducted the Jewish worship services with a gusto that reached enthusiastic climaxes in the blessing of the wine, the singing of the "Sholem Aleichem" ("Peace unto Thee"), and the welcoming in of the Sabbath as a joyous bride. His final "gut' Shabbes" ("Good Sabbath") was a greeting that warmed the heart.

But this young man did not limit himself to Jewish religious activities. He was a steady worker on the united religious council which the students of different faiths and denominations had formed. Then, too, he once selected, for presentation in a poetry reading contest, Francis Thompson's "The Hound of Heaven." As coach of the contestants, I worked with him in his interpretation of this ardently, passionately Christian utterance. At the first audition, I found him, like the Christian lad who had come for help with the "Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity," eager and sympathetic, but lacking in specific insight. With him, too, I adopted the method of slow analysis and explanation; and, with him, too, the results were gratifying. He made great improvement in the effectiveness of his oral interpretation of the poem. Also, he achieved an intelligent grasp of its essence.

Afterwards, as navigator of a bomber, this young man was shot down over Italy. He was taken prisoner, and eventually was consigned to a prisoner-of-war camp in Germany. There he not only buoyed up the spirits of other Jewish men in his unit; but also, in time, led his fellow-prisoners, Christian and Jewish, to renewed experience of our American ideal of over-all unity through respect for group distinctiveness and through sympathetic understanding of it. He did so as director of a series of dramatic presentations, some of which were actually broadcast via intra-camp radio. More than that, he himself wrote the scripts for two or three of these programs.

A highlight among them was presented on a twelfth of October; and it took advantage of the occasion, Columbus Day, to dramatize our American impulse toward intergroup co-operation.

Thus, right within enemy lines, my former student was giving the lie to Nazi racism and was resisting its degradation of the Judeo-Christian tradition. Further, he was projecting on to a large stage his own informal, personal undergraduate education in intercultural understanding and appreciation, gained through experiences such as preparing for oral interpretation the strongly Christian "The Hound of Heaven":

Halts by me that footfall:
Is my gloom, after all,
Shade of His hand, outstretched caressingly?
'Ah, fondest, blindest, weakest,
I am He Whom thou seekest!
Thou dravest love from thee,
who dravest Me!'

IV

In broader than intercollegiate spheres of religious discussion and activity, a professor of literature who likewise is a serious student of religion may often enjoy similar experience of how much the Judaic and the Christian tradition share in ideal and practice, and of what rich educational rewards may result from unpublicized intergroup effort thus commonly motivated.

True, his main business is with his students, in classroom and on the campus. Yet once his intergroup interest becomes known, he is likely to receive frequent invitations to address off-campus organizations on religious subjects. Some of these invitations may come from co-religionists; others, from religious groups not his own. I have received numerous invitations of this second type. Acceptance has meant additional burden to an already overweighted schedule. Yet I have welcomed them. They have afforded a heartening contrast to grim events that have occurred elsewhere.

In supposedly civilized sections of the world, I have witnessed a revival of barbarity surpassing that of the Dark Ages, for it has been made all the more efficient, and hence all the more terrible, by the ingenuity of modern science and invention, and by the ideological pre-texts of intellectual prostitutes. Whole philosophies of life (they should be called philosophies of death) have glorified torture and organized mass slaughter of innocent millions whose only crimes have been their birth, blood, religious faith. Nor has our country been immune from this recrudescence of barbarism. Indeed, within our own borders, the most powerful stream of moral and spiritual energy that man has known—our shared religious tradition—has been poisoned, and has been debased into an agency of brutal hate.

During such times, it has been reassuring for me to know that my hosts, representing one branch of our great stream of ethical and spiritual energy, should ask me, representing another branch, to join with them in fresh realization of the beauty and the strength of our mutually cherished tradition.

At one such meeting, I discussed, in detail, the "Sh'ma Yis-roayl," as a concentrated expression of Judaism:

Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God, the Lord is One.
Praised be His name Whose glorious kingdom is forever and ever.
Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words which I command thee this day, shall be upon thy heart. Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt speak of them when thou sittest in thy house, when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. Thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes. Thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house and upon thy gates: That ye may remember and do My commandments and be holy unto thy God. I am the Lord thy God.

When I was finished, a minister remarked, "Now if we just added, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself,' we'd have a prayer that would satisfy any of us here, wouldn't we?" His comment met with general agreement, and led to a constructive comparison between the Christian version of the Golden Rule, and the earlier, Judaic version of it, which is phrased negatively:

"What is hateful to thee, do not to thy neighbor.
This is the whole law; the rest is commentary."

Another time, several years before the outbreak of the Second World War, I gave a sermon before a Negro congregation. It was on a Sunday close to the twelfth of February; so I decided to make Abraham Lincoln my theme. I started by observing that the Nazis and the Fascists had afforded us bad examples of an inherently sound human impulse—to have honored leaders as model and inspiration. I then went on to affirm that, if we were effectively to resist the Nazi and Fascist poisons, we must counter with loyalty to our own kind of hero—our heroes in the struggle for democracy and social justice. I named Lincoln as such a hero, and suggested that, from time to time, we need to have a fresh experience of the perennial meaning of such a man. I then read various poetic passages and whole poems providing emotional and imaginative means of this quickened realization.

At the end, the pastor said that I had reminded him of drilling for water: deeper and deeper goes the drill; then the gracious, cooling water spouts up to refresh the thirsty. So I had refreshed his spirit and that of his flock. Experiences of this sort have been very encouraging to me. They have confirmed my faith in the practicality of unsystematized intergroup education even in times of ominously increasing intergroup tensions.

Especially heartening was a request put to me by an inter-denominational institute for training and accrediting lay religious teachers in the Protestant churches of a whole community. This organization asked me to teach a course in the Biblical Prophets. I shied away from the proposal. I protested that I was no theologian, but a mere teacher of secular literature. I warned that, in teaching the Prophets, however sympathetic I might try to be to the Christian point of view, I should probably be unable to exclude, altogether, my Jewish slant on the subject—even if I wanted to, and I wasn't sure that I did.

The objections were not sustained. The spokesman for the institute replied that he and the other members of the committee on curriculum had not the slightest qualms about entrusting their Christian students, and hence, ultimately, the youngsters whom these students were to teach, to my instruction and influence. I finally agreed to give the course. There was an elderly lady who remained silent during most of the open discussions. I therefore concluded that she was cool toward my teaching. At the end of the last class, she came up to me and thanked me for my conduct of the course. She referred to my obvious reluctance to express my opinions upon a number of rather ticklish issues connected with the Prophets. Then, in confidence, she reassured me thus: "You need not have been so hesitant to give your opinions on these matters: more of us think as you do than would admit it, or than you seem to suspect."

I then realized that, without its being announced as such, my course had been, in effect, a contribution to intergroup understanding, good-will, and co-operation in the area of adult education, upon the importance of which, in recent years, so much stress has been placed by professional authorities.

By narrating autobiographic incidents, experienced in pertinent social contexts, and cumulatively elaborated, I have tried to make vivid the pervasive operation, in intergroup education, of intangibles, such as emotional realization and imaginative apprehension, which are likely to slip through the fingers of statistical investigation; and of intangibles such as the delicate overtones and undertones of personal sympathy and respect which are likely to remain unregistered on the formal recordings, and ungraphed on the formal charts. Through this means I have tried to suggest what teachers of literature have done, and many others could do, once they regarded intergroup education not merely as a series of curriculum projects, stored away, between classes, within the covers of a syllabus or in the files of a report in the making; rather, once they regarded it as a central and comprehensive function of their whole personal and professional life.

Highly systematized and technicized, broad-guage and mass-appeal methods of promoting intergroup harmony are no doubt useful. They should have our support and our gratitude. But their immediacy must not obscure the value of less obvious instruments. The poster, the neon sign, and the loud speaker are often overwhelming in their mass impact. But the candle which, like a good deed, shines in an evil world, still has its place; and, especially in times of threatened darkness, it throws its beams far. So with informal, unpublicized, personal, individualized education in intergroup understanding, good will, and co-operation.

We must not forget that, for Elijah, God was not in the wind, the earthquake, or the fire. His was "the still small voice."

Reprints sponsored by Alpha Epsilon Pi Fraternity Foundation

17. International Aspects, American Race Problem

■ The propaganda war between Russia and the USA gives timely interest to this article

American Negro Problem In The European Press

By James W. Ivy

MORE than five hundred clippings from the daily and periodical press of ten European countries have gone into the making of this article. They come from England, France, Italy, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, Spain, Portugal, and Rumania. They come from some forty different newspapers and magazines representing every shade of political opinion from the French Communist Humanité to Vatican City's L'Ossevatore Romano. They include London's Times as well as her brilliantly written Economist; Lausanne's Servir as well as Olten's Die Woche im Bild; Madrid's Arriba and Lisbon's O Seculo Ilustrado; Turin's Gazetta del Popolo as well as Bucharest's Studentul Roman. Although the greater percentage of the clippings fan out over the years 1948-1949, there are many covering the first three months of 1950.

In the main the papers are politically moderate independents. They are European in the sense that they are journals of opinion rather than information. Excepting the English papers, few of them would be considered newspapers in the Anglo-American sense. They stress interpretation and comment in preference to the straight reporting of our own press. In reporting on the American Negro they sometimes used straight reporting, feature articles, photographic essays, occasional "think pieces," and the scholarly essay. Many of the feature articles are lavishly illustrated with pictures of Negro life. Nor do they overlook the impact which a picture of a lynching, Klu-Klux-Klan, or mob scene has on readers.

Many of them sent over special correspondents to report on the Negro problem at firsthand. Zurich's Der Aufbau sent over Margirt Unti-Gerber; Stockholm's Morgon-Tidningen had Elsa Brita Marcussen investigate conditions in the South under the title "Elsa Brita Marcussen in the Southern States." Miss Marcussen had spent several days in the New York office of the NAACP getting background information before undertaking her trip. When Josephine

Selon la loi du Sud j'aurais dû voyager dans une "paillasse nègre"

Para quem trabalha o negro?

Réminiscences du moyen-âge

CIVILTA' AMERICANA

Il mercato di negri

Lo schiavismo non è morto in America

IL GHETTO NERO

In un freddo mattino invernale del 1915 una giovane madre assalita dal- un ricevimento ufficiale era stato re- del libro sul settimanale « New Re-

Le "Solid South" s'effrite et Truman risque d'être battu par le Ku-Klux-Klan

Instantanee

A CID

É HOJE TER

SIX N

SUR L

Continuera-

des blancs

HEALDINES like these help to make

Baker returned to France from her American visit, she related her experiences in a series of articles for Paris-Soir. Joseph Kessel, the French popular novelist, wrote a similar series for Lisbon's Diario de Noticias. Many of the papers have American correspondents resident either in New York or Washington whose dispatches never overlook a racial incident. Talmadge's election in Georgia, the Columbus, Tenn., riots, the Dixiecrat revolt, the regional college plan, the Georgia prison-camp massacre, the Mallard lynching, the murder of Isiah Nixon, and the case of the

Linşarea negrilor continuă în Statele Unite

NEGER KLAGEN AN

os da America (1)

ADE NEGRA

DE HARLEM

ENO VEDADO AOS BRANCOS

NEGER

die «Unberührbaren» Amerikas

Que devient le Ku-Klux-Klan ?

ATLANTA, Georgie, janvier par Sam Green, « le seul candidat qui

PORQUE ERA NEGRO le despreciaban

DIRS VONT-ILS MOURIR A CHAISE ELECTRIQUE ?

t-on de séparer les noirs dans l'armée américaine ?

AMERICA'S UNTOUCHABLES

. . the "Negro problem" a live issue for Europeans

"Trenton Six" have been reported by these men.

Appearance of French and Italian versions of the writings of Richard Wright frequently gave French and Italian periodicals opportunity to probe into "the problem" while reviewing his books. Martedi (Milan, Italy) translated and carried Wright's "The Ethics of Living Jim Crow" in full. Several French journals used their reviews of the books on America by Simone de Beauvoir, Sartre, and Claude Roy to probe the American racial cancer, which the London Times Literary Supplement in re-

Acme

SELLOUT EDITION of the pro-Nazi magazine TEMPO DER WELT, Frankfort, Germany, commemorating the German surrender. An American Negro GI is pictured with bayonet in one hand and gun in the other gloating over a downed German fighter plane.

viewing Myrdal called "the greatest sore spot of American life."

Not all reports, however, are on the dark side. The progress and achievements of individual Negroes are stressed by many of the papers with illustrated biographical sketches of outstanding personalities filling many of their pages. Lausanne's En Famille featured the Peters Sisters; Zurich's Die Weltwoche, Rome's Il Tempo, and Milan's Il Popolo, Dr. Ralph J. Bunche; Geneva's Patrie Suisse, Paul Robeson; Milan's Avanti, Louis Armstrong; Neuchatel's L'Express de Neuchatel, Lena Horne; Lausanne's Feuille d'Avis, the Nicolas Brothers; and Geneva's Le Messager Social, Mrs. Mary McCleod Bethune.

This preoccupation of the European press with the American Negro and his problems is a postwar phenomenon, partly an outgrowth of our use of a jim-crow army to war on Third Reich Aryanism, and partly European resentment of what many of their intellectuals regard as pernicious meddling in Continental affairs. Even the European man in the street sensed the incongruity of a "democratic equality" that condemned Negroes to service battalions and segregated outfits. And in American postwar efforts to rehabilitate Europe through the "Marshall Plan" we have aroused the deeply rooted European prejudices against the United States as a "culturally backward country." Much of the present popularity of C. Virgil Gheorghiu's novel, La Vingt-Cinquième Heure (The Twenty-Fifth Hour) stems from one of its themes that Americans are technological barbarians lacking in all notions of human values. According to Gheorghiu, a Rumanian, America may have been the hope of the world but she is no longer.

Only a few weeks ago the English philosopher C. E. M. Joad was lambasting us on the grounds that American influence "corrupts, infects and pollutes whatever it touches." Georges Duhamel, a longtime French critic of our mores, wrote querulously in Ici Paris (March 12, 1950) "That this great nation which has taken such a delight in lecturing Europeans on colonialism and the duties of the white race early simplified its problems by exterminating the Indians"; then adds that though

Acme

ANTI-AMERICAN TABLEAU in Prague, Czechslovakia, of two rope-bound Negroes being led to execution by a band of Ku Klux Klan men. This was during a giant May-day parade in 1949.

the United States may be the world's greatest temporal power, she is still troubled in body and soul by her Negroes. In commenting on "To Secure These Rights," the London News Review, under the title "America's Untouchables," concluded with this diatribe: "Now the country which has always shut its eyes to the inequalities of the American way of life for the Negro, while exclaiming in hypocritical horror at persecution in Europe and allegedly the British colonies, has had its own housekeeping publicity exposed."

"Americans like to indulge in endless reproach of Europeans for their 'racism' and 'colonialism,'" sneers La Liberté (Fribourg, Germany), but the answer is the Greensville, S. C., lynch-trial verdict, an acquital which can only encourage lynching."

Our segregation, our mob violence, and our Dixiecrats contribute grist to the European mills of anti-Americanism. To preach democratic equality while making distinctions of color and race strikes Europeans as bizarre, if not perverse. It reaps headlines like these: "Is the Negro a Man?" "Racism in the United States," "America's Untouchables,"

"Odor of Burning Flesh," "Lincoln or Lynch?" "Blackest American State," and "Negroes: America's Untouchables."

Let us now turn to sample quotations: L'Echo Illustré (Geneva, Switzerland) puts it this way: "The groans of the American Negro are beginning to be heard throughout Europe." This paper also carried a two-page illustrated feature on the "Revival of the Klu Klux Klan" as well as another entitled "Black Tragedy in the United States is no Myth."

I asked Americans, writes a correspondent of Patrie Valaissane (Sierre, Switzerland), why they treated Negroes with such contempt. The more sensible ones gave this reply: 'It's because Negroes are inferior; just overgrown untrustworthy children who need watching to keep them out of mischief.' Others used the idiom of the eighteenth-century planter: 'It's because they are liars, drunkards, and thieves.' Yet there is a much more serious and apparent reason. America has a caste chiefly interested in maintaining and spreading racism as an economic arm of her great trusts, and the inferior position of the Negro keeps him a docile and ill-paid worker.

SHOCKING EXPERIENCE

Joseph Rovan (Servir, Lausanne, Switzerland) thinks "The Negro problem is beyond question the most shocking experience to be encountered by those French writers (Sartre, Claude Roy, Simone de Beauvoir, et al.) who have crossed the Atlantic since the war. This reaction was intensified by their experiences with the German occupation and the French Resistance movement."

Near the end of a review of Gunnar Myrdal's An American Dilemma, The Times Literary Supplement (London, England) apostrophizes:

It was the dilemma on which Lincoln tried to impale Douglas; it is the dilemma which is presented all over the world today to the defenders of the American free way of life. Every lynching or sanctioned murder in a convict gang, every political career like that of Senator Bilbo or Governor Talmadge, is a renewal of intolerable scandals like those that threatened the authority of the Holy See. And nothing could be easier than to rest simply on charges of odious (an incompetent) hypocrisy, to see in the pretentions of American democracy not the claims of Jefferson's or Lincoln's doctrines, but the shameless impudence of Barnum, in the missionary zeal of the American churches, a scandal greater than any given by a Borgia pope.

Robert E. Abs gives his "Impressions of America" in Le Peuple (Brussels, Belgium):

I paid particular attention to the conduct of Negroes and simple honesty forces me to admit it was perfect. Their deportment was correct, their clothes neat, but one easily read on their faces the engraved-sadness of fatigue and fear. Where they are clean, they do not constitute the poorest and most miserable social elements.

Many professions are barred to him not by law, but because of his lack of financial resources. He is shunted aside from the majority group. In a restaurant a Negro may be allowed to do the dirty cleaning job but not to wait on the general public. He may remove the garbage cans from midnight to five A.M. He can dig ditches or do similar ill-paid work. Little black children wander the streets in tatters shining shoes for a few pennies. But one seldom sees Negroes in restaurants except in cafeterias. I personally think that white prejudice is declining and

(Continued on page 468)

Acme

HEMAN MARION SWEATT, Houston Mail Carrier, wins his 4-year fight to enter the University of Texas Law School. See page 444.

30 W. 40th St.
New York 18, N. Y.

May 22, 1950

DEAR VOTER:

YOUR VOTE AND ACTIVE SUPPORT OF SENATOR FRANK GRAHAM IN THE NORTH CAROLINA PRIMARY MAY 27 WILL BE GREATLY APPRECIATED. YOU KNOW, JUST AS WE DO, THAT "DR. FRANK" HAS DONE MUCH TO ADVANCE THE PLACE OF THE NEGRO IN NORTH CAROLINA. THE NEGRO IS A USEFUL, TAX-PAYING CITIZEN!

W. WITE, Executive Secretary,
National Society for the Advancement of Colored People

BELOW THE BELT—A facsimile of the postcards sent out by Graham opponents during the recent North Carolina senatorial race. Thousands of these cards were mailed North Carolina voters from New York City to dupe them into believing that the NAACP backed Senator Frank P. Graham. Introduction of the race issue through the NAACP along with the charge that Graham supported FEPC and flouted segregation was expected to turn Carolina voters against the senator. Obviously witless voters would confuse "Wite" with "White" and the "National Society for the Advancement of Colored People" with the "National Association for the Advancement of Colored People." Actually there is no "Wite," no "NSACP," and no 30 W. 40th St." And needless to say neither Walter White nor the NAACP sent out any such message. Senator Graham's opponents were Willis Smith, corporation lawyer, former Senator Robert R. Reynolds, and Olla Ray Boyd. Senator Graham polled 295,000 votes to Willis Smith's 245,000. Boyd polled 62,000. Since Senator Graham did not get a majority, there was a run-off in June. Returns from 1,753 of 1,990 precincts gave Senator Graham 233,807 to 258,565 for Mr. Smith. Senator Graham lost, since nomination in the Democratic primary is equivalent to election in North Carolina.

DID YOU KNOW —

That the Emancipation Proclamation, issued September 22, 1862, freed the slaves only in the seceded states? Not until adoption of the 13th Amendment in 1865 were slaves liberated everywhere else in America.

O Lord, help us who roam about. Help us who have been placed in Africa and have no home of our own. Give us back a dwelling place, O God. All power is Yours in Heaven and on earth. Amen." Michael Scott took a seat among the audience.

The chairman recognized the delegate from Haiti. "So," he said, "now we know. Yes, indeed, it was very dangerous to allow this Christian man to come before us and speak. Yes, for some people it was very dangerous. We've got to the bottom of this thing, gentlemen, and what do we find? Blood." He leaned forward. "Blood and mud. Gentlemen, I am not, I think, a very emotional man, but I can assure you that I was deeply moved by what I've just heard and I think you were too.

"We must do something, gentlemen. It is up to this council to help those brutally oppressed people before they turn on their tormentors in their tortured agony. If we do nothing, then the blame for a bloody holocaust will rest squarely on this council. The whole colonial tyranny has been drawn for us. Woe betide these men who wish to set up the old system of a race of masters and race of slaves. Gentlemen, you are still thinking in the ideas of the eighteenth century. Your honor and your conscience compel you to prevent what is happening in Africa today from continuing. I implore . . ." A door opened, and a man hurried toward an empty chair. He held up his hand. South Africa wanted to speak. The Haitian relinquished the floor; the South African asked that the debate be postponed.

"We have a crowded agenda," the chairman told him. "If the delegates agree, we will resume at ten forty-five tomorrow morning." The delegates agreed.

South Africa had received a reprieve, but the next day the temper of the committee had not changed. In spite of quibblings and obstructions—by the United Kingdom, Greece, and the United States, in addition to South Africa—the committee decided to ask the International Court of Justice at The Hague for advice as to the legal status of South West Africa.

Mexico requested that the court have its decision ready in time for the next meeting of the General Assembly. When the case came before the Plenary Session, South Africa fought hard, but failed by a vote of forty to seven, to stop the General Assembly from acting on the committee's report.

One man had spoken for a gagged people, and his quiet words would be heard by many millions more as the drums of the Bush Telegraph thudded them out the length and breadth of Africa.

Michael Scott had both set a precedent and created a miracle.

EUROPEAN PRESS

(Continued from page 418)

that the war has brought about a rough equality, an embryonic equality at least.

"In Oklahoma," claims the Gazette de Lausanne (Lausanne, Switzerland), "people must use telephones appropriate to the color of their skins. In Florida the books of the white school children must be segregated from those used by Negroes. In Georgia the annual salary of a white teacher is $1,123; that of his Negro colleague, $515. And in Texas Joe Louis cannot legally fight a white boxer. But one thing is certain: the thirteen million Negroes of the United States have a much older American lineage than the great majority of whites."

SOUTHERN REVOLT

In commenting on the "Southern Revolt," Alistair Cooke (Manchester Guardian, Manchester, England) writes: "Nothing new can be said for the retrogressive doctrine of white supremacy, except perhaps that its fearful adherents do face, where often the Southern liberal does not, the reality of miscegenation. . . ." Northern liberals, he adds, "are often evangelists of the printed word, in big cities that excuse them from paying any practical price for their enjoyment of being holier than the neighbors [Southerners] they can comfortably ignore."

Josephine Baker's angry articles in Paris-Soir detailed her experiences in the United States after an absence of twelve years. She describes a visit to Fisk university, a jim-crow trip to St. Louis, Mo., reports on segregation in the armed forces, and takes a look at the race motif in Broadway plays. "The Negro in the South is no longer a slave," she observes, "despite the fact that some people consider him one and bar him from all contacts with the whites."

One piece details her husband's experiences with a New York hotel:

Things must have changed in the United States. The war mingling of peoples and races must have brought whites and Negroes together in a common struggle and torn down the barriers of color prejudice. Anyway, these were my thoughts upon my return to America after a twelve-year absence. My husband, Jo Bouillon, and I had spent several months in South America where we had given hundreds of performances in the larger cities. We had finally reached Chicago by way of Mexico. Our stay in Chicago was uneventful. As we were about to leave, we asked friends to reserve a suite in a large New York hotel for Mr. and Mrs. Jo Bouillon. But as soon as we arrived in New York we ran smack into trouble. Before we could hardly settle down in our rooms, the management called in my husband:

'How long do you plan to stay, Mr. Bouillon?'

'I've rented the suite for a month.'

'I'm very, very sorry,' explained the manager.

'There must be some mistake. Your suite is just for today. You give it up tomorrow.'

Jo understood at once:

'Is it because my wife is Negro?'

'You must understand Mr. Bouillon," the manager went on hesitantly, that I'm not complaining, at least not personally. But you see we have a large southern clientele. . . . People from the South, you know.' The fatal word had slipped out. We met this same excuse thoughout the day at every hotel we entered. Yet none of them was honest enough to say: 'We've no room for a colored woman.'

JOSEPHINE BAKER

However, here is a report on Miss Baker herself from Die Zeit (Hamburg, Germany), a far remove from jim-crow New York hotels and the prejudiced South.

Despite the fact that Josephine Baker owns a castle in Dordogne and an apartment house in the best section of Paris, she is always short on cash. Her jewelry, fifteen million francs worth, often ends up in the pawnshop. But whenever she has money she loads herself down with foodstuffs for the poor of her neighborhood. Yet one of her recent charities was accepted with mixed feelings.

She had stocked her house on the Avenue Victor Hugo with eighteen tons of coal, much to the joy of her tenants. But one day they were filled with apprehension and fear. They were horrified to find that Josephine had distributed all the coal to the poor.

This is the Josephine Baker who recently amazed the world with a hitherto unknown side of her character. As a result of her war exploits she won the War Cross, the medal of the Resistance, and the Croix de Lorraine. She was even appointed a temporary lieutenant, and she performed invaluable services for the Deuxième Bureau, the espionage department of the French Ministry of War.

RALPH J. BUNCHE

Hans Habe writes glowingly of "the fairy-like career" of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche in Die Weltwoche (Zurich). I quote a paragraph:

Just what, then, is the secret of this Negro? He loved the people among whom he worked as an intermediary. He loved the Jews. Not only because his Rosenwald fellowship had opened up a brilliant career, but because he knew that up until a few years ago the Jews had been 'white Negroes.' He loved the Arabs. Not only for having accepted him at the time as one of their own, but also because he sensed a similarity between their fate and that of his own people. What is more important is that an understanding of his personal problem provides a key to the solution of the whole Negro problem. . . . Bunche has always been 'color blind.' He made no grand speeches about racial equality. He took the idea of American democracy literally. He confided in democracy, and it appears that democracy confided in him.'

AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

When La Voix Ouvrière (Geneva) headlined the news that the chief of the Information Section of the American Military Government in Germany had orders to present the principles and practices of American democracy to the Germans, with special emphasis on the rights of man and the fundamental freedom of the individual, the paper asked rhetorically:

"Will they talk about the life of the Negro in the United States?"

Pour Tous (Zofingue, Switzerland) headlines: "In the United States the "Displaced Persons Are Negroes." "Right now many Americans are finding themselves deeply embarrassed," the paper continues. "For many months now [January 1948] their papers have been full of complaints on what they call the 'inhumane attitude' of the English. But these same Americans are just themselves becoming aware of the conclusions reached by 'The Report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights.' "

Amerigo Ruggiero, New York correspondent of Il Messagero (Milan, Italy) tries to clarify the problem for his readers:

The American Negro problem is very complex. Moreover, there are as many Negro problems as there are states in the Union. Their aspects are by turns tragic, absurd, grotesque, comical. We must also be aware at the outset of the American definition of Negro. Hardly more than twenty percent of them are of pure blood and these are found mainly in the 'Deep South,' especially in the southern parts of Georgia, Alabama, and Louisiana.

The rest, making up about eighty percent of the total, are mixed and run the most extraordinary color gamut and blendings imaginable. Negroes themselves are acutely aware of these color nuances, giving them such special names as mulatto, quadroon, banana-yellow, high yellow. . . .

NEGRO TROOPS

Alberto Spaini (Il Giornale della Sera, Rome) praises the Negro troops who entered Rome after the expulsion of the Germans:

They were the good brave Negro Americans who made friends with the people of Rome and then encamped for the night at Cinecitta. . . . 'Are they really black?' asked His Eminence Cardinal Albani. 'Are they fair or brown?' asked the elders. 'They are black. Black as coal,' was the reply. But they were Americans and they waved the American flag as they passed and the people yelled back the familiar Paisà! And they replied: 'Hello, Joe,' and 'O.K., John.'

Finally the people began to notice that these men were Negroes, and the girls respected them; they kept them in good cheer. They soon noticed that these men were really not black. Many of them were actually lighter in complexion than many Italians. . . . Their polite correctness, their kindness soon made you forget their color. Theirs was indeed the color of real Americans!

Several papers examined segregation in the American Army. La Tribune de Genève (Geneva) devoted a two-column article to the subject from its Washington correspondent under the heading, "The Negro Question in the American Army." Another Swiss paper, Journal d'Estavayer, went into details on Army segregation and A. Philip Randolph's congressional testimony at the time he said he would advise Negroes not to serve in a jim-crow army. The headline read: "Will There be Continued Separation of Whites and Blacks in the American Army?"

VARIOUS TOPICS

Now for a few miscellaneous comments. These are from Swiss papers. The Semaine de la Femme (Lausanne) devoted two lavishly illustrated pages to Southern University; Die Woche (Olten), a photographic study of Meharry; and In Freien Studen (Zurich), Negro life in general.

American lynching was the concern of many papers. La Marseillaise (Paris) reproduced scenes of a double lynching under a phrasal caption from one of General Eisenhower's speeches: "American democracy offers to the individual a free and limitless horizon." The Sud-Ouest (Bordeaux) commented on the decline of lynching, as did Arriba (Madrid): "Although the barbarous custom of lynching is disappearing in the United States, it has still to be completely eliminated." Coitidianul and Semnanlul, both of Bucharest, devoted articles to lynching. A headline in the first read: "Negroes Are Still Lynched in the United States; and the second put this headline over one of its pieces: "Lincoln or Lynch?" Action (Paris) penned this: "The Klu Klux Klan, America's oldest Fascist organization, founded in 1867, is still able to terrorize a Negro in the South. Let him disobey its orders and he will see his cabin burned down, his little property destroyed, and he himself is fortunate if he is not turned into a living torch."

Claude Julien (Il Quotidiano, Rome) praises Baroness Catherine Hueck's Friendship House in Harlem; Il Messagero (Rome) discusses discrimination in American universities, and Die Wochenzeitung (Zurich) pictures G. W. McLaurin in his jim-crow cubicle at the University of Oklahoma under the caption: "Come now, Uncle Sam!" Drum Nou (Brasov, Rumania) swears that Negroes are only allowed to travel in boxcars; Action (Paris) translates Roi Ottley's Ebony (March, 1948) article, "5 Million U. S. White Negroes"; Frontul Plugarilor (Bucharest) explains how Negroes got from Africa to the United States and illustrates the piece with an old cut of a slave auction; Arriba (Madrid) notes Senator Russell's plan to distribute Negroes evenly throughout the United States; Solidaridad Nacional (Barcelona) remarked on the exclusion of the Haitian minister of agriculture François George from the Hotel Buenavista in Biloxi, Miss.

SPIRIT OF BILBO

La Nation Belge (Brussels) carried a short news item on Miss Fisher and the University of Oklahoma under the English blurb: "Made in U.S.A.," and a headline (in French): "A University for Just One Student — But Then She's Black." Avanti (Milan) has a picture of Amy Mallard and daughter; Dovere (Bellinzona, Italy) pictured Klansmen giving an aged Negro a Christmas basket; El Alcazar (Madrid) carried Klan pictures; and the Diario da Manha (Lisbon) wanted to know for whom Negroes worked. La Stampa (Turin) says that though Bilbo is dead his spirit still lives on, in American racism; L'Osservatore Romano (Vatican City) translates Vincent Baker's "Negro Youth and Social Action"; The Economist (London) discusses southern regional colleges; and the Paris Figaro had a news item on Senator Glen Taylor's arrest for violating Alabama's jim-crow laws.

These newspaper comments, though many of them are from Communist sheets, do not, with the exception of Rumania, come from behind the iron curtain. Nor, excepting the Communist press of Rumania, do they indulge in fulminations or distortions. All expose the moral cancer of American racism in contrast to our stultiloquence about individual freedom and the American way of life. We preach equality but practice racism, and this moral turpitude makes Uncle Sam the grotesque mountebank of "the free world." As Senator William Benton (Conn.) said in the Senate on May 9: "The Russians did not invent the worldwide suspicion that all has not been well in race relations in the United States, although they have exploited it to the hilt." "The World Audience for America's Story," title of a Department of State publication, expects more of the United States than industrial know-how, money, and an unintelligent, myopic, dogged militarism. It is a fair presumption that we cannot give moral leadership to the world until we solve our problems of race and color.

Reprinted from
REVIEW OF EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH
October 1950

Mat. - Intercultural Education

CHAPTER II

Intercultural Education

WILLIAM VAN TIL and GEORGE W. DENEMARK*

THE past three years have noted the publication of a number of significant research studies in intergroup education. Of particular importance have been those studies which have been directed toward gaining a better understanding of the nature and roots of prejudice.

The Development of Intercultural Education

Many intercultural education leaders have long recognized the necessity of developing a theoretical, conceptual framework regarding the nature of prejudice in order that efforts to improve intergroup relations might be firmly built. Yet it is only recently that the scientific groundwork has been laid by the psychological and social sciences. Handicapped by insufficient research on the understanding of prejudice, intercultural education in its earliest years struggled thru the missionary and oversimplified-answer stages. In the early nineteen forties, intercultural education began to come of age with the initiation or expansion of activities by the Bureau for Intercultural Education, Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools, College Study in Intergroup Relations, Anti-Defamation League, American Jewish Committee, National Conference of Christians and Jews, and Commission on Community Interrelations. Characteristic were pragmatic explorations into the technics and practices which seemed most promising in effecting attitudinal changes. Increasingly apparent today is an emphasis upon careful and deliberate research into the causes of prejudice and the most effective ways of combating it.

The Nature of Prejudice

The weight of the research evidence surveyed seems to support the findings of Ackerman and Jahoda (2), which indicate that there are two major sources of prejudice and discrimination toward minority groups: (a) frustration and (b) cultural learning.

* The authors wish to acknowledge the financial grant of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith to the University of Illinois for this project. The assistance made possible a trip for a week of interviews with national leaders in intercultural education. Research appraisal technics and important trends in intergroup education were discussed. Interviewed were: Hermann H. Giles, Center for Human Relations Studies, New York University; Otto Klineberg, Columbia University; Louis Raths, Bureau for Intercultural Education; Arnold Rose, University of Minnesota; Frank Trager, Leo Srole, and the Research Staff, Anti-Defamation League; Robin Williams, Cornell University; Louis Wirth and the Research Staff, Committee on Education, Training, and Research in Race Relations of the University of Chicago; and Rudolph Wittenberg, Research Department, American Jewish Committee. The help of these men and groups is gratefully acknowledged. Responsibility for the findings of this review is, of course, that of the authors alone.

An increasing body of data, such as that reported by the above authors in a later study (1) and by Miller and Bugelski (58), lends support to the position that the tensions and insecurities resulting from frustration are translated into expressions and acts of hostility and aggression toward minority or out-groups. The sources of these frustrations are to be found both in the personal-family environment (36), which operates most strongly upon the individual during his early preschool and school years, and, increasingly, in the larger social structure as he matures (86).

Ackerman and Jahoda (1) found that out of the forty cases of anti-Semitism collected for their study there was not a single example of permanently well-adjusted marital relationship between the parents of the anti-Semites, a condition almost certain to result in many tensions. However, as Hymes (42) pointed out, tensions and insecurities experienced in family and early peer group relations do not necessarily determine a person's prejudices. Tensions and insecurities may simply predispose him to seeking an outlet for such feelings.

The work of Komarovsky and Sargent (43) described some of the influences of subcultures upon personality. This study supported the generalization that the designation of specific groups toward which hostility shall be directed depends largely on the societal pressures that operate upon individuals. The importance of the class status system, both as a source of tension and as an agency for focusing existing hostilities upon certain groups, was indicated by Davis (21) and by Bettelheim and Janowitz (8). The latter authors, upon the basis of intensive interviews with 150 war veterans, disclosed a marked correlation between anti-Semitism and social mobility, particularly downward mobility. Hatt (34) also dealt with the relation between social class and ethnic attitudes, while Centers (11) discussed attitudes in relation to occupational stratification. However, while emphasizing with Davis the intimate relationship between these societal influences and the individual's total personality, Bettelheim and Janowitz concluded that intolerance is less a function of the objective social situation than of one's personal evaluation of that situation.

A number of writers (33, 54, 60) indicated that another source of prejudice can be discerned. This second source of prejudice, cultural learning, is not explainable in terms of frustration. As MacIver (54) suggested, prejudice can also be explained thru the processes of indoctrination and habituation. Data from the Philadelphia Early Childhood Project (66, 89), on which a full report is now in preparation, indicated that prejudices develop out of adult values and the status quo to which children are exposed, as well as out of situations generating insecurities and frustrations. Radke, H. Trager, and Davis (66) observed that many children have opportunities only for the kind of learning about groups that involve stereotypes and rejection. Children often rejected groups not present in their environment. Lewin (49, 50) indicated that a way by which groups and institutions perpetuate themselves is thru the exercise of strong pressures upon their members to conform to the group norms.

As a consequence of such pressures, individuals find themselves dependent upon the group for the determination of what is real and what is right.

Two insights into the nature of prejudice, which at first seem paradoxical, are of considerable value to the student of intergroup education. The first is the existence of authoritarian personalities which, according to Adorno and his associates (3), contain a broad and coherent pattern characterized by conventionality, rigidity (70), repressive denial, fear, and dependency. The second is the high degree of inconsistency characteristic of the reactions of individuals toward members of other groups. Such inconsistency may take the form of responding favorably to a given group in one situation and unfavorably in another, or of accepting one kind of relationship with such a group while rejecting an apparently much less personal type of contact (45). Deutsch and Collins (22) reported that such inconsistencies were apparent in members of public housing projects interviewed, as did the contributors to an issue of the Journal of Social Issues devoted to the problems of inconsistency (14).

These two types of evidence, seemingly contradictory, were reconciled ably by Ackerman and Jahoda (1) who related them to the ego-integrative forces stemming from the person constantly seeking to associate and order his experiences into a coherent and consistent whole, and to the divisive forces of a complex society in which the requirements for status in one aspect of life are antithetical to those of others. The interrelationship between such factors was also recognized by Bettelheim and Janowitz (8, 9). They pointed out that personality structure alone cannot entirely explain why people set out to discriminate against particular ethnic groups or why they are more prejudiced toward one group than another. The defensive needs of the individual, the economic and social structure of the community, and the ethnic realities of the moment must all be taken into account. As Deutsch (14) concluded, "efforts to produce change in the individual must not only be directed at the individual but also at the social institutions and group standards which determine the individual's values and which help to induce the goals for which he strives."

It is in such a complex context that the problem of improving intercultural relations must be considered. The task is formidable and multifaceted. Obviously, a high degree of cooperation is essential between human relations agencies and the psychological and social sciences. Such cooperation is increasingly apparent in the work of such groups as the New York University Center for Human Relations Studies, the University of Chicago Center for the Study of Intergroup Relations, and in the movement fostered by Clinchy (16) to increase the number and scope of activities of such centers. The need for cooperation has been increasingly recognized in the number of research projects calling upon the skills of men trained in a variety of disciplines, as pointed out by Max Horkheimer and Samuel Flowerman, editors of the Harper's Studies in Prejudice Series (3). Further encouragement may be found in the coordination of the research efforts of many institutions around one basic problem, as in the case of the College Study in Intergroup Relations (17, 18) and the increased emphasis upon action-research by such groups as the Commission on Community Interrelations of the American Jewish Congress (13, 14, 76).

What Schools Can Do

Five major approaches to developing democratic human relations have especially been studied in current research. Many of these approaches had been suggested as promising practices by educators who based them primarily on teaching experience, educational theory, and the limited research available (41, 91, 92). It should be noted that a large number of the current research studies considered demonstrated an awareness of the necessity for developing programs which included a wide variety of approaches, even as they chose to limit their investigation to one.

1. The creation of a democratic atmosphere designed to reduce the personal insecurities and tensions of children.

Ackerman and Jahoda (1, 2) found that emotional predispositions to anti-Semitism include anxiety, confusion of the concept of self, unsatisfactory interpersonal relationships, conformity, fear of the different, poor perception of reality, an inconsistent value system, and a poorly developed conscience. Much research points to the importance of wholesome family relationships prior to and concurrent with the school experiences of children for minimizing such difficulties. There is also good reason to believe, with Kilpatrick (41), Weston (93), Taba (83), and others, that a warm, friendly, democratic atmosphere in schools may help to strengthen the healthy attitudes already present in many young people, and to some degree at least, make up for the shortcomings in home environment experienced by others. Kilpatrick and Van Til (42) indicated that perhaps the single most important factor in building good human relations thru the school is a democratic atmosphere, and defined such an atmosphere as one which involves acceptance, belongingness, and welcome as a person.

The importance of the classroom teacher in effecting attitude changes, and the influence which teacher attitudes have upon those of the students have been pointed out by Russell and Robertson (75), Radke, H. Trager, and Davis (66), and others. Those institutions involved in the College Study in Intergroup Relations (18, 32) recognized the crucial role of the teacher and instituted surveys and reexaminations of their teacher preparation programs.

Analyses done in the area of group dynamics (51, 62, 84) lead us to believe that a reexamination of the ways in which school groups are organized and conducted will point out possibilities for materially reducing individual tensions and insecurities. Tolman (87), in describing social learning, commented briefly on some of the possible ways of translating or dissipating aggressions against out-groups.

2. The encouragement of broadening intergroup contacts in situations involving cooperation.

The findings reported by Stouffer and others (81), drawn from data obtained by the Research Branch of the War Department, and those reported by Whittemore (94) with regard to the experiences in the "G. I. Universities" following the war, lend strong support to the fait accompli as a method of intergroup education. Data from the former group, in answer to a question relating to attitudes toward serving in a company containing Negro and white platoons, disclosed that of the men not having had such experience, only 2 percent stated they would like it. Sixty-two percent indicated they would dislike it very much. A literal revolution in attitudes was apparent from the responses of men having had such experience. Thirty-two percent stated they would like it and only 7 percent indicated they would dislike it very much. As Stouffer and his associates pointed out, this technic is particularly promising when "attention is focused on concrete tasks or goals requiring common effort rather than upon more abstract considerations of justice or of desirable policy which emphasize and arouse traditional prejudices." A similar conclusion was reported by Wittenberg (98) with respect to neighborhood projects.

The value of contacts in situations involving cooperation was reported by Deutsch and Collins (22) with respect to intergroup contacts in public housing projects. Findings by Phelps (64, 65) in school work camps also seem to corroborate the value of this technic. Particularly promising results are yielded by situations in which the pressures to conform to prior arrangements are lessened. The conditions of contact are important, according to B. MacKenzie (55) and as research on social distance prior to the current period of investigation has repeatedly demonstrated. One of the conclusions of the Philadelphia Early Childhood Project (66) pointed out that such contacts needed to be accompanied by other change technics to prevent some prejudiced persons from regarding the contact merely as an exception to their previously formulated generalizations.

3. The provision of opportunities for enhanced emotional sensitization to other intercultural groups.

The role of emotions in the educative process has long been underestimated in American educational thinking. The work of Prescott and his associates has been a valuable stimulus toward recognizing the emotional as well as the intellectual facets of the learning process. In human relations research the importance of building into personal frames of reference an emotional sensitivity to other persons and groups is now receiving increasing attention. Davidoff (20) found a positive correlation between empathy and attitude toward minority groups. Kramer (45), in discussing dimensions of prejudice, called attention to the emotional as well as the cognitive and action facets of such attitudes. Woodruff and DiVesta (99) observed that an important way of changing attitudes is to change the individual's concept of the object toward which the attitude is expressed, a process which must necessarily include emotional considerations.

A significant part of the work of the staff of Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools (85) has been devoted to developing school curriculums which emphasize human relations problems thru the medium of literature, particularly novels. Reports suggesting the potentialities of literature for both the elementary and secondary levels were made by Franc (28), Finley (25), and Rollins (71). H. Trager and Everitt (88), speaking from experiences with primary grade children in the Philadelphia public schools, doubted that books alone are sufficient, but suggested that their value lay in reinforcing, interpreting, and extending the experience of children.

Analyses of the effectiveness of movies as a media for attitude change have been made by Raths and F. Trager (68) and by Sherif and Sargent (78). The latter authors noted that the high degree of ego involvement present in movie audiences was an important factor in the adoption of new form and values or the maintenance of old.

4. The promotion of situations in which individuals may be exposed to the inconsistency or invalidity of some of their existing attitudes.

It is notable that in contrast to the preceding half-decade, when a large number of research studies were concerned with the effectiveness of information presented in curriculum courses as a means of changing intergroup attitudes, practically no such projects were reported in the period from 1947 to 1950. Bierstedt (54), in summarizing much of this earlier research, concluded that appropriate instruction under certain conditions does have an influence on attitudes toward out-groups, but pointed to the necessity for research as to the kind of instruction and conditions which accompany it, as well as into the character of the students involved. Similar tentativeness is apparent in Rose's generalizations on the effectiveness of information (73), also based on a summary of research.

Current researches have placed considerable emphasis upon study of persons exposed to data that contradicts their presently held attitudes. Lippitt (51), Kretch and Crutchfield (46), and others have observed that the effectiveness of facts in bringing about attitudinal changes is frequently dependent upon the extent to which those attitudes we seek to change are themselves involved in obtaining the facts. Much of the work of the Commission on Community Interrelations (13, 14, 76) has been devoted to an analysis of the role of action research in intergroup education. Chein (12), reporting upon the Montclair, Minneapolis, and Northtown community self-surveys, noted in a composite summary such concrete changes as the passage of an FEPC ordinance, the admittance of Negroes into an important local union, the construction by private builders of a 350 dwelling unit for Negro occupancy, and the first employment of Negroes as teachers, school principals, policemen, and salesclerks.

5. Strengthening the "social supports" of democratic behavior.

In contrast to the oft-repeated phrase, "you can't legislate good human relations," evidence from studies made in conjunction with the work of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination (4, 79) indicated that patterns of behavior in employment practices could be substantially altered in a short period of time. Watson (92), in summarizing research dealing with the effects of legislation, arrived at a similar conclusion. Cook (17) pointed out that discrimination teaches prejudice rather than prejudice fostering discrimination. Montagu (59) noted that unless educational programs are accompanied by social and economic arrangements which support the more desirable attitudes, all the institutional pressures upon the individual will be in the direction of a resumption of his original attitudes.

Perhaps one of the most thorogoing programs for intergroup change thru legislation was that presented by the President's Committee on Civil Rights in an influential and outstanding report (90). Much of the recent work of the Anti-Defamation League has been devoted to the implementation of this program thru mass media and conferences as well as thru educational materials. The Anti-Defamation League also publishes the Freedom Pamphlet Series, an important contribution to disseminating intercultural insights, which includes syntheses by Allport (5), Kilpatrick (41), Sparling (80), and many others.

Another approach, the dissemination of propaganda thru the mass media (26, 27, 74), tho closely associated with emotional sensitization and with the imparting of information, may well be discussed under social supports. For, as Lazarsfeld (48) pointed out, the major value of mass propaganda lies in its introduction of an alternative mode of behavior to persons whose environment might otherwise have taught only prejudice and discrimination. Helson (35) and Kretch and Crutchfield (46) referred to a theory of adaptation level which holds that the introduction of extreme statements regarding a social issue will change the acceptance level of the individual exposed in the same direction in which the range of alternatives in the perceptive continuum has moved.

The use of propaganda is subject to serious limitations because of the likelihood of its reaching mainly those who are least in need of such ideas and because most prejudiced persons may avoid exposure by withdrawal (19, 27, 47). Advocates of propaganda as an approach urge, however, that its use constantly reinforces those who already hold democratic attitudes. Williams (95), summarizing research studies on the use of propaganda, generalized that its effectiveness tends to be greater when the material is linked with prestige symbols.

Lazarsfeld's observation that personal persuasion is more effective than large-scale programs because of its flexibility and adaptability to the individual or group in question suggests that propaganda might be even more effective when adapted to individual community, school, and classroom groups. But whether the school should be used as an agency for propaganda, however beneficent or democratic, will long be a topic for educational controversy.

Trends in Research Methods

Research in intergroup education has increasingly moved away from the measurement of student reactions in college classrooms and into clinical laboratory studies and larger social field investigations. Both depth and breadth dimensions of the problem field have been expanded. The first three volumes of the Harper Studies in Prejudice Series (1, 3, 8), sponsored by the American Jewish Committee, illustrated methods entailing a deep probing into the personality patterns of individuals. The latter two volumes (53, 57), along with the work of the Commission on Community Interrelations, the Anti-Defamation League, the Social Science Research Council, and others, suggested a more extensive examination of attitude change in the broad context of the community with its complexity of cultural influences.

Attention is called here to the methods and technics developed or extensively employed in the research studies examined. Methods increasingly used were intensive interviews by trained persons (1, 2, 3, 8, 31), Rorschach and Thematic Apperception tests (3, 8, 69), group therapy (7, 44), sociometrics (6, 38), surveys based upon responses of groups in concrete life situations (housing projects, armed forces, etc.), nonverbal tests (66, 89), and community self-surveys. Attitude scales were subjected to continued research and refinement (23, 24). Of particular concern to students of attitudes were unidimensionality of attitude scales (45) and the indication of the intensity with which a given attitude is held (37, 82).

Summary and Needed Research

The past three years appear to have been important ones for intergroup education, marking the continuance of the "coming of age" of the movement. Especially significant has been the development of a concept of the nature of prejudice substantiated by research. The emerging framework aids in integrating the efforts of those persons and groups seeking to accomplish similar ends. Important, too, are studies validating or modifying proposed approaches to intercultural education.

Much remains to be done, as Williams (95), Clinchy (16), MacIver (54), Chein (12), Wirth (97), and others have indicated in discussing promising areas for further research. Nevertheless, there would seem to be good cause for encouragement to be found in the progress of research since the war. Systematic summaries of research findings by Rose (73), Williams (95), Watson (92), Bierstedt (54), and Shapiro (77), a study of the handling of minority groups in three-hundred textbooks (96), and the birth of a bulletin (15) devoted wholly to a quarterly summary of research underway in intergroup relations, suggest a "stock-taking" which is an important characteristic of maturity.

It is also encouraging to note in intercultural education a heightened appreciation of interrelationships and interaction. For instance, there is a growing emphasis upon the school in society, both as it influences and is influenced by other social institutions and forces. There is growing recognition of the relationship between process and product, and consequent deep concern with both. The ties between emotion and intellect are emphasized. Increased cooperation is evident between psychological and social disciplines, between research workers and action agencies, and between home and school. Most of all, it is heartening to find that these emphases arising out of research concerned with improving intergroup relations closely parallel and undergird our emerging concept of what constitutes good democratic experimental education for American schools.

Bibliography

1. ACKERMAN, NATHAN W., and JAHODA, MARIE. Anti-Semitism and Emotional Disorder. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1950. 130 p.
2. ACKERMAN, NATHAN W., and JAHODA, MARIE. "Toward a Dynamic Interpretation of Anti-Semitic Attitudes." American Journal of Orthopsychiatry 18: 163-73; January 1948.
3. ADORNO, THEODORE W., and OTHERS. The Authoritarian Personality. Studies in Prejudice, American Jewish Committee, Social Studies Series, Publication No. 3. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1950. 982 p.
4. ALILUNAS, LEO J. "Experiment in Human Relations." Social Education 14: 29-30; January 1950.
5. ALLPORT, GORDON W. ABC's of Scapegoating. Revised edition. New York: Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 1948. 56 p.
6. ATKINSON, GRETCHEN. "Sociogram as an Instrument in Social-Studies Teaching and Evaluation." Elementary School Journal 50: 74-85; October 1949.
7. AXLINE, VIRGINIA M. "Play Therapy and Race Conflict in Young Children." Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 43: 300-310; July 1948.
8. BETTELHEIM, BRUNO, and JANOWITZ, MORRIS. Dynamics of Prejudice. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1950. 224 p.
9. BETTELHEIM, BRUNO, and JANOWITZ, MORRIS. "Ethnic Tolerance: a Function of Social and Personal Control." American Journal of Sociology 55: 137-45; September 1949.
10. CENTER FOR INTERGROUP EDUCATION. Staff of Intergroup Education in Cooperating Schools. Taba, Hilda, director. Elementary Curriculum in Intergroup Relations. Work in Progress Series, No. 5. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1950. 261 p.
11. CENTERS, RICHARD. "Attitude and Belief in Relation to Occupational Stratification." Journal of Social Psychology 27: 159-95; May 1948.
12. CHEIN, ISIDOR. "The Problems of Inconsistency: a Restatement." Journal of Social Issues 5: 52-61; No. 3, 1949.
13. CHEIN, ISIDOR; COOK, STUART W.; and HARDING, JOHN. "The Field of Action Research." American Psychologist 3: 43-50; February 1948.
14. CHEIN, ISIDOR, and OTHERS, issue editors. "Consistency and Inconsistency in Intergroup Relations." Journal of Social Issues 5: 2-61; No. 3, 1949.
15. CHICAGO, UNIVERSITY OF. COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION, TRAINING AND RESEARCH AND AMERICAN COUNCIL ON RACE RELATIONS. Inventory of Research in Racial and Cultural Relations. Quarterly bulletin. Kramer, Bernard M., editor. First issue, September 1948. Chicago 15 (4901 Ellis Avenue): the Committee.

16. CLINCHY, EVERETT R. Intergroup Relations Centers. New York: Farrar, Straus and Company, 1949. 54 p.
17. COOK, LLOYD ALLEN. "The Frame of Reference in the College Study." Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 31-42; September 1947.
18. COOK, LLOYD ALLEN, editor. College Programs in Intergroup Education. College Study in Intergroup Relations, Vol. 1. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1950. 365 p.
19. COOPER, EUNICE, and JAHODA, MARIE. "The Evasion of Propaganda: How Prejudiced People Respond to Anti-Prejudice Propaganda." Journal of Psychology 23: 15-25; January 1947.
20. DAVIDOFF, MELVIN D. A Study of Empathy and Correlates of Prejudice Toward a Minority Group. Lafayette, Indiana: Division of Educational Reference, Purdue University, 1949. 61 p.
21. DAVIS, ALLISON. "American Status Systems and the Socialization of the Child." Personality in Nature, Society and Culture. (Kluckhohn, Clyde, and Murray, Henry A., editors.) New York: Alfred A Knopf, 1948. p. 459-68.
22. DEUTSCH, MORTON, and COLLINS, MARY EVANS. Study of Intergroup Relations in Unsegregated and Segregated Interracial Housing Projects. New York: Center for Human Relations Studies, New York University, 1949. 4 p.
23. EYSENCK, H. J. "Primary Social Attitudes: The Organization and Measurement of Social Attitudes." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 1: 49-84; September 1947.
24. EYSENCK, H. J., and CROWN, S. "An Experimental Study in Opinion and Attitude Methodology." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 3: 47-86; Spring 1949.
25. FINLEY, MABEL S. "Book Approach: Experiment in Intergroup Education." English Journal 38: 384-88; September 1949.
26. FLOWERMAN, SAMUEL H. "Mass Propaganda in the War Against Bigotry." Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 42: 429-39; October 1947.
27. FLOWERMAN, SAMUEL H. "The Use of Propaganda to Reduce Prejudice: a Refutation." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 3: 99-108; Spring 1949.
28. FRANC, LILLIAN. "Intergroup Education Through Literature in the Fourth Grade." Elementary English 27: 226-39; April 1950.
29. GOLDSEN, JOSEPH M. "Analyzing the Contents of Mass Communication: A Step Toward Intergroup Harmony." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 1: 81-92; December 1947.
30. GOLDSTEIN, NAOMI FRIEDMAN. The Roots of Prejudice Against the Negro in the United States. Portland, Maine: Boston University Press, 1948. 213 p.
31. HALL, EDWARD T., JR. "The Freudian Error as an Aid in Determining Attitudes." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 3: 113-22; Spring 1949.
32. HARRIS, RAYMOND P. "Improving Intergroup Relations Through Teacher Training." Education 68: 142-47; November 1947.
33. HARTLEY, EUGENE L.; ROSENBAUM, MAX; and SCHWARTZ, SHEPARD. "Children's Use of Ethnic Frames of Reference: an Exploratory Study of Children's Conceptualizations of Multiple Ethnic Group Membership." Journal of Psychology 26: 367-86; October 1948.
34. HATT, PAUL K. "Class and Ethnic Attitudes." American Sociological Review 13: 36-43; February 1948.
35. HELSON, HARRY. "Adaptation-Level as a Frame of Reference for Prediction of Psycho-Physical Data." American Journal of Psychology 60: 1-29; January 1947.
36. HORKHEIMER, MAX. "Authoritarianism and the Family Today." The Family: Its Function and Destiny. (Anshen, Ruth N., editor.) New York: Harper and Brothers, 1949. Chapter 18, p. 359-74.
37. HUTCHINSEN, BERTRAM. "Some Problems of Measuring the Intensiveness of Opinion and Attitudes." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 3: 123-31; Spring 1949.
38. JENNINGS, HELEN HALL, and OTHERS. Sociometry in Group Relations. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1948. 85 p.
39. KATONA, ARTHUR. "Social Art: Community Approach." Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 65-77; October 1947.
40. KATONA, ARTHUR. "Social Drama in Education." Educational Forum 13: 462-67; May 1949.

41. KILPATRICK, WILLIAM H. Modern Education and Better Human Relations. New York: Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 1949. 31 p.
42. KILPATRICK, WILLIAM H., and VAN TIL, WILLIAM, editors. Intercultural Attitudes in the Making. Ninth Yearbook, John Dewey Society. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1949. 246 p. HYMES, JAMES L., JR. "Parents." p. 17-47.
43. KOMAROVSKY, MIRRA, and SARGENT, S. STANSFELD. "Research into Subcultural Influences upon Personality." Culture and Personality. (Sargent, S. Stansfeld, and Smith, Marian W., editors.) New York: Viking Press, 1949. 219 p.
44. KONOPKA, GISELA. "Group Therapy in Overcoming Racial and Cultural Tensions." American Journal of Orthopsychiatry 17: 693-99; October 1947.
45. KRAMER, BERNARD M. "Dimensions of Prejudice." Journal of Psychology 27: 389-451; April 1949.
46. KRETCH, DAVID, and CRUTCHFIELD, RICHARD S. Theory and Problems of Social Psychology. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1948. 621 p.
47. KRUGMAN, HERBERT E. "The Role of Resistance in Propaganda." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 3: 235-50; Summer 1949.
48. LAZARSFELD, PAUL F. "Some Remarks on the Role of Mass Media in So-Called Tolerance Propaganda." Journal of Social Issues 3: 17-25; No. 3, 1947.
49. LEWIN, KURT. "Frontiers in Group Dynamics: Channels of Group Life; Social Planning and Action Research." Human Relations 1: 143-53; No. 2, 1947.
50. LEWIN, KURT. Resolving Social Conflicts. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1948. 230 p.
51. LIPPITT, RONALD. Training in Community Relations: A Research Exploration Toward New Group Skills. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1949. 283 p.
52. LOUD, OLIVER S. "Intergroup Relations and Their Curricular Implications." Phylon 10: 114-25; Second Quarter 1949.
53. LOWENTHAL, LEO, and GUTERMAN, NORBERT. Prophets of Deceit. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1950. 147 p.
54. MACIVER, ROBERT M. The More Perfect Union. New York: The Macmillan Company, 1948. 302 p. STONE, L. JOSEPH. "Memorandum on Types of Prejudice." Appendix 4, p. 285-87. BIERSTEDT, ROBERT. "Information and Attitudes." Appendix 5, p. 288-302.
55. MACKENZIE, BARBARA K. "The Importance of Contact in Determining Attitudes Toward Negroes." Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 43: 417-41; October 1948.
56. MACKENZIE, CATHERINE. "Prejudice Can Be Unlearned." New York Times Magazine. July 25, 1948. p. 9.
57. MASSING, PAUL. Rehearsal for Destruction. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1950. 330 p.
58. MILLER, NEAL E., and BUGELSKI, RICHARD. "Minor Studies of Aggression: II. The Influence of Frustration Imposed by the In-Group on Attitudes Expressed Toward Out-Groups." Journal of Psychology 25: 437-42; April 1948.
59. MONTAGU, M. F. ASHLEY. "The Improvement of Human Relations Through Education." School and Society 65: 465-69; June 28, 1947.
60. MORLAN, GEORGE K. "A Note on the Frustration-Aggression Theories of Dollard and His Associates." Psychological Review 56: 1-8; January 1949.
61. MORSE, NANCY C., and ALLPORT, FLOYD H. "Anti-Semitism—A Study of Its Causal Factors and Other Associated Variables." The American Psychologist 4: 261; July 1949.
62. NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION AND RESEARCH CENTER FOR GROUP DYNAMICS, MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY. Group Growth and Educational Dynamics. Bulletin No. 2. Washington, D. C.: National Education Association, 1948. 68 p.
63. OJEMANN, RALPH H. "Integrated Plan for Education in Human Relations." Growing Points in Educational Research. Official Report of 1949 meeting. Washington, D. C.: American Educational Research Association, a department of the National Education Association, 1949. p. 213-18.
64. PHELPS, SETH P. "A Community Looks At a High-School Work Camp." School Review 51: 202-209; April 1948.
65. PHELPS, SETH P. "Students' Opinions of Work Camps." School Review 55: 214-21; April 1947.

66. RADKE, MARIAN; TRAGER, HELEN G.; and DAVIS, HADASSAH. "Social Perceptions and Attitudes of Children." Genetic Psychology Monographs 40: 327-447; November 1949.
67. RATHS, LOUIS E. "Evaluation in Programs of Intercultural Education." Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 25-30; September 1947.
68. RATHS, LOUIS E., and TRAGER, FRANK N. "Public Opinion and 'Crossfire.'" Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 345-68; February 1948.
69. REICHARD, SUZANNE, "Rorschach Study of Prejudiced Personality." American Journal of Orthopsychiatry 18: 280-86; April 1948.
70. ROKEACH, MILTON. "Generalized Mental Rigidity as a Factor in Ethnocentrism." Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 43: 259-78; July 1948.
71. ROLLINS, CHARLEMAE. We Build Together. Revised edition. Chicago: National Council of Teachers of English, 1948. 71 p.
72. ROSE, ARNOLD M. "Anti-Semitism's Root in City-Hatred." Commentary 6: 374-78; October 1948.
73. ROSE, ARNOLD M. Studies in the Reduction of Prejudice. Chicago: American Council on Race Relations, 1948. 112 p.
74. ROSE, ARNOLD M. "The Use of Propaganda to Reduce Prejudice." International Journal of Opinion and Attitude Research 2: 221-29; Summer 1948.
75. RUSSELL, DAVID H., and ROBERTSON, ISABELLA W. "Influencing Attitudes Toward Minority Groups in a Junior High School." School Review 55: 205-13; April 1947.
76. SELLTIZ, CLAIRE, and WORMSER, MARGOT HAAS, editors. "Community Self Surveys: An Approach to Social Change." Journal of Social Issues 5: 1-65; Spring 1949.
77. SHAPIRO, LEO, editor. "Evaluations of Agencies and Programs in Intergroup Relations." Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 1-64; September 1947.
78. SHERIF, MUZAFER, and SARGENT, S. STANSFELD. "Ego-Involvement and the Mass Media." Journal of Social Issues 3: 8-16; No. 3, 1947
79. SIMON, CAROLINE K. "Causes and Cure of Discrimination." New York Times Magazine. May 29, 1949. p. 10, 34, 36.
80. SPARKLING, EDWARD J. Civil Rights: Barometer of Democracy. Freedom Pamphlet Series. New York: Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 1949. 48 p.
81. STOUFFER, SAMUEL A., and OTHERS. The American Soldier: Adjustment During Army Life. Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 1949. 599 p.
82. TABA, HILDA. "What Is Evaluation Up To and Up Against in Intergroup Education?" Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 19-24; September 1947.
83. TABA, HILDA. issue editor. "School Culture and Group Life." Journal of Educational Sociology 21: 497-552; May 1948.
84. TABA, HILDA, and OTHERS. Curriculum in Intergroup Relations: Case Studies in Instruction for Secondary Schools. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1949. 168 p.
85. TABA, HILDA, and OTHERS. Reading Ladders for Human Relations. Revised edition. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1949. 115 p.
86. TENENBAUM, SAMUEL. Why Men Hate. New York: Beechhurst Press, 1947. 368 p.
87. TOLMAN, EDWARD C. "The Psychology of Social Learning." Journal of Social Issues 5: 3-18; Supplement No. 3, December 1949.
88. TRAGER, HELEN G., and EVERITT, ROBERTA M. "Tools for Human Relations Education." Educational Leadership 7: 530-39; May 1950.
89. TRAGER, HELEN G., and RADKE, MARIAN. "Early Childhood Airs Its Views." Educational Leadership 5: 16-24; October 1947.
90. U. S. PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON CIVIL RIGHTS. To Secure These Rights. New York: Simon and Schuster, 1947. 173 p.
91. VAN TIL, WILLIAM. "Building Intercultural Attitudes Through the School." North Central Association Quarterly 23: 243-46; January 1949.
92. WATSON, GOODWIN. Action for Unity. New York: Harper and Brothers, 1947. 165 p.
93. WESTON, GRACE L., and OTHERS. Democratic Citizenship and the Development of Children. Detroit, Michigan: Citizenship Education Study, 1949. 43 p.
94. WHITTEMORE, IRVING C. "An Uncontrolled Experiment in Race Relations." Journal of Educational Sociology 22: 590-97; May 1949.
95. WILLIAMS, ROBIN M., JR. The Reduction of Intergroup Tensions: A Survey of Research on Problems of Ethnic, Racial and Religious Group Relations. Bulletin No. 57. New York: Social Science Research Council, 1947. 153 p.

96. WILSON, HOWARD E., and OTHERS. Intergroup Relations in Teaching Materials. Washington, D. C.: American Council on Education, 1949. 231 p.
97. WIRTH, LOUIS. "Research in Racial and Cultural Relations." Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society 92: 381-86; November 1948.
98. WITTENBERG, RUDOLPH M. "Grass Roots and City Blocks." Common Ground 7: 43-49; Summer 1947.
99. WOODRUFF, ASHEL D., and DIVESTA, FRANCIS J. "The Relationship Between Values, Concepts, and Attitudes." Educational and Psychological Measurement 8: 645-59; Winter 1948.

background

PUBLIC SERVICES DIVISION • DEPARTMENT OF STATE

International Orgs. Italy

ITALY-1954

The United States has a deep human interest in Italy. As leader of the free world, our Government has supported Italy's integration with Western Europe through membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the European economic, defense, and political communities. We have helped Italy toward economic recovery from the devastation of war, and we are helping to train and equip Italian defense forces. As a Nation that owes much to its own Italian population and heritage, the United States has an abiding concern for the political, economic, and social welfare of Italy.

BASIC PROBLEMS

Most of Italy's difficulties stem from overpopulation, plus three inherent deficiencies: shortage of capital, scarcity of good soil, and lack of basic raw materials. Exploited by extremists of right and left, Italy's chronic economic weakness, poverty, and unemployment have created problems that have taxed the powers of all Italian governments to the utmost.

Without substantial help from the West, postwar Italy would have had little chance of averting another dictatorship. Although the Fascists had been discredited, the Communists were accepted as a legal party, in part because of their vigorous opposition to the Fascist regime.

Leaders of the center parties have been aware of the threat of communism and have taken measures to circumvent it. In 1948 they succeeded in thwarting a Communist attempt to gain political control of the country. However, the Communist vote remains substantial, and, although the center parties have continued in power, their control is less firm since the 1953 elections.

In its efforts to speed economic recovery, the Italian Government has had both financial and technical assistance from the United States. Progress is being made, but Italy continues to need encouragement and certain types of assistance from the United States and other friendly nations. At this time, early 1954, its most urgent needs from the Western countries are long-term capital investments, lowering of trade barriers, and relaxing of immigration policies. Such assistance is needed to help the Italian Government hold unemployment at a manageable level and speed the raising of the standard of living.

POLITICAL HISTORY

Italy's economic problems are not of recent development. For generations they have plagued the Government and condemned large numbers of Italians to submarginal living conditions. To a large extent economic distresses and crises have determined the course of Italy's political history.

12-27-55 Intermarriage

Does the Southern Policy Achieve the Southern Goal?

(From the Christian Advocate of Nashville, Tennessee, official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, December 16, 1938, pages 11-12, by Rolfe Lanier Hunt, Louise, Mississippi.)

"Is there less mixture of races in the South, where separate school systems are provided and where law forbids intermarriage, or in the North, where children go to the same schools, and laws permit intermarriage, in proportion to the total populations?"

The answer is, so far as can be learned from census figures, "no." The northern states...have fewer children born of mixed parents in proportion to the populations than do southern states....

In spite of a considerable migration of mulattoes from the South, the increase of mulattoes in the South from 1850 to 1920 was 317.5 per cent; the increase in the North, 245.5 per cent for the seventy-year period. In the North and West the increase of mulattoes was less than in the South, and the increase of blacks in the North greater than in the South. In the South the mulattoes increased 426.1 per cent from 1850 to 1930, while the black element increased only 131.6 per cent. In the period from 1890 to 1910 the increase of the black element in the South was 20.1 per cent, while the mulatto increase was 91.4 per cent. In the North during the same period the blacks increased 49.5 per cent, and the mulattoes 39.2 per cent.

The southern states have separate school systems designed to keep the races apart; they have laws forbidding intermarriage....they do not preserve racial integrity.

...A study of the social history of 5,512 Negro college graduates recently reported just two cases of intermarriage with any race.

(Duplicated for study by the Committee on Religion and Public Education, National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America, 63 Auburn Avenue, N.E., Atlanta 3, Georgia.)

RLH:ss
12/27/55

National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America
Department of Religion and Public Education
R. L. Hunt, Director
63 Auburn Avenue, Northeast, Atlanta 3, Georgia

January 16, 1956

TO PERSONS CONSIDERING PROBLEMS OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS:

In discussions on what should be done concerning public schools in states affected by recent Supreme Court decisions on the constitutional rights of American citizens for equal treatment in public schools, a statement was reported in the daily newspapers from a prominent state official that sending children of different races to the same public school would inevitably result in increased mixture of the races.

That statement is not supported by facts known to me. Being at Columbia, South Carolina on the day the report appeared in the daily newspapers, I wrote a letter to the editor of the South Carolina Methodist Advocate which you will find on page 10 of the January 12 issue. Returning to the office, I was able to locate a copy of the article to which reference was made, and from it I enclose also certain extracts.

The facts are scanty, they are difficult of interpretation, and I do not regard them as wholly reliable, but so far as is known to me, the facts show that mixture of the races is the product of something besides going to school together. I confess my surprise that the facts so indicate. I expected them to be otherwise. No fact known to me justifies any statement that increased educational opportunities for Negroes will result in racial intermarriage. Intermarriage seems to be the result of community factors little related to whether or not children attend the same public school.

The burden of proof is upon any person who says that attendance at the same public schools automatically results in greater mixture of the races. For what they may be worth in current discussions, I share such facts as are known to me with a limited number of church and public school leaders in states most affected by the Supreme Court decision. Any facts known to you which may throw further light on this problem will be gratefully received by the undersigned.

Sincerely yours,

R. L. Hunt

R. L. Hunt

RLH:[illegible]
Enclosures: 2

LEFT
CENTER
RIGHT
WHERE ARE YOU HEADING?

Only Democracy and One World

The Communists and Fellow-Travelers

Here on the Left are the people who use democratic slogans as a cloak for their blind support of every twist and turn in Soviet foreign policy.

Because Communist policies shift with Soviet national interests, you never know where you stand. Declining British imperialism is attacked; expanding Soviet imperialism is applauded. Post-war conscription is fascism in America, though democratic in Russia.

Today's friends are yesterday's enemies, and vice versa. Roosevelt was a "Fascist" until 1936, an object of adoration until September, 1939, an "imperialist" and "war monger" until June 21, 1941, and the greatest man in America after Russia was invaded.

The Communists and fellow-travelers set up innocent sounding organizations as traps for minority groups, and bore from within established democratic political and labor organizations. They seek a shield of respectability by associating themselves with unsuspecting liberals. They have their spokesmen on the air, the public platform, in the newspapers. They are tireless, resourceful and crafty. When you corner them and call them by their right name, you are called a "red baiter" and "Fascist."

This road leads to chaos and despotism.

ALONG this broad Center road, between the minorities on the Communist Left and Fascist Right, travel the overwhelming majority of the American people.

They know that freedom cannot exist in a totalitarian state, whether it be ruled by one man or by lawless groups who contemptuously ignore the unalienable rights of others.

They are the inheritors of the liberal American tradition, spurning the path of reaction to advance the cause of "progress under law." They are prepared to defend their faith; at the same time they are ready to assume leadership in an effort to bring genuine disarmament to the world.

As they survey their buildings untouched by bombs, their farmlands unspoiled by devastating war, they are conscious of an obligation to share their abundance with people in other lands who are living amid the ruins of war and are dying of hunger. They know that those who have no food and no hope are ripe for dictators, ready to embark on mad adventures which will engulf us all. To encourage and inspire democracy in other lands, to build a secure and peaceful One World, America should put justice above expediency and generosity above self-indulgence.

They know that in order to have a more

(continued on back page)

Offer Freedom

The Fascists and Their Dupes

Here on the Right is another form of totalitarianism. In its tactical approach this group has much in common with the American Communists.

They, too, use American slogans; they organize apparently innocent "religious" and "patriotic" fronts and seek to associate with their cause the names of well known Americans.

When Hitler threatened to conquer the world they were complacent and undisturbed. They became transmission belts for Nazi agents and mouthpieces for Goebbels' propaganda. They once organized America First. Today they operate on different levels: (1) "Nationalists," who call themselves American Action; (2) "White supremacy" folk, who support the Rankins and Bilbos; (3) Anti-Catholics, anti-Protestants, and anti-Semites, who stir up hate to divide and conquer.

They seek to influence mass circulation newspapers, their voices are on the air, they publish vile pamphlets. Using the appeal to patriotism as a cloak, they cater to those who claim national superiority; they foster antagonism against minorities; they develop tensions among national groups and between capital and labor. When you corner them and call them by their right name you are called a "Communist." This road leads to Fascism and slavery.

Only One of these three roads offers freedom!
CENTER
LEFT

perfect democracy at home, we need the same high order of statesmanship in economic affairs as in world affairs. . . . They insist that our law enforcement agencies be overhauled to abolish lynchings; poll taxes must be repealed; all men must have equality of opportunity. In the hearts and minds of these people there is no room for prejudice against human beings because of differences in race, religion or national origin.

At all times, the fanatical totalitarians must be resisted by a firmly organized and vigilant Center, devoted to the ideal of freedom. This road leads to national unity and durable peace.

From a statement by FREEDOM HOUSE
reprinted by
Community Relations Service
386 Fourth Avenue
New York 16, N. Y.

181 PRINTED IN U.S.A.

DO YOU WANT TO BE HAPPY AND FREE?

BY

WILLARD JOHNSON

PEOPLE

LIKE BIRDS

OF A FEATHER

FLOCK TOGETHER

WE FLOCK TOGETHER

IN FAMILIES
IN CITIES
IN NATIONS
IN CHURCHES
IN CLUBS
IN RACES

SOME OF THESE WE CHOOSE
WE ARE BORN INTO OTHERS.
But EITHER WAY
WE STICK BY OUR GROUPS.

THAT'S NORMAL AND GOOD!

IN THE OLD DAYS,
WE COULD LIVE IN OUR OWN GROUPS
PRETTY MUCH TO OURSELVES.

MOST OF US LIVED IN SMALL TOWNS OR ON FARMS.

WE DIDN'T TRAVEL MUCH
WE DIDN'T MEET PEOPLE OF OTHER RACES
OTHER RELIGIONS
OTHER NATIONS
VERY OFTEN.

ALL THAT IS CHANGED NOW!

JET PLANES TRAVEL FASTER THAN SOUND

INSTANTANEOUS RADIO COMES RIGHT INTO OUR HOMES.

WE TRAVEL EVERYWHERE IN AUTOMOBILES.

WE RUB ELBOWS ALL THE TIME
WITH PEOPLE OF ALL KINDS.

WE WORK WITH MANY PEOPLE.

EVERYBODY IS OUR NEIGHBOR!

AS A RESULT —

LOTS OF US ARE UNHAPPY.

WE GREW UP AND WERE EDUCATED IN A WORLD OF SET-APART GROUPS.

WE ARE NOT PREPARED FOR THE KIND OF WORLD WE REALLY LIVE IN.

SO WHEN WE MEET PEOPLE OF DIFFERENT RACES, CREEDS, NATIONS,

WE ARE IRRITATED

UPSET

IT EVEN DRIVES SOME PEOPLE CRAZY

BUT WE WANT TO BE HAPPY.

Therefore:

THERE'S ONLY ONE THING TO DO.

DEAL WITH PEOPLE, AS WE WANT TO BE TREATED, – AS INDIVIDUALS REGARDLESS OF THEIR GROUP LABELS.

WE MAY NOT LIKE
EVERYONE WE MEET.

BUT, IF WE REALLY FIND OUT ABOUT PEOPLE,

WE'LL FIND THAT THERE ARE JUST AS MANY NICE PEOPLE AND JUST AS MANY IRRITATING
ONES
IN ALL GROUPS.

IF WE LIVE WITH PEOPLE ON TERMS OF RESPECT
WE'LL BE A LOT HAPPIER!

WE ALSO WANT TO BE FREE
.
WE HAVE FOUGHT
A COSTLY WAR
FOR FREEDOM.

NOW WE WANT TO DO
THE THINGS WHICH WILL KEEP THAT FREEDOM
WITHOUT MORE WAR!

WE KNOW THAT ONE WAY TO LOSE FREEDOM
IS TO LET WOULD-BE-DICTATORS
SET RELIGIOUS GROUPS AGAINST
EACH OTHER AS THE NAZIS DID AND SEIZE POWER.

THEREBY GETTING FREEDOM
FOR THEMSELVES ONLY,— AND MAKING SLAVES OF EVERYBODY ELSE.

FURTHERMORE —

A FREE SOCIETY LIKE AMERICA WILL BREAK UP

Unless ALL THE PEOPLE WORK TOGETHER LIKE A TEAM.

IF THEY SPLIT UP INTO SUSPICIOUS AND INTOLERANT GROUPS, THEY CANNOT SOLVE GREAT PROBLEMS, SUCH AS UNEMPLOYMENT, AND POVERTY AND BAD GOVERNMENT.

ONLY PEOPLE WHO RESPECT
ONE ANOTHER
CAN MAKE A TEAM.

*

A DEMOCRACY MUST STICK TOGETHER
OR IT WILL FALL APART.!

So IF WE WANT TO BE HAPPY-
IF WE WANT TO BE FREE-
WE MUST RESPECT AND WORK WITH PEOPLE IN ALL GROUPS

THAT MEANS WE CANNOT TALK
OR ACT AGAINST JEWS, AGAINST CATHOLICS, AGAINST PROTESTANTS, AGAINST MEMBERS OF ANY RACE OR NATIONALITY.

WE MUST SEE THAT EVERYBODY GETS A SQUARE DEAL AND A FAIR BREAK TO GET FOR THEMSELVES WHAT WE WANT FOR OURSELVES.

IT'S FOR OUR OWN GOOD!

TAKE YOUR CHOICE —

MISERY AND SLAVERY OR

HAPPINESS AND FREEDOM

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

381 Fourth Avenue, New York City 16

Copyrighted 270

17-Intercultural Education

PRICE 25¢

DIVIDE AND CONQUER

by

ALLAN SLOANE AND BOB RUSSELL

•

with a foreword by

HOWARD FAST

GREEN PUBLISHING COMPANY

17 - Intercultural Educ

What the BUREAU for INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION is

...and what it can do for your school

1697 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

WITH the quick heightening of tensions among Americans of varied religions, races, and nationalities, and the aggravation of problems brought about by social and economic conditions, many of us realize sharply that America must develop further a truly democratic way of life.

So we formed a Bureau . . .

It was the recognition of intercultural understanding as one of America's most serious necessities that led a group of men and women who have worked for years in the field of education to come together to discover techniques that could be used in the schools. We've enlisted the help of scientists, researchers, and group workers. The Bureau for Intercultural Education has for its object the improvement of democratic human relations through the schools.

We work primarily through the schools

"Intercultural" means "between and among cultures." "Culture" itself implies the creation and teaching of attitudes and behaviors by human beings to each other through schools and other social institutions. "Education" implies primarily the public schools and all that is connected with them. Thus the word "intercultural" indicates both inter-personal and intergroup exchange of ideas, practices, and understandings.

Our first job: to develop "know how"

The fact that both scientific information and reliable, successful experience in intercultural education are limited defined our first task: to develop "know how." Laboratory experiment through the schools offered us the soundest and most direct approach.

Here is how we're doing it

The Bureau studies ways of improving human relations through working intensively with a few school systems. The work must be intensive if we are to be able to draw dependable conclusions from it. The knowledge and experience we gain eventually will benefit all school systems.

The Bureau serves as a central source for the best available learning materials. Original materials in the form of books, pamphlets, magazine articles are published when these represent fundamental experimentation and research; joint publications are produced and advice given to educational organizations and publishers; helpful bibliographies, articles, and pamphlets by many individuals and organizations are distributed; a library open to anyone working on intercultural education is maintained.

The Bureau carries on a program of training for professional leadership. It works closely with scientists whose fields of research have a bearing on intercultural education; their knowledge is made available through conferences at which the scientists present their findings and through the publication or reprinting of their materials.

The Bureau supplies special services and general consultation to workers in juvenile literature, radio, motion pictures and comics, to the social agencies who can best help the schools, and to adult education projects.

We learn as we work in school centers

Since our object is to develop "know how," the three school systems whose invitations to work with them we have accepted —Gary, Detroit, and five schools in Philadelphia—were selected because we felt they present sharply defined and urgent problems, the study of which would teach educators most for effective intercultural programs. We have extended our work to a few other school systems on a less all-inclusive basis. The selection of these centers was again made because of what could be learned from them.

We develop learning materials

Learning materials are important to any program developed through the schools. Our work includes the preparation of materials for teacher education, books and plays for high school students, work in progress reports on current research, the encouragement of worthy materials by whomever produced, the distribution of the best available printed materials, and the dissemination of audio-visual aids.

We help with leadership training

Since no amount of valuable study can become effective in our schools and communities without competent leaders, another emphasis in our work is leadership training at the professional level. Our work is through university workshops, through school conferences between and within school systems, through meetings with advisory groups such as our Committees on Teacher Education and on Learning Materials, and through inter-staff conferences with organizations working toward democratic human relations.

Right now we must concentrate

All Bureau services to their fullest capacity are focused upon this program of intensive learning. The first necessity in a successful national program is the gathering of just the data and insights we are gathering now through our intensive work. Our conviction is that sound work on selected problem areas will achieve more in the long run than superficial attention to many demands. This is why we concentrate, for instance, on a few school centers.

This is what you can get from us now

Here are some of the present services now available to educators and community workers which we have developed:

Publications on Intercultural Education, our 1946 catalog, lists 100 books, pamphlets, articles, and bibliographies which the Bureau distributes at a minimal cost. These titles include the Bureau's series of books published by Harpers, the Work in Progress Series of laboratory reports on the Bureau's work, joint publications with such groups as the National Education Association and the American Education Fellowship, materials for teachers and students reprinted by the Bureau. In short, the best by specialists in intercultural education is published or distributed by the Bureau for use in American schools.

Intercultural Education News, a quarterly, includes articles on topics of broad intercultural concern and is available without cost to anyone who requests it.

General consultations are held by mail, telephone, and in person at the national office. We receive hundreds of questions or requests every month.

Consultation in the field. A day's professional consultation service (group meetings, discussions, advisory and survey service, and a maximum of two talks) away from the office on specific school needs can sometimes be supplied for a fee of $50.00 plus expenses.

Speakers can be supplied when we have them available. For instance, at present our staff anthropologist is largely engaged in speaking to selected groups. Speakers are supplied without charge to educators in the school centers in which our intensive action-learning is taking place, and also for a few national, regional, and state educational meetings, and to certain conferences of professional staff members of agencies in the field. To everyone else, there is a fee of $100.00 a day for large meetings such as national community organizations and $50.00 a day for smaller meetings, plus expenses in both cases.

Seminars and conferences. Workers in the field are invited to attend the Bureau Seminars and conferences with scientists and leaders in the area of human relations.

Advisory services. We co-operate with people who prepare material for public media—editors, comic strip artists, radio writers, film writers, etc.

Work with the schools. Our intensive work in schools, and our work of intermediate concentration, is done by invitation of the school system. In all cases, the initiative of inviting the Bureau comes from the school system, and the control rests with the school system throughout the period of the Bureau's work. The Bureau's contribution lies in stimulus, in technical guidance, in supplying of materials, and in evaluation of methods, practices, and aims.

Laboratory centers. The school systems in which we are working are hosts to accredited visitors who wish to inspect the work being done. Permission to visit the school centers may be arranged through the Bureau.

Professional training. Any school, school system, college, or university may apply to the Bureau for professional training of its staff. The Bureau acts as educational consultant in workshops and conferences and is prepared to offer help and direction to selected institutions in both pre-service and in-service training.

Our door at the Bureau is open at all times to ideas and requests from all those who wish to build democratic human relations in our land.

THE STAFF

H. H. Giles Executive Director
Ethel J. Alpenfels Specialist in Anthropology
Mildred Biddick Special Consultant
Theodore Brameld Special Consultant
Whit Brogan Director of Field Service
Lester Dix Specialist in Professional Education
Rhea Eckel Special Consultant
Eleanor Fish Editor
Alice V. Keliher Special Consultant
Ruth Kotinsky Specialist in Materials and Research
Howard A. Lane Special Consultant
E. T. McSwain Special Consultant
Thomas Needham Executive Associate
Victor E. Pitkin Director of Analysis and Research
Louis A. Raths Special Consultant
Ira De A. Reid Special Consultant
Beth Rogers Editorial Assistant
Charles A. Siepmann Special Consultant
Miriam Steep Director of Public Relations
James H. Tipton School Consultant
Helen G. Trager Director of Age Level Studies
William Van Til Director of Learning Materials

WORK IN PROGRESS SERIES

Agencies in the Field of Intercultural Education

by

H. H. GILES

Director, Bureau for Intercultural Education

Bureau for Intercultural Education

1697 Broadway • New York 19, N. Y.

WORK IN PROGRESS

A series of reports of projects being carried on in intercultural education

AGENCIES IN THE FIELD OF INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
H. H. GILES

THE WORK OF THE BUREAU FOR INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION
WILLIAM VAN TIL

SCHOOLS ARE ORGANIZING TO IMPROVE HUMAN RELATIONS
MILDRED BIDDICK

THE MONTCLAIR CONFERENCE ON WORKSHOP PLANNING
LESTER DIX (in preparation)

AGENCIES IN THE FIELD OF INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

America not only thinks of group conflict as a No. 1 problem, but has learned that thinking and caring is not enough—you have to organize! Thus there are so many organizations in the general field of inter-group relations that it would require a very long time and some very wise persons to become properly acquainted and to investigate properly the work of each.

Fortunately, at least two such persons have been at work during the past year—Dr. Charles Johnson, of Fisk University, and Mrs Elizabeth Allen, of the Rosenwald Fund. With their aid, with replies to 165 letters of inquiry from the writer, and with the help of Dr. Paul Diederich, of the University of Chicago, the following interim report for the use of educators is made. Over 850 organizations have been investigated in Dr. Johnson's study. About 350 of these will be represented in a handbook soon to be published by the American Council on Race Relations. Data on each will include statements of purposes, recent activities, publications, and leadership. Organizations excluded were left out either because they are now inactive, or because their interest in race relations was incidental or subordinate to some other purpose.

The present paper, drawing heavily from the material which Dr Johnson and Mrs. Allen so helpfully made available, is nevertheless a personal interpretation, and the writer alone is responsible for any erroneous conclusions.

There Are Unanswered Questions

First, let me say that the whole question of how to get far-reaching social changes seems to be involved in the attack on injustice and discrimination which these agencies represent. For example, there is the way of pressure groups and politics, the way of revolution, the way of law, the way of education. None of the groups involved in the present study are inciting to revolution. Some of them are doing their best to hasten changes which are sorely needed, with an emphasis on hasten. Some of them are concerned chiefly with meeting the emergencies which arise in the form of riots and other acts of violence which are now of almost daily occurrence.

The organizations which are most concerned with immediate action do not argue that long-time education is unimportant. They simply say that when the patient, the body politic, has a raging fever it is important to treat symptoms, as well as to search for causes and eliminate them. Granted that it is important not only to treat symptoms but also to root out causes of social sickness, there still remain important differences in the way various organizations go at both parts of this task. These differences may be summed up in a series of questions, as follows:

1. Should the Federal government impose and enforce certain regulations, particularly with regard to conditions of employment, the right to vote, regulation of housing, health and recreation? Or should legal regulation and enforcement be the business of the states, or of city governments? To what extent, also, should legal and police measures be preceded and accompanied by a program of public education? Is it sufficient for such a program to consist of public announcements, or must there be wide and continuous discussion and other more personal forms of interchange?

2. What is the relation of local conditions to the particular form of activity undertaken by either public or private agencies? Is it possible to make a blueprint for solving problems in human relations? Can a plan for legal action or public school education, for housing or recreation be carried over entire from a central planning agency or even from one locality to another? If it cannot, what are the essentials of technique in local planning and action which can be studied and used quite generally after they have been tried and tested in one or more places?

Further, what is the relation of economic and cultural sectionalism to effective attack on the problems of human relations? What are the functions of "top-down" and "grass-roots up" approaches to these problems?

3. Insofar as undemocratic practices are due to bad attitudes, rather than to external economic and institutional practices, what are the effective measures for producing fundamental changes in attitude? More specifically, since many agencies now maintain extensive programs of publication and public lectures, what are the uses and limitations of information—presenting facts? Similarly, what are the effects of an emphasis on things to be feared, or of preachments of brotherhood?

4. Finally, what are the values in the work of private agencies which could be duplicated if they were public and tax-supported institutions? And, since both exist, what forms of co-operation would make the efforts of public and private agencies of more immediate and more far-reaching good effect?

There Must Be Answers

Answers must be found to all of these questions, if agencies in the field of intercultural relations are to be effective as professional social engineers. I do not know anyone who can give the answers now. I believe that there is now, and will be for some years, a heightening, rather than a lessening of the tensions which have aroused our nation to the greatest upsurge of interest in race relations since the Civil War. I believe that many forms of effort are needed, terribly needed, but that equally, there is needed the closest kind of study, continuously, of the results of all forms of effort to the end of clarifying purpose and making our methods for achieving it truly effective. We are facing the fact—it is part of the American Dilemma—that ideals and good intentions require "know-how." We have in each of our organizations a great obligation to record and report our laboratory results to each other.

Reflecting Today's Needs

Particular point is given to this last statement by the fact that of 175 local committees now listed, fully two-thirds were organized either in 1943 or 1944. Of the 35 state and regional committees, about half were organized in the past three or four years. Even of the national organizations, which tend to be more stable and permanent, about one-fifth were organized in the very recent past, and at least another fifty set up their committees on discrimination since our entry into the war. There is need for the newer organizations to learn from the older ones, and for all to relate their efforts so that they may hit as hard as possible and in the right places.

Nature of Groups Now Organized

It may be of interest, here to classify generally a representative number of organizations now listed in the survey which Dr. Johnson is conducting. 120 are national in scope and membership, 35 are state and regional, and about 175 are local. Of the national organizations, seven are independent bodies, like the American Council on Race Relations,. dealing exclusively with the problem of intercultural relations. By "independent bodies" I mean only that they are not organized or controlled by any church, political, educational, or labor group. Twenty-six are social action groups, like the American Civil Liberties Union, designed to protect civil liberties, to influence legislation, or to achieve other social purposes. All groups of this sort which have been listed have made the abolition of discrimination a prominent part of their program. Fifteen are labor groups, representing a vast number of local union committees which are working on this problem in all parts of the country. Thirty-one organizations, such as the National Conference of Christians and Jews, are connected with religious groups, and thirteen with educational organizations or services. Seven are youth organizations which have done outstanding work in this field, and probably more will be added. Five are philanthropic foundations. Five deal with the problems of immigrants and refugees. Seven are concerned with our relations with the Far East, or with the problems of citizens of Oriental ancestry, and six with American Indians and Spanish Americans. The report of government agencies shows that they carry on important work in this field, especially on problems connected with the war.

Geographical Spread

The thirty-five state and regional organizations now listed have headquarters in twenty-three different states. Their geographical distribution is not significant, except that the largest number are in the South.

Of the 175 local committees now listed, 60 are in the North-East, extending down through Pennsylvania; 51 are in the South; 44 are in the Mid-West; and 20 in the Far West. These figures indicate very clearly that interest in the problem of discrimination is nationwide. No section of the country is without a substantial number of local committees which are at least city-wide in scope and membership. As I mentioned before, smaller groups working on this problem are too numerous to count.

Educational Organizations

Among all the organizations, I have a list of thirty which may be of special significance in the educational field. These organizations include:

American Civil Liberties Union, 170 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc., 1 East 54th St., N. Y. C.

American Council on Race Relations, 32 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

American Film Center, Committee on Mass Education in Race Relations, 630 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

American Friends Service Committee, 20 South 12th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The American Jewish Committee, 386 Fourth Ave, N. Y. C.

American Jewish Congress, Commission of Community Interrelations, 212 West 50th St., N. Y. C.

Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith, 212 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

Bureau for Intercultural Education, 119 West 57th St., N. Y. C.

Catholic Interracial Council, 20 Vesey St., N. Y. C.

Commission for the Defense of Democracy, N.E.A., 1201 16th St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Common Council for American Unity, 222 Fourth Ave., N. Y. C.

Council Against Intolerance in America, 17 East 42nd St., N. Y. C.

Council for Democracy, 11 West 42nd St., N. Y. C.

The East and West Association, 40 East 49th St., N. Y. C.

Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Dept. of Race Relations, 297 Fourth Ave., N. Y. C.

Girl Scouts of America, 155 East 44th St., N. Y. C.

Jewish Labor Committee, 175 East Broadway, N. Y. C.

The League for Fair Play, Inc., 11 West 42nd St., N. Y. C.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.

National CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, Washington, D. C.

National Conference of Christians and Jews, Inc., 381 Fourth Ave., N. Y. C.

National Maritime Union of America, 346 West 17th St., N. Y. C.

National Urban League, 1133 Broadway, N. Y. C.

Public Affairs Committee, Inc., 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N. Y. C.

Julius Rosenwald Fund, 4901 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Southern Regional Council, 63 Auburn Ave., N. E., Atlanta, Ga.

United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW-CIO), 1324 Maccabees Building, Detroit, Mich.

Young Women's Christian Association of the U. S. of A., National Board, 600 Lexington Ave., N. Y. C.

Youthbuilders, Inc., 120 East 16th St., N. Y. C.

Major Activities

A rough tabulation of their major activities, in order of frequency, from their own statements of them shows the following spread:

Pamphlets and Publications
Conferences
Research
City Centers
Popularizing of Research
Speakers
Labor Education
Government Politics
Consultations
School Centers
Courts
Employment
Advice
Photos and Movies
Radio
Press
Leadership Training
Parent Education
Self Discipline (Miscellaneous)
Library
Plays
Teachers' Courses and Workshops
Youth Councils
Housing
Work Camp
Test Materials
Co-operation of other Agencies
Family Service
Rallies
Teacher Materials
Opinion Polls
Advertisements
Army

State Committees

It may be of interest to note the 27 state committees (in 23 states) which have been formed:

Alabama Committee of the Commission on Interracial Co-operation
California: Pacific Coast Committee on American Principles and Fair Play
California: Peace Officers Committee on Civil Disturbances
California: The Southern California Council of Inter-American Affairs
Colorado Committee for Fair Play
Connecticut State Interracial Commission
Delaware Council on Interracial Co-operation
Florida Council of the Commission on Interracial Co-operation
Georgia Committee of the Commission on Interracial Co-operation
Illinois Interracial Commission
Indiana State Defense Council, Indiana Plan of Bi-Racial Co-operation
Kentucky: Governor's Commission on Needs of Negro Citizens
Kentucky Council on Interracial Co-operation
Louisiana Commission on Interracial Co-operation
Massachusetts Committee for Racial and Religious Understanding

Minnesota: Governor's Interracial Commission
Mississippi Council on Interracial Co-operation
New Jersey Good Will Commission
New Jersey Urban Colored Population Commission
New Mexico Association on Indian Affairs
New York Commission Against Discrimination
New York State War Committee on Discrimination in Employment
North Carolina Interracial Commission
Pennsylvania: Penn State Commission on Conditions of Urban Colored Population
South Carolina State Interracial Committee
Texas Commission on Interracial Co-operation
Virginia Commission on Interracial Co-operation

Federal Committees

Federal activities in intercultural relations include:

The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice
The Office of War Information
The War Manpower Commission
The Federal Security Agency, Unity War Services
War Department, Special Services Division
Department of Agriculture, Farm Security Administration
Department of Justice, Civil Rights Division
State Department, Division of Cultural Co-operation
Office of the Coodinator of Inter-American Affairs
Office of Strategic Services
Office of Education

Conclusion

The many things being done by individual schools, teachers, and administrators in greatly increasing numbers are not reported here. Light will be thrown on them by the study of school administrative practices conducted by Theodore Brameld, the forthcoming issues of Intercultural Education News, published by the Bureau for Intercultural Education, forthcoming books in the Problems of Race and Culture Series, sponsored by the Bureau and published by Harpers, forthcoming yearbooks of such groups as the Elementary Principals Association and the National Council for the Social Studies.

It is clear that agencies are on the march in the attack on the poor human relations that mar democracy. Their procedures should be studied carefully that the truly fruitful efforts be extended and pressed home.

A new and useful handbook for high school teachers—

DEMOCRACY DEMANDS IT

A Resource Unit for Intercultural Education in the High School

by William Van Til, John J. DeBoer, R. Will Burnett, Kathleen Coyle Ogden

Co-sponsors—National Council for the Social Studies, National Science Teachers Association, National Council of Teachers of English

This comprehensive new book provides a compact and productive source of material to aid the high school teacher in programs of intercultural education. Clearly and concisely, it discusses the various effective approaches to the problem of getting students to attain the richest possible understanding and practice of democracy.

- Shows you four different ways of starting a unit of work
- Tells you where and how to get various teaching aids including films, displays, and recordings
- Gives you detailed guidance and lists of resources for a variety of learning experiences
- Gives you a comprehensive list of literature for further study and helpful advice
- Describes class work units that develop good intercultural attitudes and build democratic human relations

The authors explain the purposes and importance of intercultural education and show you how to organize effective human relations units for both in and out-of-school activities. The units are readily adaptable to a subject-matter curriculum.

Democracy Demands It describes four specific tests, recommended by The Bureau for Intercultural Education, and designed to help reveal the student's deeper attitudes. It shows you how to diagnose and evaluate present attitudes of students and suggests 20 provocative questions you may ask to determine each student's basic concepts on democratic values. Here, also, are 16 suggested units accompanied by numerous topic questions to stimulate active participation by your students.

The authors offer expert advice on how to help your students learn to respect individual personalities regardless of race, creed, national origin, or socio-economic differences. They discuss in detail the various methods to be used by students in field work such as interviews, surveys, experiments, and social travel.

Democracy Demands It gives you a wealth of highly informative data. It describes the wide variety of educational aids available to you, including recordings, illustrations, and moving pictures, and tells you where and how to get them. Also included, for your own guidance, is a comprehensive list of recommended literature you can use for further study and helpful advice. This remarkable manual makes your job of teaching the democratic way of life more interesting, resultful, and easier. Order your copy TODAY!

(Volume VI — The Bureau for Intercultural Education Series)

TEN DAYS FREE EXAMINATION

HARPER & BROTHERS Established 1817
51 East 33rd St., New York 16, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Please send the following book(s) for free examination. At the end of ten days I will either remit the listed price, plus a few cents mailing charges, or return the book(s) without further obligation.

☐ RACE RELATIONS IN A DEMOCRACY (9320) $3.00
☐ Democracy Demands It (9321) Cloth Bound Edition $1.50
☐ Democracy Demands It (9322) Paper Bound Edition $1.00

☐ Charge ☐ Enclosed (Publisher pays mailing charges. Same return guarantee applies.)

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

(PLEASE PRINT) D

NOW — A Stimulating, Compact Analysis of Negro-White Relations in the United States . . .

RACE RELATIONS IN A DEMOCRACY

by INA CORINNE BROWN

Professor of Anthropology, Scarritt College, Nashville, Tennessee

THIS comprehensive, new book brings together all available data necessary for a complete and intelligent understanding of Negro-white relations in the United States and of how they came to be what they are.

Clearly and concisely, it defines the problem of racial inequality in our country and shows how it may be solved. The author reveals the basic causes of race prejudice and its harmful effect on our democratic way of life. Here, also, are specific plans of action to improve conditions between the two races in the United States.

▶ HOW DID RACE PREJUDICE START? — Dr. Brown discusses the essential points in the history of race prejudice; shows how it varies in different parts of the world; and traces the development of race and color antipathy in the United States from the 17th century through the Civil War to its present status. She explodes many popular concepts about racial characteristics, culture, and intelligence and disproves existing ideas of white-race superiority.

▶ THE NEGRO'S VIEWS—The author clearly tells you what the Negro is striving for and gives you his views on interracial marriages; social equality; civic privileges and responsibilities; educational, economic, and occupational opportunities. She lists the seven immediate goals of the Negro; tells how segregation affects the Negro in five major ways; and shows how discrimination offers only burden and expense to the community instead of progress.

▶ WHAT THE WHITE PERSON THINKS — Dr. Brown explains why white people are reluctant to go all the way in removing restrictions based on color. She discusses the racial views in different sections of the country; matches them against the Negro's aims; and shows why the white person's ideas are the result of baseless fears.

This provocative, new book (prepared under a grant from the Robert Marshall Civil Liberties Trust) specifically shows you how elimination of racial prejudice can bring increased progress to any community. It explains why the whites' fears are unfounded; reveals the Negro's aims to be not as extreme as most people believe; and proves that racial inequality weakens the foundation of democratic government and your own way of life.

205 pages
Indexed
5¼" x 8¼"
Only $3.00

CONTENTS

Race in a Global Context
Getting Some Names Straight
Other People Do Things Differently
The Development of Color Antipathy
Historical Factors in the American Problem: The Slavery Period
Historical Factors in the American Problem: The Negro in the Nation
The Negro in the United States Today
The Status of Race Relations
Looking Toward Democracy
Selected Bibliography • Index

RACE RELATIONS IN A DEMOCRACY (Volume V—The Bureau for Intercultural Education Series) is a stimulating book for every American to read, think about, and use as a guide to a better world in which to live.

Order your copy NOW!

"I would like to be affluent enough to purchase a vast number of copies to be placed in the hands of many Americans who today anxiously ask, 'What are the facts about race?' and 'What can I do?'"

—WALTER WHITE, Executive Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers Established 1817

How to combat the evils of racial and religious intolerance in our schools . . .

INTERCULTURAL ATTITUDES IN THE MAKING

Ninth Yearbook of the John Dewey Society

Parents, Youth Leaders and Teachers at Work

Edited by

William Heard Kilpatrick, Prof. Emeritus
Teachers College, Columbia University
and
William Van Til
Bureau For Intercultural Education

CONTRIBUTORS

C. O. Arndt
Prudence Bostwick
Bernice Bridges
Edward Haydon
Charles E. Hendry
Russell Hogrefe
James L. Hymes
Myrtle F. Sugarman
Helen Trager

6" x 9" 246 pages

only $3.00

All teachers and educators interested in preserving democracy will appreciate this timely book which points the way to overcoming the racial and religious prejudices of the youth of America. This is not a theoretical resume but rather a practical approach specifically written to meet the daily needs of all teachers encountering these evils in their classrooms.

Here is a book that will provide you with a clearer insight into the processes through which the attitudes of children and adolescents are actually shaped. It graphically illustrates how the youthful character is molded by experience, hearsay and reading.

This book recognizes the great influence of the family, group and school on the growing child. It stresses the fact that intelligent cooperation between teachers and parents is necessary to give children the proper understanding of themselves and their relationships with others.

Most of the material in INTERCULTURAL ATTITUDES IN THE MAKING has been taken from the working experience of teachers and social workers. The factual examples deal with age groups from grade school through high school. Outside-school interests, such as juvenile gangs and cliques, are also discussed. Here is evidence to show how healthy constructive attitudes have been developed in young people.

There is no one way to develop democracy in schools. Different problems must be met in different ways, but there is always some way to find the opening wedge to more tolerant viewpoints among adolescents. This book, which is the ninth yearbook of the John Dewey Society, explains how this has been accomplished in various communities of the United States and shows you how to discover for yourself the methods most suitable to your community and its young people.

HARPER & BROTHERS • Publishers Est. 1817

The Ninth Yearbook of the John Dewey Society . . .

INTERCULTURAL ATTITUDES IN THE MAKING discusses:

- How to handle maladjusted youths
- The importance of the parents' attitude during the child's infancy
- How the teacher can overcome her own prejudices toward certain children
- The characteristics of a skillful youth advisor
- How to help children gain confidence in themselves
- What role parents should play in the school life
- How to develop cooperation among a group of adolescents
- A comparison of intercultural education with the old teaching systems
- How to increase youthful participation in community and school life
- What to do about children who are not accepted by their classmates
- How to relate the curriculum to the personal and social needs of high school boys and girls
- How to direct youthful energy toward constructive behavior

"Teachers, administrators, and teacher educators will find this book of very great value indeed as a means of gaining understanding of intercultural problems and what can be done about them."

—HOLLIS L. CASWELL, Associate Dean, Teachers College, Columbia University

"The authors write out of a first-hand experience from working with young children, adolescents of school age and youth groups outside the school. The book should speedily establish itself as one of the most helpful discussions on intercultural education."

—DR. V. T. THAYER, Educational Director, Ethical Culture Schools

CONTENTS

Preface

1. Basic Principles in Intercultural Education
   WORKING WITH YOUNG CHILDREN
2. Parents
3. The Primary Teacher
   WORKING WITH YOUTH ADOLESCENTS
4. Adult-sponsored Youth Groups
5. The Junior High School Teacher
   WORKING WITH YOUTH
6. Gangs
7. The High School Teacher
8. The School as a Whole
9. In Conclusion

OTHER JOHN DEWEY SOCIETY YEARBOOKS

Eighth Yearbook

THE AMERICAN HIGH SCHOOL
Its Responsibility and Opportunity
Edited by H. L. CASWELL

$3.00

Seventh Yearbook

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND SPIRITUAL VALUES
Edited by JOHN S. BRUBACHER

$2.50

Bureau for Intercultural Education
157 West 13th Street,
New York 11, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Please send me ..... copies of

INTERCULTURAL ATTITUDES IN THE MAKING $3.00

☐ Check enclosed ☐ Please bill me

Name.....

Address.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

(PLEASE PRINT)

17- Intercultural Educ.

SOME GOOD PRACTICES IN INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

EVEN UNTO THE YOUNGEST: An Interpretation of Intercultural Education ..... Ruth Cunningham

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION: Best Practices in Church and Synagogue Schools ..... Mildred M. Eakin

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION: Best Practices in Secondary Schools ..... Clifford R. Bragdon

Reprinted from:
RELIGIOUS EDUCATION, Vol. XXXIX, Number 2, March-April, 1944

Bureau for Intercultural Education
119 West 57th Street
New York 19, New York

National Conference of Christians and Jews
381 Fourth Avenue
New York 16, New York

Price: 10 Cents. Cash with order.

Printed in the U.S.A.

EVEN UNTO THE YOUNGEST:

An Interpretation of Intercultural Education

RUTH CUNNINGHAM*

I DON'T like Marie. Her clothes is dirty!" This is the evaluation of a playmate by four-year-old Ann in a child care center. Here is a good start toward intercultural misunderstanding. It can easily grow to, "I don't like Tom. His skin is black." Or, "I don't Fritz. His father is a German." Or, "I don't like Sally. She goes to a different church."

We deplore little Ann's attitude toward her playmate. We may tell her she is naughty to talk that way. She is naughty? Hasn't it occurred to us that we taught her the attitudes she has?

Very young children have no prejudices. They favor those who give them comfort and affection and fear those who threaten their security — basic attitudes which may shape future prejudices; but prejudices such as those concerning race or social position are learned only as children are taught them. Some prejudices are well learned by some children by the time they enter elementary school. Many vicious attitudes are held by some children by the time they leave the elementary school. How does it happen? What can we do about it? How can we teach desirable attitudes?

The development of attitudes is so extremely complex and intricate that no brief discussion can hope to treat the matter adequately, but we can examine some of the more important ways in which we can help elementary school youngsters develop sane viewpoints.

Respect The Person In Personality

Let us stop and look at Ann's reactions. She says she doesn't like Marie because her "clothes is dirty." From as early a time as she can remember, she has been taught that it is "nice" to be clean and "not nice" to be dirty. It is quite possible that her mother said, "People don't like little girls who are dirty." Is it not to be expected then, that she decides that she, to be virtuous, must scorn Marie who is dirty? The logic is clear.

Does it follow that we avoid teaching Ann the virtues of cleanliness? Not at all. It is not that we have taught her too much but too little. We have failed to help her distinguish between people and their attributes and actions. In other words, our job is to help Ann learn that she can like Marie, as a person, even though she may not like her uncleanliness. We like kittens, but we don't like their scratching. And we like you, Ann, though we don't like your attitude toward Marie.

This may seem to be an abstraction difficult to teach children, but skillful teachers are demonstrating daily that it can be taught, even to the youngest child in nursery school. Children are able to grasp abstract ideas at a much earlier age than adults realize. Any four year old will tell you that he likes wagons but prefers red ones to blue ones. He clearly understands "redness", and does not confuse this concept with the wagon itself. In the same manner, the person of Marie may be distinguished from her uncleanliness, or naughtiness, or goodness.

Simple as this idea is, it is one frequently overlooked by those who would teach respect for personality to children. Unless we take this step first, our youngsters are thrown into confusion by the praise and blame with which we try to guide their behavior. When we do take this step, Ann may learn to say, "I like Marie, but her clothes is dirty" Someday, when she is a little older, Ann can make still more careful judgments and will be able to understand reasons why some youngsters have a harder time being clean than others. Still later, she may take action for improved housing, better sanitation facilities and adequate child care.

*Executive Secretary, Department of Supervision and Curriculum Development, National Education Association.

We Have Much in Common.

One of the mistakes made by many parents and teachers is to overplay the drama of certain types of differences. It is easy for us to make a child aware of the "quaint" qualities of the little Chinese children, or the "queer" customs of the little Dutch boys and girls. In trying to make material interesting to children, we have tended to make other peoples seem strange and inexplicable. In teaching children to know and respect other people, we need to help them discover how much like other people we are, and how similar they are to us. We need to start by helping youngsters realize how much we have in common with each other, how like are our wants and needs.

We Are Not All Alike.

Teaching our likeness to other people is not the whole story, however. Fortunately, we do have differences. If a child has first developed a feeling of oneness with others through realizing similarities, he may be led to look upon differences with understanding. However, in bringing differences to the attention of children, we frequently make the error of over-emphasizing certain differences. The differences we choose for attention are apt to be either those which are dramatic, as discussed above, or those about which we have the greatest fear that there may be misunderstanding. For example, in the former type we discuss the "funny" wooden shoes worn in Holland, and in the latter, we choose to discuss the coloring of the Negro. Such emphases give an unfortunate focus to particular types of differences.

One wise teacher with a first grade group introduced the matter of differences by playing a record by a famous Negro singer. After the music had stopped, she told the children that the beautiful song had been sung by a Negro, and asked, "Do you know what is meant by 'Negro'?" The children all knew that Negroes have dark skins. Then she went on to ask, "Who in this room has blue eyes?" The children named them. And "Who runs fast?" and "Who is tall?" and "Who has curly hair?" The children loved the game. Finally, when the teacher explained that we are all "different" in some way, and that some people with certain kinds of differences are called Negroes, there was no more stigma attached to the differences of Tommy, who is a Negro, than to those of Mike, who is a red-headed Irish youngster, or those of black-eyed Tony. Recognition had been given to the differences but in a setting which gave perspective to such differences.

With older children, when the matter of differences of race may be introduced as a problem, such racial differences may be given an appropriate setting by placing them with other types of problems due to differences, such as those growing out of the differences between rural and urban groups, people living on different sides of the tracks, people of different occupations, men and women, youth and adults, Democrats and Republicans. In such a setting, the focus may be directed immediately to ways of solving such problems, rather than to the unique nature of the differences themselves, for differences will be seen to be the usual rather than the unusual. It is true that some of the problems are more difficult to solve than others. The youngsters will recognize this, but they can be led to see that there is much in common in the methods to be employed in resolving difficulties due to differences.

Each Makes a Contribution

When children have learned to see differences in perspective, they can then be helped to understand how differences make contributions. They can learn why differences in cultures have arisen and can evaluate these differences as means of enriching the lives of all of us. Some teachers need a word of caution here, however. Assembly programs, pageants, and other programs designed to indicate the contributions of various groups may be undertaken too early in the program of intercultural education. They may merely give emphasis to the "queerness" of other people, as suggested earlier, unless there has first been adequate preparation for understanding and appreciating differences. Too often a teacher will rely on this type of program only to be frustrated and disappointed when she does not achieve the results for which she had hoped. Too many children have been humiliated by being "exhibited" in foreign costumes which their classmates ridiculed because they did not know how to accept what to them was out of the usual pattern of normal things. Too many children have learned to believe that everyone but themselves is "funny" because others sing songs with odd tunes and peculiar words, dance in a strange manner, and eat peculiar food. Thus we may be teaching undesirable attitudes in our attempt to build appreciation, unless we understand how children react, and recognize when they are ready for certain experiences and when they are as yet unprepared.

Attitudes Are Contagious

Probably no one factor is so important in the teaching of intercultural education as the attitude of the teacher herself. No teacher who lacks respect for the personality of the youngsters in her group can hope to teach respect. And this respect must hold all of its true, deep meaning—respect for the boys who fight and use naughty words, for the irritable and "fidgety", for those who find it hard to pay attention, for those who are slow to learn, for all as people of worth each in his own right.

There is a story about a county superintendent visiting a rural school which serves as a good illustration. As was his custom, the superintendent asked the teacher to call upon the best reader in the class to read a passage for him. He asked that the best in arithmetic recite the multiplication tables. He quizzed the best in history on the dates of the Revolutionary War. And so on, until he had exhausted his fund of questions, and until most of the children had undergone one ordeal or another.

But he noticed a big awkward boy in the back of the room who hadn't been called on, and he asked "Can't he do anything at all?" "Yes," the teacher replied, "Tom is our expert in ventilation." And with that the boy's face became alive. He went to the thermometer and checked it; then solemnly he reached up to physical heights impossible to anyone else in the room and carefully lowered the sash one half inch. This boy was fifteen years old. His reading was on the second-grade level. His mathematical concepts were limited to the simplest. But through him, every child in that room was being taught respect for individuals. Every child in that room was being taught the fundamentals of intercultural education through witnessing the respect paid by the teacher to one who in some classrooms would be scorned.

Perhaps this story, which may seem to some a far cry from intercultural education, may be used as a lesson in all that is best in such education. The teacher taught respect for the person in personality. She demonstrated that she valued Tom's integrity as an individual even though he could not meet the usual academic standards.

She was able to give to him and to the group a feeling of oneness. He contributed to the comfort and welfare of the group, of which he was a part. His responsibility to the group emphasized what he had in common with them. At the same time, his difference was recognized. He was not forced to humiliate himself in attempting to meet standards he could not attain. He and the other children realized that his "difference" was a limitation in some ways but an advantage in others. And his "difference" was utilized as a contribution to the group and recognized as such.

Above all, the teacher demonstrated her own attitude in her relationship with Tom and taught an object lesson more effective than many words.

In the story of Tom we may find the essence of intercultural understanding.

Actions Speak Louder Than Words

Youngsters, as well as adults, have a part to play in building our democracy. Even unto the youngest, we must understand each other if democracy is to grow in our land, and peace is to live in the world. Our elementary schools may contribute much to such understanding.

However, parents and teachers should understand clearly that children learn attitudes more through deeds than through words. One of our first responsibilities in the teaching of intercultural education is to examine our school practices and eliminate those which teach intolerance. There is probably no better way to teach lack of respect for personality than through the practice in many schools of branding certain children as "failures" because they have not attained certain arbitrary standards. Mental hygienists have attacked this practice from the point of view of what it does to the child who fails. Perhaps a more severe attack could be made from the point of view of what it does to the attitudes of successful children to see some of their classmates thus humiliated. The over-emphasis placed by some teachers on marks or grades may have the same effect, teaching a respect for a superficial standard at the cost of fundamental respect for personality which must be the basis of inter-personal and intercultural understanding.

Our Responsibility

Moreover, we should recognize that much of a child's experience is outside the school, and therefore much of his learning of attitudes is beyond the classroom. Although we as teachers may be able to help him develop sane viewpoints, we can never hope to be wholly successful as long as there are evidences of gross inequalities and prejudices in our society. A moldy cake cannot be made palatable by covering it with a pink sugar icing. We may be able to make some progress in our schools, but our children in their daily living will slice deeper and deeper into the whole cake as their experience is broadened. If we have brought them an unrealistic picture of society, children, as they meet reality, may not only be confused and bewildered, but, further, may reject as fable what little we have been able to teach them. In working with the children and in our own understanding we must face the unfortunate realities of certain aspects of our social and economic structures. This by no means implies a defeatist attitude, — quite the contrary. What it does imply is that we as teachers cannot feel that we discharge our duty to our children when we attempt to develop better attitudes in our classrooms. An even more important obligation is placed upon us to play our part as adults and citizens in moving boldly and courageously to remove the basic inequalities in our communities, in our nation, in our world. We shall fail miserably if we place our faith in the building of attitudes unless at the same time we take action to cure the causes of unfortunate attitudes. Only when we can link social action to our school programs for intercultural education can we hope to achieve our goal of a world of peace and justice in which, even unto the youngest, we respect men of good will of whatever creed, race or nation.

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

Best Practices in Church and Synagogue Schools

MILDRED MOODY EAKIN*

IN A PROTESTANT church in Orange, New Jersey, boys and girls of high-school age sat waiting for their church school session to begin. The room in which they sat was beautifully furnished. The expression on the faces of these privileged class young people was lackadaisical, bored.

The door opened. The leader entered. Accompanying her was a man, a good-looking Negro. Faces of the group came alive.

"Boys and girls," the leader said, "I have invited my friend Mr. Lett to tell us how a large group of our citizens live in rich America."

Quietly, with vividness, humor, objectively Mr. Lett described the Negro situation. "I don't believe it!" one student exclaimed. "Will you let me prove it?" Mr. Lett asked. A trip to Newark tenements was planned.

After this trip, which included a visit to a Negro housing project, a study was made of a recent survey report on Negro life in New Jersey. This in turn led to contacts with local social service agencies and a guided trip through Negro slums in Orange, in the valley below the homes of the church school group.

The boys and girls were now in the mood to do something. In the church on the hill they planned and led a story-game-supper hour for twenty colored children under twelve. Gradually some of the white children from the valley and some from the church joined the colored group. From this play hour a toy project began, used playthings being collected by the young leaders, repaired and painted by them and the children working together. The renovated toys would help equip a play room in the valley.

The party before Christmas — with colored and white children from the valley and white children from the hill playing together, singing together, enjoying the results of their handiwork together — was a heart-warming sight. Only one snobbish attitude or remark was observed. It came from an adult member of the church.

This, I think, illustrates better practice. The leader found a need in the life of the church school group. The group discovered a need in the community. Activities planned jointly by leader, students and children yielded results toward meeting both needs. Community resources were used. Two racial groups of children worked together at something they liked, got acquainted in a natural way. There was a sense of growth and achievement.

But the leadership was not interracial. And the project was short-term, isolated, not supported by like study on the part of other groups in the church. For these reasons I would not call this a best practice.

In the school connected with the Roman Catholic Church of Corpus Christi in New York City intercultural education is carried on in an enlightened way. One year a Sister who was teaching eight grade children about the flight of the Israelites from their persecutors in ancient Egypt discovered that "the children all knew of the persecution of Jews abroad but had no idea that discrimination against them existed in this country. When she suggested that there might be such bias here, questions were asked."* They were keen questions, and under the Sister's guidance they became the starting point of a detailed study.

*Department of Religious Education, Drew University.

The children read widely. They read pamphlets and articles. They read such books as Mary Anton's Promised Land and Edna Ferber's A Peculiar Treasure. They studied The Merchant of Venice and took note of the contents of the Jewish Who's Who. They wrote to prominent Jews and got replies — from Eddie Cantor among others. The Sister took them to the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York to study ceremonial objects there. The class completed murals depicting Jewish history and its relation to Christian history and the general background of our culture.

After several months the children began to formulate conclusions. Here are some of them: "Persecution is a weapon used against a minority by the unsuccessful, the ignorant, the bigoted." "It seems to us that we, Catholics and Jews, have much in common, part of which is persecution. We are going to do everything in our power to help and not to hinder the Jew, not only because our religion obliges us to do so, but because both they and we should benefit by good fellowship." "The non-Jew should be educated to the fact that Jews as a group of people have much to contribute to our cultural development. We think that America should be made safe for differences." Through an assembly program these findings were shared with other groups in the school and with adult visitors.

This again illustrates better practice, far above the usual. A need in the pupils' lives was discovered. The pupils wrestled with a current problem. Ideas were changed, principles worked out. But judging from the report, no opportunities for contact and fellowship with Jews, adults or children, were provided. If the conclusions had to some extent grown out of such contacts and been implemented in them, good long-term results would seem to have been better assured.

In Philadelphia a significant piece of interfaith education was recently carried through under joint Jewish-Protestant auspices, the first move having been made by a Jewish director of religious education. To begin with, fifth grade teachers from two Reform Jewish temples, a Baptist church and a Methodist church met together from time to time over a period of seven months. The purpose was to get acquainted, explore the possibilities of joint study for the children, face difficulties, make plans. The plans which emerged called for a joint unit of study in which things that Christians and Jews have in common would be stressed first, things that each group has "in addition" being left until later.

For the first two weeks the children, eighty of them in all, met in their regular Sunday class groups — using the same materials, getting ready to meet each other. The third week all met together at the Baptist church. After twenty minutes in which reports were made of what had been done in the separate groups, the united group decided on a theme — "Brotherhood at work on our street" — for the following weeks. Children and leaders then attended the regular service in the church in which they were meeting, after which came a further three-quarters of an hour of planning and getting acquainted. This time there were two groups, with Christians and Jews in each, and, as one of the children remarked, you "couldn't tell them apart."

The next four weeks were spent in the regular classes, all four groups studying and working at the same brotherhood theme. Then the eighth and last session was held jointly at one of the temples. There was more getting acquainted and a regular synagogue service. Thus the project closed.

*Elizabeth E. Reed, "A Study in Tolerance," reprinted from Religious Education, October-December, 1940.

It had been most worthwhile, children and leaders agreed. "The Christians like us." "We think a lot alike." "Good Christians do not call me names." Such comments came from the children. Leaders noted that of academic learning there had been a minimum, of the feeling of brotherhood a maximum, that the children had got away from the idea that the strange was ridiculous, while taking greater pride than before in their own religious customs.

This, once more, is better practice. Adult leaders of two faiths wrestled with a community need, planned together to meet it with the children. First-hand experiences were provided. Two groups of young Americans came to know and like each other, and in the process ideas and attitudes were changed. But the program, as one of the leaders pointed out, lacked a planned follow-up. And neither in accompanying nor following has there as yet been provision for educating adults which might strike at the source of most of the children's misconceptions. With such additions this enterprise could surely qualify as an illustration of best practices. Without them it is still notable, especially for the unusual groundwork laid in the joint leaders' conferences and for the Jewish initiative with which it was launched.

Such initiative takes courage. There is unfortunately a very real chance that it will be misunderstood and rebuffed. Many Jewish leaders seem to believe that responsibility for education in Jewish-Christian relations rests with the majority group, and such a view is quite understandable. I myself have never found a rabbi who showed eagerness to launch a joint enterprise, but neither has a rabbi ever refused me whole-hearted cooperation in a project started from the Christian side.

The Wyoming Presbyterian Church in Millburn, New Jersey, used to choose a "congregational emphasis" in advance of each year's work. A few years ago, at the fall planning conference of the total church staff, "Minority groups in our town" was chosen as the coming year's emphasis. Community frictions were such as abundantly to justify the choice.

In the church school the Intermediates, as their part of the enterprise, decided to become acquainted with local Negroes and their situation. This they did through interviews, visits, guest speakers, reading and discussion, the whole climaxing in a successful interracial Easter party.

The Juniors specialized in Jewish-Christian contacts. Fifty of the children went to a synagogue service. Fifty-six Jewish children later returned the visit. Results in clarified ideas were highly encouraging. Jewish and Christian teachers met and planned for cooperative studies — Jewish boys and girls studying Christian festivals while the Christian children studied Jewish festivals. Joint celebrations were held and united programs carried out.

The young people's department made a study of different racial contributions to their community and in February held a colorful international tea.

Meanwhile the adults were sponsoring forums on the causes of racial tensions and what could be done about them. Community panel discussions were held, with Negro, Italian, Catholic, Jewish and Protestant participants. There was visiting back and forth by members of church and synagogue.

Age-group interests and activities were not always kept separate. For instance children and young people and adults all had a hand in helping a local Negro church to get on its feet, financially and otherwise — a project which involved a variety of activities.

At a synagogue celebration in Millburn, with Jews and Christians present, a beautiful Menorah light was presented by the synagogue congregation "to the person who has done more than any other to establish friendliness and good will in this town between Christian and Jew — with our gratitude." It was to the pastor of the Wyoming Church that the presentation was made.

This Millburn program, described here much too briefly, represents to me the best actual practice in this field of which I know. The enlisting of adults, as well as children of the different age groups, is especially noteworthy. But not even in this instance has there been adequate follow-up. The minister who gave the principal leadership went not long afterward to another pastorate.

Additional reports on church school efforts toward intercultural education are to be met from time to time in religious periodicals, notably in issues of the International Journal of Religious Education for February 1943 and February 1944.

Some good resource materials are appearing. For Protestant use the series of Friendship Press texts entitled "The Church and America's Peoples" is to be recommended. For Catholics the "Faith and Freedom" series recently issued for use in parochial schools seems to offer excellent possibilities. A visual-aid unit on "Getting Acquainted with Jewish Neighbors" is now available through the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Based on a Protestant project, it has been found to be acceptable also to Jews and Catholics.

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

Best Practices in Secondary Schools

CLIFFORD R. BRAGDON*

THE NUMBER of high school teachers awakening to the sense in teaching for intercultural intelligence and decency grows larger every day. It does so as two facts become daily more clear: first, that learning to deal wisely with one's fellow Americans is crucial to learning to deal wisely with the other peoples of the globe; second, that current high school courses in civics, social living, American history, and problems of democracy commonly teach more about democracy than for democracy.

Another preliminary observation is in order. Much that is done in the name of intercultural education is not intercultural education at all, and much that is done in the name of something else is the finest sort of intercultural education. Because the label is new to many teachers, enthusiasm sometimes outstrips understanding. Education which trains young people to think straight — and disposes them to do so in human relations as elsewhere — is as good intercultural teaching as schools have to offer. Yet the best of what is now done by direct approach shows strength and promise for experiment in American secondary schools.

Aims.

Best practice varies, of course, with the teachers, pupils, and neighborhoods involved; it would not be best practice if it did not. At the same time common characteristics appear, notably in the realm of ultimate purposes to be achieved, new ways of thinking, feeling, and acting sought.

1. Best practice aims ultimately not at lip service to abstract ideals, but at loyalty to the conviction that certain ways of associating with people outside one's tight little in-group are worthwhile for everybody, including oneself.

*Professor of Education, Smith College.

2. It aims not so much at subtracting from a person's prejudices as adding to his allegiances. Further, it does not ask young people to tear themselves loose from the circle within which they most intimately and comfortably belong, but to add greater and greater circles around it, each carrying its own set of associations.

3. It aims not at tolerance as sufferance at a distance, nor at paternalistic alms giving, nor at making every American like every other American, nor at indiscriminate admiration of everybody, nor at devotion to the idea that all men are and should be equal in every conceivable way. Instead, best practice aims at one or more of the following: informed and first hand understanding of other people as people; a tendency to judge them on their own merits, and to do so as intelligently as may be; adherence to the theory that the United States is properly a society of united but not identical cultures; recognition of the fact that other cultures than one's own have helped to build the good America and offer now cultural commodities which one needs for oneself; team work for the purpose of getting for all what each wants for himself; and a concern, stubborn but tactically sound, to help bring a single standard of opportunity nearer to reality.

Approaches.

Approaches to these aims in best practice vary considerably. Very best practice, though, seems to go at them through everything and everybody it can find, and to do so everywhere in the school and all the time. For convience let us project here a composite school that shows this.

In it we will find classroom teachers in all subjects making the contribution to growth in intercultural wisdom which experience with their subject can provide.

We will also find one or two of these teachers, once or twice in the individual pupil's career in high school, taking intercultural insights and questions out of the matrix of history, literature, social studies, biology, music in which they have been imbedded, and putting them into direct focus as subject matter with a pattern of its own.

In addition to these two instructional approaches, our composite school will reveal intercultural work going on through such extra curricular media as clubs, athletics, student government, home rooms, and assemblies. Some of that work will attack intercultural affairs directly, especially through clubs, assemblies, and home room activities. Most of it, however, will get at it indirectly, as in the practice in team work natural to athletics and student government at their best.

But teachers are not the only participants in this composite school's intercultural program. Those responsible for guidance keep alert to the part played by cultural and racial affiliations in the psychic health of young people learning to get along with their world and themselves.

The principal of this school, its supervisors and its superintendent, play a dual role. For one thing, they not only permit intercultural teaching in their school; they implement it. For the other, they not only protect it from misinterpretation by the community; they bring it out to the community — through school boards, adult education, and intercultural or interracial community councils.

Leaders in community life, men and women of various cultures and races, enter the life of the school. They come not to lecture at but to meet with youngsters — many of whom have never realized before that people of such names and complexions did important things supremely well. As organizations they come not to press the school into the service of this or that culture-group, but to support the school's work and to help carry it past the school's front door into the community's life.

And, finally, this composite school does these things in the only social weather in which they can flourish. That is, the school practices the decency and intelligence it extolls. Teachers are a living example of it, in their relations to one another and to all their pupils. Team work, fairplay, and simple courtesy out of respect for everyman's sheer "human beingness" comprise the everyday, matter of fact, accepted mode of living. School life is so arranged that the chances of these behaviors getting practiced are better than normal. It is so arranged that practicing them pays.

In actual practice no high school uses all these avenues to intercultural goals, but there is evidence of a trend in the direction of using more than one. Probably two of the least common are two of the most productive — individual guidance as therapeutics for pyschic trouble due in part to racial or cultural affiliations, and two-way passage between school and community. Certainly, the most common, even in best practice, is through direct instructional procedures, with unitary organization taking precedence over incorporated organization.

The difference between the two may be briefly illustrated. A teacher of social studies in Chattanooga sets aside a few weeks for interracial study in his white, twelfth-grade classes. Things studied and reported on are Negro housing, education, recreation, occupations, health, cultural contributions, crime, and social relations between Negroes and whites. Pamphlets are read. Negro schools are visited. White judges, editors, politicos, and social service officers are interviewed. On the basis of such information and experience, the meaning of justice and decent relations between Negroes and whites are calmly discussed upon pupil request. This kind of approach may be called unitary.

In New Orleans another social studies teacher sets aside several weeks for research in the sociology of the city. Figures indicative of the characteristics of neighborhoods are gathered. Maps are made from them of delinquency areas, areas of bad housing, disease and unemployment. Hospitals, housing centers, schools, recreation centers—Negro and white, rich and poor — are visited. All sorts of people are interviewed, including management and labor. In the reports and discussions that follow, intercultural matters find a place, but in relation to other such social matters as federal housing, industrial expansion, public health, labor relations. This kind of approach may be called incorporated.

Administrative leadership in combination with community leadership is well illustrated by the experiment in Springfield, Massachusetts. A succinct account of it may be found in an article by Alice L. Halligan, "A Community's Total War Against Prejudice," in The Journal of Educational Sociology, February, 1943. It is enough to point out here that the entire administrative staff is hunting for productive ways of working with teachers and community together.

Guidance as therapeutics is more than occasional semi-formal conference between professional counselors and youngsters in hot water. The author encountered in Phoenix a class in English taught by a woman who counseled individual children as much as she instructed them, interculturally speaking. The youngsters here were mostly Mexican and Mexican-American. In this class teacher and pupils spoke Spanish as well as English. They discussed problems real in their own lives. Pedro and Paula talked and laughed with Peter and Pauline in this class as they usually laughed and talked only at home. They associated with their teacher in the halls as well as in the classroom. They told her about the trouble they had with their parents and what they had against "Americans." One of them said to the author, "She likes us." The point needs no laboring.

Here is an example of the use of an indirect extra-curricular approach. Trouble broke out one afternoon between a Mexican-American girl and an Anglo-American girl outside the high school in a town near Los Angeles. The next morning rumor had it that serious fighting would be started by Mexican-American boys at the noon hour. Student government took counsel with their adviser. At noon the school put on a dance for everybody (not a grave lecture on riots). Members of student government "kept them moving" and made it a point to dance with the other culture group. There was no riot. At two o'clock, student government went into conference with Mexican-American leaders. It was here agreed that when trouble threatened hereafter the two groups would confer and agree upon the proper course of action. That is self-government and intercultural cooperation in very truth.

Processes.

Specific techniques give trouble only to teachers who are unsure about where their teaching is pointed and who lack the background of understanding without which no teacher should undertake any kind of education. Best intercultural work finds teacher and pupils doing all the variety of things they do in teaching and learning anything. Emphasis, however, falls on personal contact with superior represenatives of unfamiliar cultures; on research into the facts about race, living conditions, and the tempers of culture groups; experience with their cultural contributions; cooperative undertakings as dramatics and committee work; and discussion of intercultural relations in terms of what Americans can afford rather than what Uptopia shows.

The field is not rich in materials as it will be. Intercultural Education in American Schools by Vickery and Cole (Harpers, 1943) is, however, a good source of bibliography and suggestions for techniques and experience likely to prove useful in the hands of teachers who already own a broad background in sociology, culture, and anthropology, and who already show teaching marked by technical ingenuity rather than adherence to pedagogical formulae.

But after all, if you want to change a person, you can try to scare him, shame him, habituate him, inspire him, or enlighten him. Best practice shows all of these processes on trial:

1. Picturing the threat implicit in the current state of affairs, the threat to one's own welfare and that of the people and values one cherishes.

2. Persuading youngsters that their biases are ill founded and inconsistent with their own avowed ideals.

3. Providing experience in situations likely to produce sound intercultural attitudes and abilities, accompanied by immediate practice in the rewarding behaviors that result.

4. Clarifying the meaning of and manifesting devotion to the righteousness of intelligent and decent modes of intercultural behavior.

5. Helping youngsters to meet the facts and to think out insights from them, leaving the rest up to the youngsters and their circumstances.

And in the very end, it is people who count! Teachers who are people, teachers who love intelligence, decency, and the whole particular crop of youngsters whom they touch find aims, approaches, and processes added unto them. Love is a forthright word. The best intercultural teaching is being done by people not afraid of it. Such "people as teachers" are finding ways of helping young Americans to see where they are going together — and where they want to go.

17-Intercultural Educ.

Zeal for American Democracy ☆ Zeal

for American Democracy

How Democratic Is Your SCHOOL?

for American Democracy

Zeal for American Democracy ☆ Zeal

Checklists on Democratic Practices for Secondary Schools

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY, Office of Education, Washington 25, D.C. 1949

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY
Office of Education
Washington 25, D. C.
Bulletin 1949,

How Democratic Is Your SCHOOL?

What does American democracy mean to teachers and administrators? What does it mean to students? What effect does a school's interpretation of American democracy have on the day by day life of high-school students? Upon answers to these questions depends the success or failure of efforts to prepare youth for the privileges and responsibilities of the democratic way of life. People grow into democracy, and a school environment that facilitates this growth conditions the quality of the adult citizen. His performance becomes to a great extent the measure of the school's attainment.

Two checklists, one for teachers and one for students, are presented. They are designed for self-appraisal. These lists bear no relation to standardized tests for two reasons: (1) many of the questions require purely subjective judgment, and (2) school situations vary in the opportunities afforded teachers and students to work and live together democratically. The checklists may, however, serve as springboards for constructive efforts to develop a more democratic climate in any school.

A preliminary consideration of what democracy actually means should precede the use of the checklist. To represent fairly the diverse complexity of the American population, any assertion of a common democratic faith must of necessity begin with broad principles. These have been stated in many ways. Although they differ in phraseology and approach, such statements hold the beliefs and commitments cherished by a majority of our citizens. A summarization would include the following:

1. American democracy rests on a deep conviction of the uniqueness, dignity, and worth of the individual person.

2. American democracy holds that government exists to promote the welfare of people, not to exploit people for government.

3. American democracy accepts and carries out the will of the people in the formulation of public policy.

4. American democracy recruits its leaders from all the people.

5. American democracy embodies the hard won liberties of a free people in a written Constitution which guarantees the same rights for all.

6. American democracy confers no rights which impinge on the general welfare or disregard the equal rights of other persons.

7. American democracy with its attendant duties and responsibilities obligates every person to promote the general welfare.

8. American democracy can be secure only if an informed citizenry understands it, believes in it, and lives by it.

There is no official definition of American democracy, but education has two major tasks in respect to it. The first is to bring about in citizens an acceptance in mind and spirit of democracy's principles. The other - and more difficult one - is to help people spell out these principles into specific practices applicable to everyday personal relationships and experiences. Teaching democracy in the abstract is on a par with teaching swimming by correspondence.

When the principles of democracy are applied to particular situations, the principles and practices often stand in contrast. Before educators talk to others about democracy, they should first clarify their own conceptions of democracy and apply them to school conditions. Are there practices in school which violate democratic principles? Do certain behavior patterns indicate undemocratic attitudes?

Questions in both checklists are derived from the eight general principles listed and are related directly to school life. For example, a question in the checklist for the staff asks, "Do you share willingly in faculty discussions of school problems?" This is a specific application of the broader principle, "American democracy accepts and carries out the will of the people in the formulation of public policy." Other principles may also be implied. If a few persons monopolize the time of a meeting by reiterating their views and others constantly remain silent, all the possible contributions toward solving a problem will not be presented. A vital, vigorous democracy depends on a giving and sifting of many ideas to reach conclusions. Democracy calls for a desire and eagerness by its people to share in group solution of problems.

A question in the checklist for students reads, "Are student officers elected because they are fit for office rather than because they belong to the gang that runs things?" This question is derived from the general principle that "American democracy recruits its leaders from the ranks of all the people." Strongly organized minority groups should not be able to force a selection of leaders from their membership only. When such a situation prevails - either in adult society or in school - a basic tenet of our democracy is being violated.

The checklist designed for the staff should be used before the one for students. Answers will be valuable only as they stem from an honest probing of self by each administrator, teacher, and student. Truthful answers may point out serious discrepancies between the nominal acceptance of the principles of American democracy and democratic living in the school. These checklists, therefore, can constitute a guide toward a self-evaluation of how deep is the wellspring of democratic faith and understanding.

CONCERNING ADMINISTRATORS

The school administrator is the person upon whom rests the responsibility for stimulating school practices which are in accord with democratic principles. The program of citizenship education in every school needs periodic scrutiny to determine its effectiveness. These checklists suggest a way of motivating such examinations. The questions are so framed that "Almost always" answers indicate the highest degree of democratic relationships. "Hardly ever" answers indicate that something is radically wrong.

Negative responses should be carefully investigated. WHY do certain situations reveal an undemocratic attitude or practice? Are responses manifestations of deep-rooted prejudices? Are they caused by lack of understanding of or experiences in the democratic way of life? Finally, what can be done to develop democratic persons?

The administrator should provide the staff with every opportunity to seek the causes and, together with students, engage in a remedial program. Such activity may cause a revision of the pattern of the school's efforts to create good citizens for American democracy.

The use of the checklist without a follow-up has little value. Its purpose is to reveal to teachers and pupils (and administrators) their strengths and weaknesses so that the former may be retained and the latter overcome. Encouragement by the administrator can arouse a whole school system to renewed vigor and rededication to its major function - that of developing able citizens for American democracy.

CONCERNING THE STAFF

It is suggested that several faculty meetings be devoted to formulating a group definition of democracy and its relationship to school life. Undoubtedly, there will be disagreements; for such is the democratic way. However, through the give and take of discussion, there should emerge some common thoughts on what democracy means. When particular applications cannot be accepted by everyone, then those held by the majority will have to represent the group. Democracy is not static, and it grants a minority opinion the possibility of later becoming the majority one. The chief gain will not be in any pronouncement or document on democracy - although a short statement of agreement is helpful - but in the process of thinking out what democracy means in important specific applications.

Only after reading and thorough discussion on the subject should the checklist be tried out by members of the staff. A tabulation of results may provide the basis for renewed group discussion, reveal the status of democratic thinking by the staff, and direct attention to those areas of citizenship training which require expansion and strengthening. Teachers should be encouraged to compare their individual responses with the composite response of the staff so that they may realize the extent to which their philosophy harmonizes with that of the group and to analyze their own behaviors for consequent modification. Only then is the staff ready to discuss democracy with students.

CONCERNING STUDENTS

While the greatest emphasis on civic education will naturally be given in the social science classes, all other organized activities of the school should share in developing an understanding of and providing experiences in the democratic way of life. Classes, homerooms, assemblies, guidance programs, clubs - all have a part in helping students learn the meaning of American democracy. After study and discussion, each student or group of students may write a definition of democracy. The project may be extended to include a statement representing the school. Again, as with teachers, the statement is not as important as the mental struggle and clarification of thought entering into it.

After students have thoroughly considered the nature of American democracy, then the checklist may be given them. (More honest expressions of opinion are generally obtained when students - and teachers too - are not required to identify themselves.) Responses may be tabulated for classes, homerooms, or the entire school. Analyses by students of these results, and comparisons with commonly accepted principles of American democracy, should follow. Students and teachers should then together plan learning experiences that will promote growth in democratic thought, attitudes, and behavior.

A. Checklists on Democratic Practices for Secondary School Staffs

TO MEMBERS OF THE STAFF:

Check the column which best indicates your estimate of the situation in question. Probably some of your responses will be influenced by a knowledge of what should be the correct reply. However, try to be as objective and intellectually honest as possible in order that the combined answers of the staff may reflect, with reasonable accuracy, conditions in your school. The main purpose of this checklist is to cause you to think about the democratic climate which you, as a member of the staff, help to create.

	Almost always	Sometimes	Hardly ever
1. Do students in your classes have a voice in determining the projects or problems on which they will work?
2. When you are called from class, does the class work by itself almost as if you were there?
3. Do students in your classes share in evaluating what they have done?
4. Are patriotic holidays used in your classes as the basis of realistic programs designed to present the significance of the occasions?
5. Is the slow learner in your classes given opportunities to do something important which he can do relatively well?
6. Do your classroom procedures give students practice in organizing and serving on committees?
7. Do you encourage students to express their own considered opinions on topics under discussion in your classes even if in disagreement with your ideas?
8. Are members of minority groups in your classes accepted by other students without condescension or aloofness?
9. Do you consider that the attitudes of your students toward the school program are important?
10. In class discussions, do students permit each other to present a point of view without rude interruption?

	A	S	H
11. Do your students refrain from generalizing about types of conduct in terms of national origins?
12. Do you allow a group of students to proceed with a socially acceptable project which they have planned together and want to try, but one which you have warned will fail?
13. Is there freedom in your class to explore controversial subjects?
14. When your students cooperatively plan an activity, do they carry out their agreed-upon assignments and responsibilities?
15. Do your students have opportunities to participate in panel discussions, in forums, or in other forms of group discussion?
16. Do you admit to your students that you are not an authority on all questions arising in class?
17. Do your students have opportunities to work with adult organizations in the improvement of the community?
18. Do students from your classes participate in school service projects?
19. Do your students distinguish between an article written by an authority in the field and one by a nonauthority for popular consumption?
20. Do your students follow Robert's Rules of Order when conducting meetings?
21. Do students have opportunities to discuss community problems?
22. Do your students seek factual bases from more than one source before drawing conclusions?
23. Do you stress with your students the qualities of and necessity for both leaders and followers in a democracy?
24. Do your students indicate an awareness that democracy should also be practiced in the home?

	A	S	H
25. Do your mature students have opportunities to secure a realistic knowledge of how political parties function in American government?
26. Have your students compared newspapers and other publications to ascertain differences in news treatment?
27. Do your students have opportunities to discuss the qualifications needed for office before voting for student officers?
28. Do your students have experiences resulting in their knowing which local authorities to consult on community problems?
29. Do your students show eagerness to participate in student self-government?
30. Do your students select friends irrespective of their religious beliefs?
31. Is the school's citizenship education program evaluated in terms of the civic behavior of graduates who have become adult citizens?
32. Do you share willingly in faculty discussions of school problems?
33. When appointed on faculty committees, do you willingly do your share of the work?
34. Is your faculty free from a clique which dominates all decisions?
35. Do you have the opportunity to express your opinion in the formulation of school policies?
36. Has each staff member a specific function to perform in the school's program of education for democracy?
37. Do staff members accept differences of opinion impersonally as part of the democratic process?
38. Do staff members at a faculty meeting require facts bearing on a given question before deciding upon a course of action?

	A	S	H
39. Do staff members refrain from unfavorable gossip about each other?
40. Are staff members self-impelled to make themselves as proficient in their work as possible?
41. Do you belong to and actively participate in a local civic organization?
42. Do staff members participate in local programs designed to increase the civic understandings of adults?
43. Do you help inform your public about the problems of education?
44. Do you carry out your obligations of the good citizen - such as voting, respecting laws, keeping informed on what is going on, etc?
45. Are teachers of your school identified with movements to improve the community?
46. Does the student editor of your school paper or magazine have the freedom of the press?
47. Is your school free from harmful influence by student cliques?
48. Do students have opportunities to share in group solutions of school problems?
49. Are school regulations for both students and teachers - such as leaving the building and smoking - cooperatively devised?
50. Is the student council free from faculty domination in formulating policies and carrying out an action program within its assigned realm of responsibility?
51. Are students encouraged to evaluate the quality of their school citizenship?
52. Does the school use an educative process to insure appropriate wearing apparel by students?
53. Do students maintain self-discipline in the corridors?

	A	S	H
54. Do students have a fair opportunity to defend themselves against a teacher charge of misconduct?
55. Are opportunities provided for students to discuss student council activities?

B. Checklists on Democratic Practices for Secondary School Students

Place a checkmark in the column which in your opinion best describes the situation which exists in your school. Try to be as honest in your answers as possible, for this checklist was designed to help you and your fellow students determine to what extent you apply democratic principles in your school life.

	Almost always	Sometimes	Hardly ever
1. Do you volunteer your services to help the school or teacher in any way you can?
2. Are study halls quiet and orderly enough for you to study well when no teacher is present?
3. Are students considerate of others during cafeteria period?
4. Do your student friends avoid gossip and dirty talk about fellow students?
5. Do students with cars drive carefully and cautiously as school is being let out?
6. Do students, going to and from school on a school bus or public carrier, behave themselves even when there is no one in authority there to make them?
7. Are student officers elected because they are fit for office rather than because they belong to the gang that runs things?
8. Does your school paper or magazine present more than one point of view on controversial school problems?
9. Do you express your opinions in club or homeroom meetings?

	A	S	H
10. When chosen for a student committee, do you give unselfishly of your time and energy?
11. Do students of your school refrain from fights and acts of violence after losing an athletic contest?
12. Do you place the good of the entire school above your own personal desires, prejudices, or interests?
13. Do students willingly obey building regulations, such as those concerning smoking, leaving the grounds at recess or noon, passing in corridors, etc.?
14. Do you assume your share of responsibility for whatever goes on in class?
15. Do you take part in class discussions?
16. Do you take into consideration what other members of the class have said before you speak?
17. When members of the class disagree, do they do so with courtesy and without losing tempers?
18. Do you willingly do the tasks given you by the student chairman of a project undertaken by the class?
19. Do you understand why your marks or ranks differ from those of other students?
20. Do you suggest things to help the class, rather than only to find fault with what is being done?
21. Do you base what you say on many accurate facts?
22. Do students serve as discussion leaders in class?
23. Do opportunities exist in your school for you to lead a meeting?
24. Do your studies deal with community problems?
25. Is the special knowledge of experts about any subject respected and used in class?

	A	S	H
26. Do students do most of the planning and most of the talking about class work?
27. Do students give courteous attention to assembly programs, even when not particularly interested?
28. When asked in assembly to take part in devotions, singing, cheering, etc., do students do so wholeheartedly?
29. Do you have an opportunity to help plan or take part in an assembly program?
30. Do students have something to say about the type of assembly programs conducted in the school?
31. Are your assembly programs so varied with music, speaking, devotions, drama, demonstrations, exhibits, etc., that they have value and interest for most of the students?
32. Do your school clubs and organizations have student-made constitutions definitely stating their purposes?
33. Are you an active worker in the school clubs which you have joined?
34. Do students in the school clubs to which you belong secure and discuss all information that may be brought to bear on a problem before taking action?
35. Do the officers of your student organizations provide enough leadership to make them successful?
36. Are your school clubs free from small groups controlling their activities?
37. Do your club treasurers make regular and accurate reports to members concerning the finances of the organizations?
38. Do you have a voice in determining how your club spends its money?
39. When your school clubs engage in a money raising venture, do they try to give value for money received?

	A	S	H
40. Do you respect students who honestly have different opinions from you on club matters?
41. Does your student council think and act for itself within its field of responsibility without domination by the principal or faculty?
42. Do you know what your student council is doing?
43. Are reports of student council meetings regularly given in the homeroom or in some other place?
44. Do you obey the regulations of your student council?
45. Do you call the attention of your student council representative to those school affairs which you think need attention?
46. Do you think your school permits as much self-government as its students can handle?
47. Is your student council doing worthwhile things in the school?
48. Do you discuss with other students matters that have come up or are coming up before the student council?
49. Do you feel that the student council does a good job in giving you a say about school affairs?
50. Does a student who gets into trouble with a teacher have an opportunity to present his side of the case?
51. Do you refuse to ask for or accept special favors from friends who hold office in student organizations?
52. At school social gatherings, do you associate with students outside your particular gang?
53. Do you do any of the work in preparation for a school social affair?
54. Are students permitted to present to the faculty statements of student opinion on school affairs?
55. Does attendance at school social affairs reflect a cross section of the student body?

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

These checklists have been prepared by Earl Hutchinson, Field Representative for the Division of Secondary Education, with the advice and assistance of various specialists in the Office of Education, Federal Security Agency.

School people outside the Office of Education also have reviewed the checklists in one form or another and have made valuable contributions. The help of the following persons is gratefully acknowledged:

Theodore P. Blaich, Curriculum Director, Fryeburg Academy, Fryeburg, Maine.
Fitzhugh L. Hambrick, State Teachers College, Greeley, Colo.
Stillman Hobbs, Head of Social Studies, High School, Great Neck, Long Island, N. Y.
Elizabeth A. Huntington, Curriculum Coordinator, Union School Department, Union, N. J.
Lawrence Page, Principal of High School, Sanford, Maine
George M. Sharp, Coordinator of Curriculum, Tenafly High School, Tenafly, N. J.
Lawrence Stuart, Principal of High School, Cape Elizabeth, Maine.

Preliminary try-outs of the Checklist for Students were made at Fairfax County High School, Fairfax, Va., and at Roosevelt High School, Washington, D. C.

SUGGESTED STAFF READINGS ON THE MEANING OF DEMOCRACY

Berry, John R. Current Conceptions of Democracy. New York Teachers College, Columbia University, 1943. (Contributions to Education 888)

Citizens Federal Committee on Education. "Education for a Free Society," School Life, February 1948. Washington, D. C., Office of Education, Federal Security Agency.

Herrick, Theral T. School Patterns for Citizenship Training. Ann Arbor, Mich., Bureau of Educational Reference and Research, University of Michigan, 1947.

Mahoney, J. J. For Us the Living. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1945.

National Education Association. Educational Policies Commission. Learning the Ways of Democracy. Washington, D. C., The Commission, 1940.

Russell, W. F. and Briggs, T. H. The Meaning of Democracy. New York, Macmillan Co., 1944.

Wilson, Howard E. Education for Citizenship. New York, McGraw Hill Co., 1938. (Regents Inquiry)

PERMISSION IS HEREBY GRANTED TO REPRODUCE ALL OR ANY PART OF THIS BROCHURE. REFERENCE TO THE OFFICE OF EDUCATION, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY, WILL BE APPRECIATED

147- Intercultural Educ.

And now this book tells what happened in Springfield's campaign against group hatred. This stirring account shows what any American community can do to build a better democracy.

Jane

The STORY of THE SPRINGFIELD PLAN

One Community's Total War Against Prejudice

BARNES & NOBLE, INC.

The STORY of THE SPRINGFIELD PLAN IS THE A

What is the best way to eradicate religious and racial prejudice in the United States? How can parents, teachers, churchmen, librarians, and other civic leaders take effective action to build a better democracy?

All America has watched with keen interest the action taken by the public schools, civic and religious organizations, parents, librarians, employers, labor groups, and leading citizens of Springfield, Massachusetts. For its pioneering attempt to practice American ideals of freedom and equality, Springfield has received merited acclaim throughout the nation.

The Plan has been endorsed by Willard E. Givens, Executive Secretary, National Education Association of the U. S. A.; Carl Carmer, noted American author and member of the Writers War Board; Guy E. Snavely, Executive Director, Association of American Colleges; Edward Skillin, Jr., Editor, Commonweal Magazine; Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd, Writers War Board; Ernest Angell, President, Council for Democracy; Willard Johnson, National Conference of Christians and Jews; Paul V. McNutt, Administrator, Federal Security Agency; and many hundreds of other Americans interested in a better democracy.

Because of its significance in American life, the Plan has been featured in Newsweek; March of Time; We The People; Woman's Home Companion; RCA Television; the Warner Brothers' film, It Happened in Springfield; and countless articles in newspapers and periodicals.

The STORY of THE SPRINGFIELD PLAN is a stirring illustrated record by two people who

TO THE MAYOR OF SPRINGFIELD,

Sir:

One of my best friends who, after being fragment, recently died in Belgium told r fighting in order that the Springfield Pla the World Plan.

Now that he is dead some of us have b about this Springfield Plan . . . and wha it. He had explained it briefly, but we wou more. What did he mean when he said become a World Plan?

We have seen so many dead people. so cold physically here . . . and so con that some of us are almost mentally and Maybe your Springfield Plan can give u looking for . . . something to be hopefu thing that is actually happening back ho ory, but in fact—which will make the worl for everybody.

It's a long time, since we've been home some of the things we hear there are pl minded people, hate mongers, and isolati sacred states of ours. The fact that they s and don't wear German uniforms mak dangerous than the Jerries themselves. W Springfield Plan do about them?

Respectfully,

direct this work day in and day Springfield schools and in the comm ence I. Chatto and Alice L. Halli officially approved book, the auth the Springfield Plan developed, h dren and adults made democracy l schools and the community worked build a more democratic communi

The STORY of THE SPRINGFI includes 50 pages of working tool used most successfully in the Spri gram. These materials should be st citizens interested in abolishing in their home communities.

HE ANSWER TO THIS AMERICAN SOLDIER'S QUESTION

PRINGFIELD, MASS.:

o, after being hit by a shell elgium told me that he was pringfield Plan may become of us have been wondering . . . and what he meant by , but we would like to know hen he said that it should ead people. We have been and so confused mentally mentally and physically ill. n can give us what we are to be hopeful about. Some-ing back home—not in the-ake the world a better place e been home, Sir, but from there are plenty of fascist-s, and isolationists in those t that they speak American niforms makes them more hemselves. What does your em?

Respectfully,

n and day out in the n the community: Clar-ce L. Halligan. In this , the authors tell how veloped, how the chil-emocracy live, how the nity worked together to c community.

PRINGFIELD PLAN orking tools—materials n the Springfield pro-hould be studied by all olishing intolerance in

A Few Comments:

EDGAR ANSEL MOWRER, Famous War Correspondent:

"I was most interested in this book. The Springfield Plan, it seems to me, is a plan for daily democracy, a growing and spontaneous democracy. It is based on the fact that man is born free of racial or religious intolerances, that such prejudice is instilled in him by external forces, that the way to overcome the gradual development of a non-democratic spirit in the individual is to give him, for every share of intolerance and prejudice he may meet from uninformed and selfish sources, an equal dose of truth, human respect and sense of fair play. This, I think, the Springfield Plan is doing."

J. EDGAR HOOVER, Director, F.B.I.:

"The strength of a unified democracy has been demonstrated in this great World War against bigotry, persecution, and prejudice. Daily, however, the need grows greater for a rededication to the principles of justice and humanity that we may all live in peace and security. Creeds which advocate privileges for a select few to the detriment of others have no place in the American way of life. Our individual civil liberties are our most cherished possessions. Education to teach the preservation of these liberties and respect for the personal and property rights of others is truly democratic. People who know and understand each other are best equipped to live in the same community harmoniously."

CLARA SAVAGE LITTLEDALE, Editor, "The Parents' Magazine":

"There has been altogether too much talk about educating our children in better race relations and too little doing of it . . . such prejudices cannot live long in an atmosphere where friendliness, understanding and appreciation of differences is encouraged . . . There's nothing in the Springfield Plan that other schools can't copy and profit by. I believe the Springfield Plan will prove an inspiration to countless communities . . ."

HON. ANNA M. KROSS, Gen. Fed. of Women's Clubs:

"Like the Springfield experiment, the work done in many other communities demonstrates how a more conscious loyalty to American traditions can be instilled in our youth . . . We must help our young men and women to help themselves—in terms of education, health, etc.—prepare for constructive lives. That affirmative goal is one to which the General Federation of Women's Clubs is today devoting its vast membership in communities throughout the land."

C. MAURICE WIETING, National Council of Farmer Cooperatives:

"Recently at a meeting of Washington, D. C. alumni of Teachers College, Columbia University, Professor Clyde R. Miller of Columbia talked on the Springfield Plan. I want you to know of the great interest in this type of education on the part of our Teachers College alumni and how pleased many of us are that the firm of Barnes and Noble is bringing out "The Story of the Springfield Plan". . . your company is performing a notable civic service in giving to teachers and citizens everywhere the opportunity to build in their own communities an education to strengthen democracy and thereby control and prevent dangerous phobias which are the greatest threats to democracy."

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS on HUMAN RELATIONS and INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

DEMOCRACY'S CHILDREN

Adventures in Intercultural Education for the Elementary School

By ETHEL M. DUNCAN • Illustrated by Margaret I. Thomas

A VIVID ACCOUNT of elementary school activities in intercultural education. Written partly in story form. Shows how to integrate intercultural activities with the regular work of the classroom. Includes songs, games, dramatizations of national holidays and the folk customs of many lands—practical materials which help children (and their parents) to develop democratic attitudes. Cloth, $2.00

DESIGN FOR AMERICA

An Educational Exploration of the Future of Democracy

By THEODORE BRAMELD

A THRILLING ACCOUNT of the experiment in EDUCATION FOR THE FUTURE actually carried out in a typical American high school. While studying politics, economics, science, and the fine arts, the students focussed their interest, not on the past, but on the kind of society which they as young citizens would like to build for tomorrow. Cloth, $2.00

BUILD TOGETHER AMERICANS

Adventures in Intercultural Education for the Secondary School

By RACHEL DAVIS DuBOIS • With a Foreword by Eduard C. Lindeman

IN HOME, community, and school we can eliminate racial and religious prejudice. We can teach respect for the contributions of minority groups to American life. With the wealth of twenty years' experience, first in her own classroom, and then in aiding teachers throughout the land to develop better group relations, Dr. DuBois now puts the gist of that experience into clear, readable form. Cloth, $2.00

ORDER BLANK

BARNES & NOBLE, INC.
Fifth Avenue at 18th Street
New York 3, N. Y.

Date.....

Gentlemen: I enclose $..... for which please send me the books listed below in the quantities I have indicated. Send immediately the following:

☐ Send C.O.D. (I will pay postage and C.O.D. charges).

☐ Send on open account. NOTE: Charge accounts are opened for institutions, schools and instructors only.

.....The STORY of THE SPRINGFIELD PLAN.....$2.75

.....BUILD TOGETHER AMERICANS..... 2.00

.....DEMOCRACY'S CHILDREN 2.00

.....DESIGN FOR AMERICA 2.00

To .....

.....

Position held.

.....

.....

17- Intercultural Education

BIBLIOGRAPHY AND RESOURCES ON RACIAL AND CULTURAL RELATIONS

Pamphlets

How to Prevent a Race Riot, by Winifred Rauschenbush. 10 cents. 100 copies for $5.00.

Five Essentials of Brotherhood, by H. Richard Rasmussen. An eight-page leaflet suitable for general distribution. 25 copies free; 100 copies for $1.00.

Adventure in Brotherhood. The story of a successful interracial program involving rural white families and Negro children from nearby cities. Free.

Come Let Us Worship. A brief and interesting description of interracial churches of three kinds in three different communities. Free.

What Can the Jew Do? A brief challenging statement reprinted from the Saturday Review of Literature. Suitable for general distribution. 25 copies free; 100 copies for $1.00.

Nosing Out Prejudice, by Fern M. Colborn. A pamphlet telling how to discover prejudices in print, on the stage and screen and what to do about it. 10 cents.

Christian Social Action and Minority Groups, by John H. Elliott. Projects to develop understanding and appreciation toward Americans of Negro, Jewish and Japanese backgrounds. For all age groups in the church. 5 cents.

An Enemy of the People: Antisemitism by James Parkes. (Penguin Books) 25 cents.

Order above from any Presbyterian Book Store.

* * * * * *

Color and Community. A comprehensive guide for church groups who want to x-ray their community, discover the facts about race relations and plan for effective action. 10 cents. Order directly from the Department of Social Education and Action, 830 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

* * * * * *

Manual for Official Committees. A handbook for community groups working in the field of race relations. 25 cents.

The Police and Minority Groups. A realistic and factual account of the successes and failures of the police in handling racial tensions, and "constructive practical suggestions on preventive policing in the field of interracial relationships." 25 cents.

Negro G.I.'s Come Back, by William Candill. A discussion of the problem of returning Negro veterans, equally applicable to G.I's of other minority groups. 10 cents.

State FEPC - What the People Say. A digest of testimony given at hearings on the Bill to establish an FEPC in New York State. Statements by people in all walks of life. 15 cents.

Negro Platform Workers. A survey of Negro transit workers in Philadelphia, Los Angeles and Chicago. Would be useful for leaders in any large city. 25 cents.

Hemmed In, by Robert C. Weaver. Pamphlet on restrictive covenants showing that neighborhood agreements concerning occupancy and maintenance standards are not only more democratic but can also be more effective in preserving good neighborhoods. Cleverly illustrated. 10 cents.

Facts About Japanese-Americans, by Setsuko Nishi. 1946. 50 cents.

Order from the American Council on Race Relations,
32 West Randolph Street, Chicago 1, Illinois

* * * * * *

Race Relations Balance Sheet, by Edwin R. Embree. An excellent summary of the strides that have been made toward justice for the American Negro, as well as what remains to be done. Specific and factual.

Our Conflicting Racial Policies, by Will Alexander. A discussion of our conflicting policies-- of educating Negroes for life in a democracy and of imposing segregation upon them.

American Negroes: A Handbook, by Edwin R. Embree. A comprehensive statement of the American Negroes' history and present status.

There are Things To Do, by Lillian Smith. A 15 page pamphlet describing specific things that individuals can do to improve race relations ranging from small acts of decent courtesy to the "Hard jobs for the brave and the wise."

Memorandum on Anti-Semitism, by Philip Wylie. A reprint from the American Mercury that has received wide distribution.

Single copies of the above are available free from the Julius Rosenwald Fund, 49-1 Ellis Avenue, Chicago 15, Illinois.

* * * * * *

The Races of Mankind, by Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish. Prepared by competent scientists and widely read throughout America.

The Negro in America, by Maxwell Stewart. A summary of Gunnar Myrdal's An American Dilemma.

Will Negroes Get Jobs Now? by Herbert R. Northrup. A recent and authoritative study of the prospects for Negro employment in the postwar world.

Race Riots Aren't Necessary, by Alfred M. Lee. A summary of his excellent book based on experiences in Detroit.

What About Our Japanese Americans? by Carey McWilliams. A comprehensive and documented study of Japanese-Americans and especially of developments during the war.

Single copies 10 cents. Order above from Public Affairs, Inc., 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, New York.

* * * * * *

Racial Aspects of Reconversion: A Memorandum Prepared for the President of the United States; a very comprehensive, factual and up-to-date statement. Single copies free.

Racial Problems in Housing. An analysis of the economic and social factors behind housing difficulties for Negroes and other minorities. 25 cents.

Adventure in Community Cooperation. A leaflet describing the National Urban League's program for volunteer interracial "Service Councils" in cities having no Urban League. Free.

Opportunity, winter issue 1945. The entire issue is devoted to a discussion of Negro participation in every branch of the armed forces. 25 cents.

Order above pamphlets from the National Urban League, 1133 Broadway, New York 10, New York.

* * * * * *

Christianity and the Race Problem, by Gonzalo Baez-Camargo. A thorough and basic study of race from the scientific and Christian points of view. 25 cents. Friendship Press, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

* * * * * *

Race? What the Scientists Say, by Caroline Singer. A brief statement on the basic facts about race, approved by three of the nation's leading anthopologists. Free. National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

* * * * * *

The Church and Race Relations. An official statement of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Adopted at Columbus in March of 1946. 5 cents.

Clinical Approach to Race Relations, by George E. Haynes. A manual to guide local groups in developing race relation's clinics. 35 cents.

Negro Churchmen Speak to White Churchmen. A courageous and deeply religious challenge to white churchmen signed by more than 100 Negro church leaders. 10 cents.

To End this Day of Strife. A plan to enlist for interracial brotherhood in the local church. $1.75 per hundred.

A Primer on Race. A well written, cleverly illustrated statement of the basic facts about race from the Christian point of view. Excellent for General distribution. 8 cents each, 5 cents in quantities.

Order above from Federal Council of Churches, 297
Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

* * * * * *

The Truth About Anti-Semitism. The January, 1946, issue of Social Action. A keen analysis of Jewish-Christian relations and of the Christian's responsibility for anti-semitism, with suggestions for action. 15 cents. Order from Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

* * * * * *

Jews in American Life, by Jacob R. Marcus. A brief, interesting and well written history of the role of Jewish people as citizens in America. Order from American Jewish Committee, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, New York. Free

* * * * * *

Jewish Holidays - Do You Know Them? by Elise F. Moller. A very excellent account of the Jewish holidays and their significance. Also suggested activities for Jewish and Christian young people that are related to the Jewish holidays. Price 15 cents.

Step by Step With Interracial Groups, by Dorothy I. Height. A new manual for leaders working with interracial groups. Should be in the hands of every person who has any responsibility for interracial activities. 25 cents.

Order the above two items from the Women's Press,
600 Lexington Avenue, New York 22, New York.

* * * * * *

America's Tenth Man. An excellent detailed survey of the contribution of Negroes in many areas of American life. 10 cents. Order from Southern Regional Council, 710 Standard Building, Atlanta 3, Georgia.

* * * * * *

The White Christian and His Conscience, by Lillian Smith. A prophetic statement addressed to the white Christian. Excellent for general distribution. 5 cents each. South Today, Clayton, Georgia.

* * * * * *

Interracial Primer, by Bayard Rustin. Describes a great variety of activities for individuals or groups who wish to tackle the problem of discrimination. 15 cents. Fellowship of Reconciliation, 2929 Broadway, New York 25, New York.

* * * * * *

The Black and White of Rejections for Military Service. Statistics on the rejection for military service of colored and white men because of educational or mental deficiencies show that Negroes in 10 northern and border states out ranked white registerants in 7 southern states. American Teacher's Association, Box 271, Montgomery, Alabama.

* * * * * *

Is It American? Democratic? Christian? A discussion of restrictive covenants in relation to our democratic and Christian heritage. 5 cents. San Francisco Council of Churches, 220 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco 2, California.

* * * * * *

How Management Can Integrate Negroes, A handbook for employers and labor leaders.

The Negro Integrated. The composite experience of many large firms in New York where Negro workers have been successfully integrated.

Free from the New York State War Council, Committee on Discrimination in Employment, Albany, New York.

* * * * * *

Seeking to be Christian in Race Relations, by Benjamin E. Mays. This author helps the reader to check his religious beliefs and to see how he can become Christian in his relationships with all races. 25 cents. Friendship Press.

Sense and Nonsense About Race, by Ethel J. Alpenfels. An anthropologist answers questions about race frequently asked in youth groups. 25 cents. Friendship Press.

Know - Then Act, by Margaret C. McCulloch. This pamphlet interprets race relations and describes types of effective action. Any concerned Christian can find here hints for things he can do. 25 cents. Friendship Press.

Discussion and Program Suggestions for Youth on the Christian and Race, by Elizabeth Nixon. 25 cents. Friendship Press.

The Jew Today, by Conrad Hoffman. An account of Jewish people in American life. 35 cents. Friendship Press.

Order above from any Presbyterian Bookstore.

* * * * * *

Christian Youth and Interfaith Cooperation. A discussion of principles and projects. 25 cents. United Christian Youth Movement, 203 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago 1, Illinois.

Labor's Enemy, Anti-Semitism. Shows clearly how anti-semitism has been used as a political weapon by forces of reaction and bigotery. Free. Anti-Defamation League, 100 N. La Salle Street, Chicago 2, Illinois.

Periodicals

American Unity. New York: The Council Against Intolerance in America, 17 East 42nd Street. Monthly. Free on request. Articles on intercultural education in schools, and materials on minority groups.

Common Ground. New York: Common Council for American Unity, 222 Fourth Ave. Quarterly $2.00 a year. Stories and articles on racial, national, and religious minorities in the United States.

The Crisis. New York: National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth Avenue. Monthly. $1.50 a year. News and stories about Negroes.

Ebony. Chicago. Negro Digest Publishing Company, 5619 S. State St. Monthly. $3.00 a year. A new picture magazine, similar to Life, depicting Negro life in America. Very outstanding.

The Journal of Negro Education. Washington, D. C.: Howard University Press. Quarterly. $2.50 a year. Review of problems incident to the education of Negroes.

The Journal of Negro History. Washington, D.C.: The Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, Inc., 1538 Ninth Street, N.W. Quarterly. $4.00 a year. Articles on research in the field, and book reviews.

A Monthly Summary of Events and Trends in Race Relations. Nashville, Tenn.: Social Science Institute, Fisk University. A report of current developments affecting race relations, action programs, editorial opinion and pertinent publications. Free.

Negro Digest. Chicago: Negro Digest Publishing Company, 5619 S. State Street, Monthly. $3.00 a year. Patterned after Reader's Digest, this magazine of Negro comment contains articles, selections from books, humor, etc.

Opportunity. New York: National Urban League, 1133 Broadway. Quarterly. $1.50 a year. News about Negroes, with special emphasis on their accomplishments.

Books

An American Dilemma, by Gunnar Myrdal. Harper and Brothers, 1945. $5.00.

Annals of the American Academy of Political Science, March 1946. $2.00.

Beyond Prejudice: A Story of the Church and Japanese Americans, by Toru Matsumoto. Friendship Press 1946. Cloth $1.25, paper 75 cents.

Black Metropolis, by St. Clair Drake and Horace Cayton. Harcourt, Brace, and Company, 1945. $5.00.

Brown Americans, by Edwin R. Embree. Viking Press, 1943

Brothers Under the Skin, by Carey McWilliams. Little, Brown & Company. 1943

Blind Spots: Experiments in the Self-Cure of Race Prejudice. Revised by Henry Smith Leiper. Friendship Press. 1944. Cloth $1.00, paper 60 cents.

Civilization and Group Relationships, edited by R. M. MacIver. Harper and Bros., 1945. $2.00.

Getting Acquainted with Jewish Neighbors, by Mildred Eakin. Macmillan, 1944. $1.00

Man's Most Dangerous Myth: The Fallacy of Race, by M. F. Ashley Montagu. Revised edition. Columbia University Press. New York. 1945. $3.25.

New World A-Coming, by Roi Ottley. Houghton, Mifflin Company, 1943. $3.00.

One Nation, by Wallace Stegner. Houghton, Mifflin Company, 1945. $3.75.

One God, The Ways We Worship Him, by Florence M. Fitch. Lothrop, Lee and Shepherd. $2.00.

Overcoming Anti-Semitism, by Solomon A. Fineberg. Harper and Bros. 1943. $2.00.

Prejudice - The Japanese Americans: A Symbol of Racial Intolerance by Carey McWilliams. Little, Brown and Company, 1944. $2.50.

Primer for White Folks, edited by Moon Bucklin. Doubleday, Doran Company, 1945. $3.75.

Probing Our Prejudices, by Hortense Powdermaker and Helen Storan. Harper and Bros., 1945. $1.00.

Portrait of a Pilgrim: A Search for the Christian Way in Race Relations, by Buell G. Gallagher. Cloth $1.00 paper 60 cents. Friendship Press.

Race Riot, by Alfred Lee and Norman Humphrey. Dryden Press, 1943. $1.50.

To Stem This Tide, by Charles S. Johnson. Pilgrim Press, 1943. $1.00.

The Story of the Springfield Plan, by Clarence Chatto and Alice Halligan. Barnes and Noble, Inc., 1945. $2.75.

Twelve Negro Americans, by Mary Jenness. Paper only, 60 cents. Friendship Press.

What the Negro Wants, edited by R. W. Logan. University of North Carolina Press, 1945. $3.50.

Order all books of any publisher from any Presbyterian

Book Store:
Witherspoon Building.....Philadelphia 7, Pa.
156 Fifth Avenue.....New York 10, New York
Granite Building.....Pittsburgh 22, Penna.
315 South Broadway.....Los Angeles 13, Calif.

Visual Aids

We Are All Brothers - What Do You Know About Race? 35 mm. filmstrip based on the pamphlet, "The Races of Mankind". 30 minutes. Available with speech notes for $1.00 from Public Affairs Committee, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, New York.

Forward All Together. 35mm. filmstrip describing the racial and religious groups that comprise America, their contributions, and the discrimination which some of them suffer. 30 minutes. Available with speech notes for $2.50 from Film Publishers, Inc., 12 E. 44th St., New York 17, New York.

Getting Acquainted with Jewish Neighbors 2 x 2 inch slides. Free. National Conference of Christians and Jews. 381 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Native Land. Movie produced by Paul Strand for Frontier Films. Directed by Leo Hurwitz. Music by Marc Blitzstein. Narration by Paul Robeson. An outstanding film presenting the struggle, on farms and in cities, against forces that would destroy American democracy. 90 minutes. $17.50.

Brotherhood of Man. 16 mm. sound movie in color. Animated cartoon dealing humorously but effectively with the problem of racial prejudices. Based on Public affairs pamphlet, "Races of Mankind" 11 minutes Rental, $3.00.

Order above two films from Brandon Films, 1600 Broadway, New York 19, New York.

Challenge to Democracy. A color film in 16 mm. sound concerning Japanese-Americans. Produced by the War Relocation Authority of the Department of the Interior. 20 minutes. Service charge 50 cents.

The Negro Soldier. 16 mm. sound film produced by the War Department Special Services Division. 40 minutes. Service charge $2.00.

Order above two films from YMCA Motion Picture Bureau:
19 S. La Salle Street, Chicago 3, Illinois
1700 Patterson Avenue, Dallas 1, Texas
347 Madison Avenue, New York 17, New York
351 Truk Street, San Francisco 2, California

Americans All. March of Time, 16 mm. sound film. Portrays the many diverse religions and racial groups in America 16 minutes. Free.

The World We Want to Live In, 16 mm. sound movie. 9 minutes. An appeal for racial and religious tolerance. Free.

Order above two films from, National Conference of Christians and Jews, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, New York.

One Tenth of Our Nation, 16 mm. sound film 28 minutes. The story of Negro life in America. $4.50.

As Our Boyhood Is. 16 mm. sound film, 20 minutes. Depicts the poverty and inferior schools of Negroes in the south, but also emphasizes progress that is being made. Excellent background for discussion. $3.00.

Order above two films from The Religious Film Association, Inc., 297 Fourth Avenue, New York, 10.

The Negro In American Life. A factual photographic exhibit of 26 large placards, each 20 x 30 inches, depicting the Negro as farmer, worker, writer, scientist, and teacher. May be obtained free, except for mailing charges, from the Council Against Intolerance in America. 17 E. 42nd Street, New York 17, New York.

Portraits of Outstanding Negro Americans, by Laura Wheeler Waring and Betsy Graves Reyneau. Ten portraits, 9 by 11½ inches, with brief biographies of each person. Available for $1.00 from any Presbyterian bookstore.

The Races of Man, Poster display of interesting pictures and factual information about all races. Available for $5.00 from the American Missionary Association, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

America: A Nation of One People From Many Countries. A map showing in broad outline where Americans live, what they do, where they come from, and what their religion is. Available without charge, along with a guide for its use, from the Council Against Intolerance in America. 17 East 42nd Street, New York 17, New York.

"I BELONG HERE"

by

MOST REV. RICHARD J. CUSHING, D.D.,

Archbishop of Boston

FOREWORD

The following pages contain an address delivered at the Ninth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at Boston, Mass., October 13, 1947, by the Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, D.D., Catholic Archbishop of Boston.

Congress of Industrial Organizations

PHILIP MURRAY, President

JAMES B. CAREY, Secretary-Treasurer

I am very grateful to you for the invitation to speak at this convention. I interpret your invitation as a compliment. I intend to pay you honor as best I can by being here this morning. When first your invitation came I found myself already confronted by an ecclesiastical program which was difficult to break. Nonetheless I broke it. I broke it because your invitation is an invitation from the people from whom I come, for whom I work, and to whom, personally and officially, I belong.

I am doubly glad to be here this morning because the invitation to speak which I received bore the signature of a great American—of a very great American—of a great American who has proved times beyond number both his Americanism and his greatness. I refer, of course, to the President of the CIO, Mr. Philip Murray.

I BELONG HERE

I am glad to come this morning because Mr. Murray invited me. But I am also glad to come because I belong here. I am a priest, an Archbishop. As such, I am by office and should be by my every personal action the representative of One Whom twenty centuries have hailed as their High Priest. To the eyes of other men, the Saviour appeared as a tradesman—a worker—and all those who share His priestly office should be found present wherever men are gathered who share in the labor which was the earthly vocation of Jesus Christ.

For this reason, priests have always belonged close to the ranks of labor, whether organized or not. In the Old World, as the late Pope once remarked, the tragedy of both religion and of labor for several generations has been that too many factors and forces came between some of the priests and many of the working people.

It is not my place to condemn those, who, consciously or unconsciously, fell victims of social and political systems which too often alienated clergy as a class from workers as a class. Neither do I intend to apologize for such systems. I hope that they are forever dead, and that all Europe has learned the lesson which a great English Cardinal tried to teach over a half century ago. Cardinal Manning said: "A new task is before us. The Church has no longer to deal with parliaments and princes, but with the masses and with the people!"

THE WORKING PEOPLE

The masses to whom he referred were the working people of Europe, the ranks of labor. Men like Cardinal Manning, Pope Leo XIII and other churchmen sounded like revolutionaries, even to the devout of their time, when they announced what should have been clear from the beginning: that priests and prelates, though dedicated to the service of all men equally, must have a special interest in the problems, the persons, and the prosperity of those who labor.

Here in this country, in the New World, there has never been the cleavage between the working classes and the clergy against which Cardinal Manning raised his voice. Not long ago the present Pope speaking to a large gathering of Italian workers said: "Visit countries where the Church can live and act freely, even if its members are only a minority, as for instance in the United States of America. Penetrate there in the huge organizations of industrial life. You will not find any trace of conflict between the Church and working world."

SONS OF WORKERS

How could there be? In this country it has been working people who have built the seminaries in which our priests are trained. Our institutions have no princely patrons; they are monuments to human labor and to the generosity of hard-working men and women. Working men not merely built and paid for our seminaries, they sent to them some of their best sons. I have said this before, but it is important to repeat it here: In all the American Hierarchy, resident in the United States, there is not known to me one Bishop, Archbishop or Cardinal whose father or mother was a college graduate. Every one of our Bishops and Archbishops is the son of a working man and a working man's wife. That is one further reason why I belong here this morning.

I take it for granted that this convention, like all conventions of a like nature, is called primarily to check on your past actions and to plan your future actions in the light of the aims and the purposes of your organization.

The aims of the CIO are those of the trade union movement and of organized labor generally. These are chiefly three: 1) the organization of the working men and women of America, without reference to race, creed, color or nationality, for mutual aid and protection; 2) the establishment of sound collective bargaining and wage agreements; 3) the promotion of legislation to safeguard economic security and social welfare, and to extend democratic institutions, civil rights and liberties.

UNIONS HERE TO STAY

For my own part, I cannot see how any man in his right mind, certainly how any American with the slightest comprehension of Christianity, can complain about those objectives. Moreover, I consider that, when all is said and done, the trade union movement in the United States is fulfilling these aims by means entirely within its rights and within the letter and spirit of our laws. The trade union movement has long since established its reputation for Americanism and its right to be heard. Whatever mistakes it may have made—and they are no more than those of other groups—to whatever excesses it may have gone—and these are easily balanced by those of its critics—the trade union movement is now a permanent part of the American picture. Labor is organized and it is organized to stay. Any one who has the slightest desire or dream to the contrary betrays by that fact a hopeless ignorance both of American history and of the American working man. Organized labor may have to meet criticism and a measure of opposition, but, I repeat, organized labor is here to stay.

I don't think organized labor should be discouraged when it is criticized. Everything that organizes arouses some one's resentment and some opposition. Organized religion does. Organized efforts of every kind do. An organized movement worth its salt welcomes criticism and thrives on opposition. When the criticism is reasonable, an organized movement profits from it. When it is not, sometimes the movement profits even more because it develops that special strength, stamina and power to endure that comes from the sheer necessity of learning and increasing your own strength.

CRITICS OF LABOR

I know the criticisms which are made of organized labor and I know, as do most people, the "lines" currently used in the campaign against unionism. You know them even better than I do. Some of the current criticisms may have some foundation in facts. If they do, you are in a far better position than your critics to know what these facts are and how to remedy them yourselves. Many of the criticisms of organized labor, its power, its proposals, its principles, come from men who would stop at nothing to bring back days to them dear but to the rest of mankind happily dead.

In any case there are no problems arising out of American organized labor, no problems internal to the labor movement or external to it in its relations with the rest of the community, which American labor cannot solve in an American way within the framework of American law and in the best interest of the American people.

Here in America all groups, educational, industrial, management, labor, and, in a sense, religious, have a common monitor; the Law. Organized labor does not stand in any need of special monitors; there is no reason why the labor movement more than any other movement in the United States should be an object of suspicion, repression or special monitoring. Labor is perfectly able to set its own house in order and to run that house as well as any other house in the American community.

LOYAL TO LEADERS

When I hear the excited talk about this, that or the other problem allegedly created by organized labor, I remember a famous report Cardinal Gibbons filed with regard to one of the earliest efforts at labor organization in the United States. You know, in his day an effort was made to discredit labor organizations and even to bring about religious condemnation of certain aspects of the labor movement. Men, professing to be the friends of law and order, when really they were the foes of both so far as working people were concerned, attempted to align the Church against the new labor organizations and the labor movement identified with them. The enemies of labor were powerful; they brought their case all the way to Rome. They knew then, as they would know now, that the great masses of American labor are loyal to their religious leaders and are inclined to hear with respect the voice of religion.

The Roman authorities asked Cardinal Gibbons what he thought of the dangers said to be present in the labor movement as of that time; the alleged danger that the wrong people might take over, the possibility of top-heavy power, the menace of political abuse and all the rest of it. The Cardinal was a calm man. He knew America and he knew Americans. He took a long range view of all questions involving the conflicts or competitions of the various groups which make up America and when that conflict was at its hottest he would point out that the lasting concord in a nation like ours can only come out of conflict fairly faced and honorably settled. So when they asked him whether the labor movement should be condemned because a lot of people had become upset about certain aspects of it, the Cardinal replied: "The American people behold with perfect composure and confidence the progress of our social contest, and have not the least fear of not being able to protect themselves against any excesses or dangers that may occasionally arise."

NO FEAR OF CRISES

I suggest that those who are disturbed by any crises in the labor movement, past, present or future, make their own the attitude of the great Cardinal. Genuine Americans are not afraid of crises. They do not condemn a movement because it runs into difficulties. They do not despair of an idea because it is challenged from without or hampered from within. Once they recognize that the essential idea of a movement is good—as the idea of the trade union movement is good—they go along with it through fair days and foul, confident that its goodness will prevail and that they can take care of any passing evil by due process of law.

The genuine American does not seek condemnation by decree or by hostile legislation against contending forces. In the words of the Cardinal: "The American people behold with perfect composure the progress of our social contest, and have not the least fear of not being able to protect themselves against any excesses or dangers that may occasionally arise."

Let us apply all that to some of the charges hurled against labor unions.

Every one knows that there are racketeers eager to take over the labor organizations; there are in many other organizations. There are racketeers in the professions, in public life, in almost every human pursuit.

CAN SOLVE OWN PROBLEMS

Everyone knows that there are potential traitors to America and to our organizations in the labor movement; so there are in the universities, colleges, magazines, radio, movies, professions and public life. There is nothing special to the labor movement about all of this—and to the extent that the labor movement has problems of this or any other kind, I reaffirm my conviction—which is yours—that there are none of its problems which American labor cannot itself solve in an American way within the framework of American law and in the best interests of the American people.

Wherefore I express the confidence that this convention will proceed in a spirit of discipline and unity toward the statement and the pursuit of the positive aims of the trade union movement rather than wasting its time on negative or divisive matters.

In this same spirit, while not presuming on my position as a guest here, I should like to refer to two matters: one domestic, the other concerned with our foreign relations.

STEADY WORK NEEDED

I have read with interest some of the deliberations of both management and labor concerning the so-called Guaranteed

Annual Wage. I know labor's position on this proposal. The worry of the working man has traditionally been this: jobs today—but what will happen tomorrow? Up to now many millions of Americans have been unable to answer that question for themselves. As a consequence they live in a fear which God never intended should be theirs. A wage earner must have steady work and pay this week, next week and all the year round if he is to have security. Only an annual wage is an adequate wage. So runs the labor argument and it is a hard argument to answer.

There can be no doubt that some economic solution must be found so that a man may intelligently plan his future and make provision to discharge those responsibilities which has been placed on him by God himself. It must be an intelligent and fair provision which does not make him the unnecessary beneficiary of charity or cause him to lose pride in his daily work. It may or may not be the so-called "Guaranteed Annual Wage," but it must be something close to it and I hope that a fair exchange of views on this subject between management, labor and the representatives of the public will lead to an answer consistent with the needs and decent demands of labor.

FIGHT WITH FOOD

The other positive point toward which I would direct your attention is concerned with certain questions of foreign policy on which organized labor has already shown a willingness to declare itself. Unfortunately at the moment, attitudes toward foreign policy are complicated by what are called "conflicting ideologies." Now I do not know what an "ideoloy" is. I suspect the word of being a catch phrase, a "phoney" word which can't be defined and which is therefore used to describe something not worth defining. Now-a-days we hear a lot about fighting "ideologies," and, here too, I am not sure how you go about fighting an "ideology." But I know what hunger is—and I know how to fight that. You fight it with food. I know what poverty is. You fight that with money. I know what winter is. You fight that with coal and clothing. I know what discouragement is. You fight that with friendship and friendly deeds. I know what fear is and defeatism. You fight them with faith.

I repeat: I do not know what the word ideology means. I do not know what the ideologies of the people of Europe and Asia are. I know what the ideologies of some of the political regimes are—but these are not the people. I know that all over Europe there is going to be hunger, poverty, cold, discouragement and fear. I know what these are and I know to what extremes they can drive decent, democratic God-loving people. I suspect that the best way to outwit or overcome evil "ideologies," whatever they may be, is by positive action of a non-political kind—by providing the things that fight hunger, poverty, cold, discouragement and fear—by providing as efficiently and as much and as quickly as we can food, money, coal, clothing, friendship and faith to the workers, to all the needy of the world who turn to us.

BACK WAR ON HUNGER

I am too grateful for your invitation to presume any attempt at undue influence on your deliberations. But this hope I do express: that an organization as powerful as the CIO—an organization with such great far-reaching prestige—will give sincere and solid backing to such points and plans of American foreign policy as will put our resources—food, money, coal, clothing, friendship and faith—behind the democratic—the human war on hunger, poverty, cold, discouragement and fear in the war-breeding areas of the world.

When we win that fight—a fight we can understand and can win—there will be less need for worry or talk or war about "ideologies."

I have deliberately chosen these two points to emphasize because one of them is concerned with your own interests and the other is concerned with the interests of other people, which interests, in the long run, are also yours. I have the same aspiration for organized labor in America that I have for my own Church in America, that I have for education in America and for every other group activity in the United States. It is that these may be a blessing to ourselves and a beacon to others. We owe the Old World much; we have depended on it for its sons and daughters to be our fathers and mothers, for its centuries of past experience to be the school wherein we learn to build a better future. We are indebted to the Old World alike for its triumphs and for its mistakes; both have taught us how to live better and more freely here in America.

A CHANCE TO PAY

Now we are in a position to pay something of our debt to the Old World. Sometimes we have to pay a bit of it with blood; may those times never be renewed! More often we are called upon to pay with resources, with the fruits of our labor and the good things of our earth. That we should do gladly. But most of all we have a chance to pay with our example—to show the devout of the Old World how the faith can be practiced by a free Church; to show the youth of the Old World how happy lives can be lived by a democratic people; to show the working people, the disorganized labor of the Old World, how organized labor here in America under the protection of sound laws can accomplish the magnificent aims which band together you of the CIO—the organization of working men and women, regardless of race, creed, color or nationality, for the mutual aid, protection, security and social welfare of all.

May God bless your deliberations! May God the Father, Who gave you your strength, teach you how to use it! May God the Son, made man to work among us, be your model! May God the Holy Ghost, the spirit diffused through the hearts of us all, unite you with one another and with all others who love God!

Murray's Comment—

After hearing Archbishop Cushing speak, CIO President Philip Murray referred to his address as a "masterpiece of logic . . . a remarkable address, a great tribute to labor coming from the heart and soul of a great man—one of us."

Additional Copies of Archbishop Cushing's Address May Be Obtained From—

CIO PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT

718 Jackson Place, N. W. Washington, D. C.

5c a copy; 100 for $4; 500 for $17.50; 1,000 for $30.

Other Publications Which Can Be Obtained Through the CIO Publicity Department:

The CIO News. Official national weekly newspaper of the CIO. Subscription, $1 a year ($1.50 in Canada). Special rates for bundle orders and group subscriptions.

Economic Outlook (Monthly). Current economic problems discussed from labor's viewpoint. 8 pp., 10c a copy, $1 a year; up to 100, 5c each; 100 or more 4½ each; 1,000 or more 3c each.

No. 111. Labor and Religion. How they may cooperate. 20 pp., 5c a copy, 100 for $4, 500 for $15.

No. 112. Union Hall Bookshelf. General labor bibliography. 28 pp., 10c a copy, 100 for $8, 500 for $30.

No. 114. A Society of Free Men. Speech of Bishop Bernard J. Sheil at 1944 CIO Convention. 8 pp., 100 for $1.50, 500 for $6, 1,000 for $10.

No. 125. The Bible and the Working Man. Colored picture strip. 2c a copy, 100 for $1.50, 1,000 for $12.50.

No. 132. The Truth About CIO. "Economic Outlook" reprint of "Ten Years of CIO" and "Finances and Government of CIO Unions." 16 pp., 10c a copy, 100 for $6, 1,000 $45, 5,000 for $200.

No. 141. Anti-Discrimination Speech. By Rabbi Stephen S. Wise at 8th CIO Convention. 8 pp., 5c a copy, 100 for $2.50, 1,000 for $20, 5,000 for $75.

No. 150. To Abolish Discrimination. CIO report submitted to the President's Committee on Civil Rights. 24 pp., 10c a copy, 100 for $8, 500 for $35.

No. 151. The Closed Shop. Statement by Rev. Jerome L. Toner, OSB, Ph.D., before Senate Committee. 16 pp., 10c a copy, 100 for $7.50.

No. 152. Unions and Co-ops. Concrete examples of and suggestions for a growing cooperation between both movements. 32 pp., 15c a copy, 100 for $12, 500 for $48.

No. 153. Analysis of the Taft-Hartley Act. Preferred by CIO Legal Department. 52 pp., 15c a copy, 50 for $6.25, 100 for $10, 500 for $45.

No. 154. What's Ahead? A survey of current economic trends. 36 pp., 10c a copy, 15 for $1, 100 for $5, 1,000 for $40.

No. 155. Build A Better Life. Congress of Women's Auxiliary Manual. 40 pp., 15c a copy, 100 for $12, 500 for $45.

Reprinted from
THE NORTH CENTRAL ASSOCIATION QUARTERLY
Vol. XXVII, No. 2, October 1952

II. THE LAYMAN'S STAKE IN EDUCATION: AS A MEMBER OF ORGANIZED LABOR VIEWS IT

MYLES HORTON
Educational Director of the United Packing House Workers Union, Monteagle, Tennessee

WE HAVE A WAY of making dreams come true and one of our great American dreams was of a free and universal system of education. Our forefathers dreamed of education that would provide for all people the enlightenment necessary for citizenship, "Free to the children of rich and poor alike."

Labor joined with other advocates of public education in launching a movement rooted in the needs and dreams of the people. "The vitality of the movement for tax supported schools was derived," said a historian of this period, "not from humanitarian leaders, but from the growing class of wage earners." Later, Beard was to state that organized labor took a lead "in demanding from the legislator the establishment of free and equal schools."

Labor people seldom attend a convention without being reminded of organized labor's role in establishing free schools in the face of opposition from the more respectable elements. The feeling is generally conveyed that public education is a dream come true, that public schools are a cure-all for whatever ails us. Labor, however, is not altogether uncritical. An effort was made to recapture some of the dreams of splendor by advocating vocational training of children of workers, a poor substitute for education for citizenship. On the whole, labor's role has been too much that of an outsider. This has certainly been true regarding participation in secondary education.

Let us take a look at the development of high schools and of labor's passive role in their development. The high school is a young institution in American educational history and was not an immediate outgrowth of the movement for mass education. In fact, the early high schools prepared students for college and did little else. Even today most high schools are better fitted for educating the one out of five students who go to college than for educating the majority who go out to earn a living. The fact that most students go to work and not to college has had too little influence on the high school program.

Vocational education attempted to remedy this situation. It not only fails to give the student an understanding of the world in which he will have to live but does not even provide the training needed for a livelihood. Vocational training has never been more than a patch-work affair.

It is also worthy of note that the high schools became institutionalized and got set in their ways during a period when our philosophy was that of individualism, when education was keyed to getting ahead.

The high school was naturally a product of its time, tailored to meet certain limited needs of the day. But times have changed. The early program has lost much of its meaning. Today, students must be taught to unite with others in a common struggle for a decent standard of living and to stand together against bigotry and war. Only by working together can the individual become a worthwhile part of society.

High schools, your Association declares, "must promote the principles and spirit of American democracy." This forthright statement of purpose has a tug to it but not enough of a tug to off-set the force of practices that run contrary to the purpose.

What of the practices in high schools? Are the schools set up from top to bottom on a democratic basis? Are the policy-making bodies representative of the people in the community? Is the relationship of administrator to teacher and teacher to student democratic? Do all have a voice in policy making?

High purposes can be nullified by the manner in which the school is organized and administered. Democratic principles must be incorporated into the structure and conduct of every facet of school life. Gandhi said it this way, "The value we seek in the goals must appear in the means we employ."

The average school board members, for example, come from business and the professions. However, most students come from working families and homes of white collar employees. There are few children of employers simply because there are few employers. The presence of one or two labor people on a school board may be a friendly gesture or it may be window dressing but it can hardly be considered representative, especially in cities where about four-fifths of the children come from homes of workers.

If the administrator's primary concern is with buildings and budgets rather than with the democratic organization of people there will not be the kind of cooperation which is essential. Genuine cooperation is possible only when all affected by a policy share in making it.

The professional relationships of teachers must be democratic. They should have a union so they can practice the democracy they teach. "Our whole educational system suffers," says John Dewey, "from the divorce between head and hand, between work and books, between action and ideas, a divorce which symbolizes the segregation of teachers from the rest of the workers who form the great mass of the community."

Students must be given the opportunity to learn from experience how the democratic process works. Teaching about democratic goals is not enough. Students learn far more from what they see and do, from the way they live, than from all the verbalizing to which they are exposed. The democratic principles should apply to the relationship of students one to another and with teachers and administrators. Students should certainly take part in making and carrying out school policies.

The high schools in many instances fall far short of the dream of democratic education.

What happened to labor? Why hasn't something been done about the situation? When the dream became a movement, labor was in the forefront but when the victorious movement resulted in the establishment of institutions, organized workers took a back seat. The infant's upbringing was left to the teachers and to the better educated citizenry. The high school teachers brought over their ideas from the private school, the only school they knew; and the better educated, being also the better off financially, shaped the schools to their own interest.

Labor, poorly organized and trustful, allowed the schools to drift into an alliance with the privileged. Labor's failure to follow through was not due to a lack of interest. Labor had failed to grasp the nature of institutions.

Labor's role in the movement for public education cannot be disputed but labor's failure to follow through and guide the destiny of the schools that it helped make possible is a different and less commendable story. Labor is becoming aware of this weakness but has not fully accepted the responsibility for doing a proper share of the day-by-day chores. Labor must help put life and vision in the institutional frame work.

While labor must accept its share of the blame, what of those to whom labor looked for guidance? The institutional side of the school which they neglected has absorbed too much of the attention of the school people. Too much time has been devoted to keeping the machinery of the institutions oiled and running. Too often sight has been lost of public education as a democratic movement. Spirit and purpose has been subordinated to framework.

Perhaps labor needs schools today less than the schools need labor. If the schools are to halt the present retreat and become truly democratic, understanding and constant support of labor is necessary. In the long run no other groups will have the will to fight off encroachments on democratic education. The basic interest of labor and the schools is the same. Educators should make it clear that the school needs labor's democratic strength; that labor should share in the policy-making and running of the schools.

"A school system," says the National Education Association, "which uses all the means at its command to create an understanding of the school's program and which invites the close cooperation of parents and other citizens in educational planning, will build a community-school relationship in which the popular mode of behavior is to support and befriend the schools, not attack them."

With Organized Labor and public education united in vision and in daily operations we would be in a position to make democracy a reality. No longer would distinction of class, of race, and of religion be tolerated. The schools could rise to the challenge of the day and help in the creation of an army of democracy rooted in the struggles and traditions of the American people, an army so vast and so determined that nothing undemocratic could stand in its path.

1952 PROGRESS REPORT

United Packinghouse Workers of America - CIO
Education Department

Myles Horton, Director
Highlander Folk School
Monteagle, Tennessee

The aim of the Education Department, as originally stated, was to "see to it that leaders are developed and that a maximum of union education takes place on the job, in the union and in the community; and, that education is not something apart from the union program as a whole."

A memo to the educational representatives stated, "We have set a high goal and one that is different. Your employment was approved by the UPWA on the basis that we find a way to develop leaders capable of handling local affairs without the help of field representatives. Once we learn to develop leaders we will then have the means of carrying on an effective program of general union education based on problems and issues."

A staff of five educational representatives were selected, trained and assigned to five districts:

Hy Kornbluh	-	District 3
Rosalie Widman	-	District 4
Don Leveridge	-	District 6
Ernest Smith	-	District 7
Betty Jean Johnson	-	District 9 (on leave of absence, as of Sept. 18, 1952)

When the program was launched the first of the year, it was decided that steward training had proven to be the best approach for developing leaders provided the steward's job is given a broad interpretation. When the stewards and local union officials assume personal responsibility for the farmer-labor,

A-D, political action, and other programs, a live connecting link has been welded between the national and district officials and the membership. Such spokesmen for the rank and file are essential for there to be a democratic two-way communication.

This decision to emphasize steward training for its own sake as well as for leadership was based on the past educational activities of the union. Therefore, a major portion of the education representatives' time has been given to steward training. More than sixty local union steward training sessions, some covering a period of two weeks, and fifty-six conferences with steward councils and departments, have been held.

Among the results are a higher percentage of grievances settled in the first step, formation of steward councils, discussions of contract demands, break-up of all-white departments, and an increase in the number of Negro, Mexican, and women stewards.

Despite their importance, we felt that steward training classes, which had always absorbed a major portion of any educational program, could be handled by local discussion leaders or instructors, thus releasing time for the development of the union program as a whole. It should be possible also for the local instructors, once trained, to discuss current issues and general programs.

With this idea in mind, the Education Department started experimenting with local instructors and a manual of procedures and subject matter. It was hoped that, when completed, such a manual could be used for training local instructors who, in turn, could use the same manual in teaching steward classes. Since the manual was thought of primarily as a means of training instructors, the content was limited to the fixed activities of the stewards and not program in general. Once trained, the instructors would be able to use materials prepared by those responsible for the various programs and departments.

The proposed Instructor Training Program was approved by the convention with the understanding that the plan would "enable the educational representatives to multiply themselves many times over and give the UPWA a direct educational contact with the stewards, and through them, with the membership."

Following the convention, the district directors were written: "We are in the process of testing a manual to be used in training the local union instructors. Once trained they will be used to present broader issues and for stimulating rank and file discussion on whatever problems confront the members. If we are to have a challenging educational program, a way must be found to put the program in the hands of the locals and that is what we have set out to do during the next few months."

We had hoped to have the procedures worked out by the end of 1952 and to have demonstrated the value of the local instructor program. This timetable was stepped up in District 3 where plans have been approved for spreading the program beyond the experimental stage with the cooperation of the field representatives. (See attached outline of procedures.)

In some respects the program is even further advanced. In District 4, where the director had previously expressed his desire to see instructors in every local, the instructors were also working on general union programs and there was a high degree of coordination between the instructor program and the district schools. At the September Gravois Mills School, specific plans were worked out by all delegates to process A-D grievances in their departments on their return, and for the instructors to use the grievances as a basis for discussion of the A-D program both in the plant and in the community. Where there were no instructors to do this, they were to be trained immediately. This plan would have provided the follow-up essential to the success of any school.

None of these plans were carried out because of the temporary transfer of the educational representative to the organizing staff.

We are revising the manual again before putting it in final form. It will be ready for use by educational and field representatives and instructors sometime in February, and will be in looseleaf form so sections can be changed and material added without too much expense. Subjects covered will be: contract, grievance procedure, job classification and standards, seniority, role of the steward, program and policy, structure and constitution, and local union structure. A handbook on leading discussion has been prepared for the instructors and most of the procedures for carrying out the instructor training program are now in written form.

Instructors' present activities consist of: holding steward training classes, conducting sessions on grievances, contracts, job classification and rates, leading discussions at steward council, steward meetings, and union meetings. There were discussions by most of the instructors on contract negotiations and new contract provisions.

Although forty instructors have been trained and 75% have already conducted steward training sessions for their own locals, the most important thing that has been done has been the working out of the program, and procedure for spreading the program.

In everything undertaken our aim has been to train people to do things for themselves. We have stayed in the background. Our efforts have been devoted to setting up a program that once in operation can move fairly rapidly towards activating the locals and developing local leaders. Immediate and limited results have been subordinated to the less spectacular job of taking the program of the UPWA directly and consistently to the stewards and through them to the membership.

Our conviction has grown that most of the problems must be solved in the districts where those responsible are in a position to know the situation and to follow through. Also, that it is imperative for us to reach deeper into the membership with a continuing program than has been done here-to-fore.

While all union program and convention mandates are necessarily subject to constant review, full use should be made of the authorized piece of educational machinery which has been hammered out at considerable cost and which is now ready to be fitted into the union structure. We have a volunteer service organization which, if supervised and developed properly, can make a lasting contribution to the welfare of the union.

INSTRUCTOR TRAINING PROGRAM, UPWA - CIO

DEVELOPING THE INSTRUCTOR PROGRAM IN A LOCAL

The Ed. Rep. and the Field Rep. lay out a plan together for handling the Instructor Program all through the following procedures.

I. Selection of Instructors

1. Ed. rep. and Field rep. (who is made thoroughly acquainted with the kind of people needed) confer as to person(s) in the local they could recommend as instructors based on qualifications, etc.

2. They decide how this recommendation should be made to local.

3. Local may do initial choosing depending on the situation; local always has the final approval.

4. Program and instructors (recommended by the Ed. rep, Field rep. and district director or the local) presented to local for approval.

   a. Should have endorsement of rank and file at a meeting, but the minimum requirement is approval by the executive board of the local.

II. Number of Instructors

1. Small locals may not be able to finance more than one.

2. In locals with two shift operations, there should be at least one instructor on each shift.

3. Large locals may prefer more than one, so the local will still have a program if an instructors leaves.

4. Where there is more than one instructor, they should work as a team.

5. In selecting instructors where there are a number in the local, they should be as representative of the different minority groups and other groups in the local, as possible.

III. Training of Instructors

1. Hold organized Training Conference of 3 - 4 days.

   a. Include 8 - 10 instructors.

   b. Staffed by Ed. rep. and Field rep(s) who share duties of running Conference.

2. Use of "Instructors Manual for Steward Training" at Training Conference.

   a. Instructors are required to read manual and other background materials, before coming to conference.

   b. Each has a chance to use the manual and lead discussions based on it. As staff man at Conference, field rep. also leads discussions based on manual, to familiarize himself with methods used.

3. Instructors should be trained as good discussion leaders, and be able to set up and carry out effective Stewards Training Program in locals.

IV. Follow-up and Supervision

1. Ed. rep. observes instructor at first Steward class; then holds meeting with instructor and field rep. to frankly discuss strong points and weaknesses and encourage instructor, etc.

2. Field rep. attends at least every other Steward Training session and meets with instructor afterward to review progress until program gets well under way.

3. When more than one instructor in locals, they can work as a team and may require less supervision.

4. Halfway through Steward Training Manual, a second Training Conference is held for the instructors.

   a. This is approximately as long as first one and conducted on an advanced level.

   b. It is staffed by the ed. rep. and field rep. with field rep. playing a bigger role this time based on his follow-up experience.

   c. Purposes of this second Conference are:

      1. Review and exchange of experiences and ideas.

      2. Constructive criticism.

      3. Training in second half of manual.

      4. Suggestions and discussion on broadening the instructor's role and function in the local following his completing the Steward's Training Course.

5. Instructor makes a report to the ed. rep. on all sessions and any other activities and requests and actions which result from them.

V. Certification

1. Instructor is certified after the completion of one Steward's Training Course with ed. rep and field rep's approval.

2. Certification should be formal, at a local meeting, by the district director, if possible. Should also include credentials, recognition, publicity.

VI. Field Rep's Role in Following Through With the Program

1. Field Rep. gives instructors guidance and backing in the local.

2. Field rep. works through instructors to further any program he is aiding the local in. He works out and plans with them how they can function in furthering particular program or handle a particular issue.

3. Field rep. helps arrange for selecting and training replacements, etc.

4. Field rep. advises on any special training for instructors needed to meet special needs and situations of local, and coordinates this with ed. rep.

5. Ed. rep. coordinates handling of special chain wide, International, District wide issues through field rep. to fit instructors into it.

6. Field rep. (with ed. rep. when necessary) will help and advise instructors in making use of local issues and immediate concerns such as negotiations, etc. in their program. Special materials from the national office, an Instructor's Bulletin to exchange ideas and materials from the Ed. Dept. will be channelled through instructor to further this.

7. Only as many instructors as a field rep. can effectively follow through with, will be trained in locals which he services or situations he is responsible for.

3-53

The Workers Education Bureau

By JOHN D. CONNORS

Director, Workers Education Bureau

THE question is often asked: "What is the Workers Education Bureau?" A very brief answer would be that the Bureau is the department of education of the American Federation of Labor. While it is only since late 1950 that the Bureau has been officially within the structure of the Federation, from its founding in 1921 it has performed the functions of a department.

The W.E.B. had the blessing of Samuel Gompers from the time it was projected. Said he in 1921:

"In view of the mounting costs of public education and the difficulties of obtaining funds, the volunteer energies of the American labor movement should be enlisted, particularly in the development of adult education, hitherto entrusted largely to struggling continuation schools.

"It may well be that organized labor, which took such a positive part in the establishment of popular education in the United States, will now take the lead in another movement of vital significance to the cultural development of this country."

The Workers Education Bureau was born in New York City at a meeting held at the New School for Social Research on April 2 and 3, 1921. Evidence of the interest in this new organization was the attendance at this conference called by a group of labor people and educators. Where twenty-five or, at the most, fifty persons were expected, since no funds were available for expenses, between 200 and 300 were present, many of the delegates coming from great distances.

Originally established as an independent organization for education of members of organized labor, the Bureau over the years gained greater and greater support, both moral and financial, from the A. F. of L., until by 1950 the Bureau was receiving an annual grant of thousands of dollars. In November of that year, pursuant to convention action, the Bureau was made an organic department of the American Federation of Labor, and in December was moved from New York to Washington.

In the period of a little over two years since that time, the work of the Workers Education Bureau has expanded to such an extent that greater space was required, and in January of this year we moved to the famous old Washington house at 1525 H Street, now owned by the A. F. of L. Labor's League for Political Education occupies the first floor of this building. The second and third floors were used as the headquarters of the National Association of Letter Carriers and the Postal Transport Workers, but when the Letter Carriers moved to their own new building near the Capitol, the second floor became available for the Workers Education Bureau. Here room is provided for the Bureau's educational work, including space for storing the films and filmstrips and visual equipment in its film library.

From its inception the Workers Education Bureau has served the organized labor movement as a clearing house of information and a coordinating agency in the field of labor education and related activities. As over the years it became more and more closely allied with the Federation, its chief function became more and more the stimulation and integration of union education in A. F. of L. organizations at all levels.

The Bureau now aids in planning nationwide programs, local classes and study groups, lecture courses, forums; advises on setting up scholarship award programs; helps develop public relations programs; assists in securing the inclusion of courses on labor in the public school curriculum, in gaining the cooperation of public libraries, in furnishing speakers, in furnishing materials for speeches and for radio and television programs.

In addition, it responds increasingly to requests for information, advice and materials on labor which come from colleges and universities, public school administrators and teachers, government agencies, libraries and other community organizations. Since establishing its film library in 1949, the Bureau has been very active in the visual education field, advising on and distributing labor films to labor groups and community organizations.

Our catalogue, "Films for Labor," has recently been revised and enlarged. This booklet lists A. F. of L. films and filmstrips and others useful to labor groups. It indicates what they are about, their length, their rental price, where they they may be procured, etc., and also gives hints on showing films and securing equipment. (For a copy of this catalogue, as well as for other educational pamphlets, write to the Workers Education Bureau, American Federation of Labor, 1525 H Street, N.W., Washington 5, D. C.)

Eagerness to learn is being shown by many modern trade unionists

Let us now turn our attention to one or two of the workers' education activities being carried on in the field. One significant project is developing in the South.

While over the years several of the State Federations of Labor in the South have sponsored sporadic labor institutes and various types of labor education programs, it was not until last year that a Southwide program was inaugurated. Sentiment for such a program had been building up for many years, and this came to fruition in October of 1952 with the holding of the first Southern A. F. of L. Labor School at Lakeland, Florida.

The fourteen State Federations of Labor in the area supervised by J. L. Rhodes, Southern organizing director of the American Federation of Labor, joined in sponsoring a five-day, intensive training program for officers of the State Federations and central labor unions in that section. The great success of the school was due largely to the months of preparation on the part of the board of control, composed of the presidents and secretaries of the State Federations in the South, with Edward H. Weyler of Kentucky serving as president and Stanton E. Smith of Tennessee as secretary-treasurer. Lew Rhodes and the author represented the A. F. of L. and acted as consultants.

The more than 100 officer-students who participated in this non-segregated labor school got intensive instruction in educational techniques, trade union theory, history, economics, political action and the increasingly important subject of labor's international relations.

Professor E. W. Waugh, Mississippi-born professor at the Michigan State Teachers College, headed the class in labor history. Here the delegates studied the history of the labor movement from earliest times down through the organization of the A. F. of L. and the gains won in the more than seventy years since the Federation's birth.

Dr. George Mitchell, director of the Southern Regional Council and a well-known student of the South and its problems, led the group through a detailed analysis of those problems and what is being done and needs to be done about them.

Chalk in hand, Director John Connors has a student's full attention

In my class the students worked on educational methods and techniques, and particularly those used in the programs of state federations, central bodies and international unions. Here I had the assistance of several guest lecturers—Russell Allen of the Paper Makers, Otto Pragan of the Chemical Workers and Sam Ezelle of the Kentucky State Federation of Labor.

Lew Rhodes was in charge of the class which discussed the functions of State Federations and city central bodies, and he, too, used guest speakers to explain how the Federation's policies and programs are implemented and coordinated by our affiliates.

The program of evening sessions started off with a world view when Serafino Romualdi, the A. F. of L.'s Latin American representative, described the Federation's work in combating communism throughout the world. Glen Slaughter, assistant director of Labor's League for Political Education, on another evening gave a picture of the current political situation. On the other evenings equally well-known speakers led stimulating discussions.

Already the hoped-for results of the Lakeland School have made their appearance in several parts of the Southland with the initiation of grassroots labor education programs, and a much larger Southwide school is being planned for this year by the board of control, now headed by E. H. (Lige) Williams of Louisiana.

This development in the South is but one of many examples which could be cited of the increasing interest in an educational program carried on by labor for labor.

Another area in which there have been significant developments recently as regards labor education is the field of higher learning. The number of colleges and universities —particularly state universities— which are cooperating in aiding workers through both extension and resident programs has lately shown a marked increase.

WE WELCOME the establishment of these university programs for workers, but we feel strongly that labor must have a voice in planning and carrying on these programs for its members. We feel that for each such program a labor advisory committee should be set up, with representatives chosen by the labor movement itself. Where this has been done, the result has always been a realistic and successful program, of benefit to our members, when the labor representatives have taken their assignments seriously and truly worked at them.

Eight of the universities participating in such programs have set up the Inter-University Labor Education Committee. This committee of sixteen members is made up of four representatives of the American Federation of Labor (President Reuben G. Soderstrom of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, Arthur Elder of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, Otto Pragan of the Chemical Workers and the writer), four from the Congress of Industrial Organizations and one representative each from the eight participating universities. These are Cornell University, Rutgers University, the University of California at Los Angeles, the University of Chicago, the University of Illinois, Pennsylvania State College, Roosevelt College and the University of Wisconsin. The project, now in its second year, will continue through 1954, under an annual grant of $192,000 from the Fund for Adult Education of the Ford Foundation.

Those who have set up the Inter-University Labor Education Committee have in view the broadening and expansion of labor education activities. They also envisage the establishment of a firm basis for cooperation among all universities active in this field, as well as a closer relationship between labor and the universities.

The broad objectives are the expansion of labor's interest in three fields—foreign affairs, economics and community participation. It is hoped to accomplish this expansion by promoting and stimulating interest among such unions as have thus far made no significant effort toward education in these three areas, or no effort at all toward a continuing program of education. A second aim is the development—by the process of experimentation—of techniques and tools which will make our educational efforts more effective and lasting.

Specifically, the Inter-University Labor Education Committee is trying to find answers to the following:

(1) The most effective ways and means of stimulating interest in workers' educational and community activities. This involves, for example, an appraisal of the respective value of single lectures, weekend conferences, summer courses, discussions tied in with membership meetings, attitude surveys, questionnaire approach, opinion meters, workshop and work projects, labor education committees and labor education councils, films and filmstrips, training of rank and file and union officers as discussion leaders.

(2) The most effective tools and materials to increase and maintain interest. This involves the use of a variety of techniques as well as the preparation and testing of various types of materials, course outlines, fact sheets, discussion guides, regular quiz programs, films and filmstrips, and the development and testing of follow-up programs.

(3) The development of valid evaluation procedures so that the effectiveness of these educational efforts can be measured.

(4) The suggestion of ways and means by which educational work can be made to reach beyond the rank-and-file union member to his wife and other members of his family.

Although workers' education leaders are still firmly convinced that the ideal labor education is that conducted and financed by the trade unions themselves, a large number of A. F. of L. organizations throughout the country are actively cooperating with the Inter-University Labor Education Committee because they recognize the real contribution such a project can make to the extension and development of labor education.

Not only has our workers' educaton program expanded nationally but our activities in the international field have expanded in equal measure. The influx of teams and individuals visiting this country from all over the world to study our labor movement has brought us the duty and the opportunity of acquainting our brothers from other lands with the significant role which our labor movement plays in the American economy. Their interest is particularly in our organizational structure and the newer techniques we have developed for collective bargaining, public relations and education.

I am sure that many of the readers of THE AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST have had personal contacts, as have we of the A. F. of L. staff in Washington, with the constant stream of trade union officials, workers in special industries and labor education specialists who have come to our shores in the past few years.

In addition to those who are here by direct invitation of the Federation itself, an increasing number are being brought over under the auspices of the Mutual Security Agency and under programs sponsored by the United States Labor Department and State Department.

Even though the many interviews, lectures, planning of itineraries and entertainment, etc., for these visitors are time-consuming and upset our daily routine, we are only too glad to lend a helping hand to our friends from overseas in their efforts to build free democratic trade unions in their countries as the chief bulwark against the ever-present totalitarian and Communist menace.

Here, then, are one or two instances of our endeavors to make workers' education a functional and vital part of the American Federation of Labor program at all levels—local, national and international.

A FEW W. E. B. PUBLICATIONS

FILMS FOR LABOR

Annotated list of A.F.L. labor films, filmstrips, and other topical films; also information on film showing and equipment discounts ..... 25¢

HOW TO RUN A UNION MEETING

Practical manual of parliamentary procedure for trade unionists ..... 25¢

LABOR'S LIBRARY

Annotated list of over 600 titles for trade unionists, educators, writers, students, librarians..... 50¢

SHOP STEWARD'S MANUAL

Practical manual to assist the shop steward with his job 25¢

For quantity rates, etc., write:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR
WORKERS EDUCATION BUREAU
1525 H Street, N. W., Washington 5, D. C.

Reprinted from

The American Federationist for March, 1953

17 17

J-19911—10M—4-53

Printed in U.S.A. on Union Made Paper

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME ONE - NUMBER SIX

June, 1953

Histadrut's cultural and recreational activities

Histadrut offers its half-million members a wide range of facilities for study and recreation. The membership of Histadrut is more than 50% of the total population of Israel, and Histadrut therefore plays a major role in all cultural activities within our State. These activities are directed by our Cultural Department which operates in three fields:

INFORMATION: Current events at home and abroad are presented through lectures in factories and over the radio. Special pamphlets and weekly seminars are additional means of keeping the Histadrut member well informed. Last year Histadrut sponsored about 80 study centers and classes for adults, and they were attended by about 3,500 workers. In Tel Aviv, about 400 workers attend a special evening high school, and a similar school is run in Haifa for hundreds of other workers.

EDUCATION: A network of people's colleges, a correspondence school, and special classes by arrangement with the Hebrew University are among the means of giving the workers a higher education. Histadrut libraries and cultural centers help raise the cultural standard in hundreds of communities. Each regional labor council and every immigrant camp has its own cultural committee which acts as liaison between the national center and the local groups. Local initiative is constantly encouraged.

ART: This division deals with all media of art expression. It publishes material on music (orchestral and choral), folk dancing, drama and other aspects of art.

What labor reads in Israel

Histadrut publishes its own newspaper, "Davar" ("The Word"), which has steadily gained in influence for a quarter of a century and has become the country's leading daily. Because of its high standard of news and comment and because of its reputation for authoritative and informed opinion, it is frequently referred to as the "The Times of Israel." It now publishes special women's and economic supplements, a popular illustrated weekly news magazine, a weekly children's magazine, and a special weekly trade union supplement.

In 1942, Histadrut founded its own publishing house, "Am Oved" ("Working People"), which publishes modern and classical literature, both fiction and non-fiction, drama, essays, poetry, pamphlets, and numerous other works, some in original Hebrew and some in translation from foreign languages, usually English. "Am Oved" has published translations of many books by leading American authors.

Interracial News Service

A DIGEST OF TRENDS AND DEVELOPMENTS IN HUMAN RELATIONS

BI-MONTHLY $2.00 FOR TWO YEARS

VOLUME 24 JULY-AUGUST, 1953 NUMBER 4

Segregation Walls Crumbling

In Arizona

On the basis of past decisions and present plans of independently acting boards of trustees, racial segregation in Arizona's schools will have been ended in all but two of Arizona's 14 counties by the beginning of the fall term of 1954—regardless of a pending State Supreme Court constitutionality.

By the fall of 1954, if the Supreme Court has not banned segregation, and hold-out school boards have not changed their minds, racial segregation will be practiced in less than a dozen school districts in Yuma and Pinal Counties.

The big break for exponents of racial integration came with decision of a majority of the Phoenix Union High Schools District Board to eliminate segregation with the opening of the 1953-54 scholastic year, next September. The Phoenix Union District was the last secondary schools district in the state to practice segregation. . . .

Neither school officials nor Negro leaders saw any likelihood of immediate mass shifting of Negro school attendance, and both felt that enforced integration would be the better way.

Elementary school board members explained their delay in integration of upper grades to be based not on reluctance, but on a practical approach to a complex economic and social problem. To the final solution they expected a study of a year's desegregation in the lower grades to contribute. The city is employing 70 Negro elementary school teachers, many or most of whom will be candidates for integration into the desegregated system.

The decision of the elementary schools board to desegregate on a two-step basis was unanimous. . . .

Majority members of the board poohpoohed suggestions of possible social reaction to such action taken on the local level. They pointed to the present apparent tranquillity in the school system of Tucson, the state's second largest city, which integrated its schools a year ago. (The Christian Science Monitor, July 24).

In Louisiana

Negroes, banding together as one, pulled a 90 per cent effective boycott . . . (in Baton Rouge, La.) and forced the end of absolute Jim Crow on the local buses of Baton Rouge, the state capital of Louisiana.

As a result of their unified fight, colored riders gained the right to sit anywhere on buses except for the two side seats in the front. White may sit anywhere on local transit lines except the rear seat across the back of the bus.

The city council of Baton Rouge in an emergency action approved the above plan which it considers an acceptable arrangement in an effort to end a week-long boycott of the Baton Rouge Bus Co., by Negroes.

The trouble all started two weeks ago when the city council passed ordinance ending segregation indirectly on the city buses in keeping with a campaign promise made by the city's mayor went into effect. Under the new law Negroes could keep their seats in the front of the bus if they boarded before whites did, and would not have to move to the rear as seats were emptied. They also could sit up front if no rear seats were available.

Because of this law, the company's white bus drivers refused to take their posts. They went on a four-day strike. This resulted in an opinion by Fred S. Leblanc, state attorney general, that the city ordinance violated the state segregation laws. When this ruling was announced, the white bus drivers returned to work.

This in turn drove the city's Negroes, who make up two thirds of the bus line's passengers, into action. They refused to ride the bus lines, making these demands:

1. The company abide by the new city ordinance.

2. The company hire Negro bus drivers or the city issue a separate franchise to allow Negroes to operate their own bus lines.

To demonstrate their intentions, the Negroes then organized what they called a "fair lift" free automobile service to replace the bus service. Under this program about 150 automobiles have been utilized to transport them.

Considering the Negroes demands, there is no assurance that the city council's compromise action will end the boycott.

Through the United Defense League, which is operating the fair lift, Negroes have raised more than $1,000 to support their cause. T. Roosevelt Smith is executive chairman of the Board of the UDL.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, president of the UDL, said this action is not a boycott. He declared, "That's illegal. We're just not riding."

Aiding the Negroes in their fight were three service stations which sold gasoline to the fair lift at wholesale prices. The fair lift also organized a system of stations or pickup points for passengers.

The city ordinance was passed March 11, 1953, but became effective only recently.

Bus drivers were angered because Negroes refused to get up from seats in the front and move to the rear when white passengers boarded.

Action by colored people here is believed to be the first of its kind by Negroes against transportation Jim Crow, especially within a city. (The Saint Louis Argus, July 3).

In North Carolina

A showdown between Bishop Vincent S. Waters and the die-hards in the Catholic church of North Carolina appeared imminent last week over the prelate's order banning segregation of the races in all Catholic churches in the Diocese of Raleigh.

In the latest order on the controversial question of the segregation of the races in churches the bishop said "There is no segregation of the races to be tolerated in any Catholic church in the Diocese of Raleigh."

The bishop's statement came while Catholics who desire the segregation of the races were still angry and non-cooperative over the bishop's order for the merger of the white and Negro Catholic churches in Newton Grove several weeks ago. Though oppositions mounted week after week on the merger order, the bishop steadfastly has refused to waver.

Some white members have boycotted services at the Church of the Redeemer since it was merged with the Negro Catholic Church in Newton Grove.

Instead of rescinding his order, the bishop now has extended it to include all churches in his diocese. (Chicago Defender, July 4).

New Strategy

Delegates to the annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were told today their organization was not planning any legal moves that would expand or improve separate facilities for Negroes.

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the association, said the only aim of its legal staff was to start court actions leading to total integration of Negroes and white persons in every community in the country. . . .

In a special message read to the evening session of the convention, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York declared that the struggle for equal rights was not one for colored people only. He said it was a national responsibility. (New York Times, June 25).

"Texas" In Kansas!

The O. R. Burden Construction Company, a pipe line company, operating out of Texas, found out that is could not draw the color line in hiring employes in the Kansas City area. The Company, through its superintendents, have continuously stated that they would not work with Negroes.

When the Company started to build a pipe line through the Kansas City district, Laborers Union 663 of Kansas City, Missouri, and Laborers Union 1290 of Kansas City, Kansas agreed to split the men working on the job between the two unions.

On July 1, the company called Local 1290 for five men, and Local 1290 filled the order from the rotation plan used by the Union by sending out the next five men who were to be sent out to work. The five men sent were Negroes. They reported to work at the O. R. Burden job at Lees Summit, and superintendent for the company, stated that he did not want the Negroes because he would not mix his crews. He added that if he did there would be trouble.

Robert Powell told the superintendent that Local Unions 1290 and 663 refused to recognize any color line and that any man, regardless of his color, was entitled to work on any job. He further suggested that they employ the two men or the Union would refuse to furnish any other laborers, because the Union would not be a party to racial discrimination. He referred the superintendent to the no discrimination clause in the Union contract. The men were immediately hired and on July 22, four other Negroes were hired by the Union. (The Call, July 14).

Housing In Toledo

Segregation in Toledo public housing units will be ended not later than October 23, according to a consent decree signed last week by Federal Judge Frank L. Kloeb.

The order was approved by (Toledo Metropolitan Housing Authority) counsel and attorneys for four Negro families who filed action seeking an injunction against the authority to compel their admittance to vacant units in three projects now occupied exclusively by whites.

The order, signed by Judge Kloeb follows a long controversy over TMHA's announced intention of ending segregation. The policy was announced originally in January, but immediately became a heated community issue.

East Toledo whites opposed integration. The Toledo Board of Community Relations asked T.M.H.A. not to put the policy into effect until it could study the situation. Subsequently, the board said, on the basis of economics and principle, TMHA had no alternative but to proceed with the implementation of its policy.

The court action was instituted when the controversy dragged on and opponents of non-segregation resorted to various maneuvers to stifle the policy. . . .

Judge Kloeb held that there was no question of civil rights involved in the case, since TMHA had announced its intention to eliminate the practice. He did say, however, that it was his duty to see that the policy was carried out in reasonable time. Accordingly, he fixed the October date.

TMHA administers seven projects containing 1,400 units. In the past, three on the east side of the city's Maumee River —the stream divides the city—have traditionally been reserved for whites. Those on the west, with slightly more than 700 units, have been earmarked for Negroes. (St. Louis Argus, July 3).

Atlantic City Schools

(Atlantic City's) integrated school system was recommended as a model for other cities by Dr. John P. Milligan, local superintendent, in a speech in St. Louis recently.

Dr. Milligan was invited to address a human relations workshop at Washington University in St. Louis . . .

He told the Missourians that the local school system has derived many benefits from integration of students of all races.

. . . Dr. Milligan told the human relations study group that no problem has arisen in the local school system as a result of a colored teacher's authority over white children.

Emphasizing how school integration saves the taxpayers money, the local superintendent pointed out to the Missourians that only one instead of two high schools, two junior high schools and two vocational schools are now needed here. (Afro-American, August 15).

ON THE OTHER HAND

In Illinois

The FBI today began a preliminary investigation of a race disturbance at a federal housing project after seven "Japanese mortar bombs" were confiscated from members of an unruly crowd and 30 persons were arrested.

The Chicago Crime Laboratory began tests on the "bombs" taken from the crowd . . . to determine how deadly they were.

Alfred F. Muench, regional attorney for the Public Housing Authority, (recently) requested FBI agent-in-charge Kline Weatherford to take a hand on the ground that $700 damage had been done to federal property.

Weatherford said that he would assign agents to make a preliminary investigation to determine if the FBI had jurisdiction.

Some 750 policemen have been working in three shifts, trying to keep order at the Trumbull Parks Housing Project since Sunday night (Aug. 9) when the first crowd of 3,000 persons assembled to protest the movement of a Negro family into the previously "all-white" project.

The family was that of postal worker Donald Howard.

A six-man police detail guarded the lives of Howard and his family, with two officers detailed to sit on the front step of his home. . . .

Police reported that hoodlums strung wire across alleys in the neighborhood and strewed nail-filled boards on streets to hamper squad cars. All taverns in the neighborhood were closed after five steel workers were cut by flying glass Monday while driving home from work through the area. . . .

Commissioner O'Connor said the disturbances were "almost completely a juvenile picture." . . .

O'Connor said 10 per cent of Chicago's 7,000 policemen were being used to protect the Howards and other residents of the project. (New York Post, August 12).

— — —

An Illinois FEPC bill, endorsed by the Republican governor and having the support of several civic organizations, last week was defeated in the senate, 29-13. . . .

Although Gov. William Stratton, a Republican, supported the bill, most of the Republicans in the senate voted to uphold a senate industrial affairs committee's recommendation that it be killed. . . .

The bill would have established an Equality of Employment Opportunity commission. This body would have worked to end discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry. . . . (The Call, July 3).

In Florida

Francis M. McHale, Jacksonville attorney, made it known this week that he has been hired by the Southern Knights of the Ku Klux Klan to fight any siuts aiming to break down racial segregation in the state of Florida.

He said that he is not a Klansman, and would be available for court appearances in Georgia and Alabama, too.

— — —

Bill Hendrix, former Klan leader, who announced his disassociation with the Klan several months back announced here that 23 representatives from six states gathered in Columbus, Georgia, last weekend to form one strong Klan outfit.

Hendrix, who was just licensed as an evangelist in Leon county, described himself as imperial emperor of the new Klan.

He said that if the U. S. Supreme Court rules to kill the South's present segregation customs, that the Klan would be available to carry on a legal fight to preserve segregation, and to try to keep hot-heads from violent action.

He asserted that the new Klan would be a strictly educational organization. (Jacksonville Chronicle, June 26).

In New Jersey

The last remaining defendant in the case of the "Trenton Six" will be paroled from prison in November, the Parole Board announced today.

He is Ralph Cooper, 27, who was sentenced to 6 to 10 years in prison last February when he entered a no defense plea to the charge that he helped kill William Horner, 72, on Jan. 27, 1948, in a $35 holdup.

Cooper was one of six Negroes arrested for the murder. . . .

The case attracted national attention when all six were convicted and sentenced to die. A new trial was ordered by the Supreme Court, but there was a mistrial when the prosecutor became ill.

At their third trial, Cooper and Collis English were convicted. James Thorpe, McKinley Forrest, Horace Wilson and John MacKenzie were acquitted. Another trial was ordered for Cooper and English, but the latter died in State prison.

Last February, Cooper appeared in court, accused all six of participating in the crime and was given a 6 to 10-year sentence. At that time the Princeton Committee for the Defense of the Trenton Six charged that Cooper had been coerced into a second false confession and that his reward was a minimum sentence that would permit a quick parole. (New York Post, August 11).

In Naval Installations

A Negro today said the Navy did not go far enough in modifying segregation policies for civilian workers in Southern Navy Yards.

Clarence Mitchell, Washington director of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the new policy "could mean ending segregation in 30 days or 30 years. Hence, there will be no cheers for the Navy until the last Jim Crow sign comes down."

The Navy plans to announce soon a change in policy stating that common, rather than separate, facilities for civilian employes is the desired goal. Base commanders will be required to report periodically on their progress toward integration.

The old policy tells base commanders to follow "local customs" in determining racial policies among civilian employes. (New York Post, August 11).

CIVIL RIGHTS

Buried in Congress

The 83rd Congress closed its first session . . . this week without having enacted a single civil rights measure, Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington bureau of the NAACP, reported in a survey of congressional action.

"From the beginning when a Republican and Democratic coalition defeated an anti-filibuster rules change offered by Sen. Clinton Anderson (D., N. M.) by a vote of 70 to 21, the 83rd Congress made a determined and successful effort to avoid consideration of civil rights," Mr. Mitchell asserted. . . .

Senator Ives set hearings on FEPC legislation, but postponed them until January, 1954. No other committee of Congress definitely set hearings on civil rights bills.

The late Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.) was studying anti-jim crow travel legislation in his committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and had agreed to hold hearings, but dates had not been set.

Although civil rights bills have been introduced in all major categories such as fair employment, anti-lynching, anti-jim crow travel and anti-poll tax, none of these is an administration bill.

Committee chairmen usually act on such legislation when the White House asks them to do so, Mr. Mitchell pointed out. (The Afro-American, August 15).

— — —

A Resurrected Committee

President Eisenhower created a new fourteen-member Government Committee (Aug. 13) to prevent discriminatory employment practices in companies with Federal contracts.

The President issued an executive order that rescinded one by former President Truman. Under the new order, President Eisenhower will replace the present Committee on Government Contract Compliance with a new Government Contract Committee.

. . . The mission of the committee is to prevent discrimination against any employe because of race, creed, color or national origin. It is one area of the civil rights problem in which the President can act by exercising his own power to eradicate unfair practices. This power, however, is limited to work done for the Government under contracts that contain a fair employment practices clause. . . .

Negroes again will be members of the new committee. . . .

The essential difference between the old and the new committees is that the new unit will have definite operating functions. . . .

The new committee will:

Receive complaints of discrimination, forward them to the appropriate agency of Government for processing, and receive reports from these agencies on what has been done about the complaint.

Establish compliance machinery.

Stimulate educational programs aimed at eliminating the basic causes of discrimination.

Maintain cooperative relationships with state, local and non-governmental agencies.

In addition, it will have more public members than the old committee—nine instead of six—and more Government agency representatives—six instead of five. It is understood that although the order provided for eight public members, an amendment will raise this to nine. . . . (New York Times, August 13).

The matter in these pages is presented for the reader's information. It is not to be construed as reflecting the attitudes of the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations or of The National Council of Churches.

ON MEETINGS AND CONVENTIONS

The question of race segregation in convention cities threw the hitherto peaceable assembly of the international convention of the Disciples of Christ, in Portland's (Ore.) public auditorium, into an uproar . . . (recently.)

When the clamor had subsided, the delegates had voted overwhelmingly to support a resolution to hold meetings "only where there are facilities in hotels and other places of meeting that are open to all participants without discrimination . . ." and to have arrangements committees "press unremittingly for the achievement of the goal of a completely non-segregated convention."

Gaines M. Cook, executive secretary of the convention, explained that tentative arrangements in Miami include use of the auditorium on a completely non-segregated basis, and an understanding no meetings will be held where there is racial segregation; also, that there is a hotel, "equal in accommodations to any in Portland" which is available for use of Negro delegates. "We've been trying to get better arrangements if possible," he added.

The . . . feeling that ran through the crowded auditorium in no instance supported segregation. The delegation was apparently divided into those who felt that to go on with the Miami arrangements would be a denial of the non-segregation principle, and those who felt that to stay out of the South entirely, because of discrimination—some of it compelled by law—would amount to discrimination against the southern Disciples. (The Oregonian, July 8).

WHO IS WELCOME

"If Jim Crow's gaunt specter eventually is to be driven from the temple," writes Howard Whitman, . . . "young members of our churches must do it, for they are the ones with the strength and the desire for fair play. And make no mistake—the fight already has begun. But progress is pathetically slow."

Whitman cites the case of two Negro children in Minneapolis who came to church and were admitted to the Sunday school. He reveals that nothing was said to them until they were leaving at which time a deacon of the church reportedly drew them aside and stated calmly, "I don't think you'd better come back here any more. This really isn't your church, you know."

In Portsmouth, Ohio, according to the author, a Negro woman prominent in civic affairs was invited to speak at a "white" church. However, two weeks before the event was to take place, it was called off. The minister of the church haltingly explained that "some of his people" objected and that two women threatened to quit the church if a Negro came to speak. Ironically enough, the occasion for which the speech had been planned was Brotherhood Week!

Whitman commented:

"That is the pattern with, of course, the exception of a few churches here and there which are blazing a new trail by opening their doors to all people.

"It is a pattern whose devious design shows up in every section of our country. Segregation is not a problem of the deep South only. In 1948, a survey of six denominations embracing 17,900 revealed that only four and one-eighth (correct figure is 4.8) per cent included Negroes.

"A current survey of three denominations embracing 13,597 churches shows that nine and one-eighth (correct figure is 9.8) per cent include either Negroes or some other racial minority.

"As for the Negroes themselves, it is estimated that less than one per cent find themselves in churches where they worship side by side with their white brothers."

Next is cited the example of discrimination on the part of ministers, as told by Rev. Julian J. Keiser, minister of a racially integrated church. He said one of his colleagues in Chicago has a kid-glove technique of segregation. Whenever a Negro family presents itself at his church, he says "You'll be welcome here. Yes, indeed. But wouldn't you be happier in one of your own churches?"

Whitman asserted, "That's all it takes. They never come back."

Such a technique, it is ably pointed out, enables church people to deny that they were insincere in their welcome. . . .

Many of the nation's ministers reportedly feel that the young people will guide the churches out of the religious morass of segregation. . . .

The Rev. Julian J. Keiser of Chicago reported on the feeling of his church in trying to practice what it preaches. After a flurry of opposition which accompanied the opening of its doors to Negroes a new spirit pervaded the Warren Avenue Congregational church. "It seemed to come right in through those open doors," Mr. Keiser reveals.

He stated further, "People feel relieved that they are now practicing what they preach and what their Gospel has been preaching for so long. They feel clean, honest about their convictions. They know it was un-Christian to exclude Negroes in the past, and they know they are doing right now. You can count more on Christian conscience than you realize."

In concluding his article, Whitman pointed out:

"The luxury of the gradual approach may not be available to us much longer. For we live in a world where colored people—the brown of India, the black of Africa, the yellow of Asia—are looking us over and appraising this product called democracy in which we are trying to interest them." (The Call, July 7).

SOUTH AFRICA

South African Prime Minister Daniel F. Malan has agreed to meet with representatives of the Colored People's National Union to discuss the vital question of the Colored franchise.

This may prove to be an historic meeting, for the rigidly pro-white government of Dr. Malan has broken off almost all contact with the non-white segments of the South African community.

The interview . . . (was) arranged for Aug. 14—five days before the joint sitting of both houses of Parliament is due to be resumed and a vote taken on the bill removing Colored voters from the common voters' roll.

George Golding, president of the union which claims a membership of 40,000, (said, among other things) . . .

"We feel the time has come to make a direct approach ourselves to discuss the whole question with Dr. Malan and explain our point of view."

The Teachers' Educational and Professional Association, a moderate Colored organization to which many members of the CPNU belong, has issued a memorandum protesting not only against the highly controversial proposal to validate the Separate Representation of Voters' Act which takes Coloreds off the common electoral roll, but also against the suggestion that the qualifications of Colored voters should be raised.

The memorandum states: "We have only one suggestion—that all existing educational and economic qualifications be abolished and adult suffrage introduced as for whites." . . .

Some Colored persons who are skeptical of the approach to Dr. Malan are apprehensive that the union may be tempted to bargain with the government or extract some promise from them in return for agreeing to an alteration in Colored franchise . . .

Some Nationalist MP's (Members of Parliament) are saying that concessions will eventually have to be made to Colored voters, but that such concessions are impossible while the Colored people share the electoral roll with whites.

The concessions being mentioned are the extension of the Colored franchise to the northern provinces of South Africa . . . the enfranchisement of Colored women and the right of Colored people to be represented by Colored MP's.

Such radical concessions, say the Nationalists. would sway enough right-wing members of the opposition United Party to vote with the Nationals and thereby create the necessary two-thirds majority of both houses needed to constitutionally pass the Separate Representation of Voters Act. (Christian Science Monitor, Aug. 6).

Published by the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, Division of Christian Life and Work, National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. Editors: J. Oscar Lee, Alfred S. Kramer and Geneva R. Jones.

THE TEST OF A DEMOCRACY IS ITS TREATMENT OF MINORITIES.

(Used by permission of the author and illustrator, Frank Hanley.)

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN THE U.S.A.
DEPARTMENT OF RACIAL AND CULTURAL RELATIONS
297 Fourth Ave. New York 10, N. Y.
Return Postage Guaranteed

Sec. 34.65 (e) P.L.&R.
U. S. Postage
PAID
New York, N. Y.
Permit No. 14717

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.

Atlanta, 3, Ga. ins

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME ONE - NUMBER SEVEN

September, 1953

I am renewing the monthly publication of our Newsletter after a break during the summer months. I was away from the United States, attending the Congress of the ICFTU in Stockholm as a member of our delegation and I was also home in Israel for three weeks prior to my return to this country.

The Histadrut delegation in Stockholm participated fully in the work of the Congress and thus had a chance to meet delegations from all the free trade union movement throughout the world. When the question of Histadrut's inclusion in the Executive Board of the ICFTU was raised in Stockholm, we were glad to find that our candidacy got the whole hearted support of the American and Canadian delegations of the AFL and CIO. We were gratified to find that both delegations regarded the presence of an Israeli representative on the Executive Board of the ICFTU, representing 500,000 members of trade unionists in the Middle East, as an asset for the young organization of free trade unions. Both in Stockholm and back in Israel, we felt that this attitude on the part of the American trade union movement strengthened the tradition of friendship and solidarity which has existed between our two movements for so many years.

After the Stockholm Congress of the ICFTU, an official delegation of the CIO visited Israel at the invitation of Histadrut. The delegation consisted of James B. Carey, Secretary Treasurer of the CIO and President of the Electrical Workers Union; Michael Quill, Vice-President of the CIO and President of the Transport Workers Union; and Arthur J. Goldberg, General Counsel of the CIO and the Steelworkers. We also had Phil Kramer of Boston, Vice-President of the ILGWU, as our guest. We hope that an official delegation of the American Federation of Labor will visit us soon.

Inflation Checked

I had been away from Israel for about nine months and was therefore able to observe some changes, although my stay was very short. Our State has doubled its population during the last five years and maintained a policy of full employment, even at the cost of inflationary budgets. Reduced government expenditure resulted in checking the inflationary process but at the same time created some unemployment. The last year brought with it some improvement in our economic situation but created hardships for the working population. Therefore Histadrut has been confronted by some serious problems; our funds are being used in order to create new jobs by giving loans to industrial enterprises or municipalities; unemployed workers in towns are being assisted to move into agricultural cooperatives; efficiency councils, established jointly by labor and management, help the young Israeli industry in producing more and better goods for export; Histadrut is mobilizing both manpower and financial resources to help develop the desert land of the South (Negev).

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME ONE - NUMBER EIGHT

November, 1953

Arab Workers in Histadrut

Israel's Arab population is 175,000, about 10 per cent of the total population of the country. About 120,000 Arabs live in villages as small farmers and as farm laborers, about 35,000 are in towns and the rest are nomads (Bedouins). For many years Israel's Federation of Labor (Histadrut) tried to organize these workers into unions, but never met with more than partial success. The Arab farm laborer who worked for a Jewish employer showed some response to the idea of unionization, but it was practically impossible to organize the Arab farm worker who was employed by Arab landowners. This was chiefly the result of the Arab landlord's abuse of the bond of race and religion that existed between him and his employees, whom he was easily able to convince that union organization was an undesirable modern device or even a weapon wielded by the Jews for sinister purposes.

As early as 1927 Histadrut launched its first efforts to organize Arab workers, and created the "Palestine Labor League" for the purpose. Before 1948 this organization met with only fair success, but the establishment of the State of Israel in that year improved the prospects of reaching the Arab worker. Branches of the "League" exist in 53 villages and seven cities. Full success came last spring, when Histadrut invited all Arab workers to join its trade unions. In the eight months that have passed since this step was taken, about 16,000 Arab workers have joined Histadrut trade unions.

Many of the unions which Arabs have joined are in the predominantly Arab town of Nazareth and in the hills of Lower Galilee. They are clerical employees, Government workers, teachers, quarry workers and men employed in the building trades. Arab industrial workers in Haifa and Jaffa, including workers in automobile repair shops, have also joined Histadrut unions, as have railway employees in Lydda.

Establishing Cooperatives

Histadrut has had to use unorthodox methods in bringing the full benefits of the labor movement to the Arab workers, who have become accustomed to exploitation for centuries and have been kept on a standard of living well below what would in modern countries be called the subsistence level. Many of the Arab workers live in tiny primitive villages and are, at least theoretically, self-employed. Because of their environment and way of life, Histadrut believes that cooperation is the best way of raising their standard of living, and a number of cooperatives, both in production and services,

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME ONE - NUMBER NINE

December, 1953

Vocational Training

Every one of the 750,000 immigrants who poured into Israel in the last five years is a consumer, and the country's consumption rate of manufactured goods has more than doubled. But only a tiny fraction of them were producers when they came, and the result was a badly unbalanced ratio of supply and demand. The country simply did not have enough skilled workers to produce the consumer goods needed by the population.

Industry needed both men and money. Since the State of Israel was created in 1948, a billion and a quarter dollars have entered the country as capital investment. But the growth of skills did not keep pace. Back in 1926, 57 per cent of new immigrants were skilled workers. In 1950, only 15 per cent of the newcomers were skilled, and this proportion has continued to this very day. There is consequently a drastic shortage of competent manpower in every branch of industrial production.

To supply the constantly increasing demand for skilled labor in industry, a nationwide program of vocational training was sponsored by the Ministry of Labor, the Histadrut (Israel's Federation of Labor), the Manufacturers Association and the Labor Exchanges (controlled by the unions). In the last two years, 20,000 unskilled men and women have attended training courses and have acquired industrial skills.

The first step in the training of the skilled worker is a full-time course on the basic elements of the skill being studied. These courses consist of seven hours of classroom instruction a week and forty hours of actual work at the trade. When he has completed this course, the worker has mastered the trade sufficiently to be able to get a job in industry.

Once he has begun to work in his new job, he can continue to study his skill in the evenings by attending advanced courses. These provide a staggered system of instruction from basic training through successive degrees of skill-improvement until the worker has reached the highest possible proficiency. Many an immigrant in Israel has completed his elementary training in a new skill and has then risen, helped by a succession of courses, to the highest levels in his trade.

Range of Courses

More than 100 different skills have been taught to immigrants. The most important of these have been the building trades (bricklayers, formsetters, iron-benders, plasterers, tillers, etc.); metal crafts and allied trades (locksmithy, tool-making, turning, riveting, welding); Diesel, auto-

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME TWO - NUMBER ONE

January, 1954

THE NEW YORK TIMES, MONDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1953.

WAGE RISE AVERTS STRIKE BY ISRAELIS

Manufacturers Agree to Extend Cost-of-Living Accords—410,000 Will Benefit

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TEL AVIV, Israel, Dec. 20—An agreement between industry and labor extending the escalator system of pegging wages to the consumer-price index was announced last night. A strike threatened by the General Federation of Labor (Histadrut) earlier this week thus was obviated.

The accord directly affects 60,000 employes in capitalist industrial enterprises, but the pay increases automatically will go to 350,000 other wage-earners, both organized and unorganized. Quarterly agreements between the Association of Manufacturers and the General Federation of Labor for the last fourteen years have been automatically fulfilled by all employers, including the Government and other public bodies, farmers, public utilities, and industrial enterprises promoted by the labor federation itself.

The new agreement contains a basic reform designed to rectify in part an acknowledged evil of the system—a tendency to level gross earnings despite differences in basic pay rates.

Basis of Payment Eased

In the future, rises in the consumer-price index will be compensated fully in basic monthly salaries of up to the equivalent of $69.44 instead of $44.44 as heretofore. However, full compensation will be paid only on index rises since the last agreement, on Aug. 15, when the index was at 201, compared with the September, 1951, base of 100. Since the index rose seven points in the last quarter, a worker with a basic monthly salary of the equivalent of $69.44 will receive a $4.75 cost-of-living compensation for this, in addition to the $44.89 that was the allowance under the old system. His gross monthly income thus will be the equivalent of $119.08, while it would have been $117.48 under the old system.

Although the agreement appeared to neutral observers to be a total surrender by industry, the manufacturers' association argued that it never really had questioned the justice of labor's position. What it had been trying to do, Shimon Klagsbald, chairman of the association's labor department, said tonight, was to force the Government to assume responsibility for spiraling wages, which the association regards as the main obstacle to price stabilization.

However, when the Cabinet declined earlier this week to adjudicate, there was no point in pursuing the struggle, Mr. Klagsbald said. He added that the trade unions had been "realistic and considerate of the economic situation in the country."

The industrialists and trade unions now will turn to negotiations for a renewal of their collective agreements. Labor will desist from demanding basic increases except in the form of premiums for higher output. However, the industrialists will propose reforms designed mainly to permit employers to dismiss workers on the basis of efficiency instead of seniority, as heretofore, and to expand the piece-work system.

The possibility of reform was viewed as remote. The labor federation, which adopted a wage-freeze policy after a hard fight with left-wingers, will find it difficult to make any concessions to industry. This was acknowledged by the employers.

CIO'S program to HALT UNEMPLOYMENT

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME TWO - NUMBER TWO

February, 1954

Hanoar Haoved - Junior Trade Union

Israel's young apprentices have their own unique trade union affiliated with Histadrut (Israel's Federation of Labor).

This junior trade union, known as Hanoar Haoved (Working Youth), protects the wages, hours and working conditions of its 35,000 young wage earners. They enjoy the same benefits of trade union membership as their fathers and older brothers, plus a few which their elders do not have.

Hanoar Haoved is consulted by the government in the enforcement of the new Apprenticeship Law, which requires employers to hire apprentices to replenish the country's reservoir of skilled manpower. The wages of apprentices are regulated by a committee on which Hanoar Haoved as well as the employers are represented.

Adult worker training apprentices.

The law forbids employers to accept any payment for training these apprentices, and the Government Apprenticeship Officer can forbid any employer to hire apprentices if working conditions are unsuitable. The employer must appoint an older worker to be responsible for the young learner during his apprenticeship, and the apprentice must be put to work only on jobs which will help him to master the trade he is learning. The employer must also give the apprentice time off from work, without deductions from pay, to attend a recognized trade school.

Hanoar Haoved is in many respects a junior edition of its parent body, the Histadrut, of which it is an integral part. When Histadrut was organized in British-mandated Palestine in 1921, the country had practically no labor legislation of any kind. There was hardly any legal protection for youngsters who had to work and no safeguard that they could continue to get a general education and vocational training.

Labor in Israel NEWSLETTER

VOLUME TWO - NUMBER THREE

March, 1954

Haifa - "City of the Future"

Haifa's 190,000 citizens, Jews and Arabs alike, have adopted this slogan, and are working hard to bring the city's future closer --- sooner.

Histadrut, Israel's Federation of Labor, is taking the initiative in making the dream come true. Histadrut's 124,000 members in Haifa make up 61.8 per cent of the city's population as against 53 per cent in Jerusalem and 40 per cent in Tel Aviv. Haifa's reputation as a solid labor town has been earned. In 1948 there were only 43,000 Histadrut members --- an increase in five years of more than 150 per cent.

Famed since antiquity for her natural beauty, Haifa is built on the site of a seaside village that has been continuously settled for seventeen centuries. More recently, however, Haifa has expanded. She has climbed up the slopes of Mt. Carmel, rich in Biblical lore, where the "Place of Burning" commemorates the triumph of the Prophet Elijah over the priests of Baal. On this mountain, too, is the Carmelite Monastery, founded in 1156. The city extends from sea level at the coast line all the way up to the mountain peaks, providing vistas of great beauty.

Haifa's present overshadows her past. She is noted particularly for two things: her port and her industry. Her deep-sea harbor accommodates the world's great liners. The large bay is relatively free from storms, and offers safe shelter to ships all year round --- the best deep-sea port in the eastern Mediterranean. Through this gateway have arrived seven out of every ten of the 700,000 immigrants who have streamed into Israel since the state was established in 1948. Many of the new immigrants settled in and around Haifa. They hail from 37 different countries and speak 29 languages.

Haifa is the home port of Israel's growing merchant marine. It serves the Israel Navy. Israel is landlocked, with hostile Arab states on all her borders; Haifa is her chief link with the outside world. Haifa gives Israel her freedom of the seas.

Expanding Industry

The busy port has given impetus to Haifa's status as Israel's industrial center. Israel's key industries have grown and developed in this area: cement, iron and steel works, glass factories, oil refineries, the basic chemical manufacturing plants.

Among Israel's biggest industrial plants are the Nesher Cement Works with almost 1,000 workers and a production of about half a million tons of 12/27/61

Les:

Research

I thought I had this California case. I have finally found it.

It seems to have been sent me by Thurgood Marshall.

You need not return it, but I think it should be carefully filed and indexed.

M.A.W.

Mar. —
Interracial
Marriage

See Page 757 Mr. Marshall

ADVANCE CALIFORNIA REPORTS

(CITED A.C.)

Official Advance Sheets of the Supreme Court

San Francisco October 12, 1948 Pages 709-826

32 A.C. No. 19

CASES REPORTED IN THIS NUMBER

Page

BARLOW v. CITY COUNCIL OF INGLEWOOD 735
Streets; proceeding to compel compliance with requirements of Improvement Bond Act of 1915 as barred by statute of limitations.

BREWER v. SECOND BAPTIST CHURCH 808
Libel; privileged communications between members of a church.

GREGORY v. STATE OF CALIFORNIA 747
Taxation; interest on refund of overpayment of gift tax.

PEOPLE v. LOPEZ 715
Criminal law; distribution to prospective jurors of pamphlet containing general instructions.

PEOPLE v. WALLIN 820
Criminal law; murderess as an accomplice of one charged as being an accessory to the murder.

(CONTINUED ON INSIDE COVER)

Edited by
BANCROFT-WHITNEY COMPANY
Publishers of Official California Reports
Copyright 1948, by Bancroft-Whitney Co.

Printed and Published by
THE RECORDER PRINTING & PUBLISHING COMPANY
Publishers of Advance Sheets for over 50 years
99 So. Van Ness Ave., San Francisco, 3 — 408 So. Spring St., Los Angeles, 13

Annual Subscription Price $30.00 for Advance California Reports and Advance California Appellate Reports. Single copies 50 cents—to Subscribers 30 cents. Separate subscription to Advance California Reports, $12.00 per year.

Published every Tuesday. Entered as Second-Class Matter March 28, 1941, at the Post Office at San Francisco, California, under Act of March 3, 1879.

VOLUME 9, NUMBER 41

Lorna Nelley

New Translation!

Encyclical Letter

of

Pope Leo XIII

THE CONDITION OF LABOR

National Catholic Welfare Conference Washington, D. C.

~~Religion~~ + Labor

SIXTY YEARS AFTER

Father Marvin Bordelon
St. Matthew's Church
Monroe, Louisiana

It was with pleasure that I received recently a telegram from Mr. Harry Chalmiers reading, in substance, "Please write again for the Labor Leader." During the ten days allowed me for production of the article, I tried to glean from what is almost a superabundance of material a few salient, practical points, certain matters which can perhaps stand some emphasis and which might constitute this year's message. At the present writing, if we are to judge by the papers and commentators, there exists not a little doubt, confusion, chaos and hard feeling on the social front - - inflation, war, controls, strikes, blasts from various spokesmen for different interests. Despite the manifold accomplishments in the field of human relations and social solidarity, there exists in many minds and hearts today a deep temptation to despair of any effort to effect a reconstruction of the social order. Grim indeed and pessimistic would this be if we could see no further than present blunders and selfishness.

- - - Sixty Years After - - -

It is perhaps true to say today of constructive social teaching what Pope Pius XI said in 1931 in commemorating the fortiety anniversary of the encylical letter ON THE CONDITION OF LABOR, written by his predecessor, Leo XIII:

> "Despite this widespread agreement, however, some minds were not a little disturbed, with the result that the noble and exalted teaching of Leo XIII, quite novel to worldly ears, was looked upon with suspicion by some, even among Catholics, and gave offense to others. For it boldly attacked and overthrew the idols of Liberalism, swept aside inveterate prejudices, and was so far and so unexpectedly in advance of its time, that the slow of heart ridiculed the study of the new social philosophy and the timid feared to scale its lofty heights. Nor were there wanting those who, while professing their admiration for this message of light, regarded it as a Utopian ideal, desirable rather than attainable in practice."
>
> (Pius XI in Forty Years After, n.14)

We entitle this article SIXTY YEARS AFTER to pay tribute to the fearless stand taken by Pope Leo XIII in 1891 and to the noble social doctrine which he taught.

- - - The Why and Whither of Unions - - -

We have witnessed up to now a great insistence in the social field on the organization of workers. This insistence has made clear the right of workers to organize, the necessity and good effects of organization. Generally speaking, this insistence has been healthy for it gave strength to and secured rights for the weakest elements in the social structure. Generally speaking, too, it has resulted in a very fine movement. As Father R. A. McGowan of the Social Action Department, NCWC, puts it:

> "Our labor movement has its faults, like any other human institution. Basically, however, its mind and will are very sound, and it is probably the most constructive labor movement in the world."
>
> (NCWC Labor Day Statement, 1950)

While we continue to insist on the right of workers to organize and on the necessity for the extension of organization, we do not see a solution in that alone. Briefly, may we explain. The chief reason for organization has been to secure the rights of workers, to better their condition, to protect them against oppression by stronger groups seeking their own welfare at the workers' expense. If, in turn, workers have found strength in union and have thus bettered their condition, can they now use their strength solely for their own interests, regardless of the just demands of capital and management, of professional people, of farmers, of the general welfare of our own country and of other peoples?

- - - For a Purpose - - -

We continue to insist on the right of workers to organize; we continue to encourage the extension of organization to more and more workers; but we insist at the same time on a like right and necessity for organizations of management, agriculture and the professions. To propose anything else would be to endorse the baneful principle of individualism in the social structure. The Bishops of our country stated this very succinctly in 1947:

> "The Christian view of economic life supports the demand for organization of management, labor, agriculture and professions under government encouragement but not control, in joint effort to avoid social conflict and to promote cooperation for the common good."
>
> (Statement of the American Bishops,1947)

Economic life must be organized, but organized for a purpose, namely "in joint effort to avoid social conflict and to promote cooperation for the common good."

In 1948 the Bishops observed:

"Today we have labor partly organized, but chiefly for its own interests. We have capital or management organized, possibly on a larger scale, but again chiefly for its own interests."

(Statement of the American Bishops, 1948)

Surely these segments of society may organize for their own interests, but more, they must be organized in such a way that they can be fitted together within the framework of economic democracy and not tyrannical individualism.

The principal problem today is not mere organization, but fitting the various organizations into the overall structure of social order.

Order, as St. Thomas well defines, is unity arising from the apt arrangement of a plurality of objects.

This unity of the various segments of economic life — capital, labor, agriculture, professions -- results in the tranquillity of order, which is peace. All else is disorder, strife, chaos.

Puis XI called the social question, a problem in human solidarity.

"Leo's encyclical letter, ON THE CONDITION OF LABOR, however, stood out in this, that it laid down for all mankind unerring rules for the right solution of the difficult problem of human solidarity, called the social question."

(Pius XI in Forty Years After, n.2)

In 1948 our Bishops repeated the same plea:

"What we urgently need, in the Christian view of the social order, is the free organization of capital and labor in permanent agencies of cooperation for the common good. To insure that this organization does not lose sight of the common good, government as the responsible custodian of the public interest should have a part in it. But its part should be to stimulate, to guide, to restrain, not to dominate. This is perfectly in line with our Federal Constitution which empowers government not only 'to establish justice,' but also to 'promote the general welfare.'"

(Statement of the American Bishops, 1948)

By this time surely someone will object. The organization of the economic order within a democratic framework is a fanciful dream, the cherished but unobtainable Utopia. The groups concerned are all too selfish. They seek their own interests only. There is not enough common decency among them to be concerned with the common good.

--- Is Order Attainable ? ---

Are not, we wonder, the demands of political democracy just as great? There can never be cooperation without some subordination. Yet, is it not achieved and are we not asked to sacrifice much for it in our political democracy?

If fear is the beginning of wisdom, is not the current "fear" of the "welfare state" a healthy sign? Day by day are not more people agreeing with the admonition of Pius XI:

> "For unless serious attempts be made, with all energy and without delay to put (these ideas) into practice, nobody can persuade himself that the peace and tranquillity of human society can be effectively defended against the forces of revolution!"
>
> (Pius XI in Forty Years After, n.62)

Even with the risk of burdening you with quotations, we think the following from Bishop Alter and Father McGowan quite helpful:

> "The solution offered by some is national planning with public ownership on the model of the British Socialist Labor Party. Others propose a managed economy along the lines of continental social legislation. Some are content with a further development of the Social Security Program of the 'New Deal' or 'Fair Deal'. Of course, there are some blind and stubborn reactionaries who will not learn the lesson of history and therefore think that we can return to the 'Laissez-faire' economy of the nineteenth century.
>
> There are others still, small in number, who reject the idea of further interference and control by the state and propose instead a democratic and functional system along the lines of the papal encyclicals."
>
> (INDUSTRY COUNCILS,
> Most Rev. Karl J. Alter, D.D.)

> "The elements of such a social order, in the form of a multitude of national trade associations of business and national organizations of labor, of farmers, and of professional people, are now at hand. They have only to piece themselves together into a working unity organized to promote the cause of social and economic justice. More and more they are beginning to speak the language of social responsibility."
>
> (NCWC Labor Day Statement, 1950)

The democratic and functional system of ordering the social structure which is here mentioned has been given much throught by social scientists. More is needed. Many, many practical difficulties exist. Many questions remain unanswered. But where there is a will there is a way. In too many cases it is more the will that is missing than the way.

In bringing this message to a close permit us to emphasize four things:

1. In this program for social reconstruction, it is most important that there be a genuine renewal of the Christian spirit among the people of the United States.

The best laid plans of the wisest men will not bring about this reconstruction, Pope Pius XI tells us,

> "unless men return openly and sincerely to the teaching of the Gospel, to the precepts of Him Who alone has the words of everlasting life, words which will never pass away even if Heaven and earth pass away."
>
> (Pius XI in Forty Years After)

2. There is need for more attention to the common good, for a greater emphasis on social responsibility and cooperation among various groups, while securing their own rights and interests.

3. We ask also a greater dedication to scholarship, especially with regard to the Industry Council Plan for economic democracy.

4. Finally we plead for unselfish dedication and effective leadership by all concerned in the problem of organizing and fitting the many functional groups of labor, management, farmers and professional people into the framework of organized economic self government.

THE Georgia

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

Here's news of special interest to Atlanta club & association officers - - good news about the excellent conference and meeting room facilities at the GEORGIA.

Whether it be a five-man conference or a formal banquet for one hundred, the GEORGIA has the answer!

Courteous, on-the-ball service, too ... ready and waiting to relieve you of the details of planning your very next meeting.

I hope that we may have the pleasure of serving you -- SOON!

Sincerely,

J. Wade Ruder

Manager

LUCKIE STREET AT CONE • ATLANTA

THE Georgia HOTEL

OGLETHORPE ROOM — Ideal setting for Banquets and large meetings.

PARLOR B — Typical sales meeting in progress

Announcing . . . EXCELLENT MEETING FACILITIES for Atlanta business, civic and social organizations.

The GEORGIA offers every requisite for successful meetings — modern air conditioned meeting rooms to accommodate 5 or 100, plus courteous, streamlined service to relieve you of every possible detail of planning and handling.

Whether your need is for the quiet and privacy of a parlor suite for a small group or a banquet for 100, the GEORGIA is fully equipped to quickly and efficiently serve you.

For reservations or further information, simply dial LAmar 3261, Manager's Office. If you prefer, a representative will gladly contact you to discuss details. No obligation, of course.

Modern, Spacious Air Conditioned Lobby

Typical Parlor Suite

THE Georgia HOTEL

LAmar 3261

LUCKIE STREET AT CONE • ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Labor Education

Highlander Folk School
Monteagle, Tennessee.

Dear Highlander friend,

Since the United Packinghouse Workers Union program has taken a considerable portion of my time during the past year, I thought you would be interested in the way the educational program is developing.

The enclosed is the school's report to the United Packinghouse Workers of America officials and board.

Parts of this program are being adopted for use by other unions, both CIO and AFL. It is being used pretty much as we have developed it by one of the labor leaders in the Phillipines.

The next stage of development will be for the educational representatives and instructors to assume more responsibility for the anti-discrimination, farmer, labor, PAC and other programs of the union.

Sincerely yours,

Myles Horton

Myles Horton

RECEIVED
DEC 6 1945
Southern Regional Council

NEGROES IN AMERICA

by

ROBERT C. JONES

(adapted from an article "Negroes in Latin America" by the author published in the September-October 1945 issue of Sociology and Social Research.)

Some twenty years ago I recommended to my friends in the United States who were interested in the study of interracial and intercultural relations that they should observe these in various parts of Latin America as well as in their own country. I felt from my experience that this would help them to develop a more exact understanding of the concept "race". A comparison of the greatly varying situations existing in different countries and regions would assist in making clear the character of race prejudice showing that the prevalent attitudes of different ethnic groups towards each other were the product of conditions which were constantly changing, that they are brought about through historical processes which can be traced and are subject to modification.

It had been my privilege to know personally a number of the Negro elite in the United States during my university days, but it was not until later when I had an opportunity to work for several years in urban communities largely settled by Negroes that I came to realize what a wide variety of background and experience exists among them and how serious a handicap discriminatory practices really are.

Even Negroes themselves and students of "race relations" generally expressed surprise a few years ago when they were told that there were probably twice as many Negroes in Latin America as in the United States. No exact enumeration of Negroes in all of America has, however, ever been even attempted. The great flexibility of the "color line" in some of the countries would make a statistician's nightmare out of such an effort. A very rough guess would be that there are close to forty million Negroes in the Western Hemisphere, located mainly on the coasts of the Atlantic Ocean. According to Census figures there are about thirteen million Negroes in the United States. There is perhaps about an equal number in Brazil. The next largest number is in the Caribbean area, where there may be ten million. The remainder are to be found in the Guianas, in the Pacific low-lands of Peru and Ecuador, with small scattered groups and individuals in all countries. Negroes thus constitute almost 15 per cent of the total population of the American continents.[1]

If we accept the verdict of professional anthropologists, students of the subject, that there are no fundamental differences in the inherent ability or mental characteristics of various races and ethnic groups, the question as to how many Negroes there are in America becomes largely an academic one but for the fact that large numbers of persons do not act on this premise. Subjective attitudes and concepts center themselves around Negroes and their relationships to other groups, and for that reason it is important to them as well as to others interested in their welfare to know their number and status. Race prejudice is to be found in all countries, although in greatly

---

1 Although Negroes have, in general, settled in areas where the Indian had a low cultural level and the population was small, the two races have mixed to some extent. Such mixed bloods, or zambos, have been included in the present estimate, but many might with equal or greater justification be included in estimates of the Indian population.

varying forms and degrees of emotional intensity. In those places where Negroes are treated almost as equals by other groups, such an enumeration tends to lose its importance and may, in fact, promote the continuation of distinctions rather than be an aid in promoting plans to equalize opportunities. What it is really important to know about ethnic and cultural groups in any country is the extent to which their members vary from the remainder of the population in cultural and economic standards so that practical programs to remove existing disadvantages may be inaugurated on a valid basis and an adequate scale.

As is well known Negroes are not indigenous to America. Millions were, however, brought to America from Africa to furnish labor for tropical and subtropical plantations. They were at first largely restricted to a comparatively small area but have tended to scatter. They made special contributions to the development of sugar and cotton production and later to the cultivation of bananas. They constituted much of the labor used in the building of the Panama Canal and they also made up a large proportion of the port workers in the harbors. Since they were brought in bondage and did not have a good opportunity to transplant their own culture, they have to a very large measure adopted European civilization, adapting it to the social and economic situation in which they have been forced to live. African cultures were much richer, however, than has usually been thought, and Negroes have no reason to be ashamed of their African ancestry.

Although Haiti is the only country in America in which Negroes themselves overthrew their European masters and rulers and founded a state of their own, they have made an important contribution to the independence movement of almost every country in this hemisphere. This was true even in Argentina, where an important contingent of Negro soldiers served under San Martin. Haitain soldiers helped the American colonists win their freedom in the United States.

Relations between races are not yet governed by democratic principles of respect for the individual person and the guarantee of relative equality of opportunity irrespective of ethnic background. Partly for this reason many Negroes have possessed a keen interest in freedom, for they knew that their own welfare was somehow bound up with the general problem of democratic living. As long as certain people are not given opportunities equal to others to possess an adequate standard of economic well-being, to secure an education, and to enjoy the best things which our culture offers because of difference in the color of their skin and other outer physical characteristics, we cannot say that we are genuinely and completely democratic. Even in the countries where the "color line" is most flexible the term "white" is to a considerable extent a designation of status rather than a purely physical classification. It is a concept colored by tradition and prejudice rather than one determined by reason and objective scientific investigation. What the continuing relationship of Negroes is to members of other groups is a test of whether our democracy is real or not in that it will indicate whether a minority group can rise from an exploited and submerged position to one of relative equality without there being a great deal of bitterness and serious conflicts. Responsibility for creating and maintaining a situation where peaceful progressive adjustment is possible must be shared by both minority and dominant groups.

Negroes should be interested not only in their own advancement and that of their group but also in the promotion of democratic processes in our entire society. Self-interest alone should recommend this to them, as studies have shown that the greatest feeling against them exists among the uneducated, underprivileged, and intellectually isolated. Nor have Negroes themselves kept free from racist attitudes as is indicated by the frequent existence of a color caste within the Negro population itself. Negroes cannot be said to be in any sense unified; those in different segments of society and in different countries apparently have about as much difficulty as anybody else in understanding each other. A city Negro art group in the United States once asked the author for help in arranging an exchange of art work with Negroes in a Latin-American country such as Cuba or Brazil. It was difficult for them to understand that a collection of art secured from either of those countries would quite likely contain work by Negro artists but that it would not be very politic to ask for an exclusively Negro exhibit. Cuban and Brazilian Negroes are primarily nationals of their country of birth or adoption and are frequently not given to thinking of themselves in terms of their racial background. The general population takes pride in the contribution of outstanding Negroes who are known as eminent citizens of their respective countries on much the same basis as other leaders.

Little more than half of thepopulation of the western hemisphere can even pretend to be of purely European ancestry.[2] Recognition and graceful acceptance of this fact is of importance in determining the character of inter-American relations. Because of the greater tolerance existing in the Latin American countries the discriminatory treatment which Negroes receive in the United States is widely resented. Whites in countries where little segregation takes place frequently criticize such conduct as much as, if not more than, the Negroes themselves. Nevertheless United States tourists and other influences have affected some change in the attitudes and behavior of Latin Americans so that in effect race prejudice has been exported.

Although resolutions have been passed at a number of inter-American conferences favoring the promotion of democracy, better conditions for the working classes, and the abolition of discriminatory practices, the Inter-American Congress of Demography, held in Mexico City in October, 1943, was the first to openly consider the situation of the Negro in America.[3] The recommendations of the Commission on Ethnology and Eugenics of this Congress included the suggestion that the governments of America should enact laws which would promote educational programs intended to improve the condition of life of the Negro people and promote the removal of distinctions because of race or color in all human relationships. It was also suggested that the scientific study of the Negro populations be promoted so that information as to their condition, potentialities, general culture, and their contribution to the national and continental heritage might be adequately diffused in order to bring about better understanding between racial groups. The position was taken that the American governments should completely repudiate all policies and action of a discriminatory character, keeping in mind that the traits of racial classification which are scientifically valid indicate only hereditary somatic qualities without any implications of a psychological or cultural character.[4]

---

2. As has already been indicated, care should be taken in making estimates of the number of persons belonging to minority ethnic groups not to count the considerable number of persons of mixed blood more than once. It should be remembered that in several countries, contrary to the prevalent practice in the United States, persons of mixed ethnic background are considered to be White, particularly if they possess superior economic and cultural status.

3. The Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace held in Mexico City in February 1945 reaffirmed "the principle ---- of equality of rights and opportunities for all men, regardless of race or religion." and recommended "that the governments of the American republics.....make every effort to prevent in their respective countries all acts which may provoke discrimination between individuals because of race or religion." See- Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace- February-March, 1945. Washington, Pan American Union, 1945. p.80.

4. Earle Harrison, "Inter-American Demographic Congress," Monthly Review (Immigration and Naturalization Service), November, 1943, pp.1-2. The complete resolutions of this Congress have not up to the present been made available in an adequate English translation.

As a result of increasing mutual acquaintance among scholars interested in the Negro people in America and of the interest expressed in studies relating to them at the Congress of Demography there was organized in Mexico City in October 1943 the International Institute of Afro-American Studies. It is the purpose of the organization to stimulate the study of the Negro population of America and collect, arrange, and distribute the results of these investigations, make reports regarding activities of other societies and study groups interested in the same subject, and carry on other related work. It is not only to encourage research but also to organize lectures, seminars, exhibits, and other public programs relating to the Negro. Its program is to be educational in character, and it is to serve as an inter-American clearinghouse for scholars interested in the Negro rather than be an action or pressure group. Eventually a magazine may be published and other publications issued from time to time as seen fit. The Institute may also function in an advisory capacity, furnishing information and making recommendations as requested by official agencies, private organizations, or individuals. Headquarters for the Institute were established, for the time being, at the National School of Anthropology of Mexico, located at Moneda No. 13, Mexico, D.F. So far, the Institute has been merely in the process of organization. Whether or not it becomes a vital project depends upon the amount of interest shown.

21 – Labor & Education

(Reprinted from EDUCATION for January, 1946)

Unions Fight Jim Crow and Racism

By MARK STARR
Educational Director
International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union

IN the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, men and women apply "learning by doing" in inter-cultural and inter-racial action in the best of all possible ways. When our organizers set up locals, they ask all the workers — colored and white, Jew and Gentile — to join. Instead of formally teaching tolerance, they endeavor to help men and women of varying racial and national origins to appreciate each other. One of our posters, which shows a montage of the varied nationalities in the Union, bears the caption, "Our races are many; our aims are one!"

Such united action is not confined to the organizing period when the Union is seeking support and new members. Once when the Medina Club in Chicago sent Negro delegates to the service elevator, the whole ILGWU Convention in protest left the place and transferred the convention to the Hotel Morrison. Solidarity on the picket line transcends the accidents of race and birth, and workers who have set up a union as a result of their blood and sweat and tears have an inter-cultural solidarity which is not easily forgotten.

In union meetings and classes, in the union chorus and in the union basketball teams and other similar activities, our members meet as members without discrimination. White officers and managers and Negro officers and chairladies accent the positive things which they have in common and forget the minor things which differentiate. That, of course, does not mean that our Italian members must delight in sour cream and gefulte fish or that our Jewish members must indulge in spaghetti feasts. There is no attempt to standardize such things. Much of the life and color of our work is created by the inter-mingling of men and women whose ancestors came from many diverse parts of the world. One of the union songs expresses the idea:

"We're sisters and brothers, no matter
our birthplace,
The colored, the white man, the Gentile, the Jew,
Our races are many, our aims are the same ones,
So stand together in the I-L-G-W-U."

In the early months of 1945 a women's delegation was being chosen to visit Great Britain. President Green of the American Federation of Labor asked David Dubinsky, head of the ILGWU (which is seventy-five per cent female in its composition), to suggest a member who would represent the American labor movement. Mr. Dubinsky nominated Mrs. Maida Springer, a Negro woman with an outstanding record of union activity, and she filled with distinction the role of representative and reporter.

This fall Harvard University agreed to let the ILGWU send women to the Trade Union Fellowships operating there for the fourth year. Mabel Durham, a Negro chairlady in Local 62 and currently in the WAC, was one of four members sent on the basis of their records. These things speak louder than words and written declarations, and the ILGWU is proud to put such a pattern of fair play and good sense before other affiliated AFL unions.

Because early founders of the ILGWU had suffered from racial and political persecution in Europe, the union naturally has fought Jim Crow and other forms of racial discrimination. Other AFL unions and the United Mine Workers have had similar policies. Some unions, however, have been influenced by existing prejudices. LABOR AND AMERICA (a high school textbook) lists twenty-one unions which still discriminate by rule or custom, but their number is decreasing; in October, 1945, eighteen locals of the largest union, the International Association of Machinists, proposed at its Conference that the "white" qualification for membership should be dropped from the IAM Constitution. So far as I know, there is only one small and insignificant union which has an anti-Semitic rule in its membership qualifications.

It would be a mistake, however, to think that men and women who join the trade union movement automatically accept the progressive traditions of such unions as the ILGWU. Our Educational Department works continuously to eradicate beliefs which have been built up by decades of miseducation. To combat racial prejudice, we use every educational agency and method. When our Southern members, for example, participate in the annual institute at the University of Wisconsin, we are at pains to show them how un-American is their disinclination to eat and study with their Negro fellow-members, and usually we succeed in persuading them to slough off their misconceptions. We use movies and have made good use of the filmstrip, "We Are All Brothers," based on the pamphlet, RACES OF MANKIND.

Some locals have classes to deal with inter-cultural education and to study specific problems of racial misunderstanding in the shops. Articles are supplied from time to time to local union journals. Most recently we have distributed the pamphlet, LABOR AND ANTI-SEMITISM. Posters, our own and those supplied by other agencies, are freely used. The Educational Department of the ILGWU was the first to distribute the TRUE COMICS, "They Got the Blame." Later the AFL (and the CIO) distributed hundreds of thousands of these colored illustrated magazines. We know that in some instances these comics were carried home with good effect upon the juvenile relatives of the union members.

ILGWU locals in various cities have participated in conferences which have been set up to institute an intercultural fire brigade in order to stop the fire of racial hate before it starts. We have cooperated with both the Workers' Education Bureau and the American Labor Education Service in running such conferences to discuss these dangers.

AFL unions still have much to do. But they are beginning to have an awareness of the danger of racism and nationalist biases. Both by union word and deed these evils must be overcome.

Editor's Note: Mr. Starr has discussed the policy of the ILGWU and mentioned some of the materials used to implement its policy of non-discrimination. Readers interested in learning about the policies of CIO unions can write directly to George L-P Weaver, Director of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

(Additional copies may be obtained from the Educational Dept., I L G W U, 1710 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.)

21- Labor education

Reprinted from "Progressive Education", January 1946

LABOR UNIONS EDUCATE—

Against racial discrimination; for political action and social responsibility

By Eleanor G. Coit

Director, Labor Education Service

New York City

● The part to be played by the labor movement in the postwar era, both on the economic and the political fronts, is recognized as being of strategic importance to the entire community. In looking forward to the year ahead, therefore, and to the organization of our educational facilities to meet the challenge of this period, the labor movement's educational program holds special interest. This program is important not only because through it labor is able to equip itself for its task, but also because the program has made, and continues to make, a vital contribution to educational techniques, particularly in the field of progressive education.

Labor's educational program is a broad and realistic one. The part labor has to play in our democratic society must grow out of the thinking and activity of all members of the labor movement; its educational activities cannot be divorced from the experience of its membership. Workers' education as it is carried on today is not conducted in a detached manner, but rather is it part of the whole pattern of the labor movement. The study and discussion grow out of very real needs on the part of the members to understand and cope with the problems confronting them. The labor movement has extended its horizons to include more than dealing with problems of collective bargaining, with technical problems of industry, and with the operation of its own program: Today labor is involved in matters that concern the entire community — housing, education, child care, social security, etc. — as well as in government affairs and in the international scene, and its educational program reflects these varied interests. Labor education is dynamic, it is experimental, and the campus is as broad as the area of interest of those who participate.

The broad program of study on the part of the United Steel workers, for example, has been described by Clinton Golden in Dynamics of Industrial Democracy,[1] where he shows how the union members in their study of technical problems, how to work with other people in the union, and how to deal with ma agement, have been carrying on a program of education in all areas of their work and activities. The PAC has conducted a comprehensive educational program all over the country with members of the CIO, which has necessitated study of public issues and has involved concentration on how to make the work of the labor movement an integral part of community activity. Along with the PAC regisration drive went an educational program on election laws and national and state campaign issues, as well as a broad study program concerned with community problems

● There has been increasing recognition by labor groups of the problems of discrimination against minority groups. The labor movement, along with other groups in our society, is beginning to perceive that unless we discover how to develop democratic procedures in our everyday life and strengthen the position of minority groups both in trade unions and in community life, the present world conflict will have been to no avail. All types of labor organizations are working on this question, including auto, steel, and electrical unions, the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

In a recent meeting where methods of carrying on educational work related to this problem were discussed, such questions as the following were raised: the participation of the general membership in policy making, responsibility of the leadership in carrying out policies democratically arrived at, and liberalization of undemocratic union constitutions. Suggestions were made and case stories of successes and failures were presented for discussion. It was pointed out that "the new influential position of organized labor in the community made democratic practices imperative both for its own sake and for the sake of the nation. The labor movement should be a leading force — perhaps the leading force — to strengthen democracy during the present world crisis."[2]

● The American Labor Education Service, a national labor education organization, recently has cooperated with several labor bodies in setting up a series of conferences in various parts of the country to help focus attention on this problem. A study of techniques for dealing with attitudes on minority questions, however, called for more than conferences. Therefore, in one state L.E.S., acting as consultant to the CIO, has organized workshops without walls, through the operation of which anti-discrimination committees, shop stewards, and education committees are studying the minority problems that exist within the unions in that state, and are trying to devise methods for making the whole CIO union membership more conscious that you can't sell democracy in theory, but rather by putting democratic principles into practice. For example, as pointed out by the L. E. S. field work, the union members understand the union contract per se, but it is important to the democratic process that the principles involved in the rights of minorities be given expression in the way the contract is used. The groups participating are attempting to break down resistances, on the part of union members and to dramatize the problem in order to startle many members into new thinking about discrimination. Material is made available and members of the committees must learn how to become discussion leaders, directing their discussions to every type of interest on the part of their fellow members to stimulate them in an analysis and study of this problem, and eventually to new attitudes and new patterns of action.

● Another illustration of an important type of responsibility around which programs of labor education are now organized is the necessity to equip labor for its new role in gov-

[1] Dynamics of Industrial Democracy, by Clinton S. Golden and Harold J. Ruttenberg, Harper Brothers, New York, 1942. 358 pp.

[2] For a more complete story of this discussion of the unions and their relation to veterans' problems, as well as of the discussion of minority problems, see the findings of "Midwest Workers' Education Conference," published by the Labor Education Service, 437 West 59th Street, New York City.

MOVED TO 1776 BROADWAY
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

ernment. The packinghouse workers, for example, recently have issued a pamphlet telling of their study in preparation for presenting cases before the WLB. In classes in New York City, which are now being organized by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and which are held for officers of the union, are discussed topics relating to many aspects of labor's role in government. Recently a conference of labor and government representatives was held in Washington (under the auspices of Labor Education Service with the cooperation of the CIO Education and Research Department and the Workers Education Bureau) to plan for more effective relations between government and labor education bodies.

Labor's wide interests and its recognition of the need to plan its educational work in relation to these interests were manifested in another conference held under the auspices of Labor Education Service in the midwest section of the country. The committee planning this annual conference is made up of persons who have had experience in various unions and who represent several states. In planning for this conference, they tried to list topics which represented difficult problems confronting the labor movement today. Among them were: A Program of Action Looking Toward Full Employment; The Role of Workers Education in Meeting the Problems of the Demobilized Soldier; Problems of Conversion from Wartime to Peacetime Economy; Political Action; Labor's Stake in Planning a Sound International Policy; Cooperation Between Labor and Government in a Postwar World; The Extension of Democratic Practices in Trade Unions; and How To Maintain Labor's Gains. With democratic participation not only in the planning of the program but also in the work of the entire conference, the study was conducted through discussion and the use of resource persons who could give background and meaning to a discussion period. Every effort was made on the part of the program committee to involve, both in planning and in carrying out the work of the conference, as large a group as possible representing a cross section of the labor movement in the middle west. The effectiveness of this project is measured largely in terms of how far new programs of study have developed out of the work of the conference.

Some of the suggestions for follow-up work may illustrate further the procedure. The group discussing the role of workers' education in meeting the problems of the demobilized soldier, emphasized the need for trade unions to put more attention on veterans' problems and stressed the close connection between these problems and the need for full employment or jobs for all. The group pointed out that the returning soldier must be made to realize that the unions at home have had constantly in mind their welfare when they return to industry and postwar jobs. The session discussed the problem of unemployment after the war, which can be solved only as job opportunities are made available for returned veterans and for those who worked on the home front. In recommending follow-up programs, it was suggested that veterans' conferences on postwar employment and on job security questions be held; that every opportunity be made to promote equal educational opportunities for veterans and non veterans in the community; that the unions must be active in, and keep in touch with, all community agencies; that unions should set up committees to work with general existing educational institutions and to press these institutions into adapting their postwar curriculum to meet the problems and experience of soldiers who are returning to this country; and that workers' education committees should be established in communities to work on a total program of education for all workers.[2]

Other phases of the conference program pointed toward closer cooperation between labor and farmers, stronger political action on the part of workers' groups and a strengthening of the trend toward a broad union program and closer integration of this union program in the community.

• Among other interesting educational projects now being organized are those which grow out of labor's interest in community problems. Of interest are the counseling services recently sponsored by labor war relief agencies, the United Automobile Workers, the United Electrical Workers, and many other unions. Members of the unions have assumed new responsibilities as liaison officers to keep their fellow members in touch with social agencies, and acquaint them with the fact that their services are available to all labor members. In whatever fields the labor movement is functioning, there the educational program must be worked out, and resources for this work must be developed. Of special interest are the libraries established for seamen by the maritime unions; union papers; and resident workers' schools, that are used by many international unions not only for the study of their own technical problems, but also for a discussion of tool subjects such as public speaking, parliamentary law, and always for the discussion of current social and economic issues.

• Today many problems confront those responsible for organizing and carrying on an educational program within the labor movement. There is not adequate recognition of the need for the educational job that must be done, either on the part of the public educational authorities or on the part of the labor movement. The many new trade union members must have a broad and real understanding of the history of the labor movement and of their own industry before they can participate most effectively in more specialized educational activities. Qualified teachers and other resource persons who have indentified themselves with the labor movement are few in number. Pamphlets written in terms of the special experience of workers' groups, and new visual and graphic material are seriously needed. New funds are necessary for all such work and these need to be made available not only by the labor movement but also by public educational authorities.

Workers today are looking toward social security, toward full employment, toward adequate living and working standards, toward democratic participation and toward a world cooperation. Organization, leadership, and technicians are needed. A broad education of the leadership and of the rank and file is essential to the attainment of these ends, which must be carried on with the aid of all available community resources.

Distributed by American Labor Education Service,
437 West 59th St., N.Y. 19, N.Y.

MOVED TO
1776 BROADWAY

21- Labor Education

AMERICAN WORKERS WANT A LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE!

COMMITTEE FOR THE EXTENSION OF LABOR EDUCATION
2117 PENNSYLVANIA AVE., N. W. — WASHINGTON 7, D. C.

BULLETIN NO. IV July, 1947

A T L A S T !

THE BILL IS IN CONGRESS . . . S 1390 - H R 4078

H E L P G E T I T P A S S E D !

H E L P !

Your Committee has a big task ahead . . .

W E N E E D F U N D S A T O N C E

D O Y O U R S H A R E !

C O N T E S T

$300.00 prize for best simple statement on ...
"WHY I AM ASKING MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO VOTE
FOR THE LABOR EXTENSION BILL
S 1390 H R 4078
(30 grand prizes)

Read the story inside . . .

OUR BILL IS IN CONGRESS! S.1390 and H.R.4078

The American Labor Movement presented its own challenge to Congress when the Labor Extension Service Bill was introduced in the United States Senate on June 5th by Senator Elbert D. Thomas (D) of Utah and Senator Wayne Morse (R) of Oregon, and in the House of Representatives on July 2nd by Representative Thor C. Tollefson (R) of Washington State and Congressman Ray J. Madden (D) of Indiana.

The Bill, which is officially endorsed by AFL, CIO, Railroad Labor and other independent unions, seeks to establish a broad system of instruction for wage and salary earners on industrial relations and other subjects. By use of facts and reason, labor itself proposes, in this Bill, that education be regarded as a primary tool for permanent improvement in management-labor relations.

A challenge is sounded to those in Congress who claim to favor reasonable and peaceful solutions for our industrial and public issues. They are asked to back up their words by supporting this Bill and assuring American wage earners that they are still considered Americans on a par with businessmen and farmers.

A Labor Extension Service

The new Bill would extend to some 42 million wage and salary earners a program similar to that carried on by the Agricultural Extension Service for six million farm families. Instruction would be provided at times and places and in forms convenient for wage and salary earners. Teachers would be provided by institutions of higher learning cooperating in the program. Requests by groups of workers for classes would be worked out with these institutions and presented to State Boards for approval. Approved requests would be incorporated in a state plan and budget to be presented to the Secretary of Labor for his approval. Federal funds would be supplemented locally.

For Use in Speeches, Radio Messages and Publications

Excerpts from Senator Thomas' speech in support of the Bill. (Congressional Record for June 5, 1947, page 6586.)

"Throughout this session, we have heard that Labor has refused to come forward with a constructive proposal for the improvement of industrial relations. Well, here is a constructive proposal, endorsed by all of Labor. Labor is united in asking us to enact this legislation.

"This Bill is not spectacular. It is not advertised as an overnight cure for inflamed industrial relations, nor for all the many human, mechanical, economic and other problems that arise daily in relations between employers and employees. But it is a gradual, sure and lasting remedy...

"Not by prohibitions, nor injunctions, nor by rules and regulations, but by equipping wage earners with a better and more up-to-date knowledge of the world, the Nation, the state and the community in which they work and live, with a better knowledge of the economic facts about their own industry and plant and their relation to other industries, plants and to the entire economy of the Nation.

"Equipped with this knowledge, and with training in its use, labor can negotiate more effectively and more reasonably with employers and better meet its citizenship obligations...

"I think the Congress should accept this challenge. I propose to urge that consideration be given this Bill at the very earliest possible date after we return from the summer recess. I wish that hearings might be had and action taken before we adjourn...

"Today, more than fifty universities and colleges throughout the Nation have established labor extension services. I am informed that the expressed and demonstrated need far outruns the resources of unions and of institutions of higher learning. This presents the Congress, it seems to me, with a priceless opportunit to bring aid to an educational process that can serve both the cause of industrial peace and the national welfare. As has been said, we are all in a race between education and catastrophe. New knowledge, new facts, new techniques, new decision flood in on us so fast as to exceed our ability to understand, evaluate and act intelligently. Education is the only road to wisdom for an individual, a group or a nation. It is a slow road, but a sure one, to fair dealing between man and man, between employers and employees, between and among nations.

"Labor is willing and eager to travel that road."

YOUR COMMITTEE FOR THE EXTENSION OF LABOR EDUCATION HAS A BIG TASK AHEAD! WE NEED YOUR HELP!

The immediate work of this office now includes:

Publicity on the Bill, through
- Labor press, newspapers, and magazines
- Labor institutes
- Unions in all branches of the labor movement
- Interested colleges and universities
- Community agencies
- An essay contest, approved by this Committee

Intensive finance work to raise a budget of $3000 a month, covering
- Office rent
- Salaries for staff (2 executives and 3 secretaries)
- Nominal fee for legislative consultant
- Printing and publicity, postage, office supplies
- Occasional short trips

State contacts
- To reach members of Congress and enlist their support
- To start work leading toward State organization, in order that when the Bill is passed funds shall be spent as authorized and qualified leadership may be found.

Hearings to be arranged
- In both Houses of Congress, and in the new Joint Committee related to the Taft-Hartley Labor Management Relations Act. (An approach has been made to Senator Taft for this purpose.) These hearings will probably not take place until after the Congressional recess, but meanwhile testimony must be built up and witnesses secured.

DO YOU WANT THIS WORK TO GO FORWARD? IF SO, DO WORK WITH US!

Funds from the organized labor movement for the work so far total about $12,000. The Special Services Committee, since December 1945, has contributed $23,000, including its last and final grant to carry the program through this summer. In order to capitalize on this substantial investment and carry the Bill through to successful enactment in Congress, funds must be secured at once. The money on hand will carry the program only through August.

For the Year Ahead, a Budget of $50,000 is Needed

A sum of $6,000 is needed for two months ahead -- September and October.

Finance work will go on steadily each month.

This Committee has come a long way in the past year, building on the definite needs expressed by the labor movement for a broad educational service with all the resources of the unions, the universities, the States, and the Federal Government.

This need becomes more urgent, as labor faces the complicated situations inherent in the recent labor legislation.

We must not stop in mid-stream in our efforts to meet this need.

Can You Help in Any of the Following Ways?

1. Help secure union and individual contributions immediately. Every check will help.

2. Make speeches, write articles, talk about the Bill to your co-workers and neighbors.

3. See your Senators and Representatives during August or write to them asking them to support the Bill. (S.1390 - H.R.4078)

4. Get as many workers as possible to take part in the contest for statements on "Why I Am Asking Members of Congress to Vote for the Labor Extension Service Bill, S. 1390."

WIN $300.00!

It's Easy . . . . . Anyone Can Try

Write a Simple Statement Today
"Why I Am Asking Members of Congress to Vote for the Labor Extension Bill, S.1390"

30 Grand Prizes!

1st — $300.00	4th — $50.00
2nd — $100.00	5th — $25.00
3rd — $ 75.00	25 prizes — $10.00

HERE'S WHAT YOU DO:

1. Any union member or other worker in plant, mine, mill, factory, or office can participate,—but the contest is not open to fulltime, paid union officials.
2. Your statement should be about 250 words.
3. Write in ink, or type, on one side of paper.
4. Your work will be judged on facts and ideas, not on style, grammar or spelling.
5. Send your paper in by October 15th to this Committee. Awards will be announced on November 15th. No papers will be returned.
6. Do not write your name on your statement. Use a separate piece of paper for name, address, union or other affiliation.

Clip or pin this to your statement. Mail to the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education. When your paper arrives in Washington it will be given a number. Your statement when given to the judges will carry a number instead of your name.

Copies of the Bill and other explanatory material may be secured from union officials, community leaders, or by writing this Committee.

HERE'S WHY YOU DO IT:

The Labor Extension Service Bill (S.1390) has been introduced into the United States Congress with the united support of the entire American labor movement. Through cooperation with colleges and universities the Bill provides for educational services to wage and salary earners, including classes, institutes and forums, research studies, moving pictures, exhibits, conferences, information and library services.

Your paper stating your own ideas about such a service may win $300 and help pass S.1390.

Sponsored by

COMMITTEE FOR THE EXTENSION OF LABOR EDUCATION

2117 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W.

Washington 7, D. C.

Note: The prize money has been contributed for this special purpose and is not taken from the funds of the Committee.

JANUARY, 1948
Vol. II, No. 3

GWES NEWS

Georgia Workers Education Service

353 COURTLAND ST., N. E.
ATLANTA 3, GA.
WALNUT 1961

RUMORS OF FERMENT DOWN ON THE FARM!

We came across a recent Gallup report the other day that struck us as pretty important. Maybe it was because it was a poll of farmers this time.

It appears from the report that the farmers who have been enjoying the highest prices in their history are beginning to get awfully worried about their all-time high income. They apparently have an awfully insecure feeling and know that sooner or later high farm prices must tumble down.

Also according to the poll, only 4% of the farmers feel that it is easier to make both ends meet than it was a year ago, while 58% think it is more difficult. Farmers have found their operating costs zooming from 9 to 25 percent a year since 1939.

Few farmers, remembering the depression of the thirties, can ever forget the wholesale farm foreclosures, the evictions, and the farm strikes.

FARM CO-OPS ATTACKED

The farmers who are organized into Farm Co-operatives don't like the big business attacks on Co-operatives in general and on Farm Co-operatives in particular. During the early part of December, between 3 and 4 thousand farmers gathered in St. Paul, Minnesota, to attend the annual stockholders' meeting of the Farmers' Union Grain Terminal Association. This is the largest Grain Co-op in the world and this was a record attendance. The grass root rumblings might hold real political significance in the 1948 elections.

Homer Ayres, of the Farm Equipment Workers Union, in his bi-weekly farm column, has reported a number of new political alliances between labor organizations and farm organizations in the Midwest and Northwest. Farmers have never liked monopoly and the attacks on their Co-operatives could build up a mighty opposition to big business Congressmen.

Talking about Farm Co-operatives reminds us of a most encouraging report from the Motor City Co-op. (Detroit to you). The Motor City Co-op is backed by AFL, CIO, Railway Unions and other Community Organizations, and it is now launching a drive to establish warehouse facilities in order to supply Co-op Stores as soon as they get started.

The whole Co-op movement in Detroit has flowed from a food distribution program from union halls. The UAW's Co-op Department estimates that the case-lot food distribution is saving UAW members $15,000 weekly on $125,000 a week business. That ain't peanuts, brothers and sisters.

The warehouse program would be available to all state outlets. In addition a retail outlet for food, electrical appliances and other merchandise would be operated in connection with the warehouses.

In Georgia, there is a real and growing interest in Co-operatives, as Program Leader Haskins and Hank Dyer found in their December Co-op Workshops in south Georgia. A Co-op Warehouse and Wholesale, if they could be established in this region, would be a sound way to build union Co-ops in Georgia.

* * * * * * * *

SPECIAL DOINGS IN SOUTH GEORGIA

Field Program Leader Haskins and Director McCallister have just returned from a whirlwind of graduation ceremonies in South Georgia towns. Director McCallister awarded 75 Certificates of Merit to union members in 3 towns who have regularly attended and participated in a course for union training.

On January 8, in Americus, certificates were awarded to ACWA Local 226 members in an "Economic Problems" class. They were: Sisters Finch, Bessie Peek, Annie Thompson, Elizabeth Van Agnew, and Jeannette Holley.

On January 9, in Albany, McCallister awarded certificates to 34 lady members of the Packinghouse Workers who had completed a course in "How to Make the Union Work". These sisters were: Esther Bynum, Ida Evens, Lizzie Anthony, Julia Wall, Lonny Brown, Luella Williams, Gertrude Williams, Mary Jenkins, Renella Jefferson, Ida Williams, Johnny Cobb, Lovina Nealy, Estella Williams, Mary Whaley, Carrie Marmon, Anna Thomas, Amelia Charles, Jerry McKam, Rubalea Parker, Rosalea Linkhorn, Sally Brown, Verdell Hudson, Jessie Fulton, Essie May Glandon, Rebecca Boynton, Elerine Mosley, Gertrude Johnson, Essie May Brown, Annie Taylor, Ethel Powell, Mary James, Annie Hall, Willie Mae Bruce, and Rosalea Holmes.

On the same evening he awarded certificates to 22 Packinghouse and Woodworkers members for completion of their class in "Union Problems", taught by M. F. Adams. Names of these students will be carried in next month's issue, since they will arrive too late for inclusion in this.

On January 9, also in Albany, 14 AFHW Local 168 members were awarded their certificates. Class members were: Curtis Arthur, Clinton Ray, James M. Hall, Jack Hall, E. V. Long, Jr., E. H. Cantrell, R. J. Howard, William T. Bentley, James Tidwell, Charlie Bentley, Mrs. Elsie Mills, Eunice Cantrell, and Philip Carter.

In Camilla, 4 ACWA'ers completed their class with Elizabeth Van Agnew in "How To Make The Union Work". They are: Cordelia Monroe, Georgie Smith, Elsie Warsham, Mary Smithwick.

In between all this, Frank and Olive met with the Americus Inter-Union Council, which is thriving and active.

Olive and Frank returned covered with red mud and pleased smiles.

* * * * *

NEW PROGRAMS UNDER WAY

In Brunswick: Staffmember McKinstry reports from his bailiwick that the Central Labor Union began its six weeks' course on January 7, in "Your Job, Your Union and Your Pay" under the able instructorship of M.E.Colley. Class meets at the Boilermakers Hall two hours a week. Brother Colley and Staffmember Warren are working on movie programs for the class.

In Savannah: Ed also tells us that the Longshoremen began a class on January 12, called "Know Your Union". It will run for three weeks, meet two hours each time on Wednesday night at the Boilermakers Building.

State, County and Municipal Workers will be seeing GWES movies at their bimonthly meetings and are talking about a Parliamentary Law class, too.

The ILA Local 1475 saw "Good Men and True" and will be featuring movies and filmstrips at regular monthly meetings hereafter.

In Augusta: Ed showed "Good Men and True" at the January 7 meeting of the Central Labor Union and goes back on January 28 with "Labor's Challenge".

In Athens: TWUA Local 940 had lively discussion with Staffmember Warren after seeing film "Men Who Grow Cotton". May have monthly movies.

In Atlanta: UPWA Local 325 held its first Parliamentary Law class as part of its regular membership meeting on January 13. There are no nodding heads in the "Economic Problems" discussion groups for Local 111 and 325, Staffmember Piercey reports, despite the fact that the evening meeting brings to a close a long work-day that starts at 5: A. M.

* * * * *

STARTING SOON

In Atlanta: ILG'ers to put heads together in a "Parliamentary Procedure" class late in January, says Staffmember Warren. Also song leading for regular monthly meeting of the members - Ruth to show movies at New Members class.

Laundry Workers have mapped out ambitious program of three classes: "Stewards' Training", "Parliamentary Procedure", and "Citizenship".

In Albany: Packinghouse Workers, who seem to be tireless about these things, will meet every Friday, starting in February for a class in "Union Administration". Wives of Woodworkers and Packinghouse Workers will get together for "Hints for Better Homekeepers".

* * * * *

INSTITUTES AND CONFERENCES

In Atlanta: UAW 34 with UAW Regional Education Director Ed Coffey to hammer out program with GWES, maybe January 16, maybe January 23rd.

February 2, ACWA Education Director Bob Levin finally making Atlanta to plan program for newly created ACWA Georgia Joint Board. Bob and GWES to confer mightily.

Atlanta Federation of Trades deep in plans with Staffmember Piercey for a one-day Institute, February 7, on Taft-Hartley and Georgia Labor Laws. Will be a full review of Act and Rulings to date. Georgia AFL "Big Wigs" among the participants. More later.

Planning for a Community Housing Institute also under way. Idea to get varied community sponsorship for serious tackling of what, whys and hows of Housing.

In Camilla: One-day Workshop for ACWA'ers on their new contract.

In Albany: Two-day Co-op Workshop for Hosiery, and Packinghouse Workers - Hank Dyer to lead the Workshop activities.

In Cordele: Late in February, a one-day Workshop for the Hosiery Workers on "Community Relations".

* * * * *

SPECIAL EVENTS

In New York, January 7, 8, 9, TWUA Education Director Rogin held Staff Training Institute. GWES Program Leader McCormick who works with TWUA Locals in North Georgia attended for an inside approach to education for TWUA'ers.

Frank spoke to Atlanta AVC on January 14 on "What Should Our Foreign Policy Be" - Hope the State Department was listening in.

Also to the new semester students at University of Georgia School of Business Administration on "What Labor Wants".

On January 30, 31, in Birmingham, Steelworkers to hold a two-day Education Institute for their three Southern Districts. Director McCallister was asked by Steel's Emery Bacon to assist with audio-visual end of the Institute (films and filmstrips to you).

On February 6 and 7, Frank will be meeting with the Committee of the South of which he is a Vice President, to consider the report which Governor Broughton announces is now ready for the Committee's study. Report is on "Effects of Mechanization of Agriculture and Industrialization of the South".

At the end of February a one-day Workshop on the CIVIL RIGHTS REPORT will be held. Southern Regional Council is the sponsor, with GWES and other cooperating agencies. Planning Committee meeting regularly. Several hundred Southern church leaders and others expected for the Workshop.

In Atlanta, on January 7, the Georgia Power Company made its request for raise in transportation fares. On February 11, the public will get its chance to testify on same before the Public Utilities Commission. GWES Research Director Leake, Chairman of the Public Utilities Committee of the Atlanta Consumers Council, urges fellow Georgians to testify before the Commission and send their gripes to the Committee. You can address her at our office. Remember February 11. It means 3 cents more or less in your pocket, everytime you ride a bus.

* * * * *

ANNOUNCEMENT

AVAILABLE TO UNIONS! EXHIBIT PORTRAYING LABOR'S FREEDOM HERITAGE.

GWES has prepared a series of facsimiles of precious documents which have increased labor's rights and liberties over the years. Among them are the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution, the Wagner Act, the Norris-La Guardia Act. You can request the exhibit for regular membership meetings, directly from our office or from your GWES Representative.

AROUND THE CRACKER BARREL

HAVE YOU READ? Machines in the Cotton Fields by Arthur Raper?

An excellent pamphlet published by the Southern Regional Council which tells the story of what mechanization will mean to the Southern cotton farmer and the cotton farm. You can order in quantity directly from the Southern Regional Council, 63 Auburn Avenue, Atlanta, or we shall be glad to send you one free copy.

HAVE YOU SEEN? Men Who Grow Cotton?

This is a new 16 millimeter film, in color and sound about cotton growers in the South east. Made especially for our region by the United States Department of Agriculture. Excellent. Ask your GWES Leader to show it at your next union meeting or class, or write us direct for use.

DID YOU KNOW?

That the GWES staff has adopted a German trade union youth school and that we by paying an extra nickel for our lunches at the office each day have been able to send so far one CARE package of food, and one CARE package with blankets? We are now starting nickels toward our third package. We'll be glad to send you the name of another trade union school if your local would like to adopt one. This is a good way to help rebuild a democratic trade union movement in Germany for their sake and for ours.

* *

Georgia Workers Education Service
353 Courtland Street, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Sec. 562, P.L.& R.

Mr. George S. Mitchell
Southern Regional Council
Wesley Memorial Bldg.
Atlanta, Ga.

Return Postage Guaranteed

AMERICAN WORKERS WANT A LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE!

COMMITTEE FOR THE EXTENSION OF LABOR EDUCATION
2117 PENNSYLVANIA AVE., N. W. — WASHINGTON 7, D. C.

BULLETIN NO. V
FEBRUARY, 1948

ACTION AT LAST. . .

WE'RE ON THE SENATE SCHEDULE FOR HEARINGS!

HEARINGS which have been mentioned so often in bulletins and correspondence on the subject of the Labor Extension Bill are definitely scheduled in the Senate.

They will be held before the Senate Subcommittee on Education starting Monday, FEBRUARY SIXTEENTH for five days. Senator Aiken of Vermont is Chairman.

There will be time for a full discussion of the Bill, its purposes and the operation of the proposed Labor Extension Service. The first session will open at 10 A.M. on Monday, February 16, in the Hearings Room of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, on the second floor of the Capitol, in the Senate Wing. Here is the list of members of the Senate Subcommittee on Education.

Chairman, George D. Aiken (R) Vermont
H.Alexander Smith (R) New Jersey
Forrest C. Donnell (R) Missouri
Irving M. Ives (R) New York
Elbert D.Thomas (D) Utah
Allen J. Ellender (D) Louisiana
Lister Hill (D) Alabama

Twenty or more witnesses who believe that this legislation is needed are being asked to testify. Others will undoubtedly be heard in opposition. This sponsoring Committee is serving as a clearing house to secure witnesses on behalf of the Bill and to make sure that briefs are prepared well in advance of the hearings. Witnesses are on the list from every branch of the labor movement, colleges and universities which are conducting labor extension programs or would like to do so, employers concerned with fair and peaceful industrial relations, and representatives of community organizations. We expect soon to be able to announce the dates of hearings in the House.

This office continues to receive favorable comment on the nationwide broadcast entitled "Can the Use of Facts and Reason Help in Industrial Peace" given on December 21 on the NBC Program "America United." This broadcast was sponsored by the CIO and included in the discussion Congressman Tollefson, one of the sponsors of the Bill in the House; Kermit Eby, Director of Education and Research of the CIO; and Hilda W. Smith, Chairman of this National Committee. Copies of this broadcast are available in this office.

The Committee has been conducting a survey of labor education activities in colleges and universities during 1947. To date, 65 of these institutions have expressed interest and have returned detailed information on their extension programs, labor institutes and special services to workers, as well as constructive suggestions for a Labor Extension Service.

Funds to support the work of the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education continue to come in from International Unions, State and local labor organizations. Sources of recent contributions include: 7 Steelworker locals in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois; 3 Auto Worker locals in Michigan; 1 Farm Equipment local in Iowa and a local of the Rubber Workers in Cadillac, Michigan, Lenawee County and Greensburg, Pennsylvania Industrial Union Councils; 1 Communications local in Texas; Int'l Office of the Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers; Michigan, Ohio and Minnesota State Federations of Labor; and a number of Central Labor Unions and AFL locals in Minnesota.

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

At the end of the hearings, February 20, communicate with Members of the Senate Subcommittee listed above.

Ask them to report the Bill (S.1390) favorably to the full Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and to the Senate.

SEND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THIS LEGISLATIVE CAMPAIGN TO THIS COMMITTEE!
FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED! WE HAVE LESS THAN A MONTH'S MINIMUM BUDGET AHEAD.

FEBRUARY, 1948
Vol. II, No. 4

GWES NEWS

Georgia Workers Education Service

353 COURTLAND ST., N. E.
ATLANTA 3, GA.
WALNUT 1961

CUTTING TAXES - PENNY WISE AND POUND FOOLISH?

Just in case you haven't heard about it, this is an election year. Sure sign is the Battle of the Taxes now going on in Congress. I suspect that most of us barely read the news headlines about tax bills. We think this business of Federal and State taxation is way above our heads anyway, and it might as well be left to some experts to figure out.

Furthermore, since all the hullabaloo seems to be about "cutting taxes" and "reducing Federal expenditures" that sounds like horse sense, and we think we're for it, anyway.

But is it "horse sense"? Should we be in favor of tax reduction at this time? Let's take a look at current tax proposals. Let's find out:

1. Whose taxes are being cut?

2. Can we afford to reduce Federal taxes and therefore Federal spending at this time?

The tax proposals fall into two groups - those which would reduce personal income taxes, and those which would reduce taxes on businesses. Before we get too involved in pros and cons, let's understand the whys and whats of TAXES.

TAXES are nothing more than the prorated cost of things and services which we can buy only from government, whether it is city, county, State or Federal. Within the State, our taxes pay for such things as schools, fire and police protection, health and sanitation, traffic regulations and the like.

On the Federal level, taxes pay for administration of social security, foreign relations, conservation of natural resources, agricultural services, Army and Navy, and the like. If too little revenue is raised through taxation, then it means that such essential services cannot be provided or decently paid for. Taxes are a necessary part of our whole system of government, and we must have them. But we must be sure that taxes are raised fairly in accordance with the ability of citizens to pay their share, and in sufficient amounts to provide the best possible services for all the people of the State and Nation.

How does all the to-do in Congress stack up against these requirements?

Pretty badly, friends, pretty badly! In Congress both Republicans and Democrats, contrary to the President's recommendations, and with loud noises about "economizing" are proposing "tax reduction bills" which would reduce Federal revenues by $6\frac{1}{2}$ billion, through cuts in personal income taxes and business taxes.

Actually the income tax cuts would benefit most persons with high incomes, while low-income workers would be thrown a few crumbs in the form of minor tax cuts.

President Truman would have left the tax bill as is for persons with an income of over $7,000, excepting for a flat reduction of $40 for everybody. The House Bill, although allowing a slight cut for low income persons, would actually give bonuses to the upper income boys. It would save the $10,000-a-year man, about $300 in taxes. It would save the million dollar-a-year man, some $94,000.

Now it's plain as plain can be that the person with a $10,000 a year income can pay $300 in taxes to his government far more easily than the $1,000-a-year man can pay $50-$60 in taxes. Actually these proposals let those persons who least need the money keep it in their pockets or in their banks, while at the same time they decrease the amount of revenue which would be given to the government to provide those necessary services we talked about before.

Take the "Community Property Tax" plan. This is a plan, whereby, if the husband in the family is the only one working, he can divide his annual income in half - let his wife pay income tax on one half and he on the other. Result: Income taxes this way on two supposedly separate incomes are much less than that of just one family tax return. This again works to the disadvantage of the working man, in whose family usually more than one person is the wage-earner.

AF of L man, Matthew Woll, and his tax-advisor, Arthur Elder of Michigan, declared in their statement to Congress that this plan would save $6,194 in taxes for persons with incomes of $50,000 but only $76 for persons with a $5,000 income. And below that level, which is where most of us are, nothing at all would be saved in tax money.

See what we mean? That's why we ask "Tax Cutting for Whom?" Tax gravy for the taxpayers in the top brackets, who represent only 3½ percent of all taxpayers, and only bare bones for the rest of us.

The same tender regard is shown for "the big boys" in the numerous proposals to cut down or eliminate altogether, various forms of BUSINESS and CORPORATION TAXES.

The House Committee proposed as well that present EXCISE TAXES be continued. Excise taxes which are placed upon essentials and luxuries are levied against all consumers, with no regard for ability to pay. Just like the SALES TAX, these fall more heavily on the low-income person who spends relatively more of his earnings for necessities.

Labor's tax experts, Woll and Elder, made several proposals to Congress. Said they: If you are really concerned with reducing taxes for the benefit of all, here's what you can do:---

1. Cut 4 billion dollars, instead of 6½ billion by cutting out 1½ billion from those excise taxes which affect every day necessities, and

2. Cut 2½ billion more by raising the personal income tax exemptions for all the low-income tax families.

Congress ignored these proposals completely. Instead, it has pushed for all kinds of tax cuts which would help only the big-income boys, and at the expense of needed services for the country's low-income wage-earners.

Many public minded tax experts question altogether the wisdom of tax reduction at this time. They point out that the Federal Government needs more not less revenue, if we are to carry out our commitment for foreign aid. They point to our staggering war debt, and say that the time to pay it off is now while incomes are high, instead of passing it along to less prosperous periods. They point out, too, that high taxes at this time can serve as a brake against inflation. And most important of all, they point out that the money for all of this can come, without privation, from those most able and most unwilling to pay - the upper bracket income boys and the profit-swollen industries of all kinds.

SO WHAT DO WE DO ABOUT IT?

We have to realize that the kind of tax bill Congress is planning to pass is a direct blow to labor. If a cut in taxes were applied to wage-earners, it would be like an increase in the pay check of millions of workers.

A hundred dollars put in your pockets this way can buy as many groceries as $100 won on the picket line and with less suffering. It means sounder economic policy, too. Let's get after our Congressmen and Senators. Write to House and Senate Committees on taxes. Let them know you are on to their tricks. You can see the wolf under Granny's bonnet, and Little Red Riding Hood (that's you and me) doesn't intend to be swallowed whole again.

NEW PROGRAMS UNDER WAY

In Atlanta: Staffmember Piercey meets in a work session every Monday with Education Committee of UAW Local 34. Result, first issue of UAW 34 Headlight now on the press.

In Atlanta, also, Staffmember Warren reports ex-staffmember Naiman is teaching a Parliamentary Law Class for LWIU, Tuesday evenings at 7:00 at Union Hall.

Staffmember Douty doing likewise for ILG gals every Tuesday at 4:30.

LWIU Citizenship class got off to a flying start with Dr. Walter Chivers of Morehouse College. Miss Madrid Turner of Spelman to share teaching job with him.

In Columbus: A "How to Read and Write" class for IWA, Professor Brittain teaching.

In Cuthbert: Staffmember Haskins teaching IWA group "How To Run A Union," Thursdays at 7:30.

In Talbotton: IWA meeting on "Union Administration" with Professor Thomas.

In Rome: TWUA Joint Board every Tuesday at 7:30 for an "Arbitration Workshop" with union officers officiating, reports Staffmember McCormick.

Also, UAW-CIO Local 1103 meeting with McCormick every Wednesday at 5:30 for "How To Run A Union Meeting."

In Savannah: Association of Firefighters, Local 574 getting some technical instruction from Staffmember McKinstry in "Simplified Hydraulics for Fire Departments" at Firehouse. When the fire bell rings, the class disappears down the pole.

STARTING SOON

In Buena Vista: Olive setting up class for IWA in "Union Administration."

In Columbus: Newly organized textile workers getting together to find out about "Union Administration."

Postscript: We did not have the names of all graduates for last issue, so we hasten to include them now.

In Macon: Local 4037, Steelworkers, held a super-duper graduation with Mayor of Macon officiating. Pictures in the Macon News and all the trimmings - Steel man, Ernie Starnes, the spark plug. Those who received certificates were: William Harbin, Bill St. Clair, W. H. Arera, M. H. Burden, Terry Davis, R. F. Harbin, W. D. Hopkins, Thomas Peyton, A. J. Russell, E. F. Wynn, Jack Cowan and R. E. Starnes.

In Albany: 24 members IWA and UPWA members who received their certificates were: B. C. Cutts, M. C. Mayo, Reley Kelsen, Dan Taylor, Jr., Dave Orange, Charley Kelsey, Silas Green, Joe Williams, Morris Williams, J.C. Anderson, Charley Shackleford, Willie Lee Parker, Sol Malone, T.J.Steward, Arthur Malone, Charley Brown, James Wallace, Ralph Williams, Solomon Green, Hamp Malone, Rufus Alexander, Jessie Wallace, Will Armstrong, and Jessie Walker.

INSTITUTES AND WORKSHOPS

Armed with charts and the Co-op movie "Here is Tomorrow," Hank Dyer did a five-night stand in Americus with ACWA, and Railroad Trainmen, and with Hosiery Workers and Railroad Trainmen in Albany. Hosiery Workers actually considering buying a store.

In Atlanta: February 7 saw 200 A. F. of L'ers from 17 Georgia towns crowd into meeting hall at the Auditorium for whole day session on "Taft-Hartley Act, and Georgia Labor Laws." Staffmember Piercey pleased with both quality and quantity of Institute. Speakers and panel members were: Henry Chandler, John Piercey, Warren Hall, Fred Meyers, Carmen Lucia, Ernest Collier, Y. F. Geeslin, George Googe, Joe Jacobs. Brother McCallister, presided.

OUR RESEARCH FRONT

Research Director Pauline Leake stole the show at the Public Utility Hearing on February 11. She was cross examined for an hour, but did not wilt.

At odd moments supplied cost-of-living and wage data for wage negotiations to Packinghouse, and for United Cement, Lime and Gypsum Workers.

Her article prepared for LPA on "America's Dispossessed" received wide circulation and much favorable comment.

SPECIAL EVENTS Director McCallister to present testimony on February 20 before the Senate Committee considering the Labor Extension Bill. Using the Union response to GWES as ample proof that Georgia Workers want and need this type of education, and have as much right to expect Federal financing as do businessmen and farmers for theirs. Goes on from Washington to take part in annual ALES Washington's Birthday Conference in New York.

He reports a turnout of 125 Steel delegates at Birmingham Education Meet for 2 hard working days of meetings classes under direction of Vin Sweeney and Emery Bacon.

Staffmembers McCallister, Warren and Douty took part in successful ILG's banquet for New Members.

On February 29, URWDSE to hold 1 day Union Training Institute. Staffmember Piercey and Regional Director John Schulter arranging. Expected to be present, National Educational Director, Martin Kyne.

March 4, 5, 6, Piercey to take part in UAW Education Institute in Memphis.

Week of March 12, 13, 14, similar one to be held in Atlanta revolving around UAW Wage and Pension Demands, Ed Coffey, UAW Education Staff, directing program.

GWES arranging meetings on March 1 for Labor M. P. Harry Wright Wallace. Two at Emory University, a reception, and a meeting with Atlanta labor leaders. First time British Labor Party man has told his story in Atlanta.

AROUND THE CRACKER BARREL

HAVE YOU READ? The Report of the special Tax Study Committee to the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives? That's where we got all our information on the labor proposals for tax policy this year. Write to your Congressman for a copy. He will send it to you free and it makes good reading, so, believe it or not.

VE YOU SEEN? Millions Of Us? A good, moving film about a prospective strike breaker and what he learns about labor solidarity. It's not new but Staffmember Warren reports that it is still one of our most popular films and always on call. Ask for it, if your Local hasn't seen it.

DID YOU KNOW? That as a result of our little news item last month about GWES staff having adopted a German trade union school, Pat Knight, TWUA Southern Education Director, asked for two others because two of her locals were interested? More available for the asking.

Georgia Workers Education Service
353 Courtland Street, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Sec. 562, P.L.& R.

RECEIVED MAR 4 1948 Southern Regional Council

Mr. George S. Mitchell
Southern Regional Council
Wesley Memorial Bldg.
Atlanta, Ga.

Return Postage Guaranteed

APRIL, 1948
Vol. II, No. 6

GWES NEWS

Georgia Workers Education Service

353 COURTLAND ST., N. E.
ATLANTA 3, GA.
WALNUT 1961

S.1390 TIME FOR ACTION ON THE LABOR EDUCATION BILL IS NOW H.R.4078

Spring and especially the Atlanta Spring which is so pretty this year makes it awfully hard to be serious about anything but new clothes and house cleaning. As usual, however, there's the usual flood of "must-be-done" items for labor folk to turn their hands and minds to.

First on the order of business is this Labor Education Extension Bill. In the Senate, it is S. 1390. In the House, it is H. R. 4078. In case you have forgotten, this bill-if passed-would set up a workers' education division in the U. S. Department of Labor with $10,000,000 the first year for classes, movies, institutes and library services for American wage earners. In other words, this bill would finance the same kinds of educational services which GWES has been carrying on for union locals all over Georgia.

WHY FEDERAL AID FOR WORKERS EDUCATION? Maybe, at first blush, that rings a little strangely, but actually the Federal government has been financing educational services for all groups excepting labor groups for many years. Through the Department of Commerce, business men are serviced. Through the Department of Agriculture, farmers are serviced. But to date, the organized worker has, as usual, been left out in the cold.

To remedy this, the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education has been working hard and long for the past three years to get the bill introduced and passed.

At the moment, the Bill is before the House sub-committee for hearings which started April 13. The Senate sub-committee held its hearings in February. A favorable report is momentarily expected from the Senate Committee.

In the Senate, several members of the full committee "The Labor and Welfare Committee" have already assured their support of the bill when it gets to the committee and to the Senate floor. These Senators are: James Murray of Montana, Claude Pepper of Florida, and Lister Hill of Alabama. We are glad to note that 2 out of the 3 are Southerners.

From all over the country, workers education people appeared to speak for the bill. Among them at the Senate Committee hearing was Frank McCallister, director of GWES. Using the experience with Georgia workers as an example, McCallister assured the Senators of the real response and interest of Georgia workers to a real kind of education. In part, he said:

"Our resources are tapped to the utmost ...The workers of Georgia, some 250,000 people, with little education because of the poverty of the state, need to know and understand the problems of their state and their role in solving them as part of the community, the state and the Nation." ..."If this is to be accomplished successfully, a broader, more comprehensive program must be spread throughout Georgia which will reach every one of these workers just as the program of the Agricultural Extension Division reaches all the people who live on farms in Georgia."

He pointed out that combined Federal and State aid for agricultural and home economics education in Georgia for 1947-48 would total 1½ million dollars. For workers' education, only a mere $60,000 expended through GWES was available to meet the needs and wants of Georgia's industrial workers. He urged a correction of this unfair condition by a speedy passage of S. 1390.

Similar hearings before the House Committee heard testimony from leading CIO and AFL spokesmen, George Googe, of Georgia, among them. Vice Chairman of the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, Frank Fernbach, made a most forceful answer to the expressed fear of Congressman Keran that the workers would be "propagandized." Said Fernbach:

"The process of education grows out of disagreement and the clashing of ideas. Labor in this program does not want propaganda. Labor wants facts."

There is a strong feeling in Washington that the Labor Education Extension Bill can be passed in this session. That will depend in large part on what you do to help push it through.

TODAY: GET BUSY

1. Spread the word about the bill through the local, the council, and friends of labor.

2. Have letters and wires written to your Congressmen and Senators asking their support of the bill. Ask teachers, ministers and others in your town to do the same.

3. Send a personal contribution and get the local to send a check to the National Committee. It needs help now. It would be a shame if lack of funds now should stymie the Committee when it is so close to getting results.

Send your contributions to Miss Hilda Smith, National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, at 2117 Pennsylvania Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.

NEW PROGRAMS UNDER WAY

Atlanta: ACWA Joint Board meeting in Bremen drew out the local people as well as good discussion, led by Director McCallister on "How a Trade Union Functions."

UAW-CIO, Local 34, has organized a soft ball team and is entered in the Dixie League. Watch out, Georgia Crackers! Headlight, Chevrolet local's shop paper, continues to come out full of news and views - not so polite - about the Boss.

New chairman of the Education Committee is H. N. Attaway, one of our most faithful students at the Georgia People's School.

Buena Vista: The tireless Woodworkers began a new series of classes in "How To Make The Union Work," with W. M. Thomas of Columbus, as instructor.

Dawson: Packinghouse workers meeting for the same purpose, with the Reverend Johnson, of Dawson.

STARTING SOON

Olive reports plans under way for an intensive 5 day get together of Albany textile workers on "How To Run A Union." Starts May 2. This group has just petitioned for an election. Good luck to them.

GRADUATION CERTIFICATES flying around like winter snowflakes these days-Last issue we had to leave out the names of the Savannah policemen who completed their classes. Police officers were: W. J. Logan, Lohmon Bowen, L. O. Way, William Cleveland, H. L. Strange, Hartford Hickman, Loran Bishop, Hal Willett, H. C. Berne, H. J. Wells, Carlton Young, T. J. Ryan, J. N. Edenfield, C. W. Weber, George Tice, John Tanner, Oscar Bass, P. G. Farris, Patrick Levin, Warren Love, P. K. Heiden, Daniel Bland, Eugene Coursey, B. F. West, B. J. Bennett, Johnny Christian, M. H. Brady, W. N. Horne, L. C. Higgs.

Atlanta: Laundry Workers received their certificates at the April membership meeting. Eleven members received them for successful completion of classes in "Citizenship" and "Parliamentary Law." They are: Emma Sue Blunt, Lina Byrd, Janie Dillard, Irene Greene, Emma Hicks, Evelyn Riggins, Nattie Wiggle, Idella Taylor, Johnnie Walls, Alberta Goodson, Ella Mae Gaylor.

ILGWU: Local 122 members held a special meeting on the occasion of National Education Director Mark Starr's visit to Atlanta. Mark came to speak at the final session of the GWES International Relations Institute. Mark awarded our Certificates of Merit to nine members who had successfully completed their course in "Parliamentary Law." They were: Ola Thomas, Ruby Wear, Louise Davis, Elizabeth Gault, Clara Rawlins, Beatrice Henderson, Clara Sauter, Gertrude Boyd, Nell Bennett.

ACWA: Ten members of the Joint Board completed some specialized training in a one-day institute on "Getting Out A Shop Paper." Four towns were represented - Atlanta, Bremen, Douglasville and Buchanan. "The Quadrangle" will be the result - a newsy, breezy sheet. The ten Joint Board'ers are: Leora Barfield, Pauline Melton, Annie Belle Swaney, Gladys Dollar, Milton Watson, Odel Kirk, Cora Ann Lee, Mary Couthen, Reba Daniels, Edith Burnett.

South Georgia: Staffmember Haskins has just mass produced another assembly line of graduates. Awards were made to 47 IWA members in Cuthbert; 11 UPWA members in Albany; and 46 IWA members in Talbotton. Congratulations to all of them and to their instructors.

GWES INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS INSTITUTE

Last month we told you about our program and our speakers for this institute. Now we can look back on it with real satisfaction. Each exciting session brought out an average of 100 attendants. The session on Russian expansionism was a particularly hot one. We are grateful to all the speakers for their stimulating contributions, and give special bouquets to Chinese student, T. Ho, and Korean student, Charles Song, of Emory University, for their participation in the final session. Tremendous audience applause for Director McCallister's proposal that we might initiate a regular monthly forum in the Fall.

Our very special thanks to the Reverend Harrison McMains who so generously allowed us the use of the auditorium of the First Christian Church.

RADIO HI-JINX During the Institute our speakers appeared on several radio programs, including "Coffee with Maggie." Toni Sender, Mark Starr, Max Bond, George Baldanzi all were interviewed over the air. The Atlanta Central Trades held a dinner reception for Miss Sender, the A.F. of L's consultant to the Economic and Social Council of the U. N. Miss Sender gave a most informative address to the A.F. of L'ers on how the Council functions.

SPECIAL INSTITUTES Macon: 100 A.F. of L. delegates turned out for discussion of Taft-Hartley.

Columbus: Same subject brought out 125.

Atlanta: The second in the "How To Do It" series for CIO staff took place on Monday, April 19, at GWES. Subject: "Labor Use of Audio-Visual Aids."

The morning session heard C. D. Cauble of the University of Georgia, and Staffmember Warren on how to plan for and use educational movies.

In the afternoon, delegates learned to run movie equipment with the help of representatives from Calhoun Films. The March "How To Do It" on "Labor and the Press" heard Dr. G.M. Sparks, President of Georgia Evening College; Lee Rogers, Managing Editor of the Constitution; Tom Nowell of CIO and Jim Loring.

REPORT FROM THE FILM FRONT!

Staffmember Warren checked our film showings this year. From September 1, 1947 through March 22, 1948, GWES has shown films to 6,792 Georgians in union meetings, classes and special film showings. They divide thusly: A.F. of L - 1,633; CIO- 4,497; Independent - 298; non-union - 464.

Films seen by the largest number are: 11 showings of "Millions Of Us" to close to 1500 people; 7 showings of "United Action" to 1100 people and 6 showings of "Brotherhood of Man" to 400 plus.

Among the filmstrips, "Labor's Challenge" had 9 showings to 500 people, and "Good Men And True" to 230. 18 other films were also in curculation as well as 8 other filmstrips, but these were our most-in-demand products. We feel like a major distributor these days.

Incidentally, Staffmember Warren has been up to her small ears in Anchor-Rome strike activity from running off leaflets to helping to arrange program for strike meetings seven days a week.

SPECIAL EVENTS Director McCallister in his usual turly-burly of speeches.

To Agnes Scott Alumnae Club on March 23, at the home of Mrs. Ernest Rogers on Workers Education. Showed "Education For Living" as part of his talk.

To Student Assembly at Oglethorpe University on Wednesday, April 28, against UMT.

To Macon and Columbus Institutes of A. F. of L.

Participated in Atlanta Film Council Luncheon for Floyd Brooker of the U. S. Office of Education, who did a magnificent job of pointing out the inadequacies of the American educational film field.

On April 23, took part in the Atlanta

Personnel Institute as a member of the panel on "Labor Relations."

GOOD NEWS DEPARTMENT Pauline Leake, our Research Department, in between all kinds of deadline research assignments, found time to apply for one of the eight full scholarships offered by the British Universities for special summer work at the University of Leeds. Pauline (lucky gal - lucky England) was awarded one of them and is off on the high seas early in June for an eight week stay in England and the continent. Her project - a study of the textile industry under British Labor Government Management. Wonderful, isn't it?

To add to the general gratification [illegible] GWES, Doris Naiman, former program leader, gave birth to a 7½ pound girl. Mother and child doing well, thank you, and Daddy Naiman still gurgling with pride.

AROUND THE CRACKER BARREL

HAVE YOU READ? "LABOR UNIONS IN ACTION" by Jack Barbash? Harper's 1948 - $3.50. Here's a sound, down-to-earth book, interpreting how and why labor unions function as they do, written by a man who knows American unions inside out. It should be on every union shelf and in every library. Ask for it at your neighborhood library. Buy one for your union library, if you have one. It's good, simple reading, besides.

HAVE YOU SEEN? "GATEWAY TO FREEDOM?" A beautiful, technicolor movie about the building of Palestine. It shows how the Histadrut which is the Palestinian federation of labor, built the land out of the desert [illegible]h its skilled and devoted workers. [illegible]ilable from GWES for showings at union meetings. Ask or write us for it within the next few weeks while we have it on circuit.

DID YOU KNOW? That in Atlanta the A.F. of L. and the CIO have formed an Atlanta Council for Labor Palestine? Its job is to spread understanding among our unions of what the issues are in Palestine and to build labor support for the Jewish organized workers of Palestine in the Histadrut.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Georgia Workers Education Service
353 Courtland Street, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Sec. 562, P.L.& R.

RECEIVED
MAY 7 1948
Southern Regional Council

Mrs. Agnes McKoy
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Ave., N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia

Return Postage Guaranteed

1 CENT 1
UNITED STATES POSTAGE

21- Latin America

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

FOR THE PRESS

MAY 21, 1948
No. 400

FINAL ACT OF BOGOTA

(Signed on May 2, 1948, at the Ninth International Conference of American States, Bogota, Colombia)

(Provisional and Unofficial English Translation)

Index of Resolutions

		Page
I	Dissemination of and Acquaintance with the Charter of the Organization of American States	10
II	Inter-American Juridical Committee	10
III	Survey of Inter-American Specialized Organizations	11
IV	Inter-American Statistical Institute	12
V	Inter-American Institute of Musicology	12
VI	Improvement of the System of Financing the Pan American Union	13
VII	Budget of the Inter-American Defense Board	13
VIII	Specialized Inter-American Economic Conference	13
IX	Inter-American Conference on the Conservation of Renewable Natural Resources	14
X	Division of Functions Between the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council	15
XI	Tourist Travel	16
XII	Freedom of Movement and Elimination of Passports	17
XIII	Transcontinental Railways	18
XIV	Inter-American Institute of Immigration	18
XV	Creation of an Inter-American Bank	19
XVI	Inter-American Institute of Commerce	19
XVII	The Commercial Credit Policy of the American States	20
XVIII	Topics for the Agenda of the Inter-American Economic Conference	20
XIX	Conditions of Work, Health and Cooperatives	20
XX	Development and Improvement of Social Service	21
XXI	Organic Statute of the Inter-American Commission of Women	23
XXII	Social Justice	27
XXIII	Economic Status of Working Women	27
XXIV	Program and Activities of the Inter-American Cultural Council	28
XXV	The Red Cross	29
XXVI	Praise for the Inter-American Commission of Women	29
XXVII	American Educational Charter for Peace Presented by the Government of Honduras	30
XXVIII	Secretariat of the Inter-American Commission of Women	30
XXIX	Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees	30

Index of Resolutions (continued) Page

XXX	American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man	39
XXXI	Inter-American Court to Protect the Rights of Man	45
XXXII	The Preservation and Defense of Democracy in America	46
XXXIII	Colonies and Occupied Territories in America and Creation of the American Committee on Dependent Territories	47
XXXIV	Inter-American Defense Board	49
XXXV	Exercise of the Right to Continuity of Diplomatic Relations	50
XXXVI	Recognition of de facto Governments	51
XXXVII	Right of Resistance	51
XXXVIII	Demarcation of Boundaries	51
XXXIX	Representation of the United Nations at Inter-American Conferences	52
XL	Adoption of the Nomenclature and Regime of the Charter of the Organization of American States	52
XLI	Secretary General and Assistant Secretary General of the Organization of American States	53
XLII	"Dictionary of Construction and Rules of the Spanish Language"	54
XLIII	Tribute to Don Federico Henriquez Carvajal	55
XLIV	Gratitude to the Government and the People of Colombia	55
XLV	Vote of Gratitude to President of Conference	56
XLVI	Vote of Thanks to the American Press	56

F I N A L A C T

The Ninth International Conference of American States, composed of the Delegations of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panamá, Paraguay, Perú, United States of America, Uruguay, Venezuela met at the City of Bogotá, the Capital of the Republic of Colombia, as provided for in Resolution CVIII of the Lima Conference, on March 30, 1948, the date fixed by the Governing Board of the Pan American Union in agreement with the Government of Colombia.

The accredited Delegations were the following, in the order of precedence established at the preliminary session:

HONDURAS

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Marco Antonio Batres

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Ramón E. Cruz
His Excellency Virgilio R. Gálvez

GUATEMALA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Enrique Muñoz Meany,
Minister of Foreign Affairs

Vice Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Jorge García Granados

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Luis Cardoza y Aragón
His Excellency Virgilio Rodríguez Beteta
His Excellency Manuel Noriega Morales
His Excellency José Luis Mendoza
His Excellency David Vela
His Excellency José María Saravia

CHILE

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Juvenal Hernández

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Julio Barrenechea Pino
His Excellency Ernesto Barros Jarpa
His Excellency José Ramón Gutiérrez
His Excellency Rear Admiral Danilo Bassi Galleguillos
His Excellency Walter Muller
His Excellency Gaspar Mora Sotomayor
His Excellency Enrique Bernstein
His Excellency Rodrigo González Allendes

URUGUAY

URUGUAY

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Dardo Regules

Delegates Plenipotentiary:

His Excellency Juan F. Guichón
His Excellency Carlos Manini Ríos
His Excellency General Pedro Sicco
His Excellency Ramón Píriz Coelho
His Excellency José A. Mora Otero
His Excellency Esteban Bacigalupi
His Excellency Pedro Chouhy Terra
His Excellency Hector A. Grauert
His Excellency Nilo Berchesi
His Excellency Ariosto D. González
His Excellency Blanca Mieres de Botto

CUBA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Guillermo Belt

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Oscar Gans y Martínez
His Excellency Ernesto Dihigo y López Trigo
His Excellency Carlos Tabernilla
His Excellency Ricardo Sarabasa y González
His Excellency Guy Pérez Cisneros
His Excellency Emilio Pando y Machado

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Chairman of the Delegation:
The Honorable George C. Marshall,
Secretary of State

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
The Honorable Willard L. Beaulac
The Honorable John W. Snyder
The Honorable W. Averell Harriman
The Honorable Norman Armour
The Honorable Charles F. Brannan
The Honorable William D. Pawley
The Honorable Walter J. Donnelly
The Honorable William McC. Martin
The Honorable Paul C. Daniels

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Arturo Despradel

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Manuel A. Peña Batlle
His Excellency R. Paino Pichardo
His Excellency Temístocles Messina
His Excellency Joaquín Balaguer

His

His Excellency Joaquín E. Salazar
His Excellency Carlos Sánchez y Sánchez
His Excellency Emilio Rodríguez Demorizi
His Excellency Héctor Incháustegui Cabral
Her Excellency Minerva Bernardino
His Excellency Luis Julián Pérez

BOLIVIA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Javier Paz Campero

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Eduardo Montes
His Excellency Alberto Salinas López
His Excellency Alfredo Alexander
His Excellency Humberto Linares
His Excellency Humberto Palza

PERU

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency General Armando Revoredo Iglesias, C. A. P., Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Víctor Andrés Belaúnde
His Excellency Luis Fernán Cisneros
His Excellency Juan Bautista de Lavalle
His Excellency Gonzalo N. de Arámburu
His Excellency Ernesto Alayza Grundy
His Excellency Edgardo Rebagliati
His Excellency Brigadier General José del Carmen Marín
His Excellency Captain Pedro Mazuré, Peruvian Navy
His Excellency Colonel José C. Villanueva
His Excellency Luis Echecopar García

NICARAGUA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Luis Manuel Debayle, Minister of Foreign Affairs

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Guillermo Sevilla Sacasa
His Excellency Modesto Valle
His Excellency Major Anastasio Somoza H.
His Excellency J. Jesús Sánchez R.
His Excellency Antioco Sacasa
His Excellency Rafael A. Huezo
His Excellency Diego Manuel Chamorro

MEXICO

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Jaime Torres Bodet, Secretary of Foreign Affairs

Delegates

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Roberto Córdova
His Excellency Luis Quintanilla
His Excellency José María Ortiz Tirado
His Excellency Pablo Campos Ortiz
His Excellency Antonio Carrillo Flores
His Excellency Eduardo Villaseñor
His Excellency José Gorostiza
His Excellency Gabriel Ramos Millán
His Excellency José López Bermudez
His Excellency Ernesto Enriquez
His Excellency Mario de la Cueva
His Excellency Manuel Sánchez Cuen
His Excellency Francisco A. Ursúa

PANAMA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Mario de Diego, Minister of Foreign Affairs

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Roberto Jiménez
His Excellency Ricardo J. Alfaro
His Excellency Eduardo A. Chiari
His Excellency Narciso Garay
His Excellency Pedro Moreno Correa
His Excellency Emilio Clare

EL SALVADOR

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Héctor David Castro

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Héctor Escobar Serrano
His Excellency Joaquín Guillén Rivas
His Excellency Roberto Canessa

PARAGUAY

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency César A. Vasconsellos, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Rear Admiral Ramón E. Martino
His Excellency Cesar Romeo Acosta

COSTA RICA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Emilio Valverde

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Rolando Blanco Solís
His Excellency José Miranda Monge

ECUADOR

ECUADOR

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Antonio Parra Velasco, Minister of Foreign Affairs

Delegates Plenipotenitary:
His Excellency Homero Viteri Lafronte
His Excellency Pío Jaramillo Alvarado
His Excellency Alberto Puig Arosemena
His Excellency Luis Larrea Alba
His Excellency Humberto Garcia Ortiz
His Excellency Benjamín Peralta Páez
His Excellency Guillermo Pérez Chiriboga

BRAZIL

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency João Neves da Fontoura

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Arthur Ferreira dos Santos
His Excellency Gabriel de Rezende Passos
His Excellency João Henrique Sampaio Vieira da Silva
His Excellency Antonio Camillo de Oliveira
His Excellency Jorge Felippe Kafuri
His Excellency Elmano Gomes Cardim
His Excellency General Salvador Cesar Obino

HAITI

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Joseph D. Charles

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Colonel Gustave Laraque
His Excellency Joseph L. Dejean

VENEZUELA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Rómulo Betancourt

Delegates Plenipotentiary:

His Excellency Carlos Morales
His Excellency Manuel Pérez Guerrero
His Excellency Simón Gómez Malaret
His Excellency Mariano Picón Salas
His Excellency José Rafael Pocaterra
His Excellency Luis Lander

ARGENTINA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Juan Atilio Bramuglia, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship

Vice

Vice Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Enrique V. Corominas

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Pascual La Rosa
His Excellency Pedro Juan Vignale
His Excellency Saverio S. Valenti
His Excellency Roberto A. Ares
His Excellency Orlando D. Maroglio
Her Excellency María E. López Cabanillas de Ivanissevich

COLOMBIA

Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Eduardo Zuleta Angel, Minister of Foreign Affairs

Vice Chairman of the Delegation:
His Excellency Carlos Lozano y Lozano

Delegates Plenipotentiary:
His Excellency Roberto Urdaneta Arbeláez
His Excellency Luis López de Mesa
His Excellency Antonio Rocha
His Excellency Domingo Esguerra
His Excellency Miguel Jiménez López
His Excellency Jorge Soto del Corral
His Excellency Guillermo León Valencia
His Excellency Carlos Arango Vélez
His Excellency Silvio Villegas
His Excellency Gonzalo Restrepo
His Excellency Augusto Ramírez Moreno
His Excellency Cipriano Restrepo Jaramillo

The United Nations and the Pan American Union were represented as follows:

UNITED NATIONS

The Honorable Byron Price, Representative of His Excellency the Secretary General

Alternate:
His Excellency Alfonso García Robles

Advisors:
The Honorable Julio A. Lacarte
The Honorable Miguel Albornoz
The Honorable Alfonso de Rosenzweig-Díaz Azmitia

PAN AMERICAN UNION

His Excellency Alberto Lleras Camargo, Director General of the Pan American Union
The Honorable William Manger, Assistant Director of the Pan American Union

The Honorable

The Honorable Charles Fenwick, Chief of the Department of International Law and Organization of the Pan American Union

His Excellency, Doctor Mariano Ospina Pérez, the President of Colombia, formally opened the Conference, which held its inaugural session on the date mentioned above in the National Capitol, which was chosen as the site of its labors.

The post of President of the Conference was originally filled by His Excellency Laureano Gómez, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Colombia, and subsequently by His Excellency Eduardo Zuleta Angel, who succeeded him in the aforesaid Ministry.

In accordance with the Regulations, the Government of Colombia appointed His Excellency Camilo de Brigard Silva as Secretary General of the Conference.

The Program and Regulations of the Conference were approved by the Governing Board of the Pan American Union at its meetings of July 23, 1947, and March 6, 1946, respectively.

Pursuant to the rules established by the Governing Board and by the Conference, there were created, in addition to the Committee on Credentials, the Steering Committee, the Committee on Coordination, and the Drafting Committee, provided for in the Regulations, the following Work Committees:

Committee I. - Organic Pact of the Inter-American System.

Committee II. - Organic Pact of the Inter-American System.

Committee III. - Settlement of Controversies and Collective Security.

Committee IV. - Economic Matters.

Commitee V. - Social Matters.

Committee VI. - Juridico-Political Matters

As a result of its deliberations, the Conference approved, in addition to the Charter of the Organization of American States, the American Treaty on Pacific Settlement, the "Pact of Bogotá"; the Economic Agreement of Bogotá; the Inter-American Convention on the Granting of Political Rights to Women; and the Inter-American Convention on the Granting of Civil Rights to Women; the following Resolutions, Declarations, Recommendations, Agreements, Votes, and Motions:

Dissemination

I

DISSEMINATION OF AND ACQUAINTANCE WITH THE CHARTER OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

WHEREAS:

The Organic Charter of the Organization of American States, as approved and signed by the Ninth International Conference of American States, is the basic instrument of American solidarity;

Its text contains all the doctrines, principles, purposes, practices, and accomplishments that have governed the peaceful relations of the peoples of America, and constitute the advanced form of international law that the continent has contributed to the furtherance of juridical and political culture in the world;

Inasmuch as the Charter is based on the purest and noblest democratic sentiments, which the peoples of America with deep conviction profess, it should be given the widest possible dissemination and as the most effective means of putting democracy into practice among those peoples;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. To recommend that the member states take steps to assure the most widespread dissemination and knowledge of the Charter of the Organization of American States in their respective countries, thus ensuring that the teaching of the Charter will not be limited to educational and cultural circles, but rather will be extended to all the people, by such methods of instruction and publicity as are appropriate in each case.

2. To recommend that, through the Inter-American Cultural Council, the Council of the Organization and the Pan American Union carry out this Resolution and take all necessary measures for the realization of the aim and spirit thereof.

II

INTER-AMERICAN JURIDICAL COMMITTEE

WHEREAS:

The Inter-American Juridical Committee of Rio de Janeiro has performed valuable and praiseworthy service in the discharge of its specific functions;

The Charter of the Organization of American States provides that the Inter-American Juridical Committee of Rio de Janeiro shall be the Permanent Committee of the Inter-American Council of Jurists;

In virtue of the foregoing provision a new procedure is established for the constitution of the Inter-American Juridical Committee of Rio de Janeiro, such procedure, however, may be put into effect only when the next inter-American conference meets;

It

It would not be advisable to interrupt the work at present being performed by the Inter-American Juridical Committee of Rio de Janeiro, and, too, it is necessary to ensure the permanence of that organ so that it may perform the duties assigned to it, as provided for by the Charter of the Organization of American States,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

That the Inter-American Juridical Committee of Rio de Janeiro, as the Permanent Committee of the Inter-American Council of Jurists, shall continue, as now organized, to perform its duties until such time as the provisions of the Charter of the Organization of American States pertaining thereto are carried out.

III

SURVEY OF INTER-AMERICAN SPECIALIZED ORGANIZATIONS

WHEREAS:

The Governing Board of the Pan American Union has submitted a Report on the Inter-American Organizations, the status of which should be considered in accordance with the provisions of Chapter XV of the Charter of the Organization of American States, which establishes the conditions to be met by the Inter-American Specialized Organizations;

The excessive number of official and semi-official organizations represents a burden on the American States and, in many cases, makes the effective realization of their aims more difficult;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. The Council of the Organization of American States shall, as soon as possible, make a complete survey of the status and activities of the existing Inter-American Organizations in order to adopt, with the authorization of the governments, the necessary measures for the discontinuation of those whose maintenance serves no useful purpose, and in order to strengthen, adapt, or merge the others, as may be appropriate.

2. The Council of the Organization shall set up a "Register of Inter-American Specialized Agencies" for the inscription of agencies that meet the conditions stipulated in Article 95 of the Charter.

3. The Council of the Organization may also conclude the agreements provided for in Article 53, paragraphs c) and d) of the Charter.

In the case of agreements concluded in accordance with Article 53, paragraph d), the Council of the Organization shall set up a special register.

IV

INTER-AMERICAN STATISTICAL INSTITUTE

WHEREAS:

It is necessary to have adequate statistical information in solving any problem of national planning or of economic and cultural cooperation;

The technical and promotion problems which the Inter-American Statistical Institute carries on for the purpose of improving the methods and primary sources of statistics are of particular importance and usefulness to the American nations and to the Organization of American States;

Several international conferences have endorsed the work of the Institute and have called for the intensification of its program; and

The two resolutions on financing approved at the first session of the Inter-American Statistical Institute, held at Washington in 1947, and transmitted to the governments represented at this Conference, requested the Ninth International Conference of American States to take a favorable decision in regard to the problem of financing the Institute, in order to provide it with the necessary funds for its work of preparation for the Census of the Americas in 1950;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. To express its high regard for the work carried on by the Inter-American Statistical Institute and its interest in the preparatory work for holding the Census of the Americas in 1950;

2. To recommend to the American Governments that they consider the desirability of increasing the quotas for financing the said Institute, in order to provide it with the necessary economic means for the best realization of its purposes;

3. To recommend, likewise, that the Council of the Organization examine the possibility of concluding a special agreement with the Inter-American Statistical Institute establishing the relations that should exist between the Organization and the Institute, including the basis for financing the latter.

V

INTER-AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF MUSICOLOGY

In view of the proposal presented by the Delegation of Uruguay referring to the creation of the Inter-American Institute of Musicology,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To recommend to the Council of the Organization that it include the Inter-American Institute of Musicology in the survey which it has been directed to make of the status and activities of the inter-American specialized organizations.

VI

IMPROVEMENT OF THE SYSTEM OF FINANCING THE PAN AMERICAN UNION

WHEREAS:

In accordance with Article 54 of the Charter of the Organization of American States it devolves upon the Council to establish the bases for financing the Pan American Union, taking into account, among other factors, each country's ability to pay;

The bases for financing that were decided upon by the then Governing Board of the Pan American Union for the fiscal year 1948-49, although representing an improvement over the system used previously, can be improved technically through further studies,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

The Council of the Organization of American States shall take into account the progress of the methodological economic studies being carried on by the United Nations and specialized organizations on the definition, analysis, and evaluation of the factors influencing the ability of the countries to pay, in order to ensure the continued technical improvement of the bases of financing the Pan American Union and in order to confirm the decision of the countries to contribute their just share toward its support.

VII

BUDGET OF THE INTER-AMERICAN DEFENSE BOARD

WHEREAS:

The Charter of the Organization of American States has stipulated the procedure for the approval of the Pan American Union budget;

By decision of the Conference, the Inter-American Defense Board shall continue to function,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

The budget to which Article 54 of the Charter refers shall include the funds required by the Secretariat of the Inter-American Defense Board in addition to the expenses of the Pan American Union, the Council and the Organs of the Council.

VIII

SPECIALIZED INTER-AMERICAN ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

In view of the fact that the consideration of the economic problems of the Hemisphere is one of the vital aspirations of the countries that constitute the Organization of American States; and in view of the fact that the Conference of Rio de Janeiro considered advisable the convocation of a conference on specifically economic problems, in which all the Member States of the Organization would be represented, and which would be held in the second half of 1948,

Conference

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

AGREES:

1. To convoke an Economic Conference of the Organization of American States, to be held in the City of Buenos Aires during the last quarter of 1948, on a date to be determined by the Inter-American Economic and Social Council. The Inter-American Economic and Social Council may, for reasons of extreme importance only, postpone the convocation of the Conference until the first quarter of 1949;

2. The Inter-American Economic and Social Council shall propose the respective topics for the agenda of the above-mentioned Conference;

3. To recommend, in order that the Conference may have proper significance, to the Member States of the Organization that they be represented at this Conference by the Ministers of Finance, Development, or Economy of their respective governments, or by other responsible persons prominent in the economic life of their countries;

4. To recommend to the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, in order that the Inter-American Economic Conference may study the more immediate problems facing the economy of the American States and the latters' participation in joint plans of economic expansion, that the Inter-American Economic and Social Council prepare a questionnaire for submission to the governments of the American States that will permit the Council to compile data on the needs and possibilities with respect to the equipment, basic commodities, raw materials, capital, and credit of the aforesaid economies. In this way, the Inter-American Economic and Social Council will be able to submit an objective study of the needs and possibilities of the American countries.

IX

INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE ON THE CONSERVATION OF RENEWABLE NATURAL RESOURCES

WHEREAS:

1. The peoples of the Americas depend on the natural resources of the Continent for their means of survival;

2. Experience in many parts of the world has demonstrated that natural resources may be permanently exhausted if they are subjected to wasteful exploitation;

3. The wasteful exploitation of such resources as forests, grasslands, soil, water, and wild-life has already resulted in their partial depletion in all the American republics;

4. Continued depletion of such resources, by progressively reducing the potential supply of food, water, and raw materials, would eventually weaken the economies of the American republics;

5. The

5. The final effect of continued depletion would be permanently to impair the standard of living of all the American peoples;

6. To determine the best means by which the natural renewable resources of the Continent may be effectively exploited without being permanently depleted, the American republics, on the initiative of the Organization of the American States and in accordance with a resolution of the Third Inter-American Conference on Agriculture, will meet at Denver, United States of America, in an Inter-American Conference on the Conservation of Renewable Natural Resources from September 7 to 20, 1948; and

7. The objective for which this Conference has been called is vital to the permanent economic security of the American peoples;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. To call the attention of the American Governments to the fact that the continuing destruction of the Continent's renewable natural resources is incompatible with the objective of a higher standard of living for the American peoples.

2. To recommend to the American Governments that they make the fullest possible preparation for their participation in the Inter-American Conference on the Conservation of Renewable Natural Resources, to the end that it may deal effectively with the problem of how the renewable natural resources of the Continent may be productively exploited without being permanently depleted.

X

DIVISION OF FUNCTIONS BETWEEN THE ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA AND THE INTER-AMERICAN ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

WHEREAS:

The functions assigned to the Economic Commission for Latin America created by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations in its meeting of February 25, 1948, are essentially similar to those of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, approved by this Conference;

In order to prevent duplication in the organization and work of the two organizations,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

The Inter-American Economic and Social Council shall appoint a Committee of not more than three members, to meet with the Economic Commission for Latin America in Santiago, Chile, next June, to draft an appropriate formula for the functioning of the two organizations, and to outline their respective fields of activity and their general programs, including liaison between the two organizations, so as to avoid the aforesaid duplication in organization, personnel and functions.

The

The results of this joint meeting shall be submitted for approval to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council. Pending their approval, any concrete study planned by the Economic Commission for Latin America or the Inter-American Economic and Social Council relating to organization, personnel, or substantive undertaking, should be carried out only after detailed consideration by the joint meeting of consultation mentioned above.

XI

TOURIST TRAVEL

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RECOMMENDS:

1. Declaration of Principles. That the governments of the Republics, as a national policy, promote and facilitate the legitimate travel of nationals of the American Republics, as bona fide temporary visitors for legitimate purposes in the territory of all the American Republics.

2. Elimination of all except reasonable control procedures. That the governments of the American Republics, in their laws, regulations and administrative practices governing international travel of persons, refrain from adopting and hereafter discontinue all control procedures which needlessly impede or delay the travel of nationals of the American Republics who wish to move from one American Republic to another as bona fide temporary visitors for legitimate purposes, and that said governments adopt or retain only reasonable control procedures, namely, those which are strictly necessary and truly effectual for the prevention of the admission of persons whom they wish to exclude or for the preservation of security, public order and health.

3. Economic Importance of Travel. That the governments of the American Republics take due cognizance of the economic importance of travel as a source of foreign exchange and for the promotion and development of trade.

4. Diffusion of Travel Information. That the governments of the American Republics take all appropriate steps to facilitate the diffusion of information of interest to the nationals of the countries of the Americas who travel as temporary visitors.

5. Participation in Third Inter-American Travel Congress. That the governments of the American Republics give full support to and participate actively in the Third Inter-American Travel Congress which is to convene in Buenos Aires during the current year.

6. Objectives of the Third Inter-American Travel Congress. That the governments of the American Republics through their representatives at the Third Inter-American Travel Congress, when studying and recommending technical measures for the simplification of travel formalities:

a) Give

a) Give due consideration, on the one hand, to the need for adequate restrictive measures for the identification and control of international travelers and, on the other hand, to the repugnance of measures that unnecessarily impede the free movement of nationals of each of the American Republics in the territory of all the American Republics as bona fide temporary visitors for legitimate purposes, in order to reconcile, in specific, technical recommendations, the requirements of public order and national and continental security with the promotion of continental travel, and

b) Recommend specific, technical measures prescribing reasonable travel control procedures for the American Republics which, in so far as they apply to the travel of nationals of each of the American Republics, as bona fide temporary visitors for legitimate purposes in the territory of all the American Republics, provide, in particular, for:

i) Expeditious and inexpensive procedures for the issuance of identity documents such as passports by governments to their own nationals, because the proper identification of travelers is a reasonable control procedure;

ii) The elimination, wherever they constitute unreasonable control procedures, of requirements that are a condition to granting permission to enter, with particular reference to certificates of health and good conduct, and reduction and standardization of others, such as the submission of photographs;

iii) The curtailment and standardization of the visa requirement and its elimination wherever this practice does not actually facilitate reasonable control procedures;

iv) The curtailment of exit formalities, which, in most cases, are unreasonable control procedures;

v) The curtailment and standardization of formalities governing the sojourn of travelers.

XII

FREEDOM OF MOVEMENT AND ELIMINATION OF PASSPORTS

WHEREAS:

Freedom of movement helps promote the economic and social relations of nations;

Personal acquaintance with the inhabitants, customs, traditions, and culture of the American nations will make their solidarity more effective;

This can be achieved by simplifying travel formalities and eliminating the use of passports;

THE NINTH

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. To recommend that the Inter-American Council of Jurists and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council prepare a draft agreement to eliminate the use of passports and establish an American identification certificate not requiring consular visas and fees.

2. To recommend to the American Governments that, until the draft agreement referred to in the foregoing paragraph is prepared, they enter into administrative agreements through the exchange of notes, or bilateral agreements for the purpose of eliminating the use of passports for tourist travel by citizens of the American Continent.

XIII

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAYS

WHEREAS:

The Second Meeting of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics recognized the vital importance of the Santos-Arica Transcontinental Railway for purposes of continental defense;

The Amazon Railway is equally important;

Both railways will contribute to the intensive development of economic relations among the American States and to their greater commercial and industrial progress,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. To affirm the importance and usefulness, to America's economic development, of the Amazon Railway and the Santos-Arica Transcontiental Railway across Bolivia.

2. To recommend the completion of these enterprises and the financing thereof by the states concerned or by other American States in a spirit of financial cooperation, and provided that assistance is requested by the former.

XIV

INTER-AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF IMMIGRATION

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. The Inter-American Economic and Social Council shall, through a committee of technical experts, study the possibility and the advisability of creating an Inter-American Institute of Immigration, in accordance with the proposal to that effect presented by the Delegation of Peru.

2. The

2. The Inter-American Economic and Social Council shall submit to the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference, to be held at Buenos Aires, the studies of the committee to be set up in accordance with the present resolution, and, if necessary, the draft convention and the draft statutes thereon.

XV

CREATION OF AN INTER-AMERICAN BANK

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

I. The Inter-American Economic and Social Council, through a committee of technical experts, should study the possibility and advisability of creating an Inter-American Bank or an Inter-American Development Corporation, or both;

II. In case the above-mentioned studies show that it is advisable to do so, the Inter-American Economic and Social Council shall revise the Convention and Statutes of May 19, 1940, and the project presented by the Delegation of Venezuela on the Inter-American Development Corporation, and shall consider any proposals presented or which may be presented by the American countries on this subject, and any project dealing with functions that might be performed by the Inter-American Bank and/or by the Inter-American Development Corporation;

III. The Inter-American Economic and Social Council shall present to the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference, which is to meet at Buenos Aires, the studies made by the Committee to be set up according to the present resolution, and, if necessary, the new draft convention and draft statutes.

XVI

INTER-AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF COMMERCE

WHEREAS:

The problems involved in the proposal presented by the Delegation of Peru concerning the creation of an Inter-American Institute of Commerce should be considered in detail;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To direct the Inter-American Economic and Social Council to study the above-mentioned proposal, in order to present to the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference the conclusions that it reaches and the proposals that arise from such study.

XVII

XVII

THE COMMERCIAL CREDIT POLICY OF THE AMERICAN STATES

WHEREAS:

A policy of ample commercial credit is essential for the sound development of international commerce,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RECOMMENDS:

1. That the Inter-American Economic and Social Council study measures to facilitate international trade by means of commercial credits, granted by lending institutions, that will remove the obstacles now hindering such trade;

2. That the Inter-American Economic and Social Council submit to the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference the results of the studies assigned to it, together with the projects drafted as a consequence of such studies.

XVIII

TOPICS FOR THE AGENDA OF THE INTER-AMERICAN ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

WHEREAS:

At the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference it will be advisable to include in the agenda matters relating to transportation and communications,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. Topics on Maritime and River Transportation, Railways, and Communications in general be included in the agenda of the forthcoming Inter-American Economic Conference.

2. That the Bolivian proposal on Freedom of Transit and the Peruvian proposal on Transportation and Communications, presented to the Ninth International Conference of American States, also be included, and that the application of the principle established in Chapter IX of the Economic Agreement of Bogota be made subject to regulation.

3. That, for the purposes of the preparation of the aforesaid agenda, the Governments of the American countries transmit their points of view to the Inter-American Economic and Social Council.

XIX

CONDITIONS OF WORK, HEALTH AND COOPERATIVES

WHEREAS:

The common goal sought by the American States is the establishment of democracy on political, economic and social foundations that will serve to strengthen the peace of the continent;

The

The Economic Charter of the Americas, signed at the Mexico City Conference in 1945, states in substance that "the well-being of the people should be the principal aim of all economic activity";

The numerous resolutions approved at specialized congresses and conferences, principally Resolution XLIX of the Buenos Aires Conference of 1936, should be taken into consideration;

The American Republics have already made most praiseworthy efforts toward improving the living conditions of working classes, and it is desirable to facilitate the dissemination of information on the progress made in this field and to coordinate means of providing for the well-being of the greatest possible number of American workers,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES RECOMMENDS:

1. The creation within the Pan American Sanitary Bureau of an office that will be concerned especially with finding suitable means to give the working classes the benefit of all advances made in the prevention and cure of disease;

2. The creation within the Inter-American Economic and Social Council of a special office responsible for gathering and disseminating all information relating to the establishment and development of cooperative societies.

XX

DEVELOPMENT AND IMPROVEMENT OF SOCIAL SERVICE

WHEREAS:

The concern of the American Republics for providing assistance to all elements of their population in meeting problems of poverty, ignorance, malnutrition, and disease;

Governments have a major responsibility for providing social welfare programs for meeting these problems including social assistance and services, social insurance, health, education, and other services related to the well-being of the individual;

The American Republics in developing and improving their social welfare programs will require technical assistance and exchange of information, knowledge, and skills, by means of bilateral programs, and through inter-American organizations, the United Nations, and its specialized agencies,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES RECOMMENDS:

I. That the governments of the American Republics establish sound social welfare programs within their own countries, including social assistance, social insurance, and other programs providing services contributing to the conservation of family life, services to children and youth, and social services to special groups and areas.

In recognition of this responsibility governments should establish official national agencies so constituted as to be able to initiate, develop, and administer sound programs in the field

the field of social welfare, including provision for the training of personnel.

II. That the governments of the American Republics develop and expand international programs for mutual assistance and interchange of technical knowledge, information, and skills in the field of social welfare, by the following means:

1. Bilateral Exchange of Information, Knowledge, and Skills among the American Republics

The American Republics should continue and expand cooperative programs of consultation and inter change of information, technical knowledge, and skills, initiated as a result of resolutions and recommendations of the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, Buenos Aires, 1936, and of the Eighth International Conference of American States, Lima, 1938, in such fields as social assistance and services, social insurance, family and child welfare, health, nutrition, education, labor standards, and the training of technicians and specialists.

2. Cooperation through the Inter-American Specialized Organizations

Special consideration should be given by the inter-American organizations concerned with social matters to the types of services needed by countries of the hemisphere; these organizations should receive support from the governments and collaborate with them providing such services; and their activities should be so related as to contribute to the continuous and balanced development of their services.

3. Consolidation of the Facilities and Services of the Pan American Union

a) The Pan American Union should bear in mind the desire for social progress of the American peoples and its program of work should give due emphasis to matters related to the field of social welfare.

b) The staff of the Pan American Union and particularly of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs should be strengthened, as may be necessary, to enable the Union to give effective leadership in connection with the development and improvement of social welfare services, and its facilities for exchange of information in this field should be increased.

c) The Pan American Union should undertake, in consultation and cooperation with the governments, appropriate agencies, and specialists, a study of the more urgent social needs of the American countries and ways of meeting them.

d) The Pan American Union should study the facilities available through the inter-American specialized agencies for assistance to countries desiring to develop and improve their social welfare services and ways in which they should be strengthened, coordinated, or supplemented.

e) The

e) The Pan American Union should actively promote direct cooperation and mutual assistance between the American Nations in connection with the development and improvement of social welfare services.

4. Cooperation with the United Nations and Specialized Agencies

The Member States of the Organization of American States should, as far as possible, coordinate their efforts in carrying out the above-mentioned principles and programs with similar efforts in the social field made by the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

AND REQUESTS:

The Inter-American Economic and Social Council to make studies and recommendations as to the implementation of this resolution.

XXI

ORGANIC STATUTE OF THE INTER-AMERICAN COMMISSION OF WOMEN

WHEREAS:

The Inter-American Commission of Women is an official institution created by the Seventh International Conference of American States of Montevideo of 1933, and established on permanent bases by the Eighth International Conference of Lima of 1938;

The Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, held at Mexico City in 1945, expressed the desire that the Inter-American Commission of Women be included among the institutions composing the Pan American Union;

The Charter of the United Nations reaffirms faith in the equal rights of men and women;

The Eighth International Conference of American States entrusted to the Pan American Union the preparation of an organic statute to regulate the functioning of the Commission, and furthermore directed the Union to submit such statute to the Ninth International Conference of American States for approval,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES RESOLVES:

To approve the following Organic Statute:

CHAPTER I

THE INTER-AMERICAN COMMISSION OF WOMEN

Article 1. The Inter-American Commission of Women is a permanent entity attached to the General Secretariat of the Organization of American States.

CHAPTER II

CHAPTER II

FUNCTIONS

Article 2. The functions of the Inter-American Commission of Women are as follows:

a) To work for the extension of civil, political, economic, and social rights to the women of America; to study their problems and propose means of solving them;

b) To suggest to the Governments that resolutions approved at international conferences in regard to the interests of women be carried out;

(c) To serve as an advisory body to the Organization of American States and its organs in matters relating to the aims of the Commission;

d) To establish close relations with inter-American organizations, and also with those of world scope, whose objectives are related to those of the Commission;

e) To send reports to the Council of the Organization of American States on the main activities that have been carried on in connection with the work of the Commission;

f) To submit official reports to the Inter-American Conferences on the civil, political, social, and economic status of women in America and also on the problems that should, in its opinion, be considered; and to submit to those conferences any resolutions tending to solve them.

CHAPTER III

MEMBERS

Article 3. The Inter-American Commission of Women is composed of one Delegate for each one of the American Republics, appointed by the respective Government;

When for any reason a Delegate is unable to perform her duties or to attend a meeting of the Commission without good cause, her Government may appoint an alternate. When a Delegate fails to attend two consecutive meetings, she shall automatically cease to hold office and her position shall become vacant;

The appointments of Delegates and alternates shall be transmitted to the Commission through the Secretary General of the Organization of American States;

Both Delegates and alternates should be nationals of the country they represent;

The Secretary General of the Organization of American States shall request the Governments to appoint their respective Delegates to the Inter-American Commission of Women whenever such representation is lacking;

The honoraria, traveling expenses, and other funds required by the Delegates for attendance at the Assemblies and for other activities of the Commission shall be supplied by the respective Governments.

CHAPTER IV

CHAIRMAN

Article 4. The Inter-American Commission of Women shall elect its own Chairman, who shall be chosen from among the Delegates composing that Commission.

The Chairman shall be elected by an absolute majority of the Delegates composing the Commission. The first election shall take place at the annual meeting to be held by the Commission after approval of this Statute by the Ninth International Conference of American States.

The Chairman shall hold office for a period of four years and may not be reelected for the ensuing term. In case the office of Chairman becomes vacant, the Vice Chairman shall replace her during the unexpired portion of the term, and she may be reelected if the vacancy occurs during the second half of such term. The Chairman shall perform her duties at the headquarters of the Commission.

The expenses of representation shall be borne by the Government of her country, with due regard to the importance and responsibility of her position.

CHAPTER V

VICE CHAIRMAN

Article 5. The Vice Chairman shall be elected in the same manner and for the same period as the Chairman of the Commission.

She shall replace the Chairman in case of the latter's absence, resignation, or removal from office.

Upon becoming the Acting Chairman, she shall receive compensation from her Government and shall assume all the rights and duties of the office.

In case the office of Vice Chairman becomes vacant, the Executive Committee shall appoint a Delegate to replace her until the end of the term.

CHAPTER VI

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Article 6. There shall be an Executive Committee at the headquarters of the Commission, composed of the Chairman and four Delegates, who shall be elected by the Assembly of the Commission for a term of two years. In case it is impossible for a Delegate to reside in the city where the Commission has its headquarters or attend the meetings of the Committee, the Government of her country shall appoint a substitute.

The appointment of Delegates to the Committee shall rotate among the different countries, and none may be re-elected until representatives of all countries have been members thereof.

When the first four members of the Executive Committee are elected, two shall be chosen for one year and the other two for two years, in order to assure continuity in the work of the Committee.

During the interval between Assemblies, this Committee shall take the necessary decisions on all problems presented to the Commission, the prompt solution of which does not permit consultation with all the Delegates. Such decisions shall be made in keeping with the general policy established by the Commission and shall be subject to its subsequent approval, after the Committee has reported to the Commission.

In case the offices of Chairman and Vice Chairman become vacant, the Executive Committee shall appoint an Acting Chairman, who shall serve until the end of the term.

CHAPTER VII

PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

Article 7. The Permanent Secretariat of the Inter-American Commission of Women shall function at the offices of the General Secretariat of the Organization of American States, within the limits of an agreement concluded between the Council of the Organization and the Commission.

CHAPTER VIII

MEETINGS OF THE COMMISSION

Article 8. The Commission shall hold annual and special Assemblies on the dates and under the conditions to be determined by the Regulations. These Assemblies shall formulate the policy and outline the program of the Commission.

At the request of the Chairman, the Executive Committee, or a majority of the Delegates, the Secretary General of the Organization of American States shall, a reasonable time in advance, ask the Governments to send Delegates to the regular and special Assemblies.

The meeting

The meeting place of the Assemblies of the Commission shall be determined by the Executive Committee. This meeting place should rotate among the countries comprising the Commission.

The Commission shall hold a special Assembly to fill definitively and in accordance with the provisions of Articles 4 and 5 of the present Statute for vacancies in the offices of Chairman and Vice Chairman. This special meeting shall be held not more than ninety days from the date of the double vacancy.

CHAPTER IX

INTERNAL REGULATIONS

Article 9. The Inter-American Commission of Women shall prepare its own internal regulations, which should conform to the provisions of this Statute.

- - -

XXII

SOCIAL JUSTICE

WHEREAS:

One of the primary objectives of the state is to achieve social peace;

Social peace can be achieved only through equilibrium between the various social classes, arising from their respective well-being;

The moral and material well-being of individuals or social groups can be brought about only by eliminating the coexistence of great wealth and extreme poverty;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

DECLARES:

Its firm and definite determination to attain a state of social justice that, through the joint action of all national factors and the necessary progressive legislation, will eliminate extreme poverty and the neglect and exploitation of man by man, and will ensure the dignity of labor and the humanization of capital.

- - -

XXIII

ECONOMIC STATUS OF WORKING WOMEN

WHEREAS:

The raising of the standard of living of the working classes, of which women form a very important part, is an aspiration of the American States that has been solemnly proclaimed in the Economic Charter of the Americas and in the Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees;

Governments

Governments and workers' and employers' associations have the right to have at their disposal a comprehensive analysis of the economic situation of working women;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To direct the Inter-American Commission of Women to carry out studies and investigations on the economic status of working women in the American republics, as well as of the rights that they enjoy in each republic during the maternity period. Such studies and investigations shall be made with the financial aid of the Pan American Union; and

RECOMMENDS:

a) That the studies and investigations referred to be carried out in cooperation with the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, the International Labor Office, the Committee on the Status of Women of the United Nations, the Inter-American Conference on Social Security, the Inter-American Statistical Institute and any other agency interested in the subject;

b) That these studies be submitted to the Tenth International Conference of American States so that it may consider them in dealing with problems relating to rights and protective measures granted to workers.

- - -

XXIV

PROGRAM AND ACTIVITIES OF THE INTER-AMERICAN CULTURAL COUNCIL

WHEREAS:

The value of cultural interchange among the peoples of America in enriching the national life of each country and in promoting harmony and collaboration among them all has been demonstrated in their cooperation in the past by means of such interchange;

The Charter of the Organization of American States provides for the creation of an Inter-American Cultural Council to promote, intensify, and expand cultural interchange and to develop other activities of a cultural nature in this hemisphere; and

In order to guarantee the prompt achievement of these ends it is necessary for a new study to be made of existing programs for cultural cooperation and the principles upon which these are founded and for extensive preliminary activities to be initiated,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

That in planning and carrying on the work the Inter-American Cultural Council shall furnish whatever is necessary for the following activities:

1. To evaluate

1. To evaluate the existing inter-American cooperative agreements and programs for the purpose of recommending means of putting them into effect as a whole and promptly, or of modifying them when this is judged to be necessary.

2. To formulate recommendations for the future development of programs of interchange in cultural, folklore, scientific and educational matters.

3. To encourage interchange, in all aspects, theoretical and practical, between individuals, with reference to cultural, folklore, scientific, and educational matters among the peoples of America.

4. To formulate recommendations concerning procedures intended to diminish and eliminate obstacles to cultural interchange.

5. To develop a central office with trained personnel to act as a center for the exchange of information concerning inter-American cultural, folklore, scientific, and educational programs, and which shall serve as a coordinating organ for these programs.

6. To collaborate with national committees on intellectual cooperation and with other national cultural agencies and to take advantage of them in order to carry out programs that are planned in various regions.

7. To collaborate with the Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of the United Nations (UNESCO) and other appropriate international agencies to harmonize and coordinate activities of common interest.

8. To present reports on inter-American cultural, folklore, scientific and educational programs, now in existence and projected, and on conferences of inter-American specialized agencies on cultural activities, in order to submit these to the International Conferences of American States.

That this proposal be one of the first to be considered by the Inter-American Cultural Council.

- - -

XXV

THE RED CROSS

The Ninth International Conference of American States adopts the resolution approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations on November 19, 1946, in so far as it refers to the Red Cross, for the development and support of the activities of that worthy humanitarian institution.

- - -

XXVI

PRAISE FOR THE INTER-AMERICAN COMMISSION OF WOMEN

WHEREAS:

The Inter-American Commission of Women has worked indefatigably for twenty consecutive years on the study of the civil, political, and economic status of American women;

The

The efficient labors of this Commission on behalf of the rights of American women have earned praise and recognition on the part of the Seventh and Eighth International Conferences of American States, and of the Conference on Problems of War and Peace, held at Mexico City in 1945;

The United Nations has recognized the work of the Inter-American Commission of Women by inviting it to act in an advisory and informative capacity before the Committee on the Status of Women of that world organization;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To extend a vote of praise and special thanks to the Inter-American Commission of Women for its noteworthy and noble efforts in support of its ideals.

- - -

XXVII

AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL CHARTER FOR PEACE PRESENTED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF HONDURAS

The Ninth International Conference of American States recognizes and appreciates the high motives by which the Government of Honduras has been inspired in drafting the "American Educational Charter for Peace"; it expresses the desire that principles of the said Charter be taken into account by the Inter-American Cultural Council, and believes in the importance of cultivating in the countries of the Continent sentiments of peace and Americanism and of encouraging a democratic spirit and international harmony through education.

- - -

XXVIII

SECRETARIAT OF THE INTER-AMERICAN COMMISSION OF WOMEN

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To approve the Resolution adopted February 4, 1948 by the Governing Board of the Pan American Union, whereby the Secretary General is given authority to organize the Office of the Secretariat of the Inter-American Commission of Women.

- - -

XXIX

INTER-AMERICAN CHARTER OF SOCIAL GUARANTEES

The American States, desirous of making effective the constant and generous aspiration of the Inter-American Conferences that on the Continent there be standards providing ample protection to workers;

Inspired

Inspired by the aim of furthering the rehabilitation of the life, economy, morale, and social standards of the American peoples, strengthening them as an element of humanity, increasing their ability to work, adding to their productive value, and raising their purchasing power in order that they may enjoy a better standard of living;

Convinced that the state attains its goals not only by recognizing the rights of citizens alone, but also by concerning itself with the fortunes of men and women, henceforth considered not as citizens but as human beings;

Agreed, therefore, that the present stage of juridical evolution demands that democratic systems guarantee respect for political and spiritual freedoms, together with the realization of the postulates of social justice;

Encouraged by the fact that the countries of America fervently desire to achieve this social justice;

United in the belief that one of the principal objectives of the present International Organization is to bring about the cooperation of the various States for the solution of labor problems, and that it is to the public interest, from the international point of view, to enact the most comprehensive social legislation possible, to give workers guarantees and rights on a scale not lower than that fixed in the Conventions and Recommendations of the International Labor Organization;

Agreed that economic cooperation, of such great importance for the American republics, cannot be truly effective unless measures are taken to ensure the rights of workers and unless living and working conditions are improved as much as possible;

Unanimous in realizing that the aggravation of social problems is an obvious factor of internal unrest, with international repercussions that endanger the maintenance of peace;

Conscious that Christian principles teach the duty of contributing to the material well-being of men and women and to their spiritual welfare by according them a decent way of life that will provide for their liberty, dignity, and security; and conscious that those principles successfully reconcile the individual initiative with the undeniable worth that human labor has acquired in modern societies;

Adopt the following Inter-American Charter of Social Guarantees, as the Declaration of the social rights of workers:

INTER-AMERICAN CHARTER OF SOCIAL GUARANTEES

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

Article 1. It is the aim of the present Charter of Social Guarantees to enunciate the fundamental principles that should protect workers of all kinds, and it sets forth the minimum rights they should enjoy in the American States, without prejudice to the fact that the laws of each state may extend such rights or recognize others that are more favorable.

This Charter

This Charter of Social Guarantees gives equal protection to men and women.

It is recognized that the supremacy of these rights and the progressive raising of the standard of living of the community in general depend to a large degree upon the development of economic activities, upon increased productivity, and upon cooperation between workers and employers, expressed in harmonious relations and in mutual respect for and fulfillment of their rights and duties.

Article 2. The following principles are considered to be fundamental in the social legislation of the American countries:

a) Labor is a social function; it enjoys the special protection of the state and should not be considered as an article of commerce.

b) Every worker should have the opportunity for a decent existence and the right to fair working conditions.

c) Intellectual, as well as technical and manual labor, should enjoy the guarantees established in labor laws, with the distinctions arising from ways in which those laws are applied.

d) There should be equal compensation for equal work, regardless of the sex, race, creed, or nationality of the worker.

e) The rights established in favor of workers may not be renounced and the laws that recognize such rights are binding on and benefit all the inhabitants of the territory, whether nationals or aliens.

Article 3. Every worker has the right to engage in his occupation and to devote himself to whatever activity suits him. He is likewise free to change employment.

Article 4. Every worker has the right to receive vocational and technical training in order to perfect his skills and knowledge, obtain a greater income from his work, and contribute effectively to the advancement of production. To this end, the state shall organize adult education and the apprenticeship of young people, in such a way as to assure effective training in a given trade or work, at the same time that it provides for their cultural, moral, and civic development.

Article 5. Workers have the right to share in the equitable distribution of the national well-being, by obtaining the necessary food, clothing, and housing at reasonable prices. To achieve these purposes, the state should sponsor the establishment and operation of people's farms and restaurants and of consumer and credit cooperatives, and should organize institutions to promote and finance such farms and establishments, as well as to supply low-cost, comfortable, hygienic housing for laborers, salaried employees, and rural workers.

THE INDIVIDUAL

THE INDIVIDUAL LABOR CONTRACT

Article 6. The law shall regulate individual labor contracts, for the purpose of guaranteeing the rights of workers.

COLLECTIVE LABOR CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS

Article 7. The law shall recognize and regulate collective labor contracts and agreements. In the enterprises that are parties thereto, they shall apply not only to the workers affiliated with the trade association that signed such agreements but also to the other workers who are or shall be employed in those enterprises. The law shall establish the procedure for extending collective contracts and agreements to all the activities in respect to which they were made and to widen the geographical sphere of their application.

WAGES

Article 8. Every worker has the right to earn a minimum wage, fixed periodically with the participation of the state and of workers and employers, sufficient to cover his normal home needs, material, moral, and cultural, taking into account the characteristics of each type of work, the special conditions of each region and each job, the cost of living, the worker's relative aptitude, and the wage systems prevalent in the enterprises.

A minimum occupational wage shall also be set up for those activities in which this matter is not regulated by a collective contract or agreement.

Article 9. Workers have the right to an annual bonus, in proportion to the number of days worked during the year.

Article 10. Wages and social benefits, in the amount fixed by law, are not subject to attachment, with the exception of payments for support that the worker has been ordered by a court to pay.

Wages should be paid in cash in legal tender. The value of wages and social benefits constitutes a privileged claim in the case of the bankruptcy of the employer, or a meeting of his creditors.

Article 11. Workers have the right to a fair share in the profits of the enterprises in which they work, in the form and amount and under the conditions that the law provides.

WORK PERIODS, REST, AND VACATIONS

Article 12. The ordinary effective work period should not exceed eight hours a day or forty-eight hours a week. The maximum duration of the work period in agricultural, livestock, or forestry work, shall not exceed nine hours a day or fifty-four hours a week. The daily limits may be extended up to one hour in each case, provided that the work period of one or more days during the week is shorter than the indicated limit, without prejudice to the provisions on a weekly rest period. The period for night work, and that for dangerous or unhealthful work, shall be less than the daytime work period.

The work

The work period limitation shall not apply in cases of force majeure.

Overtime work shall not exceed a daily and weekly maximum. In work that is by nature hazardous or unhealthful, the limit of the work period may not be exceeded by means of overtime work.

The laws of each country shall determine both the length of the intervals that are to interrupt the work period when for reasons of health the rhythm of the tasks demands it, and the intervals that should come between two work periods.

Workers may not exceed the limit of the work period, whether working for the same or for another employer.

Night and overtime work shall give the right to extra pay.

Article 13. Every worker has a right to a weekly paid rest period in the form established by the law of each country.

Workers who do not enjoy the rest period on the days indicated in the foregoing paragraph shall be entitled to special pay for the services rendered on those days and to a compensatory rest period.

Article 14. Workers shall also have the right to a paid rest period on the civil and religious holidays established by law, with the exceptions that the law itself may determine, for the same reasons that justify work on the weekly days of rest. Those who do not enjoy the rest period on these days have a right to extra pay.

Article 15. Every worker who has to his credit a minimum of service rendered during a given period shall be entitled to paid annual vacations, on work days, the length of such vacations to be in proportion to the number of years of service. Monetary compensation may not be given in lieu of vacations, and the obligation of the worker to take them shall follow from the obligation of the employer to grant them.

CHILD LABOR

Article 16. Persons less than fourteen years of age, and those who, having reached that age, are still subject to the compulsory education laws of the country, may not be employed in any type of work. The authorities responsible for supervising the work of such minors may authorize their employment when it is essential for their own maintenance, or that of their parents or brothers and sisters, provided that the minimum compulsory education requirements are met.

The work period for those under sixteen years of age may not be greater than six hours daily or thirty-six hours weekly in any type of work.

Article 17. Night work and work hazardous or injurious to health is forbidden for persons under eighteen years of age; exceptions concerning weekly rest set forth in the laws of the respective countries may not be applied to such workers.

THE WORK OF WOMEN

Article 18. In general, night work is forbidden for women in industrial establishments, whether public or private, and in work that is hazardous or injurious to health, except in cases where only the members of the same family are employed, in cases of force majeure that render it necessary, in cases where women perform administrative or responsible duties that do not normally require manuel labor, and in other cases expressly provided for by law.

By industrial establishments and by work that is hazardous or injurious to health are understood those so defined by law or international labor conventions.

Exceptions concerning weekly rest set forth in the laws of the respective countries may not be applied to women.

TENURE

Article 19. The law shall guarantee the stability of workers' jobs, due consideration being given to the nature of the respective industries and occupations and justifiable causes for dismissal. In case of unjustified discharge, the worker shall have the right to indemnification.

APPRENTICESHIP CONTRACTS

Article 20. Apprenticeship contracts shall be regulated by law, to assure the apprentice instruction in his trade or occupation, just treatment, fair pay, and the benefits of social security and welfare.

WORK AT HOME

Article 21. Work at home is subject to social legislation. Home workers have the right to an officially determined minimum wage, to compensation for time lost because of the employer's delay in ordering or receiving the work, or for arbitrary or unjustified suspension of the supply of work. Home workers shall be entitled to a legal status similar to that of other workers, due consideration being given to the special nature of their work.

DOMESTIC WORK

Article 22. Domestic workers have a right to the protection of the law with respect to wages, work periods, rest periods, vacations, dismissal pay, and social benefits in general; the extent and nature of this protection shall be determined with due regard to the conditions and special nature of their work. Those who render services of a domestic nature in industrial, commercial, social, and other similar establishments should be considered as manual workers, and granted the rights to which such workers are entitled.

WORK IN THE MERCHANT MARINE AND AVIATION

Article 23. The law shall regulate the contracts of those serving in the merchant marine and in aviation, in accordance with the special character of their work.

PUBLIC

PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Article 24. Public employees have the right to be protected in their administrative careers by being guaranteed, so long as they perform their duties satisfactorily, permanent employment, the right to promotion, and the benefits of social security. Such employees also have the right to be protected by a special court of administrative-contentious jurisdiction and, in case penalties are imposed, the right to defend themselves in the respective proceedings.

INTELLECTUAL WORKERS

Article 25. Independent intellectual workers and the product of their activity should be the subject of protective legislation.

THE RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION

Article 26. Workers and employers, without distinction as to sex, race, creed, or political ideas, have the right freely to form associations for the protection of their respective interests, by forming trade associations or unions, which in turn may form federations among themselves. These organizations have the right to enjoy juridical personality and to be duly protected in the exercise of their rights. Their suspension or dissolution may not be ordered save by due process of law.

Conditions of substance and of form that must be met for the constitution and functioning of trade and union organizations should not go so far as to restrict freedom of association.

The organization, functioning, and dissolution of federations and confederations shall be subject to the same formalities as those prescribed for unions.

Members of boards of directors of trade unions, in the number established by the respective law and during their term of office, may not be discharged, transferred, or given less satisfactory working conditions, without just cause, previously determined by competent authority.

THE RIGHT TO STRIKE

Article 27. Workers have the right to strike. The law regulates the conditions and exercise of that right.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE

Article 28. It is the duty of the state to provide measures of social security and welfare for the benefit of workers.

Article 29. States should promote and provide for recreational and welfare centers that can be freely utilized by workers.

Article 30. The state should take adequate measures to ensure healthful, safe, and moral conditions at places of work.

Article 31. Workers -- including agricultural workers; home workers; domestic workers; public servants; apprentices, even though they do not receive wages; and independent workers, when it is possible to include them -- have the right to a system of compulsory social security designed to realize the following objectives:

a) To provide for the elimination of hazards that might deprive workers of their wage-earning ability and means of support.

b) To reestablish as quickly and as completely as possible the wage-earning ability lost or reduced as a result of illness or accident.

c) To supply means of support in case of the termination or interruption of occupational activity as a result of illness or accident, maternity, temporary or permanent disability, unemployment, old age, or premature death of the head of the family.

Compulsory social security should provide for protection of the members of the worker's family and should establish additional benefits for those of the insured who have large families.

Article 32. In countries where a social security system does not yet exist or in those in which one does exist but does not cover all occupational and social hazards, employers shall be responsible for providing adequate welfare and assistance benefits.

Article 33. Every working women shall be entitled to have leave with pay for a period of not less than six weeks before and after childbirth, to keep her job, and to receive medical attention for herself and the child and financial assistance during the nursing period.

The law shall establish the obligation of employers to install and maintain nurseries and playrooms for the children of workers.

Article 34. Independent workers have a right to state cooperation in joining associations of social protection organized to give them benefits equal to those of wage earners. Persons who practice the liberal professions and are not employed by third parties have a similar right.

SUPERVISION OF LABOR LEGISLATION

Article 35. Workers have a right to have the state maintain a service of trained inspectors to ensure faithful compliance with legal provisions in regard to labor and social security, assistance, and welfare, to study the results of such provisions, and to suggest the indicated improvements.

LABOR COURTS

Article 36. Each state shall have a special system of labor courts and an adequate procedure for the prompt settlement of disputes.

CONCILIATION

CONCILIATION AND ARBITRATION

Article 37. It is the duty of the state to promote conciliation and arbitration as means of obtaining peaceful solutions for collective labor disputes.

RURAL WORK

Article 38. Rural or country workers have the right to be guaranteed an improvement in their present standard of living, to be furnished proper hygienic conditions, and to have effective social assistance organized for them and their families.

The state shall carry on planned and systematic activity directed toward putting agricultural exploitation on a rational basis, organizing and distributing credit, improving rural living conditions, and achieving the progressive economic and social emancipation of the rural population.

The law shall establish the technical and other conditions, consistent with the national interest of each state, under which effect shall be given to the exercise of the right that the state recognizes on the part of associations of rural workers, and individuals suited to agricultural work who lack land or do not possess it in sufficient quantity, to be granted land and the means necessary to make it productive.

Article 39. In countries where the problem of an indigenous population exists, the necessary measures shall be adopted to give protection and assistance to the Indians, safeguarding their life, liberty, and property, preventing their extermination, shielding them from oppression and exploitation, protecting them from want, and furnishing them an adequate education.

The state shall evercise its guardianship in order to preserve, maintain, and develop the patrimony of the Indians or their tribes; and it shall foster the exploitation of the natural, industrial, or extractive resources or any other sources of income proceeding from or related to the aforesaid patrimony, in order to ensure in due time the economic emancipation of the indigenous groups.

Institutions or agencies shall be created for the protection of Indians, particularly in order to ensure respect for their lands, to legalize their possession thereof, and to prevent encroachment upon such lands by outsiders.

RESERVATION OF THE DELEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES

In view of the negative vote of the United States and the reasons given therefor, this country, notwithstanding its firm adherence to the pertinent principles of international action in the interest of labor, does not consider itself bound by the exact terms of this International American Charter of Social Guarantees.

XXX

XXX

AMERICAN DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF MAN

WHEREAS:

The American nations have acknowledged the dignity of the individual, and their national constitutions recognize that juridical and political institutions, which regulate life in human society, have as their principal aim the protection of the essential rights of man and the creation of circumstances that will permit him to achieve spiritual and material progress, and attain happiness;

The American states have on repeated occasions recognized that the essential rights of man are not derived from the fact of one's being a national of a certain state, but are fundamental attributes of the individual;

The international protection of the rights of man should be the supreme guide of an evolving American law;

Both the American affirmation of essential human rights and the guarantees given by the internal regimes of the respective states establish the initial system of protection considered by the American States as being suited to the present social and juridical conditions, not without recognizing that they should increasingly strengthen that system in the international field as these conditions become more favorable;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

AGREES

To adopt the following

AMERICAN DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF MAN

PREAMBLE

All men are born free and equal, in dignity and in rights, and, being endowed by nature with reason and conscience, they should conduct themselves as brothers one to another.

The fulfillment of duty by each individual is a prerequisite to the rights of all. Rights and duties are interrelated in every social and political activity of man. While rights exalt individual liberty, duties express the dignity of that liberty.

Duties of a juridical nature presuppose others of a moral nature that support those duties in concept and are the basis therefor.

Inasmuch as the spirit is the supreme aim of human existence and the greatest expression thereof, it is the duty of man to serve that end with all his strength and resources.

Since culture is the maximum social and historical expression of that spirit, it is the duty of man to preserve, practice, and foster culture by every means within his power.

And,

And, since morality and good manners constitute the noblest flowering of culture, it is the duty of every man always to hold them in high respect.

CHAPTER ONE

RIGHTS

Article 1

Every human being has the right to life, liberty, and the security of his person.

Right to life, liberty, and personal security.

Article II

All persons are equal before the law and have the rights and duties established in this Declaration, without distinction as to race, sex, language, creed, or any other factor.

Right to equality before the law.

Article III

Every person has the right freely to profess a religious faith, and to manifest and practice it both in public and in private.

Right to religious freedom and worship.

Article IV

Every person has the right to freedom of investigation, of opinion, and of the expression and dissemination of thought, by any medium whatsoever.

Right to freedom of investigation, opinion, expression, and dissemination.

Article V

Every person has the right to the protection of the law against abusive attacks upon his honor, his reputation, and his private and family life.

Right to protection of honor, personal reputation, and private and family life.

Article VI

Every person has the right to establish a family, the basic element of society, and to receive protection therefor.

Right to a family and to the protection thereof.

Article VII

All women, during pregnancy and the nursing period, and all children have the right to special protection, care and aid.

Right to protection for mothers and children.

Article VIII

Every person has the right to fix his residence within the territory of the state of which he is a national, to move about freely within such territory, and not to leave it except by his own will.

Right to residence and movement.

Article IX

Every person has the right to the inviolability of his home.

Right to inviolability of the home.

Article X

Every person has the right to the inviolability and circulation of his correspondence.

Right to inviolability and circulation of correspondence.

Article XI

Every person has the right to the preservation of his health through sanitary and social measures relating to food, clothing, housing, and medical care, to the extent permitted by public and community resources.

Right to the preservation of health and to well-being.

Article XII

Every person has the right to an education, which should be based on the principles of liberty, ethics, and human solidarity.

Right to education.

Furthermore, every person has the right to an education that will prepare him to lead a decent life, to raise his standard of living, and to be a useful member of society.

The right to an education includes the right to equality of opportunity in every case, in accordance with natural talents, merit, and the desire to utilize the resources that the state or the community is in a position to provide.

Every person has the right to receive, free, at least a primary education.

Article XIII

Every person has the right to take part in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts, and to participate in the benefits that result from intellectual progress, especially scientific discoveries.

Right to the benefits of culture.

He likewise has the right to the protection of his moral and material interests as regards his inventions or any literary, scientific, or artistic works of which he is the author.

Article XIV

Right to work and to fair remuneration.

Every person has the right to work, under proper conditions, and to follow his vocation freely, in so far as existing conditions of employment permit.

Every person who works has the right to receive such remuneration as will, in proportion to his capacity and skill, assure him a standard of living suitable for himself and for his family.

Article XV

Right to leisure time and to the use thereof.

Every person has the right to leisure time, to wholesome recreation, and to the opportunity for advantageous use his free time to his spiritual, cultural and physical benefit.

Article XVI

Right to social security.

Every person has the right to social security which will protect him from the consequences of unemployment, old age, and any disabilities arising from causes beyond his control that make it physically or mentally impossible for him to earn a living.

Article XVII

Right to recognition of juridical personality and of civil rights.

Every person has the right to be recognized everywhere as a person having rights and obligations, and to enjoy the basic civil rights.

Article XVIII

Right to a fair trial.

Every person may resort to the courts to ensure respect for his legal rights. There should likewise be available to him a simple, brief procedure whereby justice will protect him from acts of authority that, to his prejudice, violate any fundamental constitutional rights.

Article XIX

Right to nationality.

Every person has the right to the nationality to which he is entitled by law and to change it, if he so wishes, for the nationality of any other country that is willing to grant it to him.

Article XX

Right to vote and to participate in government.

Every person having legal capacity is entitled to participate in the government of his country, directly or through his representative, and to take part in popular elections, which shall be by secret ballot, and shall be genuine, periodic, and free.

Article XXI

Every person has the right to assembly peaceably with others in a formal public meeting or an informal gathering, in connection with matters of common interest of any nature.

Right of Assembly.

Article XXII

Every person has the right to associate with others to promote, exercise, and protect his legitimate interests of a political, economic, religious, social, cultural, professional, trade union, or other nature.

Right of association.

Article XXIII

Every person has a right to own such private property as meets the essential needs of decent living and helps to maintain the dignity of the individual and of the home.

Right to property.

Article XXIV

Every person has the right to submit respectful petitions to any competent authority, for reasons of either general or private interest, and the right to obtain prompt action thereon.

Right of petition.

Article XXV

No person may be deprived of his liberty except in the cases and according to the procedures established by pre-existing law.

Right to protection

No person may be deprived of liberty for non-fulfillment of obligations of a purely civil character.

Every individual who has been deprived of his liberty has the right to have the legality of the measure ascertained without delay by a court, and the right to be tried without undue delay or, otherwise, to be released. He also has the right to humane treatment during the time he is in custody.

Article XXVI

Every accused person is presumed to be innocent until proved guilty.

Right to due process of law.

Every person accused of an offense has the right to be given an impartial and public hearing, and to be tried by courts previously established in accordance with pre-existing laws, and not to receive cruel, infamous, or unusual punishment.

Article XXVII

Every person has the right to seek and receive asylum in foreign territory, in case of pursuit not resulting from common law crimes, and in accordance with the laws of each country and with international agreements.

Right of asylum.

Article XXVIII

The rights of man are limited by the rights of others, by the security of all, and by the just demands of the general welfare and the advancement of democracy.

Scope of the rights of man.

CHAPTER TWO

DUTIES

Article XXIX

It is the duty of the individual so to conduct himself in relation to others that each and every one may fully form and develop his personality.

Duties to society.

Article XXX

It is the duty of every person to aid, support, educate, and protect his minor children, and it is the duty of children to honor their parents always and to aid, support, and protect them when they need it.

Duties toward children and parents.

Article XXXI

It is the duty of every person to acquire at least an elementary education.

Duty to receive instruction.

Article XXXII

It is the duty of every person to vote in the popular elections of the country of which he is a national, when he is legally capable of doing so.

Duty to vote.

Article XXXIII

It is the duty of every person to obey the law and other legitimate commands of the authorities of his country and those of the country in which he may be.

Duty to obey the law.

Article XXXIV

It is the duty of every able-bodied person to render whatever civil and military service his country may require for its defense and preservation, and in case of public disaster, to render such civil services as may be in his power.

Duty to serve the community and the nation.

It is

It is likewise his duty to hold any popular elective office that devolves upon him in the state of which he is a national.

Article XXXV

It is the duty of every person to cooperate with the state and the community with respect to social security and welfare, in accordance with his ability and with existing circumstances.

Duties with respect to social security and welfare.

Article XXXVI

It is the duty of every person to pay the taxes established by law for the support of public services.

Duty to pay taxes.

Article XXXVII

It is the duty of every person to work, as far as his capacity and possibilities permit, in order to obtain the means of livelihood or to benefit his community.

Duty to work.

Article XXXVIII

It is the duty of every person to refrain from taking part in political activities that, according to law, are reserved exclusively to the citizens of the state in which he is an alien.

Duty to refrain from political activities in a foreign country.

XXXI

INTER-AMERICAN COURT TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF MAN

WHEREAS:

The internationally recognized rights of man should be properly protected;

Such protection should be guaranteed by a juridical organ, inasmuch as no right is genuinely assured unless it is safeguarded by a competent court;

Where internationally recognized rights are concerned, juridical protection, to be effective, should emanate from an international organ;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RECOMMENDS:

That the Inter-American Juridical Committee prepare a draft statute providing for the creation and functioning of an Inter-American Court to guarantee the rights of man. Such draft, after being submitted to the governments of all the American states for examination and comment, shall be transmitted to the Tenth International Conference of American States for study, if it is felt that the moment has arrived for a decision thereon.

XXXII

XXXII

THE PRESERVATION AND DEFENSE OF DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA

WHEREAS:

In order to safeguard peace and maintain mutual respect among states, the present situation of the world demands that urgent measures be taken to proscribe tactics of totalitarian domination that are inconsistent with the tradition of the countries of America, and prevent agents at the service of international communism or of any totalitarian doctrine from seeking to distort the true and the free will of the peoples of this continent;

THE REPUBLICS REPRESENTED AT THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

DECLARE

That by its anti-democratic nature and its interventionist tendency, the political activity of international communism or any totalitarian doctrine is incompatible with the concept of American freedom, which rests upon two undeniable postulates: the dignity of man as an individual and the sovereignty of the nation as a state;

REITERATE

The faith that the peoples of the New World have placed in the ideal and in the reality of democracy, under the protection of which they shall achieve social justice, by offering to all increasingly broader opportunities to enjoy the spiritual and material benefits that are the guarantee of civilization and the heritage of humanity;

CONDEMN

In the name of the Law of Nations, interference by any foreign power, or by any political organization serving the interests of a foreign power, in the public life of the nations of the American continent,

AND RESOLVE:

1. To reaffirm their decision to maintain and further an effective social and economic policy for the purpose of raising the standard of living of their peoples; and their conviction that only under a system founded upon a guarantee of the essential freedoms and rights of the individual is it possible to attain this goal.

2. To condemn the methods of every system tending to suppress political and civil rights and liberties, and in particular the action of international communism or any totalitarian doctrine.

3. To adopt, within their respective territories and in accordance with the constitutional provisions of each state,

the measures

the measures necessary to eradicate and prevent activities directed, assisted, or instigated by foreign governments, organizations, or individuals, that tend to overthrow their institutions by violence, to foment disorder in their domestic political life, or to disturb, by means of pressure, subversive propaganda, threats or by any other means, the free and sovereign right of their peoples to govern themselves in accordance with their democratic aspirations.

4. To proceed with a full exchange of information concerning any of the aforementioned activities that are carried on within their respective jurisdictions.

XXXIII

COLONIES AND OCCUPIED TERRITORIES IN AMERICA AND CREATION OF THE AMERICAN COMMITTEE ON DEPENDENT TERRITORIES

WHEREAS:

The historical process of the emancipation of America will not be complete as long as peoples and regions subject to a colonial regime, or territories occupied by non-American countries remain on the continent;

The ideal that inspired the epic of the independence of America will always animate our peoples and governments, united in their moral pledge to strive by all peaceful means within their power to eliminate from the continent any status of dependency, whatever its form--political, economic, or juridical;

Ever since they achieved their independence, the American states have had this common objective, which has lately been defined in precise terms in the Meetings of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, held at Habana and Rio de Janeiro, in resolutions condemning colonial regimes in America and reaffirming the right of the peoples of this continent freely to determine their own destinies;

The American States have fixed a zone of continental security to which extra-continental conflicts should not extend, as might occur by reason of the existence on the continent of dependent territories or those occupied by non-American countries;

The principle of pacific settlement of international controversies is part of the juridical heritage of the Organization of American States, and controversies exist between American Republics and European states over sovereignty rights with respect to certain territories of the continent;

The de facto or de jure status of colonies and dependent or occupied possessions and territories on the American continent, or within its security zone, varies according to each case, within the framework of their common status, which makes it necessary to carry out studies on each of them in order to find a suitable solution in each case;

The idea of preserving and strengthening the close solidarity of all the democratic nations of both hemispheres exists

exists in the spirit of the countries of America;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

DECLARES:

That it is a just aspiration of the American republics for colonialism and the occupation of American territories by extra-continental countries to come to an end; and

RESOLVES:

First: To create an "American Committee on Dependent Territories" to centralize the study of the problem of the existence of dependent and occupied territories, in order to find an adequate solution to that question:

Second: The Committee shall be composed of one representative of each member of the Organization of American States, whose appointment shall, in each case, be communicated to the Council of the Organization before September 1, 1948, if possible. As soon as fourteen have been appointed the Council, by prior agreement with the Government of Cuba, shall convoke the Committee in order that it may be installed and perform its duties in the city of Habana.

Third: The functions of the Committee shall be the following:

a) To centralize all information on any of the above-mentioned problems referred to it by the governments and entities concerned;

b) To study the situation of the colonies, possessions and occupied territories existing in America, and the problems related to such situation, whatever their nature, with a view to seeking pacific means of eliminating both colonialism and the occupation of American territories by extra-continental countries;

c) The Committee shall submit a report on each of such colonies, possessions and territories to the Council of the Organization of American States which shall transmit copies to the member states of the Organization for their information and study; these reports shall be considered at the first Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs that is held after their presentation;

d) The Committee shall draw up its own regulations.

Fourth: The creation of this Committee and the performance of its functions shall not exclude or limit the right and action of the interested states directly concerned with the problems to which this Resolution refers, to seek a solution of such problems by themselves through pacific means.

DECLARATION

DECLARATION OF THE DELEGATION OF BRAZIL

The Draft Declaration on "European Colonies in America", presented by the Subcommittee to the Ninth International Conference of American States, undoubtedly expresses the common aspiration of the Republics of the Continent, and under other circumstances would merit the support of the Delegation of Brazil.

But the Delegation of Brazil considers that an Inter-American Conference is not an appropriate forum for debating a question that affects the interests of countries outside the continent.

Technically a distinction must be made between those European possessions in America that are the subject of litigation and those that are not. It is obvious that the destinies of the former can be resolved only by means of direct negotiaions or by pacific means for the solution of controversies.

So far as the latter possessions are concerned, it is appropriate to call attention to the fact that, on signing the Charter of the United Nations, the powers responsible for administering non-self-governing territories assumed, by virtue of Article 73, "a sacred trust" to govern them, with due respect for their political, economic, and social advancement, in order to prepare them for self-government.

As signatories of the Charter of the United Nations, the American Republics accepted this undertaking, the terms of which include a guarantee of the gradual abolishment of colonial regimes on the American continent and means for vigilant action toward the attainment of this desideratum through the General Assembly of the United Nations.

In view of the foregoing circumstances, the Delegation of Brazil considers that it could not legitmately adhere to the Declaration on "European Colonies in America", proposed to the Ninth International Conference of American States by the Subcommittee of the Steering Committee.

XXXIV

INTER-AMERICAN DEFENSE BOARD

WHEREAS:

An Advisory Defense Committee has been created to advise the organ of consultation on problems of military collaboration arising from the application of existing treaties on the subject of collective defense;

It is desirable for the American States to be in a position to ask the Inter-American Defense Board for information on measures aimed at the collective security of the American Continent,

THE NINTH

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1) The Inter-American Defense Board shall continue to act as the organ of preparation for collective self-defense against aggression until the American governments decide by a two-thirds majority to consider its labors terminated.

2) The Board shall draw up its own organization and work regulations in order to carry out, in addition to the advisory functions within its competence, any similar functions ascribed to it by the Committee established in Article 44 of the Charter of the Organization of American States.

3) The Secretariat of the Inter-American Defense Board shall serve as Secretariat of the Committee to which the foregoing paragraph refers.

XXXV

EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT TO CONTINUITY OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

WHEREAS:

The American States have taken countless practical measures to strengthen their cooperation in economic, social, political, cultural, juridical, and military matters;

The Charter of the Organization of American States recognizes the mutual advantages derived from inter-American solidarity, and affords the Organization permanence and continuity;

The development of the activities, and the full benefits, of inter-American cooperation can be realized more effectively if continuous and friendly relations are maintained among the States;

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

DECLARES:

1. That continuity of diplomatic relations among the American States is to be desired;

2. That the right of maintaining, suspending, or renewing diplomatic relations with another government shall not be exercised as a means of individually obtaining unjustified advantages under international law.

3. That the establishment or maintenance of diplomatic relations with a government does not imply an opinion on the domestic policy of that government.

XXXVI

XXXVI

RECOGNITION OF DE FACTO GOVERNMENTS

WHEREAS:

1. The Inter-American Juridical Committee of Rio de Janeiro has not presented its report on the recognition of de facto governments, a topic submitted to this Conference for study;

2. It is desirable that a statute on this subject be prepared,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To assign to the Inter-American Council of Jurists the preparation of a project and a report on the recognition of de facto governments to be studied by the Tenth International Conference of American States.

XXXVII

RIGHT OF RESISTANCE

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To forward to the Inter-American Juridical Committee for study the proposal of the Cuban Delegation on the RIGHT OF RESISTANCE, expressed in the following terms:

"The right of resistance is recognized in case of manifest acts of oppression or tyranny,"

In order that the Committee may submit a report on this proposal to the Council of the Organization of American States.

XXXVIII

DEMARCATION OF BOUNDARIES

WHEREAS:

The experience of history proves that the lack of clearly demarcated boundaries is a cause of international conflicts;

This situation can affect the peace of the continent and the normal development of the nations of America;

THE NINTH

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To recommend that the governments of America proceed, as soon as possible, to the demarcation of their boundaries and the placing of monuments.

XXXIX

REPRESENTATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS AT INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCES

The Ninth International Conference of American States

Adopts the recommendations submitted to it by the Governing Board of the Pan American Union in regard to representation of the United Nations at Inter-American Conferences and Meetings of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, and in regard to the participation of international organizations in Inter-American Conferences of Specialized Organizations, and

RESOLVES:

1. In each case the United Nations should be invited to be represented at Inter-American Conferences and Meetings of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs by its Secretary General or by an alternate in the event that the Secretary General is unable to attend in person, in order that the members of the World Organization may be kept informed as to the work and the conclusions of those conferences;

2. When it is deemed desirable to request that international organizations not in the Organization of American States, or governments not members thereof attend Inter-American Specialized Conferences of Inter-American Specialized Organizations, the Council of the Organization shall have the authority to take a decision in that respect. In such cases participation might be requested by any member of the Council or proposed by the organ of the Council or the Specialized Organization responsible for preparing the program and regulations of the conference.

XL

ADOPTION OF THE NOMENCLATURE AND REGIME OF THE CHARTER OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

WHEREAS:

It is desirable to establish a regime for the functioning of the Organs of the Organization of American States similar to that established in its Charter, to be effective temporarily until the aforesaid Charter enters into force,

THE NINTH

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. The entities that have hitherto functioned as Organs of the System of the Union of American Republics shall immediately adopt the nomenclature and regime established in the Charter of the Organization of American States.

2. The new Organs provided for in the Charter shall be established on a provisional basis, under the terms of the Charter.

XLI

SECRETARY GENERAL AND ASSISTANT SECRETARY GENERAL OF THE ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

WHEREAS:

In accordance with Resolution IX of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace, Dr. Alberto Lleras Camargo and Dr. William Manger were in 1947 appointed Director General and Assistant Director General, respectively, of the Pan American Union for a period of ten years;

In the Charter of the Organization of American States the titles of the offices they hold are changed to Secretary General and Assistant Secretary General of the Organization;

Both Dr. Lleras Camargo and Dr. Manger have rendered outstanding service to the cause of inter-American solidarity, and the republics of the continent should avail themselves of the fruit of their experience and initiative,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To make known to the Council of the Organization the desire of the American States that, upon the entry into force of the Charter, Dr. Albert Lleras Camargo and Dr. William Manger be appointed Secretary General and Assistant Secretary General, respectively, of the Organization.

Bogotá, April 23, 1948

"DICTIONARY

XLII

"DICTIONARY OF CONSTRUCTION AND RULES OF THE SPANISH LANGUAGE"

BY RUFINO JOSE CUERVO

WHEREAS:

Effective action has not yet been taken on the resolution approved at Habana by the Sixth International Conference of American States on February 15, 1928, whereby each of the Hispanic republics of America agreed to subscribe a certain amount to raise a fund to defray the costs of publishing the "Dictionary of Construction and Rules of the Spanish Language", of which the distinguished Colombian philologist, Rufino José Cuervo, is the author;

The aforesaid resolution had a two-fold character: a tribute to the most outstanding work of Spanish lexicography ever known, and a measure indisputably useful and necessary to all Spanish-speaking countries;

The Ninth International Conference of American States is being held in the city of Bogotá, the birthplace of the illustrious scholar who devoted his entire life to the task of purifying, standardizing, and ennobling the language of eighteen American republics, and it is therefore eminently appropriate to restate here the aspirations and aims of the aforesaid resolution of Habana;

The Government of Colombia, with the collaboration of the distinguished linguists and philologists working at the Caro y Cuervo Institute, has already begun the arduous task of coordinating and publishing the notes left by Señor Cuervo as a supplement to his monumental work;

The Governments of the Hispanic republics are manifestly interested in giving impetus to the work already begun with marked competence, and in paying the tribute due the language of their respective peoples and the memory of the man who had the most profound knowledge of that language and most effectively exalted it,

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

1. To reiterate the aspirations and aims expressed in the resolution signed at Habana on February 15, 1928 by the Sixth International Conference of American States concerning assistance in the publication of the "Dictionary of Construction and Rules of the Spanish Language" prepared by Rufino José Cuervo;

2. To express the desire that the Pan American Union, using the broad powers given to it by the aforesaid resolution, proceed to carry out the latter in every respect, in order that, within the shortest time possible, the Hispanic world may regain and enjoy the invaluable linguistic and cultural patrimony which the completed portion of that monumental work represents.

TRIBUTE

XLIII

TRIBUTE TO DON FEDERICO HENRIQUEZ CARVAJAL

WHEREAS:

The current year 1948 marks the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Don Federico Henríquez Carvajal, illustrious citizen of the Dominican Republic, whose entire life was dedicated to the constant work of ensuring not only the freedom of his own people but also that of all men of America;

In the course of this singular career, which is the expression of all that is noblest in the American man, his liberating zeal led him to devote himself to the fruitful task of helping to establish the Republic of Cuba;

Don Federico Henríquez Carvajal extended a friendly hand to José Martí, throughout the process of revolutionary organization which the Cuban Liberator carried out during the last episode of the sustained and dramatic effort of the Cubans to achieve their independence;

Martí said of Don Federico Henríquez Carvajal that he was one of those men who are "unique as mountains, and who are able to gaze down from the heights and to feel the heartbeat of a nation or of humanity",

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To pay warm tribute to the memory of that outstanding citizen of America.

XLIV

GRATITUDE TO THE GOVERNMENT AND THE PEOPLE OF COLOMBIA

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

RESOLVES:

To express to the government and the people of Colombia its profound gratitude for the magnificent efforts put forth to ensure the success of the Ninth International Conference of American States, and for the atmosphere of cordial hospitality that has always been present at its deliberations.

VOTE

XLV

VOTE OF GRATITUDE

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

AGREES:

1. To express publicly its gratitude to its President, Señor Doctor Eduardo Zuleta Angel, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Colombia, for the tact, moderation, and efficiency with which he has guided the labors of this Assembly.

2. To express its gratitude to the Secretary General, Doctor Camilo de Brigard Silva and to the Assistant Secretaries General, Doctors José Joaquín Gori and Luis Humberto Salamanca, for the exemplary work which they and their assistants have accomplished in the Secretariat of the Conference.

XLVI

VOTE OF THANKS TO THE AMERICAN PRESS

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES

Applauds and thanks the press of the continent for its enthusiastic and able collaboration in furthering the ideals of peace and solidarity, and for its efforts to strengthen the continental juridical system that serves as a mainstay and guarantee of the realization of such ideals, and, acknowledging its noble perseverance in the democratic and educational work of dissemination, hopes that its American convictions will bring about a still greater improvement in providing the American countries with the means for the constant and fruitful acquisition of knowledge about the characteristics and development of each one in the social, economic, and political fields.

In witness whereof the respective Delegates Plenipotentiary sign and affix their seals to the present Final Act, in the Spanish language, at Bogota on May the second, one thousand nine hundred forty-eight, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union, where it shall be sent through the Secretary General of the Conference, in order that certified copies may be sent to the Governments of the American Republics.

* * *

marked copy

CHESTER WRIGHT'S LABOR LETTER

ISSUED FOR INFORMATION OF CLIENTS SINCE 1933
CHESTER WRIGHT'S LABOR LETTER, INC.
1003 K STREET N.W. WASHINGTON 1, D. C.

HIRING OFF SLIGHTLY, QUITS UP

BLS says that manufacturing industries hired workers in April at the rate of 40 per 1,000, the lowest rate for any year since the prewar period.

Six of the major industry groups reported increases, while most of the others indicated some dropping away chiefly due to material shortages and seasonal reductions in activity.

Quits increased a bit to 30 per 1,000 workers. Causes: return to the farms for spring planting; others dropped away due to seasonal slack as well as material shortages.

For the first 4 months of this year layoffs were consistently higher than same period in 1947.

But April's total separation rates, 47 per 1,000, was well below any comparable month in the war and postwar years.

Hiring in iron mines rose as the Great Lakes opened to shipping; went up to 56 per 1,000. Lead and zinc mines also reported expansions. Quits also went up in metal mining, because of a trickle back to farm for the crop season.

FLEMMING SAYS—"NO TECHNICAL JARGON"

Civil Service Commissioner Arthur S. Flemming, who quits government service to become president of Ohio Wesleyan University in the fall, told the Society for Advancement of Management:

"We must get rid of our technical jargon. We are all guilty of it. Why do we persist in it? As far as I can see, it is just because we are fundamentally lazy. We are always looking for short cuts. Labels provide us with short cuts as we seek to express our ideas.

"We know that if we will take the time to explain our ideas in language which can be understood by all, we will speed up the machinery of government and improve to an extent far beyond anything that we can imagine our relationship with the Congress and with the public."

That goes for management and labor spokesmen as well.

June 19, 1948.

THIS WEEK WE REPORT TO YOU:

LABOR AND THE REPUBLICANS:--CIO and AFofL sent national spokesmen to the Republican platform committee in Philadelphia which sat Thursday and Friday, to speak their mind. Van Bittner talked for CIO, President Green for the federation.

Bittner has had some Republican background, but Green is traditionally Democratic. AFofL continues a strong tradition of doing its political shopping in both conventions.

This year, their appearance is only a ritual. Labor has suffered a slow burn in Republican-controlled Congress. It is far from certain as to what kind of political salve to use. Nevertheless, political life in labor circles is not simple.

For example, nobody would be surprised to see John L. Lewis appear in Philadelphia. He is considered pro-Joe Martin for President, strongly anti-Taft, and maybe--for Dewey. But Lewis is displeased with Dewey for not coming out strongly against the Taft-Hartley law, and because Senator Ives of N. Y., who supposedly represented Dewey's wishes on labor affairs, finally swung around in support of the law.

Another Republican stalwart is William Hutcheson of the Carpenters, who usually heads up the GOP Labor Committee. He supported Vandenberg in 1940. Might do so again. Or may unite forces with Lewis in convention and campaign strategy.

Hutcheson has wanted to be Secretary of Labor and now maybe he may become that--if the deals turn out right.

All Congress wanted to do this week was to evacuate Washington fast--despite the legislative disorder, and the hooting and the hollering from the returned President.

LABOR'S PUBLIC RELATIONS:--Nine months after it was ordered to do so by its 1947 convention, AFofL's Executive Council went to work to put its public relations program into action.

This week they hired the firm of Owen and Chappell, a New York advertising and publicity setup, which outbid several other firms for the job of grooming the AFofL for public consumption.

This takes place a few weeks after John L. Lewis hired a public relations firm to handle the press and public during coal negotiations.

COPYRIGHT 1948, CHESTER WRIGHT'S LABOR LETTER, INC.

Word comes that the Musician's President James C. Petrillo scoffs openly at the idea of hiring help to "sell" the public. He tells friends that a union needs to have a "creative" program before it can expect to be accepted. To some, this seems like a new and thoughtful wrinkle in the Petrillo approach. Petrillo's free concerts are part of this effort to achieve a "new look."

Within the AFofL, you have all schools of thought on public relations as on other things. David Dubinsky's Ladies Garment Workers Union runs the gamut from summer homes, sanitariums, health services, educational and research departments to the fabulous "Pins and Needles" show, a still active memory--and now 6 FM radio stations.

On the other extreme, you have building trades unions which never bother with broad-gauge public relations programs, devote themselves to the particular business their unions are set up to do. Even here, you will probably see new programs bustin' out all over.

The old established unions find that they can no longer afford to be self-satisfied.

This is a phase that some corporations went through during the height of the Wagner law period. In this Taft-Hartley period, unions have become extremely aware of the need to take pains with the public reaction to their policies.

All this is apart from the work that labor is planning to do in the political campaign--which is a public relations project to be handled with the greatest care and precision.

POLITICS AND LABOR DEPARTMENT:--Out in San Francisco, International Labor Organization went into action by electing David A. Morse as director-general. Morse continues as Acting Secretary of Labor. Morse will probably hold on to his U. S. job until Truman finds somebody (and gets him to accept) to add labor strength to the ticket.

This is a tough nut: for political and technical reasons. Take the technical one first: Both the administration and labor organizations feel that the Labor Department has been "meat-axed" by the Republican Congress. Latest evidence was the switch of the United States Employment Service from Labor Department to the Federal Security Agency.

Truman, in political anguish, howled his veto of the appropriations bill that validated this "kidnaping"--but Congress overrode him.

Politically, the secretaryship of labor does not look like a job with a lot of tenure. Ideally, Truman wants a man who packs a wallop with the labor movement--right across the board--AFofL, CIO, railroad brotherhoods, and independents. Practically, he would compromise on someone who would satisfy AFofL and railroaders--somebody who would help spark labor's political action, which carries on in slow motion until the Supreme Court speaks.

NLRB's ARITHMETIC

April was another record month: 6,968 cases were filed—12% above March, never equalled in the board's 12-year history.

Each day of the month, NLRB conducted an average of 179 elections. 157 were union-shop authorization polls.

95% or 6,653 of the cases filed were petitions for various kinds of elections. In 247 cases, employers were charged with unfair labor practices, and 67 involved similar charges against unions.

3,585 elections were actually held in April. 88% of those eligible to vote did so, a total of 334,109 voters.

438 collective bargaining elections were held. AFofL participated in 266, winning at least a majority in 192 instances. They failed to get a majority in 69 elections, and 5 undetermined.

CIO unions appeared in 113 elections, won 75, lost 34; and 4 elections undetermined.

Independent unions were in 107 elections; won 66, lost 39; and 2 elections undetermined.

Ten decertification elections were held, all with the consent of all parties. Of the 1,294 employes eligible to vote, 84% cast valid ballots. 58% of the valid ballots were cast against the union.

4 of these elections resulted in decertification of the union; in 5 cases the union was continued; 1 was indeterminate.

Of the 3,137 union shop authorization polls, 3,042 were based on the consent of the parties involved.

88% of those eligible to vote cast valid ballots. 95% of these or 281,217 voted for authorizing a union shop.

Unions won 98% of the elections: 2,233 of the 3,137 polls were won by AFofL affiliates; 525 by independents; 315 by CIO affiliates.

Of the 247 unfair labor practices charges filed against employers, 76 were brought by individuals, 108 by AFofL affiliates, 38 by CIO, 20 by independent unions.

67 charges were brought against unions: 45 by employers and employer associations, 19 by individuals; 3 by other unions.

In 20 cases unions were charged with secondary boycott: AFofL, 12; CIO, 3; independent, 5. Six charges of jurisdictional disputes involved AFofL unions and 2 CIO.

The five-man Board issued 309 decisions in April compared with 194 in March. This stepped-up tempo included 15 unfair labor practices; 178 collective bargaining election petitions; 116 union-shop election petitions.

Of the 473 cases pending decision at end of April (508 were pending at end of March), 140 involved unfair labor practices.

Taken altogether, this is the end of April case-load (and take a deep breath):

14,467 cases were awaiting disposition at various procedural levels.

Of these pending cases, 1,222 or 8% were filed before August 22, 1947, when the T-H law went into effect. 3,933 such cases were pending August 22. Of the 1,222 Wagner Act cases, 822 involved charges of unfair labor practices and 400 petitions for collective bargaining elections.

The remaining T-H cases—13,245—included 1,620 unfair labor practice cases and 11,625 for various types of elections.

We can break this down further, but you get the idea.

Non-Communist affidavits have been signed by 85,101 union officials of national and local organizations. This covers a total of 149 national and 9,035 local unions.

STAFFING THE USES

With the shift of U. S. Employment Service from the Labor Department to the Federal Security Agency, Oscar Ewing, head of FSA has begun to feel the pressures on him for the appointment of personnel to key positions. Labor spokesmen are largely favorable to Robert C. Goodwin, current head of USES. Some of the state officials want Ray Adams of Utah.

Despite transfer of USES to Federal Security, no change in duties is indicated. Wagner-Peyser Act which set it up remains its legislative mandate.

This may happen on Monday--day you receive this Letter --when the Republican convention opens. If the Supreme Court declares the political action clause of the Taft-Hartley law unconstitutional, it will probably put the finishing touches on Taft's chances for the nomination.

WORKERS' EDUCATION IN THE SOUTH:--Intensive activity of Georgia Workers Education Service has been observed in Georgia and other states with much interest.

This service is headed by Frank McAllister, with headquarters in Atlanta. During the last year, classes for AFofL, CIO and independent unions were held in 21 Georgia towns, along with institutes in Alabama, North Carolina and Tennessee.

Five AFofL unions used the GWES; Ladies Garment Workers Union; Laundry Workers; Longshoremen; Pulp and Sulphite Workers; State, County and Municipal Workers, as well as Central Labor bodies in Rome and Brunswick, Ga.

Eleven CIO unions had classes under GWES auspices: Packinghouse Workers; Woodworkers; Transport Workers; Auto Workers; Furniture Workers; Retail and Wholesale Clerks; Steelworkers; Hosiery Workers; Peanut Mill Workers.

Altogether about 3,600 attended classes and institutes during the last year. In addition to its own classes, GWES staff members spoke to college classes, community agency conferences, church workshops, etc.

ILO CONFERENCE:--Lombardo Toledano has resigned from the governing body of the ILO. One reason is that the ILO governing body in effect turned down the application of the World Federation of Trade Unions for sole consultative status. This has been on the agenda for some time. Feeling ran very strong that WFTU's function is a "conveyor belt" for the Russian party line.

All this is another evidence of cleavage between AFofL and CIO on international affiliations--even though they presumably agree on essentials of U. S. foreign policy.

Toledano's going has another reason: For the first time in many years, he lost out as Mexico's workers' delegate. He was not selected because his influence dipped hard. The chances of his reelection to the governing board have been very slim. So--he quits on a matter of principle! He is a vice-president of the WFTU and president of the Latin-American Confederation of Workers--both Communist dominated.

His going from the ILO seems to raise to new importance the position of the Chilean workers' delegate, Bernardo Ibanez, president of the new and rival Inter-American Confederation of Workers. Ibanez has been a long-time opponent of Toledano's policies. He has the support of AFofL, Toledano has CIO's. This San Francisco meeting brings the rivalry between leaders of the two opposing Latin American trade union camps to a new pitch.

Recognition of the Ibanez federation as one of the consultative bodies in effect cancels out the monopoly position of Toledano's CTAL in the Latin American labor picture.

U. S. firms dealing in manufacture for export, as well as importers of raw materials from Latin America, watch this development closely.

COMMUNISTS IN ITALIAN TRADE UNIONS:--Concern over the ECA program in Europe focuses U. S. labor and governmental attention on Communist strength in Italy's labor unions. The election victory over the Communists has not yet been reflected in the political complexion of the labor leadership.

New leadership is emerging, but it is still divided while the Communists operate as usual like a unit.

In 4,500,000 votes cast in the Italian federation's election last June, Communists emerged dominant in most of the basic unions. They were aided by Nenni-Socialists, or "Nenni-goats." Strong Christian Democratic and Socialist opposition to this Communist setup is making some headway.

Of the 1,600,000 land workers, Communists have controlled 68%; of the 551,000 metal workers, 63%; 72% of the 282,000 building workers. 50% of the 224,000 civil servants voted Communist; as did 60% of the chemical workers; 52% of the railway workers and 53% of the clothing workers.

In the following workers' groups, Communists hold less than a majority--without Nenni-goat support: 44% of the 475,000 textile workers; 39% of the 108,000 public employes; 26% of the 69,000 post office employes; and 10% of the 83,000 school teachers. Christian Democrats have 63% of the teachers.

This data is absolutely essential for U. S. organizations which will have to deal with the rehabilitation of Italian industry under the recovery program. This is why the character of industry and labor personnel being selected by the ECA is of first rate importance.

Internal pressures inside the Italian federation are mounting. The whole situation is very sensitive to international trends, a highly competent observer emphasizes. If a split had occurred in WFTU at its recent meeting in Rome, it would have been followed most likely by a cleavage in the Communist-dominated movement of Italy.

This is why there is wide difference in the estimates of how great a triumph was scored by CIO represenatives in keeping the WFTU together at the May executive board meeting.

CHESTER WRIGHT'S LABOR LETTER, INC.

John Herling

JOHN HERLING, Editor

THIS LETTER IS EXCLUSIVELY FOR CLIENTS. NOT TO BE REPRODUCED IN WHOLE OR IN PART.

"OVERTIME ON OVERTIME"

Administrator William R. McComb of the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division has had to send out additional clarification following the Supreme Court 5-3 decision in the Longshoremen's case.

He minimizes the financial effect of the decision. He stresses this: employers who have in the past relied on his interpretations in good faith are in most cases protected from back-wage liabilities by the Portal-to-Portal Act.

Also, opinions expressed in paragraphs 69 and 70 of Interpretative Bulletin No. 4, are now withdrawn. Division will not begin enforcement on the revised basis until July 1, 1948. This involves the extra payments "made because of undesirable hours when the work is performed rather than because the hours are in excess of a specified standard."

If you want the McComb statement, write us. We'll get you a copy. This whole matter will be subject to further elaboration by government technicians.

The court decision will stimulate the passage of legislation amending the "overtime on overtime" provision, as interpreted by the court. AFofL Longshoremen's Union counsel Louis Waldman says "regular rate of pay has to be defined" by Congress. He agrees with Justice Frankfurter who dissented from the court's majority:

"The present decision is heedless of a long-standing and socially desirable collective agreement and is calculated to foster disputes in an industry which has been happily at peace for more than 30 years."

Out on the West Coast, CIO's Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union have suits for back pay pending. Pacific shipowners fearing that they may be liable for about $20 million in back pay may find the CIO union trying to use the situation to improve their bargaining position in wage negotiations.

CRUIKSHANK TO GENEVA

Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of AFofL's social security affairs, goes to Geneva this week to represent U. S. labor in the sessions of the World Health Organization. U. S. affiliation with WHO was confirmed by Congress a few days ago.

1948

LABOR EDUCATION GUIDE

Current Materials for Workers' Education Activities

Orlie A.H.Pell, Editor

21 - Labor Education

WINTER 1948

Volume VII ..... Number 1

LABOR TODAY 1

LABOR AND THE COMMUNITY 3

BUILDING THE UNION 3

STRENGTHENING DEMOCRACY 5

DO YOU KNOW THAT 6

FOR EYE AND EAR 7
16mm. Films 7
Filmstrips 7
Songs and Recordings 8

MATERIALS IN ACTION 9

Annual Subscription $1.00

Published by

American Labor Education Service
1776 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y.

ANALYSIS OF THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT

CIO Legal Department, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C. 1947. 48 pp. 15¢.

A factual discussion of the provisions of the act arranged under fifteen general topics. The pamphlet shows the contrast with existing regulations, and points out some of the ways in which employers would be able to take undue advantage of the act. Useful to union officials and others interested.

OPERATING UNDER THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT*

By Max Malin and S. Herbert Unterberger. Labor Relations Information Bureau, Washington, D.C. 1947. 48 pp. $1.50.

A handbook of how the law works, arranged functionally, i.e., with all the scattered material relevant to one type of situation pulled together and presented in one place. Emphasis is on the implications of the law for day-by-day operations. Useful for any person concerned with labor-management relations.

REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE OF NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL UNIONS ON EDUCATION AND POLITICAL MATTERS

American Federation of Labor, AFL Bldg., Washington 1, D.C. December, 1947. 9 pp. No price given.

This report of the meeting at which Labor's Educational and Political League was set up, deals with the purpose of the new organization, its objectives and the techniques it will use in developing its political strength. Of interest to union members and others.

DICTIONARY OF LABOR ECONOMICS

By Byrne Horton. Public Affairs Press, 2153 Florida Ave., Washington 8, D.C. 1947. 32 pp. $1. (Quantity rates to unions and similar groups.)

Terms used today in industrial relations and in labor affairs are defined and clarified. The pamphlet is easy to use, in form and content. In some cases, one or two useful references to books or other sources are mentioned, as an aid to further understanding of complex issues.

IN THE GREAT TRADITION

Education Department, United Automobile Workers- CIO, 28 West Warren Ave., Detroit 1, Mich. 1947. 41 pp. No price given.

This carefully prepared handbook for delegates to the union's 1947 Convention contains an outline history of the American labor movement, the story of the growth of the UAW-CIO, and a detailed account of what the Education Department has accomplished during the year, with its recommendations for the future. Of interest to unionists and others.

"Labor's Coming of Age"

By Mark Starr. Reprinted from WELLSPRINGS OF HUMAN SPIRIT edited by F. Ernest Johnson. Harper and Bros. 1946. $2.50. Reprint available from the ILGWU, 1710 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. 21 pp. 10¢.

A discussion for the general reader of the status of labor today in the light of the history of the labor movement in this country. Who the workers are, how they have struggled from the colonial days on to improve their working and living conditions, and the problems that lie immediately ahead, are set forth with vigor.

*Starred items are reprinted, or adapted, from the January-February, 1948 issue of Labor and Nation, pg. 44.

Copyright, Winter, 1948
American Labor Education Service, Inc.

REBIRTH OF A NATION*

By Percy Gudlipp. The Labour Party, Transport House, Smith Square, London W.C.1, England. 1947. 16 pp. 10¢. (Quantity rates.)

What the British Labour Party has accomplished in its first two years, in spite of all obstacles. Illustrated with photographs and cartoon sketches, the pamphlet answers the arguments of the Tories one by one, and points out how the various government programs have worked for the benefit of the mass of the people. See also their pamphlet, A B C OF THE CRISIS. 1947. 16 pp. 2d. This is a clear careful analysis for British public of the economic position of Britain at this time. It explains for the intelligent layman the situation in regard to their need for exporting, the American loan, and the present Government's programs and plans.

SWEDEN'S LABOR PROGRAM

By Tage Lindbom. League for Industrial Democracy, 112 East 19 St., New York 3, N. Y. 1948. 63 pp. 35¢.

The story of the development of the labor movement in Sweden and its present position as a strong steadying force in the country's national life. Labor's relation to employers and to the economic scene, its political and international influence as the dominant political force, and its educational and cooperative activities are seen in clear relationship.

"Steelworkers with Diplomas"

By Kathryn Close. Survey Graphic, November, 1947, Special issue, EDUCATION IN OUR TIMES, pp. 610-614, 660-661. 112 East 19 St., New York 3, N.Y. 60¢.

A write-up of the institute for steelworkers conducted by Pennsylvania State College, describing the purpose, the student body, the study program, and some of the results of this project. Of interest to union members and others.

WORKERS' EDUCATION: A CHALLENGE TO NEGRO COLLEGES

By Thomas E. Posey. Reprint from The Journal of Negro Education, Winter, 1947. 4 pp. Available on request from author, West Virginia State College, Institute, West Va.

A discussion of the challenge to Negro colleges presented by the increasing importance of the labor movement in the life of the nation, and the increasing recognition of this by colleges and universities throughout the country. The opportunities as well as the obstacles facing Negro colleges in relation to labor education are considered.

Industrial and Labor Relations Review

New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Quarterly. $3 per year. $1 per issue.

The first issue of this periodical appeared October, 1947. It contains a number of analytical articles by academic, labor, and management authorities, together with extensive book reviews, and a listing of publications in the field during the previous months. Of interest to students and others interested in the study of industrial relations.

LABOR UNIONS IN ACTION: A Study of the Mainsprings of Unionism

By Jack Barbash. Harper and Brothers, New York. 1948. 270 pp. $3.50.

The aim of this book is to explain what makes unions "tick," how and why they function as they do. It tells the story of how unions have gone about organizing, how they are run, how they carry on collective bargaining and other activities, how their leadership develops; and discusses their various economic, social and political goals, in the setting of economic and political life in America from 1933 to the present.

LABOR AND THE COMMUNITY

Samples of Union Approaches to the Community

MEET YOUR CIO NEIGHBORS IN GRAND RAPIDS

Kent County CIO Council Industrial Union, 215 Sheldon S.E., Grand Rapids, Mich. 1947. 4 pp. Free of charge on request.

This leaflet humanizes CIO unions and union members for the general public, showing they are the people who deliver your milk and read your meters, your "fellow strap-hanger on the bus." The union leaders are mentioned by name, together with their wives and children, the churches and clubs they are active in, their jobs and interests.

UNION COUNSELING

ILGWU Waist and Dress Joint Board, 128 N. 10 St., Philadelphia 7, Pa. 2 pp. Free of charge on request.

A brief outline of a six-session course for training union counselors, of interest to those planning a similar program of interpreting community resources.

THE ONTARIO STORY: A PLAN FOR OHIO

Ohio CIO Council, 218 East State St., Columbus 15, Ohio. 1948. 8 pp. Free of charge on request.

A description of the program for retraining and rehabilitating injured workers in practice in Ontario, Canada, and the implications of this for other communities. Suggestions are given for steps for Ohio unions to take in arousing interest on the part of other groups throughout the state.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A COOPERATIVE IN YOUR COMMUNITY

UAW-CIO Education Department, 28 West Warren Ave., Detroit 1, Mich. 1947. 34 pp. No price given.

The first half of this pamphlet discusses the value to workers of a consumers co-operative to lower their living costs; the second half discusses the steps to take in setting up a Community Co-op Council and gaining real community participation.

BUILDING THE UNION

WHAT'S THE SCORE IN YOUR UNION?

Southern School for Workers, 14 North 9 St., Richmond 19, Va. 1947. 14 pp. 15¢.

This informal handbook for local unions was prepared at the request of a state CIO Executive Council, and has been found useful by a number of unions in other states as well. It gives simple helpful suggestions of how to get union members out to meetings, and how to make the meetings interesting and fruitful.

WHAT'S AHEAD? A Survey of Current Economic Trends

CIO Department of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C. 1947. 34 pp. 10¢. (Quantity rates.)

Some of the economic facts of today are explained clearly and illustrated with simple charts in this little pocket-sized pamphlet. The material deals with high profits, high prices, savings, sales, production, foreign trade, and take-home pay, and will be of interest to union members and others as a basis for discussion and action.

THE STRUCTURE AND FUNCTIONING OF THE ILGWU

Educational Department, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, 1710 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. Revised 1947. 32 pp. 10¢.

A pamphlet telling how the local unions, joint boards and International Union are set up and what their activities are, including the functions of the new departments-International, Legal, and Political - set up in 1947. See also the material on each of the departments, prepared for their Training-for-Trade-Union-Service course.

BUILDING THE UNION (Continued)

DEMOCRACY FOR ALL

National Maritime Union, 346 West 17 St., New York 11, N.Y. 1947. 32 pp. No price given.

This is an informal manual on parliamentary procedure, explaining in seamen's language how to run a union meeting, on ship or on shore. Illustrated with photographs and occasional cartoons. May be of interest to other union members as well.

YOUR HEALTH: A Manual for the Members of the Labor Health Institute

Labor Health Institute, 1127 Pine St., St. Louis 1, Mo. 1948. 29 pp. No price given.

Here we have in convenient form the facts concerning this health center set up by the St. Louis Joint Board of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union. The various services, provided to members of the union and their families, are carefully explained, and the charter and by-laws are given.

BUILD A BETTER LIFE

CIO Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C. 1947. 36 pp. 15¢. (Quantity rates.)

Addressed directly to "Mrs. CIO Housewife", this little pamphlet tells how to set up a women's auxiliary and how to keep an effective program going. Among the activities discussed are political action in the neighborhood, consumer action, other educational and social programs, and conducting a well-run meeting.

A LABOR UNION MANUAL ON JOB EVALUATION

By William Gomberg. Labor Education Division, Roosevelt College, 430 South Michigan Ave., Chicago 5, Ill. 1947. 80 pp. $1.

A discussion of job evaluation in relation to collective bargaining, and an analysis of how actual plans work, and of the process by which they are installed. Included also are articles of criticism and rejoinder by Solomon Barkin and the author on what should be labor's attitude toward the whole process. The manual will be of value to union leaders faced with the problem and to others interested in the trend.

RADIO

Education Department, UAW-CIO, 28 West Warren Ave., Detroit 1, Mich. 1947. 29 pp. No price given.

This manual in the Education Materials for Leadership Training series contains technical material on broadcasting resulting from a UAW-CIO Radio Workshop, as well as the outline of a discussion on radio as an influence today, and suggestions for obtaining and utilizing time on the air. Several sample scripts are included. Of value to union members seriously interested in using radio as an educational technique.

MIMEOGRAPH HANDBOOK

Education Department, Michigan CIO Council, 803 Hofmann Bldg., Detroit 1, Mich. 1947. $1.50. (Quantity rates.)

Here are provided a large number of cartoons to copy and use in leaflets, union local shop papers, notices of meetings, etc., etc. Also helpful suggestions on working up publicity and educational materials that will be eye-catching and easy to read.

LET'S TELL THE PEOPLE

Public Relations Department, Canadian Congress of Labour. 1948. 9 pp. No price given.

A Handbook on Publicity, to help unions tell their story to the public through local newspapers, local radio stations, and the use of effective leaflets. It gives brief, clear suggestions for action in each field.

BUILDING THE UNION (Continued)

GUIDE TO USE OF FILMSTRIPS

Ohio CIO Council, 218 East State St., Columbus 15, Ohio. 1947. 9 pp. No price given.

In addition to discussing how filmstrips can be useful to a union, how they work and how they can be obtained, this guide describes a number of available strips on such topics as union affairs, health and safety, minority groups and world order.

"The Place of Films in Workers' Education Programs in the United States"

By Orlie Pell. Appearing in the Winter 1947-48 issue, Film Forum Review. Institute of Adult Education, Teachers College, Columbia University, 525 West 120 St., New York 27, N. Y. Single issue, 75¢. (Quantity rates.)

A discussion of the methods by which labor groups are finding it increasingly possible to utilize the film as a sound educational technique, relating it closely to the total educational program and life of the union.

LOOK, LISTEN AND LEARN

By L. Harold Strauss and J. R. Kidd. Association Press, 347 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y. 1948. 235 pp. $3.50.

This is "a manual on the use of audio-visual materials in informal education." It discusses in some detail both the technical end and the educational end of the use of films and filmstrips, radio, recordings and transcription, for entertainment, for discussion of social problems, for publicity, for religious programs and for health, physical education and camp programs. While the book is not addressed to workers or concerned with their interests, it will be of value to union program directors.

STRENGTHENING DEMOCRACY

"TO SECURE THESE RIGHTS"*

Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. 1947. 178 pp. From Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C. $1. Reprint from PM, Box 81, Times Square Station, New York, N. Y. 10¢. (Quantity rates.)

In this report the cross-section committee, on which both AFL and CIO were represented, state boldly where our present failures lie in the matter of justice and equality to minority groups, and give concrete suggestions for removing present barriers as quickly as possible.

PROMISING PRACTICES IN INTERGROUP EDUCATION

By Marion Edman and Laurentine B. Collins. Bureau of Intercultural Education, 1697 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y. 1947. 32 pp. 20¢.

This pamphlet analyzes several of the methods of approaching intercultural education - for example, stressing the contributions made by each group, working together on common problems, studying the causes of prejudice, etc. - and it discusses the advantages and limitations of each. Although based entirely on work with children, the material will be of interest to union and other adult-group leaders.

EVALUATION OF AGENCIES AND PROGRAMS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS*

The September 1947 issue of Journal of Educational Sociology, 32 Washington Place, New York 3, N.Y. 64 pp. 35¢.

A technical discussion of the problems involved in evaluating educational programs designed to change attitudes and behavior in regard to intergroup relations. Of interest to labor educators who have already done some thinking and experimenting with the evaluation of such programs.

STRENGTHENING DEMOCRACY (Continued)

DOES SOCIAL DISCRIMINATION REALLY MATTER?

By Carey McWilliams. Commentary, November, 1948, pp. 408-415, 425 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Single issue, 40¢. ($4 per year.)

A keen analysis of the economic importance of social discrimination. It explains how snobbishness, far from being a superficial affair, is an effective instrument in keeping a certain group out of desirable economic fields, including white collar and other jobs.

Note: Watch for IN HENRY'S BACKYARD by Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish. Henry Schuman, Inc., 20 East 70 St., New York 20, N. Y. $2. This book is developed around the story of Henry, as told in the film, BROTHERHOOD OF MAN, and is illustrated with over sixty cartoons in color taken from the film. It is based, as was the film, on the pamphlet by the same authors, THE RACES OF MANKIND.

See also below, under FOR EYE AND EAR.

DO YOU KNOW THAT: .....

The Public Affairs Committee is planning a series of their pamphlets on family relationships - marriage, 'teen-agers, growing old, etc. The December pamphlet is BROKEN HOMES, which deals with many of the factors that make marriages fail or succeed. The January, 1948 one is PLANNING YOUR FAMILY, and deals with planned parenthood. Each, 32 pp. 20¢. (Quantity rates.)

You can get a copy of the recent report of the President's Council of Economic Advisors from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C. * It shows the relation of "maximum production" to high steady employment levels and to lower living costs, points out the actions of business that work against it and the directions in which we will have to move to achieve it. SECOND ANNUAL REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT. December, 1947. 31 pp. 15¢.

The Federal Security Agency has put out a pamphlet, FOR YOU AND YOURS, that shows clearly and attractively how the government provides services in the fields of health, education and security that benefit the whole family, fathers, mothers, children, old people, and the wider community. Federal Security Agency, Washington 25, D. C. 1947. 25 pp. Free of charge.

FOR EYE AND EAR

16mm Films

BOUNDARY LINES

Sound film in color. Film Program Services, 1173 Ave. of the Americas, New York 19, N. Y. 10 Minutes. Sale, $90. Rental, $3.

This is an experiment in animation, with effective color and strong imaginative treatment. The film shows the imaginary boundary lines that divide nations, races and groups, and makes clear how necessary it is to outgrow these lines in an atomic age. Useful for large or small group.

DOES IT MATTER WHAT YOU THINK?

Produced by British Information Services and available for rent through their regional offices. Distributed by Film Program Services, 1173 Ave. of the Americas, New York 19, N. Y. Sound. 15 Minutes. Sale, $47.50. Rental, $3.

A lively discussion of how opinions are formed, with illustrations of the methods used by radio, newspapers, movies, etc. to put ideas across. It shows clearly why it is important for ordinary everyday people to meet and discuss issues in their political parties, their unions and other community groups. Useful, particularly if followed by discussion.

THE WORLD IS RICH

Brandon Films, 1600 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. Sound film. 43 Minutes. Sale, $100. Rental, $6.

This is a successor to THE WORLD OF PLENTY, showing how the hungry people in the world can be fed if all countries can plan together so that food can be shipped from where it is plentiful to where it is needed. Effective photography and animation. Useful for large and small groups, especially in connection with discussion of the Marshall Plan.

See also above, pg. 5, LOOK, LISTEN AND LEARN; and pg. 5, "The Place of Films in Workers' Education in the United States."

Note: BOUNDARY LINES and a number of other films on minority problems are loaned for the nominal charge of 50¢ each by the Freedom Film Library of the Eastern Regional Office of the Anti-Defamation League, 20 West 40 St., New York 18, N. Y.

Filmstrips

HEART OF THE UNION

National Maritime Union, 346 West 17 St., New York 11, N.Y. 30 Minutes. Sale, approximately $15. (Quantity rates.) Available later in color.

This cartoon filmstrip shows how the Ship's Committee (Shop Committee to you) is the very heart of the union on shipboard: how it handles beefs, enforces the union contract, carries on education activities, including discussions, films and a union library. While addressed to maritime workers, it may be of interest to others as well. Available in pamphlet form, free of charge upon request. 1947. 88 pp.

FOR EYE AND EAR (Continued)

Filmstrips (Continued)

SONGS FOR SEAMEN

National Maritime Union, 346 West 17 St., New York 11, N. Y. 30 Minutes. Sale, approximately $15. (Quantity rates.)

This is a singing filmstrip, showing words of seven union songs on the screen - Solidarity, Hold the Fort, Which Side Are You On?, etc. A 7-page leaflet containing the words is available free of charge upon request.

THE CHALLENGE OF WORLD TRADE

Film Publishers, 25 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y. 15 Minutes. Sale, $3.

This filmstrip uses cartoons to bring out the importance to all of us of trade as a two-way process, with all nations able to buy and sell with each other. Useful for a small group as a basis for discussion. Prepared in cooperation with the League of Women Voters. Available as small 48-page pamphlet, a "filmtext."

See also above, p. 5, GUIDE TO USE OF FILMSTRIPS.

Songs and Recordings

SINGING FARMERS

National Farmers Union, 3501 East 46 Ave., Denver 16, Colo. 1947. 112 pp. No price given.

This songbook provides the words and music of over a hundred songs useful for group singing. A few are songs of the Farmers Union; the rest are general union songs, folk songs, hymns, patriotic and love songs, rounds, etc. A good all 'round collection.

A PEOPLE'S SONGS WORDBOOK

People's Songs, 235 East 11 St., New York 3, N. Y. 1947. 64 pp. 15¢.

A small booklet containing the words to many labor songs, old and new, and a few patriotic and folk songs. From the "Star Spangled Banner" to "A Dollar Ain't a Dollar Any More!"

Note: AMERICA'S FAVORITE LABOR SONGS (See UNION SONGS in the Fall, 1947 Guide, p. 5) are now available from the CIO Department of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C., on three unbreakable 12" regular phonograph records, cleared for radio use. Set, $6. In album, $7.50. (Quantity rates.) Included is a folder with the words of the songs.

WE ARE MANY PEOPLE

Series of 13 quarter-hour radio recordings. Pax Productions, 177 Post St., San Francisco 8, Calif. For non-broadcast use, complete set, $65. (Quantity rates.) For all-inclusive use, complete set $225; any one program $20. (Quantity rates.)

Imaginative, dramatic radio programs, stressing good intergroup relations and equal opportunity for all. Two-minute periods of music at the beginning and end of each program can be used for local announcements and comment. Each program is a complete story (Let My People Go, The Pixie and Mr. Bixby, etc.).

Songs and Recordings (Continued)

IT'S UP TO YOU

Series of 6 quarter-hour radio recordings. Pax Productions, 177 Post St., San Francisco 8, Calif. For all-inclusive use, complete set, $180; any 2, $75; any 4, $150. Scripts, and 3-page guide on technical use and use in discussion, available.

Militant labor drama sketches, dealing with Taft-Hartley, strike-breaking, housing, and other current issues. Each program a complete story (Big Union, The Oakville Story, etc.). As above, two-minute periods for local announcements.

MATERIALS IN ACTION

This is a small southern town. It is 6:30 p.m. Here in this room two men are laboriously tracing their names over and over on a strip of cardboard. By 9:30 a dozen men will have gathered in the Mason's Hall to attend school. They are all workers, and belong to the International Union in their industry. Years of hard outdoor work have made their hands gnarled and calloused, so that mastery of even the art of holding a pencil comes with difficulty. But they are eager to learn and patient with the slow processes of improvement.

We had been invited by the International Representative to come to this town two months ago and present a Labor Film, in an effort to rekindle interest in the union. We went. That night we played records of union songs. The men joined the singing reluctantly. After the film had been shown we made an unsuccessful attempt to draw from the men some discussion about the picture, which had emphasized the importance of voting as a citizen. The International Representative presented some facts at the meeting, which were received with frigid calm. When a union leaflet was distributed, two men in the group scanned the reading, twenty-two other men folded their copies neatly and put them in their pockets without even glancing through the pages.

It began to dawn upon me that the men that sat in that room hadn't understood. The picture had not meant anything to them because they felt the barrier between them and franchisement was too steep for accomplishment. The Representative's remarks meant nothing to them because they did not understand the language of trade unionism - they could neither read nor write.

Would the men enjoy classes in which they learned about their union and how to become full citizens? The response was amazing. They asked us to return the following Thursday and teach them. These were the things they needed to know: what does CIO mean? Does anyone else at any other place belong to our union? Why is it called a "local"? What do you mean by a "grievance"? How can you vote if you can't write? etc.,

We could do something about all of these problems.

Two weeks later there were flash cards of the terms, CIO, PAC, UNION, LOCAL, WORKERS... These men gradually learned to read the cards and to make short speeches explaining what they meant. At the next meeting we started the writing. Now they are reading and writing their names, dates, ages, the name of their town, their state. The primary motive behind the writing activity is the great desire of the men to become qualified voters.

We talked much about voting responsibility. Last week two men brought their receipts for poll tax payments.

(Adapted from a report by Mrs. Helen Baker, Southern School for Workers. December, 1947.)

NOTE: Material mentioned in the GUIDE should be ordered directly from the organization which has prepared it.

SELECTED PUBLICATIONS

of

AMERICAN LABOR EDUCATION SERVICE, Inc.

1776 Broadway New York 19, N. Y.

	Price per copy*
ANNOTATED LIST OF LABOR PLAYS	20¢	☐
AFFILIATED SCHOOLS SCRAPBOOK, Vol. I, No. 6 - WORKERS' EDUCATION THROUGH ACTION	25¢	☐
EDUCATION AND THE WORKER-STUDENT By Jean Carter Ogden and Hilda W. Smith	25¢	☐
GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF WORKERS' EDUCATION - WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO DENMARK AND SWEDEN By Eleanor G. Coit	50¢	☐
I AM A WOMAN WORKER - A Scrapbook of Autobiographies	50¢	☐
LABOR EDUCATION GUIDE ON CURRENT MATERIALS FOR WORKERS' EDUCATION ACTIVITIES (Annual Subscription)	1.00	☐
LABOR EDUCATION IN UNIVERSITIES By Caroline F. Ware	1.00	☐
LABOR AND THE N.R.A. By Lois MacDonald, Gladys L. Palmer & Theresa Wolfson	25¢	☐
LABOR EDUCATION MATERIALS ON MINORITY PROBLEMS - An Annotated List (leaflets, pamphlets, films, filmstrips, etc.)	25¢	☐ (New)
MASTERING THE TOOLS OF THE TRADE By Jean Carter Ogden	25¢	☐
OVERCOMING PREJUDICE By Theresa Wolfson, Marie E. Algor, Eleanor G. Coit & Andria T. Hourwich	25¢	☐
SOUTHERN WORKERS OUTSIDE THE LEGISLATIVE PALE By H. O. Nixon and Others	20¢	☐
SUGGESTED READING LIST OF NOVELS, PLAYS, BIOGRAPHIES, POETRY DEALING WITH SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC PROBLEMS	15¢	☐
THE WORKER AND GOVERNMENT By Lois MacDonald and Emanuel Stein	35¢	☐
THE WORKER GOES TO MARKET By Caroline F. Ware	25¢	☐
WHAT YOUR UNION MEANS By Alfred Baker Lewis	15¢	☐
YEARBOOK OF WORKERS' EDUCATION, 1926-1943	50¢	☐

Also, available, free of charge, BULLETIN, REPORTS, REPRINTS.

- -

Return to ORDER BLANK

American Labor Education Service

1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

Please send publications as checked above in quantity as indicated to:

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

*NOTE: Prices do not include postage. If you are ordering one copy of a pamphlet, add 3¢ to price of single title. Payment in stamps is acceptable. A DISCOUNT OF 10% IS ALLOWED ON ORDERS of 25 or more pamphlets; 20% ON ORDERS OF 50 or more.

21-Labor-Employment Statistics-Tenn.

The LABOR MARKET IN TENNESSEE

APRIL 1949

VOLUME 5 TENNESSEE DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY NUMBER 4

EMPLOYMENT GAINS REPORTED FOR APRIL

In spite of employment losses in manufacturing industries, total non-agricultural employment in Tennessee showed a net gain from March to April. Trade, service, mining, government and construction all reported employment increases for the period. The Easter sales rush brought trade employment up by approximately 1,500, while construction responded to seasonal impetus, registering a gain of approximately 4,000. Reports indicate that much of the construction activity for 1949 will be in the building of much needed school, hospital and highway facilities.

RECEIVED
MAY 31 1949
Southern Regional Council

MANUFACTURING EMPLOYMENT DROPS

In manufacturing employment, losses in chemicals, fabricated metal products and leather were sufficiently large to offset the employment gain in apparel. Employment losses were pretty general, appearing in all manufacturing groups except apparel, furniture, printing and publishing, and food - and of these, only apparel reported any appreciable gain. The usual seasonal increases had hard sledding in the face of overstocking, inventory back-log, and continued consumer lethargy. General as this statement is, it is hard to pin down the reasons for lessened employment to more specific terms.

--WHILE NON-MANUFACTURING EMPLOYMENT RISES

The usual Easter rush provided an impetus to employment in trade, and contributed to the employment gain in service industries. Construction employment also showed a state-wide seasonal gain, although wage disputes in scattered areas had a hampering effect on building trades employment. Government and mining employment also reported slight increases.

DEMAND FOR LUMBER LOW

In the manufacturing industry division, two groups which normally experience seasonal employment increases at this time of year reported that employment remained almost level from March to April. One of these industries, lumber, showed a slight employment drop. For the state as a whole, a slackening in demand was reported for lumber products. Hardwood appears to be in less demand than usual, and unseasoned lumber is not moving. The market for lumber during the month of April is considered to be in the nature of a barometer, indicating the trend which may be expected for the year; according to this indicator, the lumber industry will not be as active as usual during 1949.

PREPARED AND RELEASED
MAY 15, 1949
BY
RESEARCH AND STATISTICS SECTION
E. J. EBERLING, CHIEF OF RESEARCH
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

EMPLOYMENT RISE FOOD PROCESSING DELAYED BY WEATHER

The food industry also failed to show normal seasonal increases. In this case, however, late cold snaps delayed the berry crop, which ushers in the food processing season. The employment rise in this industry was therefore delayed. While other fruit may be scarce this year, vegetables should not be seriously affected. The closing of one department of a large food establishment, which affected employment of some 330 workers, was one factor in holding down employment in this industry.

UNEMPLOYMENT DECLINES IN APRIL

Unemployment, as might be expected in the light of the net employment increase, was less in April than in March. At the end of April, approximately 67,000 workers were filing unemployment insurance and servicemen's readjustment allowance claims, as compared with 71,287 in March. Women comprised 17,500 of this total, veterans 15,379. Claims for partial unemployment totalled 16,733, a decrease of almost 4,000 since March. Both total and partial unemployment in April dropped to the February level, after the March rise.

AVERAGE HOURS AND EARNINGS REMAIN STABLE

The estimated average work week for production workers in manufacturing industries was practically unchanged from March to April. Average weekly hours in April were 39.1 as compared to 39.2 hours in March. The average hourly wage in April also remained unchanged from the March average of $1.110 per hour. Both wages and hours in non-durable goods industries showed a slightly downward trend while wages in durable goods industries were up slightly and hours showed no change. Wage rate increases and premium pay for holiday work in scattered establishments caused slight increases in hourly earnings in the textile, primary metals, and machinery industries. At the same time, the shortening of work week, less overtime, and one sharp seasonal decrease in a primary metals plant, caused a drop in weekly hours in the textile and primary metals industries. Holiday shutdowns and shortened work week in several plants caused a drop in both hours and earnings in the stone, clay and glass industry. Contrary trends were noted in the leather industry; several plants increased weekly hours sufficiently to more than offset decreased hours in other plants. Hourly earnings however dropped slightly. Detailed figures for all manufacturing industries combined and for selected industry groups appear below.

	AVERAGE HOURLY EARNINGS		AVERAGE WEEKLY HOURS
	March A/	April	March A/	April
All Manufacturing	1.110	1.110	39.2	39.1
Durable Goods	1.107	1.109	39.4	39.4
Non-durable Goods	1.112	1.111	39.0	38.9

A/ Revised.

Selected Industries	March A/	April	March A/	April
Food	1.030	1.029	44.0	44.8
Tobacco	.808	.806	36.8	36.7
Textiles	1.049	1.053	38.3	37.2
Chemicals	1.308	1.328	39.6	39.7
Leather	1.045	1.043	34.3	35.3
Stone, Clay & Glass	1.130	1.106	40.3	38.3
Primary Metals	1.291	1.297	38.6	38.1
Fabricated Metal Prod.	1.187	1.180	35.8	36.2
Electrical and Non-electrical Machinery	1.202	1.205	32.8	32.8

These average earnings figures are computed on a "gross" basis and reflect changes in premium pay for overtime and late shift work as well as changes in basis hourly and incentive wage rates.

A/ Revised.

ESTIMATED NON-AGRICULTURAL EMPLOYMENT IN TENNESSEE

APRIL, 1949 1/

(ROUNDED TO NEAREST HUNDRED)

INDUSTRY OR GROUP	APRIL 1949	MARCH 1949	APRIL 1948	PER CENT CHANGE MARCH 1949 TO APRIL 1949	PER CENT CHANGE APRIL 1948 TO APRIL 1949
TOTAL	718,500	714,500	733,000	+ 0.6	- 2.0
MANUFACTURING	231,100	234,100	257,900	- 1.3	-10.4
NON-DURABLE GOODS	151,100	152,800	163,000	- 1.1	- 7.3
DURABLE GOODS	80,000	81,300	94,900	- 1.6	-15.7
NON-DURABLE GOODS
CHEMICALS	37,700	39,200 2/	39,400	- 3.8	- 4.3
TEXTILES	31,400	31,800 2/	40,000	- 1.3	-21.5
FOOD	23,400	23,300	22,600	+ 0.4	+ 3.5
APPAREL	20,600	19,800	20,400	+ 4.0	+ 1.0
LEATHER	12,100	12,600	13,500	- 4.0	-10.4
PRINTING	10,700	10,600	10,500	+ 0.9	+ 1.9
RUBBER	5,600	5,700	6,300	- 1.8	-11.1
PAPER	4,900	5,000	4,700	- 2.0	+ 4.3
TOBACCO	1,800	1,800	2,000	-	-10.0
PETROLEUM	500	500	600	-	-16.7
MISC. MANUFACTURING	2,400	2,500	3,000	- 4.0	-20.0
DURABLE GOODS
LUMBER (EX. FURNITURE)	22,600	22,700 2/	28,600	- 0.4	-21.0
PRIMARY METALS	14,400	14,500	16,100	- 0.7	-10.6
FABRICATED METALS	12,300	13,200	15,600	- 6.8	-21.2
STONE, CLAY & GLASS	9,100	9,100	9,800	-	- 7.1
FURNITURE	7,600	7,500	9,500	+ 1.3	-20.0
TRANSPORTATION EQUIPMENT	4,700	4,900	5,800	- 4.1	-19.0
MACHINERY (EX. ELEC.)	5,200	5,200	5,100	-	+ 2.0
PROFESSIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CONTROLLING INSTR.	1,600	1,700	2,000	- 05.9	-20.0
ELECTRICAL MACHINERY	2,500	2,500	2,400	-	+ 4.2
NON-MANUFACTURING	487,400	480,400	475,100	+ 1.5	+ 2.6
TRADE	162,500	161,000 2/	160,100	+ 0.9	+ 1.5
WHOLESALE TRADE	48,500	49,000	46,300	- 1.0	+ 4.8
RETAIL TRADE	114,000	112,000 2/	113,800	+ 1.8	+ 0.2
GOVERNMENT	99,900	99,800	97,300	+ 0.1	+ 2.7
SERVICE	74,100	73,100	74,000	+ 1.4	+ 0.1
TRANS., COMM., PUB.UTIL.	59,300	59,300	59,200	-	+ 0.2
CONSTRUCTION	53,000	49,100	44,300	+ 7.9	+19.6
FIN., INS., & REAL EST.	24,300	24,400	26,500	- 0.4	- 8.3
MINING	14,300	13,700 2/	13,700	+ 4.4	+ 4.4

1/ ESTIMATES INCLUDE ALL FULL AND PART-TIME EMPLOYEES WORKING OR RECEIVING PAY IN NON-AGRICULTURAL ESTABLISHMENTS DURING THE PAY PERIOD ENDING NEAREST THE 15TH OF THE MONTH. ESTIMATES DO NO INCLUDE SELF-EMPLOYED, DOMESTIC SERVANTS AND UNPAID FAMILY WORKERS.

2/ REVISED.

RELEASED BY THE

TENN. DEPT. OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY IN COOPERATION WITH THE

U. S. BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

GWES NEWS

Georgia Workers Education Service

APRIL-MAY, 1949
Vol. III, No. 5

353 COURTLAND ST., N. E.
ATLANTA 3, GA.
WALNUT 1961

RECEIVED
Southern Regional Council

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE--FACTS AND FANCIES

On April 22, President Truman read to the Congress of the United States a message which had been expected for some months. It was the message which three days later was introduced in the Senate in the form of the "National Health Insurance and Public Health Act, 1949."

So much has been said in print and over the air about what the ACT says and means (and it seems to say and mean different things to different people and different groups) that we thought we ought to take a look at the Bill itself and let you know what it says.

WHAT'S IN A LABEL?

First, let's not be scared off by the labels which have been pinned on it by those who oppose it. The American Medical Association (A.M.A.) for months has been denouncing it as "socialized medicine" which will regiment American doctors and the American people.

Just this morning at the drug store I picked up an expensive 22 page print job published by the AMA. It has been distributed--absolutely free--far and wide. It warns against the dangers of "compulsory health insurance" or "politically controlled medicine," as they call it. It denounces the President's proposal as "socialistic."

Most of us will remember--it was only 1938--when the Minimum Wage Law, setting minimum wages at 25 cents an hour, was attacked as "socialistic," and we were warned especially in the South that industries would have to close down if workers were paid such fantastically high wages! But the Bill wasn't and the industries didn't, and this looks to us like more of the same "let's scare 'em" hullabaloo.

THE NEED FOR HEALTH CARE

So, let's skip the labels and take a look inside the Bill:---The preamble says:

> Section 9. "Recognizing that many persons cannot pay for needed services from the present members of the medical professions and from hospitals, and that future additions to these professions and institutions should be assured adequate support and full utilization, this ACT establishes a nation wide method whereby all our people can always meet the burden of sickness costs through health insurance.

Apparently the preamble and the Bill itself assume that the people of the United States need a National Health Insurance Program. Do they? Let's see:--

According to the report submitted to the President by Federal Security Administrator Ewing, careful survey revealed that:

> 4 out of every 5 (or almost 118 million Americans) need help to pay the cost of serious illness.
>
> AND
>
> At least 7 million people in the U.S. are disabled by sickness in any one day, half of these for six months or more each year.

IS IT BEING MET NOW?

At the present time, as any worker knows, a serious illness in the family means disaster--a staggering load of doctor bills--a fear in the back of every wage earner's mind. Over 105 million Americans carry no form of health insurance at all. Only 45 million have some sort of health insurance, but of these probably only 3½ million have comprehensive medical care plans. Even the Blue Cross Hospitalization Plan covers only 18% of the American people.

Not Enough Beds and Doctors To Go Around

Even if everyone were able to afford medical and hospital care, the present supply of doctors and hospital beds could not meet the demand. We have a 25% shortage of doctors, and only about 1½ million hospital beds.

The President's message pointed out that medical schools alone would have to double their present training capacities to provide the number of doctors who would be needed to keep our people medically protected, if everybody could afford it.

THE ACT PROVIDES FEDERAL AID FOR:

1. Education and training of doctors, dentists, nurses, hospital administrators, and other health personnel.

2. Medical research for special research in our most dangerous diseases and others.

3. Building new hospitals and clinics with larger appropriations, and increased aid to poorer states.

4. Special aid to rural areas.

5. Assistance to Farmers' Experimental Health Cooperatives.

6. Aid to States for State and local Public Health Work.

7. Aid to States for Maternal, Child Health and Crippled children's Services.

HOW WILL ALL THIS BE PAID FOR?

Will the taxpayer stagger around under a tremendous burden, as the AMA declares? The Government Survey indicates otherwise.

According to the proposed bill, the insurance would be paid for out of a 3% tax on earnings (1½% paid for by the worker, 1½% paid for by the employer) so that actually, on the average, it would cost less than we spend at present, and for much more care than we now get. A report to the 79th Congress estimated a present and expected spending under the Act for medical care.

For those earning $1250, spending at present $43 a year for medical care, the cost through deduction would come to only $18.75.

For those earning $2500, spending at present $74 a year, the cost would be $37.50.

For those earning $3600 a year, spending at present $143 a year, the cost would be $54.00.

DOES THIS MEAN REGIMENTATION FOR DOCTORS AND PATIENTS?

Despite the fancy propaganda of the AMA, a reading of the bill reveals that patients may choose their own doctor, hospital, nurse, etc. from among all the practicioners in their town who serve under the Act.

It reveals that doctors do not have to serve under the Act, and if he does, he is free to reject or accept patients just as he now does.

WILL IT ALL BE RUN FROM WASHINGTON?

The Act states that the chief administrative responsibility will be placed in the hands of local bodies operating within the State plan.

Doctors and representatives of the people in each locality where the services are provided will run the program.

Services shall be distributed among the States on a fair basis.

Voluntary as well as government organizations shall be used and recognized.

All employed and self-employed persons shall be entitled to the benefits without discrimination because of race, color, or creed.

DOES IT ADD UP TO BETTER HEALTH?

Figure it out for yourself. If the bill goes through, it would mean that everybody would be able to get preventive medical care to keep away sickness.

Everybody will have doctor's and hospital services when sick without worry about expense (as a matter of right, not charity). It would be pay-as-we-go and no hospital bills to scare us.

There would be doctors with income assured willing to practice in rural and poor areas which they now shun.

It would mean more hospitals, spread out where they are needed.

There would be more and better training for qualified persons to meet the current shortages.

THIS THEN IS BILL S. 5 AND H.R. 783

This is the bill, then, which the AMA has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to fight. This is the bill which the AF of L, the CIO, and many consumer, church, veteran, and farm and cooperative groups have been fighting for in the 79th, 80th, and now the 81st Congress.

AND ONE MORE WORD--

In England, where a similar Act has been in effect for more than one year now, praise for the Act has been mounting from doctors (some of whom at first opposed it), patients, from newspapers, and all sections of the government from Conservatives on up.

* * * * * * * * * * *

CERTIFICATES OF MERIT

April brought a shower of GWES certificates down on the learned heads of our students in:--

Rockmart: 6 stewards of the UTWA completed their course in "How to Conduct a Union Meeting." They were: James L. Hall, Dewey Castle, David Rogers, Wm. B. Sorrells, Jr., Mack Morgan, and Robert S. Wilson.

11 more UTWA lads (and a lassie) completed their course in "Stewards' Training." In addition to those listed above were also:-John Peck, Newt Sims, Bertha Johnsey, Albert Wheeler, James L. Wheeler, Ray Kirk.

Americus: In ACWA Local 226, 14 members received awards for successfully completing their class in "You and Your Government." As an outgrowth of the class a delegation visited Congressman Stephen Pace and had quite a session. The students were Mrs. Annie Thompson, Christine Robinson, Clara Rycroft, Pauline Grant, Betty Edwards, Bessie Peck, Forrest McLaughlin, Marie Thompson, Ozella Farr, Elizabeth Van Agnew, Jeannette Holly, Oriska Finch, Ola Kelly and Julia Kelly.

The month of May brought some more to UAW Local 1103 in Rome for completion of a course in "How To Make the Union Work." They went to: Howard Kennemore, John Ware, Varnell Lynn, Hugh Swinford, Leon Wright, E. L. McGill, J. E. Woods, J. R. Barnes, Emmett Hardin, Frank Swanson.

Dalton: At a barbecue at Freilach's

Lake on May 21, AFHW Branch 74, 10 members successfully completed their class in "Grievance and Arbitration." They were: Carvis Huckeba, S.F. Knight, J.C. Caylor, Ollie Bailey, Jacob Phillips, Delma Richardson, Violet Hinkle, Lloyd Roberts, Viola Henson, Lettie Gribble.

* * * * * * * * * * *

UNDER WAY In Columbus: CWA local getting together on Mondays and Tuesdays for 3 weeks to discuss "How to Run Our Union" with Olive Haskins cooperating.

In Rockmart: UTWA Local 90, Saturday mornings at 10:30, discussions o[illegible] bor Laws, with speakers arrange[illegible] by Staffmember Warren on Work[illegible] Comp., Social Security, Unemploy[illegible] Insurance, and National Health Bill.

In Rome: Staffmember Warren assisting the TWUA Joint Board with plans for TWUA 10th Anniversary Week, May 8-15. Big doings in Rome, Cedartown, and Dalton. Ruth working with Children's Chorus with original song by young 'un Marie Gamblin.

STARTING SOON In Atlanta: LWIU, Local 218 decided to have "Our Gov't and How It Works" in regular class instead of membership meetings. Scheduled to begin May 16.

UAW Weekend Institute at Camp Highland all set. Staffmember Warren assisting Regional Education Representative Ed Coffey and the local Education Council To take place May 21 and 22.

SPECIAL EVENTS Staffmember Haskins participated in the "Health and Welfare Conference" called by the AF of L on April 23. Brother Arnold Kennedy in charge.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

AROUND THE CRACKER BARREL

HAVE YOU SEEN?

Poverty in the Valley of Plenty. Produced by AF of L Film Council in Los Angeles. Tells the dramatic and tragic [illegible]ory of the Di[illegible] Georgio orchard workers California. 18 minute film.

HAVE YOU READ?

Union Guy written by Clayton Fountain of the UAW Education Dept. A fast moving story of Fountain's own life in large part against the dramatic events of the organization of the auto industry by the UAW-CIO.

DID YOU KNOW?

That our State of Georgia is third from the bottom in medical care for its children. The plight of children in Georgia and other Southern States was brought out in two brand new studies on child care just completed after 3 years with the cooperation of U.S. Public Health and U.S. Children's Bureau. If we had a National Health Insurance Act, the tale would be a different one.

* * * * * * * * * * * \

LABOR EDUCATION GUIDE

Current Materials for Workers' Education Activities

Orlie A.H.Pell, Editor

Labor Ed

SPRING-SUMMER..... 1952
Volume XI .....Number 1

Special Issue on

LABOR and INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

- LABOR AROUND THE WORLD
- AID TO UNDERDEVELOPED AREAS
- THE U. N. AND ITS AGENCIES
- FOR EYE AND EAR

Annual Subscription $1.00
Published by
American Labor Education Service
1776 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y.

Material should be ordered directly from the organization which has prepared it.

LABOR AND INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Labor Around the World

WORLD LABOR TODAY

By Robert J. Alexander, League for Industrial Democracy, 112 East 19 Street, New York 3, N.Y. 1952. 54 pp. 35¢

A clear account of labor's international developments, and the post-war growth of the labor movements in the various countries of Western Europe, the Far East, the Middle East and Africa, and Latin America. Useful for union leaders, education directors and others looking for an informative picture of the world labor scene.

THE CIO AND WORLD AFFAIRS

CIO International Committee, 718 Jackson Place N.W. Washington 6, D.C. Third Issue, April 1952. 32pp. 10¢. (50 for $4.50; 100 for $8.)

A summary of CIO policy statements dealing with international affairs, brought up to date, and illustrated with a number of photographs. Deals with the Future of the Free World, the United Nations, Mutual Security Programs, Latin America, Labor Participation, and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

See also their CIO World Affairs Bulletin (refer to Fall-Winter 1951 Guide), now in printed form. The April 1952 issue contains an article on Europe's free trade unions, and an account of the International Trade Secretariats.

See also the European Edition of the CIO News, available in English, French, German and Italian. Deals with labor issues of interest to European workers.

'52 FACTS: FOREIGN POLICY

CIO Political Action Committee, 1346 Connecticut Ave. N.W., Washington 6, D.C. 1952 40 pp. Free of charge.

This pocket-sized booklet presents briefly an overall statement on America's present relationships with the rest of the world, stressing the impossibility of trying to maintain an isolationist point of view, and explaining the country's present policy in regard to Korea, NATO, Point Four, etc.

AMERICAN LABOR LOOKS AT THE WORLD. VOL. V

Free Trade Union Committee, AFL, Box 65, Station G, New York 19, N.Y. September, 1952. 96pp. 50¢ (Quantity rates.)

As stated in the Fall-Winter 1951 Guide, this fifth volume brings together statements and articles that show the stand taken by the AFL on a number of international issues, including Korea, the North Atlantic Treaty, and slave labor behind the Iron Curtain.

See also their International Free Trade Union News, published monthly. The June 1952 issue, for example, deals with the Tunisian workers, the situation in Cuba and the Cuban unions, trade unionism in India, and Indonesia, and labor and high productivity in America, among other topics.

PEOPLE MUST SPEAK TO PEOPLE

By Mark Starr. Reprint from June 1952 Education. 7pp. Single copy free from the Educational Department, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, 1710 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y.

This article discusses the barrier to understanding caused by the growing diversity of languages, and made more acute today by the increase in travel, visiting teams and exchange programs. The author advocates a greater willingness to listen with respect to others, to learn to speak their languages or, hopefully, to make use of an international language.

Copyright, Summer, 1952
American Labor Education Service, Inc.

LABOR PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS
Labor-International Affairs, American Friends Service Committee, 20 S. 12th Street, Philadelphia 7, Pa. 1952. 4 pp. Free.
Brief account of the ICFTU, the ILO, and the International Trade Secretariats, as well as the part the American Labor Movement is playing in Point 4 and the Mutual Security Agency, as labor attaches, and through their own representatives abroad.

THE WORKING PEOPLE OF EUROPE
Labor Information, Mutual Security Administration, Washington 25, D.C. 1951. 10 pp. Free of charge.
This pamphlet, reprinted from the International Oil Worker (organ of the Oil Workers International Union - CIO) shows how European and American workers are dependent on each other, and how the Marshall Plan has helped European production. Of interest to union members. See also their pamphlet, SHIRTSLEEVE DIPLOMATS (Fall-Winter 1951 Guide) dealing with labor's representatives in Europe and other countries.

WORLD AFFAIRS WORKBOOK: What Your Union Can Do
Inter-University Labor Education Committee, 19 South LaSalle Street. Chicago 3, Ill. 1952. 69 pp. Single copy free of charge.
This manual suggests a number of ways in which unions can get their members involved in learning more about international affairs: projects, programs, effective use of materials, etc. See also their pamphlet, "INTEREST GETTERS" ON WORLD AFFAIRS, which provides actual quizzes, ideas for role-playing and discussion programs, etc. These are both preliminary drafts for limited distribution and comment.

Aid to Underdeveloped Areas

HELPING PEOPLE TO HELP THEMSELVES
CIO Department of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C. Reprinted from Economic Outlook, November, 1951. 8 pp. 15¢. (Up to 100, 5¢ each; 100 or more, 4⅓¢ each; 1000 or more, 3¢ each.)
An objective account of the needs of the underdeveloped countries, and the programs such as Point 4, The Marshall Plan, and the work of the United Nations agencies that are helping the people of these countries to get on their feet. The importance of this to trade unionists is pointed out.

UNDERDEVELOPED AREAS AND POINT 4
Labor-International Affairs Office, American Friends Service Committee, 20 South 12 St., Philadelphia 7, Pa. 4 pp. Single copy free of charge.
A brief introduction to the subject, describing what life is like in underdeveloped countries and why Americans are concerned. Includes suggested readings and films.

PLENTY: PATTERN FOR PEACE
By Murray D. Lincoln. Available from Farm Bureau Insurance Companies, 246 N. High St., Columbus 16, Ohio. 1952. 19pp. Free of charge.
A hard hitting plea for a new foreign policy for America, based on the development of abundance and the elimination of hunger and poverty throughout the world. Of interest both to farmers and to trade unionists.

TRADING HOME TOWNS
Information Service Department, Herald-Tribune, New York City. 1951. 31 pp. 10¢. (Quantity rates.)
This is a "human interest" story of how a county agent from Georgia and one from a county in India exchanged places, each of them learning and teaching and making friends in his new environment. A graphic illustration of a two-way Point 4, interesting to workers as well as farmers.

Aid to Underdeveloped Areas

OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL

By Richardson Wood. Richardson Wood and Company, New York. 1952. No price given. Available free of charge from the Technical Cooperation Administration, State Department, Washington, D.C.

Makes clear the opportunities opened up on all sides by the Government's program of foreign aid. Pictorial graphs, and charts, cartoons and photographs, are all used effectively to tell the story. Will help to create interest in the subject.

WHY FOREIGN AID. Facts about the Mutual Security Program

Department of State Publication 4301. 1951. 17 pp. For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Govt. Printing Office, Washington 25, D.C. Price 20 cents.

Deals with the Mutual Security Program, both the "defence" and the economic aspects. The problems concerned with populations, natural resources and degree of development are discussed by regions: Europe, Latin America, Africa, Asia, with the help of maps and photographs.

MUTUAL SECURITY IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

Mutual Security Agency, Washington 25, D.C. 1952. 14 pp. No price given.

This pamphlet tells in clear, rather simple terms, some of the problems faced by the peoples in Burma, Thailand, Indo-China, Indonesia, Formosa and the Philippines; what their governments are trying to do; and how our government is helping. Interesting photographs, and a pleasant map. For more detailed account, see MSA's longer pamphlet.

EAST MEETS WEST IN THAILAND

Mutual Security Agency, Washington 25, D.C. 1952. 14 pp. No price given.

For those who want to know something more about the colorful country of Thailand (Siam) this pamphlet provides interesting facts, and shows how technical aid from this country is being used constructively by the Thai people. With photographs.

DATELINE SAIGON: Our Quiet War in Indochina

Mutual Security Agency, Washington 25, D.C. 1952. 12 pp. No price given.

Behind the "shooting war" are going on quiet efforts to give technical aid to the people of Indochina, through teams of doctors, agricultural specialists, engineers and other experts. With photographs.

FIGHT FOR FOOD

Department of State publication 4534. Economic Cooperation Series 31 April, 1952. Division of Publications, Office of Public Affairs. 16 pp.

This pamphlet tells with text and photographs the story of the struggle to conquer a 1951 plague of locusts in India and Iran. It took the combined successful efforts of local scientists and farmers together with Point Four aid rushed by plane from America to conquer the invasion and save the precious crops. Useful for arousing interest.

See also Stringfellow Barr's excellent pamphlet, LET'S JOIN THE HUMAN RACE, University of Chicago Press, 25¢ (Spring-Summer. 1951 Guide), and the pamphlet, POINT 4 PIONEERS, full of human interest and available free of charge from the U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. (Fall-Winter 1951 Guide).

The U.N. and Its Agencies

UNITED NATIONS: 60 COUNTRIES PLEDGED TO ACT

Office of Public Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 1951. 9 pp. Free of charge. From Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C. 5¢.
This leaflet stresses the activities of the U.N. in fighting poverty and disease, working for human rights and better understanding, through its various agencies. Easy reading and gives a non-controversial introduction to the U.N.

THE UNITED NATIONS: What It Is, What It Does, How It Works

Department of Public Information, United Nations, New York. 1952 10 pp. 2¢.
A leaflet telling briefly how the U.N. is set up, the functions of the General Assembly, Security Council, etc. The print is rather small, but otherwise the leaflet is useful.

Note: Similar leaflets, with borders in bright cheerful colors, are available from the Specialized Agencies, ILO, WHO, UNICEF, FAO, etc. Some of these have larger print.

TOWARDS A UNITED NATIONS WORLD

Department of Public Information, United Nations, New York. 1951. 37 pp. 15¢
A small booklet, with photographs and text, showing that experiments in international cooperation have led up to the U.N. and explaining the various phases of its work. Can be used as an introduction.

ACTION BY THE UNITED NATIONS

Office of Public Affairs, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C. 1950. 11 pp. From Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C. 10¢.
A large sized illustrated pamphlet, explaining what the U.N. has done in the fields of fighting hunger, sharing know-how, improving trade, providing opportunities for settling disputes, working for human rights, etc. Could be used as basis for discussion.

THE UNITED NATIONS - ACTION FOR PEACE

By Marie and Louis Zocca. Rutgers University Press, New Brunswick, N.J. Also available through the American Association for the United Nations, 45 East 65 St., New York 21, New York. 1951. 60 pp.
Calling itself a "layman's guide", this booklet presents the important information about the U.N.: its set up: how it works and what it has accomplished on the political as well as the economic and social front. It is useful as a study guide for those interested in understanding the U.N. Contains charts, illustrations and a map.

Note: Copies of the CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS, for reference purposes, are available from the United Nations, New York, from the Department of State, Washington, D.C., and from the American Association for the United Nations, 45 East 65 St., New York 21, New York. 10¢.

For Eye and Ear

HOW TO USE FILMS EFFECTIVELY

Research and Education Department, International Chemical Workers Union - AFL and Union Leadership Training Project, University of Chicago, 19 S. LaSalle Street, Chicago, Ill. 1952. 18 pp. No price given.

Some very useful suggestions for planning, obtaining, showing and utilizing films to get the best educational values. Detailed examples are given of how two specific films ("WITH THESE HANDS" and "FATE OF A CHILD") have been used by different local unions to meet different purposes.

16 mm. Films

EXPANDING WORLD RELATIONSHIPS

10 minute sound, color film.

Available free on loan from Division of Public Liaison, U.S. Department of State, Washington, D.C.

Shows contrast between pre-machine age and today's industrialized, interdependent world. Raises problems, gives no answers; useful as basis for discussion.

FATE OF A CHILD

